

No. 4

PERIODICAL
ML5
.M85

65
1924

m

No.
971

Price
6d.

THE

MUSICAL TIMES

FOUNDED 1844

JANUARY 1, 1924

SPENCER PIANOS

GRANDS • UPRIGHTS • PLAYERS

Sole Agents

MURDOCH MURDOCH & CO

Piano & Player Piano Experts

461 & 463 OXFORD STREET

And at BRIGHTON • PORTSMOUTH • SOUTHAMPTON POLKESTONE • DOVER • CHATHAM
BIRMINGHAM • CAMBRIDGE

ARCHIBALD RAMSDEN LTD.

PATENT THREE COMPARTMENT TOP LID FOR GRAND PIANOS

We have already fitted over

1000 PIANOS

by most of the leading makers with this New Device.

Kindly send for Booklet giving particulars.

CECILIAN HOUSE,
65, WIGMORE STREET, LONDON.
12, Park Row, LEEDS.

Patented in AMERICA - FRANCE - GERMANY.

4115

THE GREAT ENGLISH PIANO

ACTUAL MANUFACTURERS.

Factories:
LEIGHTON ROAD,
KENTISH TOWN, LONDON.

Proprietors of
JOHN BRINSMEAD & SONS'
TUNING CONNECTION.

THE INSTRUMENT DE LUXE OF THE PIANO WORLD

GRANDS, PLAYER PIANOS, UPRIGHT PIANOS, WITH DETACHABLE PARTS.

SHOWROOMS:
56-60, WICMORE STREET,
W.1. LANGHAM 1418.

ESTEY ORGANS ESTEY PIANOS

ONLY ONE GRADE OF EACH.
THE HIGHEST POSSIBLE.

Largest Stock of Organs in the World.

DESCRIPTIVE CATALOGUE POST FREE. CORRESPONDENCE INVITED.

Telephone: Museum 1317.

Telegrams: "ESTEY OX. LONDON."

Estey Organ Co.

- 12 -

RATHBONE PLACE,
OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

METZLER'S TRIO SERIES

For Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello.

1s. each Trio.

Extra Parts for Harmonium, Violin, 2nd Violin, 'Cello, Bass. 4d. each.

- |                                 |              |  |              |
|---------------------------------|--------------|--|--------------|
| 1. AIR .. .. .                  | Bach         | 20. CHANSON POLONAISE .. .. .            | Wieniawski   |
| 2. MINUET IN E flat .. .. .     | Beethoven    | 21. AVE MARIA .. .. .                    | Bach-Gounod  |
| 3. MINUET IN A .. .. .          | Boccherini   | 22. NOCTURNE IN E flat (Op. 27, No. 2)   | Chopin       |
| 4. LA SERENATA .. .. .          | Braga        | 23. BRANDENBURG CONCERTO,                |              |
| 5. HUNGARIAN DANCE (No. 1)      | Brahms       | 1st Movement (condensed) .. .. .         | Bach         |
| 6. HUNGARIAN DANCE (No. 2)      | Brahms       | 24. PATHETIC SYMPHONY (Extract           |              |
| 7. BERCEUSE (SERENADE) .. .. .  | Gounod       | from 2nd Movement) .. .. .               | Tschaikowsky |
| 8. LARGO .. .. .                | Handel       | 25. ARIA ON G STRING (2nd arrangement)   | Bach         |
| 9. SPRING SONG .. .. .          | Mendelssohn  | 26. VALSE DES FLEURS (Casse-Noisette)    | Tschaikowsky |
| 10. NARCISSUS .. .. .           | Nevin        | 27. PRELUDE IN C sharp minor (transposed |              |
| 11. CAVATINA .. .. .            | Raff         | to C minor) .. .. .                      | Rachmaninoff |
| 12. MELODY IN F .. .. .         | Rubinstein   | 28. CHANSON TRISTE (Op. 40, No. 2)       | Tschaikowsky |
| 13. AVE MARIA .. .. .           | Schubert     | 29. CHANT SANS PAROLES (Op. 2, No. 3)    | Tschaikowsky |
| 14. SERENADE .. .. .            | Schubert     | 30. SALVE DIMORA (Faust) .. .. .         | Gounod       |
| 15. TRAUMEREI .. .. .           | Schumann     |  |              |
| 16. POLACCA (Mignon) .. .. .    | Thomas       |  |              |
| 17. BARCAROLLE (JUNE) .. .. .   | Tschaikowsky |  |              |
| 18. O STAR OF EVE .. .. .       | Wagner       |  |              |
| 19. WALTHER'S PREISLIED .. .. . | Wagner       |  |              |

METZLER & CO. (1920), LTD.,

(ESTABLISHED 1788.)

142, CHARING CROSS ROAD, LONDON, W.C.2.

m

Rec'd
FEB 11
1982
B. T.

YEAR 1844

+ 4041, 230, 65
1924

VOLUME LXV.

7118

1924

INDEX FOR 1924

MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
O come, every one that thirsteth (Anthem)	Hugh Blair 971	Fear not, O Land (Anthem) ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer 976
Ye humble souls, that seek the Lord (Anthem) ... ..	H. A. Chambers 973	How excellent is Thy mercy (Anthem) ...	George Garrett 977
The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended (Hymn-Anthem) ... ..	C. Lee Williams 974	There is a river (Short Anthem from 'God is our refuge and strength')	W. G. Alcock 979

SECULAR

	No.		No.
Chloris in the snow (Part-song) ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher 972	Truth (Unison Song for Massed Voices)	Geoffrey Shaw 980
Come, Phillis, come into these bowers ...	Thomas Ford 975	Three Doughty Knights (Part-song) ...	Alec Rowley 981
Song of Apple Trees (Part-song) ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher 978	That very wise man (Part-song) ... ..	C. Hubert H. Parry 982

EXTRA SUPPLEMENTS.—MUSIC

SACRED

	No.		No.
Evening Hymn for S.A.T.B. ... ..	H. Balfour Gardiner 972	Dear Lord and Father of Mankind (Hymn) ... ..	C. Hubert H. Parry 981
Why seek ye the living among the dead? (Anthem) ... ..	Alfred Hollins 973	The holly and the ivy (Carol) ... ..	Geoffrey Shaw 982
The night is come (Evening Hymn) ...	Maurice Besly 975	The Christ-Child (Carol) ... ..	George Rathbone 982
The Eternal God is thy Refuge (Anthem)	John E. West 977	The three wise men (Carol) ... ..	Alfred Hollins 982
O praise God in His Holiness (Anthem)	Charles Macpherson 980	A Cradle Song (Carol) ... ..	A. Herbert Brewer 982
Now once again (Carol-Anthem for Christmas) ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher 981	Gather the holly-bough (Carol) ... ..	Harold E. Watts 982

SECULAR

	No.		No.
The Song of the Gale (Part-song) ...	Myles B. Foster 971	Lady, lay those frowns aside (Madrigal for mixed voices) ... ..	Ernest Halsey 978
Who would true valour see (Part-song)...	Geoffrey Shaw 974	Nursery Rhymes (Part-song) ... ..	Adam Carse 979
Bushes and Briars (Essex folk-song) ...	R. Vaughan Williams 976

THEMATIC LIST OF ORGAN PIECES.

	No.		No.
Toccata and Fugue ... ..	C. H. H. Parry 980	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols ...	William Faulkes 981
Homage to Handel ... ..	S. Karg-Elert 980	A Christmas Pastoral ... ..	B. Luard-Selby 981
Adagio in E ... ..	Frank Bridge 980	Berceuse ... ..	E. H. Lemare 981
Three Psalm-Preludes—No. 1 ... ..	Herbert Howells 980	Sursum Corda... ..	J. Ireland 981
Legend ... ..	Harvey Grace 980	Twelve Monologues—No. 1 ... ..	J. Rheinberger 981
Three Choral Preludes—No. 3 (on tune, 'St. Michael')... ..	John E. West 980	Song of Triumph ... ..	John E. West 982
Four Intermezzi—No. 3, Hush Song ...	C. V. Stanford 980	Three Chorale-Preludes—No. 2 ... ..	Harold E. Darke 982
Three Short and Easy Postludes—No. 3	F. W. Wadely 980	Fantasy-Prelude ... ..	Charles Macpherson 982
Choral Song and Fugue ... ..	S. S. Wesley 981	Epilogue ... ..	Healey Willan 982
Introduction and Variation on a Ground		Désespoir ... ..	Ch. Quef 982
Bass ... ..	Battison Haynes 981	Toccata, for a 'Double Organ' ... ..	Dr. John Blow 982
Prelude on 'Rorate Coeli' ... ..	Anthony Bernard 981	Six Short and Easy Pieces—No. 2	Henry Smart 982
		Prælium Pastorale ... ..	J. Stainer 982

PORTRAIT SUPPLEMENTS

	No.		No.
Sir Frederick Bridge ... ..	974	John Blackwood McEwen ... ..	975

ILLUSTRATIONS, PORTRAITS, ETC.

	Page		Page		Page
Albert Hall Organ, New Console of the	831	Kempe, Mary... ..	249	Parsons Notation, Key to the	901
Baines, William, Memorial Tablet to...	615	Kilburn, Nicholas ... ..	78	Perkins, C. W. ... ..	347
Blind Babies' Home at Chorley Wood, Band at the ... ..	407	Liverpool Cathedral Organ: North Side of Chancel Front and Console ... ..	733	Statham, Henry Heathcote (Obituary)...	654
Cembal d'Amour ... ..	40	Logan, Sinclair, The Blind Composer, writing a new work in Braille... ..	408	Strobilation, The ... ..	121
Concert Bill in the handwriting of George III. ... ..	789	Mainwaring's 'Memoirs of the Life of the late G. F. Handel.' MS. notes from pp. 84, 110 ... ..	790, 794	Disc illuminated by the Vibratory Flame-burner ... ..	122
'Coriolanus,' Ariosti's, March from ...	793	Parish Clerks, London, Organ in the Hall of the Worshipful Company of ... ..	445	Tracing from a Gramophone Record, by Enrico Caruso ... ..	518
Cunningham, G. D. ... ..	347	Keyboard of ... ..	445	Warrilow, H. C., at the Organ, National Institute for the Blind ... ..	408
Handel, G. F., Mainwaring's 'Memoirs of the Life of the late.' MS. notes from pp. 84, 110 ... ..	790, 794

	Page		Page		Page
Aberdeen and North-East Scotland		Ashton, A. T. Lee. Organ, Scherzo-		Bantock, Granville (Manchester).
Competitive Musical Festival ...	360	Fantasia in D minor (Review)...	55	'Omar' ...	263
Aberdeen, Music at ...	1033	Ashton-under-Lyne. Albion Congrega-		'Salve Regina' (Plainsong at Abergavenny, Music at ...	261	tional Church, Choir Anniversary ...	1113	a Trappist Abbey, Canada) (Review)...	1101
Aberystwyth, Ceredigion Choral Festi-		Ashton-upon-Mersey. St. Mary Mag-		'Songs of Childhood' (Review) ...	917
tival at ...	554	dalene, Jubilee Commemoration at ...	835	'Songs, 'A Summer Night' and — Music at 72, 171, 261, 361, 456,		Ashworth, Alec. School song, 'I loved		'Phoebe' (Review) ...	618
554, 651, 747, 843,	1126	a lass, a fair one' (Review) ...	618	Songs, 'The Parting' and
— Welsh Orchestral Musical		Associated Board of the Royal Academy		'Two Roses' (Review) ...	1101
Festival at ...	66	of Music and Royal College of Music,		— and Marjorie Kennedy Fraser.
Absolute and Programme Music. By		Annual Meeting of the ...	741	New opera, 'The Seal Woman' ...	994
L. N. Higgins ...	987	— Edition of the 'Forty-Eight,'		Barclay, John. Song recital ...	1030
Accidental Strokes of Genius. By		By Harvey Grace ...	895	Barclay Squire, W. Pearsall's Letters ...	24
Alexander Brent-Smith ...	885	Association of Organists at Bourne-		Barclay's Bank Musical Society 72, 455, 1022
Accompanying Songs, The Art of.		mouth. Protest against Priest-		— Coming Season ...	1025, 1120
By Hubert J. Foss ...	979, 1073	Organists (see 641, 739, 836)		— Male-Voice Choir ...	235, 250
Act of Touch, The (Correspondence)		Atkins, Ivor. Song, 'The Year's at the		Barmouth, Music at ...	361
543, 640, 736		Spring' (Review) ...	917	Barmouth String Quartet at St. John's,
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' 30, 123, 217,		Aubert, Louis. 'Habañera' (Miniature		Barmouth ...	734
314, 409, 504, 603, 697, 797, 989,	1078	Score) ...	153	Barnett, Capt. H. T. Up-to-date
Adolescent Singer, The. Report of the		— (Paris). Fairy Opera, 'La		Gramophone Tips (Review) ...	52
Annual Conference of the British		Forêt Bleue' ...	653	Barnsley, St. Cecilia Society Coming
Federation of Musical Competitive		— Pianoforte and Violin,		Season ...	1026
Festivals (see 1125) ...	58	'Berceuse' (Review) ...	1101	Barnstaple Competitive Musical Festival	746
Advertise Music! By M.-D. Calvo-		Audlem Choral Society. Coming		Barnstaple Musical Society ...	554
coressi ...	601	Season ...	1120	Barrett, E. Highland Lament,
Agents and Teachers (Correspondence)		Austin, Ernest. Pianoforte, 'Borrowed		'Coronach,' arranged by Cedric
Agnew, Roy. Pianoforte, Etude (Review)	822	Melodies' (Review) ...	520, 1102	Sharpe ...	1102
— Songs, 'Dirge' and 'Sorrow'		— Pianoforte, 'The Laughter of		Barry, Music at ...	171, 261
(Review) ...	916	Youth' (Review) ...	1102	Bartók, Béla. Volksmusik der Akerman, R. F. Martin. S.A.T.B. unac-		— Pianoforte, 'The Little Red		Rumänen von Maramuren (Review)...	524 companied, 'Rest thee, rest thee, my		Lark' (Review) ...	822	— and Jelly d'Aranyi (Chamber little Child' (Review) ...	718	— Tone-poem, 'The Pilgrim's		concerts) ...	71
Alaleona, Domenico (Vienna), 'La		Progress,' at St. Matthew's, Croydon	250	Bath Choral Society ...	72
mamm lontana' ...	366	and Ernest Bryson. Six Silly		— Coming Season ...	1026
Alba, Rosa. Song recital ...	456	Songs for Sensible Children ('Ad		Bath Competitive Musical Festival ...	650
Albert Hall Organ, The. By George		Libitum') ...	218	Bath, Hubert. 'Bubbles,' at Belfast ...	75
Dixon ...	829	Austin, Frederic. Appointment,		Bath, Music at ...	554, 1033
'Alkestis' (Rutland Boughton) at Covent		B.N.O.C. ...	422	Battersea and Wandsworth Choral
162		— Two unaccompanied songs		Union. Coming Season ...	1025
Alcock, W. G. Anthem, 'God is our		(Review) ...	917	Battisbill, Jonathan. Voluntary in A,
Refuge and Strength' (Review) ...	522	Australian Choral Competition, An.		edited by Heathcote Statham ...	1111
— Te Deum in A (Review) ...	336	By W. G. Whittaker ...	57	Battisbill, P. F. (Obituary) ...	941
Aldeburgh, Music at ...	1126	Axminster Choral Society. A Correc-		Battistini, Mattia. At Albert Hall and
Aldham School, Music at ...	69	tion (see 'Seaton,' 264) ...	332	Queen's Hall ...	646
Aldrich, Richard. Lilli Lehmann's		Ayrton, Bertram. Song Recital ...	1030	Bax, Arnold. New Sonata for Violon-
How to Sing' (Translated) ...	827			cello and Pianoforte ...	356
Alexandra Palace Choral and Orchestral		Bach Choir, The ...	167, 358, 552, 1025	— Song, 'When I was one and Society ...	72, 455, 939,	— Coming Season ...	1025	twenty' (Review) ...	152
— Bach's B minor Mass ...	455	— Mass in B minor ...	552	— Symphony in E flat minor 167, 262
— Coming Season ...	938, 1025	Bach. Concerto in E, edited by Prof.		Baylis, Lillian. M.A. Degree, honoris
All Saints', Clifton, Bristol, New		Nadaud ...	336	causa ...	335
Organ at ...	446	— Concerto in G minor, for		Bechert, Paul. The New Richard
All Saints', North Peckham. A Correc-		Strings (Review) ...	996	Strauss Ballet ...	547
tion ...	1114	— (Liverpool). B minor Mass ...	172	Bedford, Herbert. 'Night Piece'
Allen, Sir Hugh. Address on Choral		— 'Magnificat' (Miniature Score)	911	(Review) ...	912
Singing, to the Islington Choral		— Organ Works (Homeyer-		— Unaccompanied Songs
Society ...	995	Eckardt Edition) (Review) ...	521	(Review) ...	238, 917
Alnwick Branch of B.M.S. ...	1033, 1126	— Prelude and Fugue in G minor,		Bedford School, Music at ...	69, 744
Alnwick Parish Church, Bach's 'Jesu,		for String Orchestra (Arranged by		Bedfordshire Competitive Musical Festi-
Priceless Treasure' at ...	540	Julius Harrison) ...	997	tival ...	261, 441, 1126 — Festival Service at ...	1113	— Solos from the Cantatas of		Beecham, Sir Thomas. Concerts at
Alto Difficulty, The (Correspondence)		(Review) ...	1100	Queen's Hall ...	70
1021, 1115		— Three String Trios (Arranged		Beethoven, Ludwig van. By Alexander
Amateur Orchestra of London. Coming		by Arnold Trowell) ...	716	Brent-Smith ...	214
Season ...	1025	— Two-part 'Inventions'		(Germany) 'Missa Solemnis' ...	76
Amateurs' Exchange, The 63, 161, 254,		(Arranged as Trios for Organ, by		— New Edition of Sonatas, by 352, 451, 546, 642, 740, 838, 933, 1023,	1118	A. Livingstone Hirst) ...	1111	Frederic Lamond (Review) ...	822
American Chamber Music, New		Bachelet, Alfred. Pianoforte, Barcar-		— Ninth Symphony (see also 654)	453
(Review) ...	55	olle, Nocturne, and Petite		Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp.
'An Appeal and a Protest' (Corre-		Histoire (Review) ...	150	Facsimile Reproduction of Manu-spondence) ...	65	Backer-Lunde, J. Song, 'Were I a		script (Review) ...	54
Anglesey (Holyhead) Musical Festival	747	drop of dew' (Review) ...	1101	— (Rome). Solemn Mass in D ...	556
Answers to Correspondents 175, 270,		Bailey, Gilbert. Song recital ...	260	— Symphonies (Miniature Score)	153
366, 462, 558, 655, 750, 847, 942, 1037,	1134	Baines, William. Pianoforte, Twilight		'Bel Canto,' The. By Herman Klein ...	309
Antcliffe, Herbert. Limitations and Art	502	pieces (Review) (see also William		Belfast. Coming Season ...	1026
— Musical Association Paper,		Baines) ...	151	Belfast Competitive Musical Festival
'The Renaissance of Dutch Music' ...	1120	Bainton, Edgar L. Part-song, 'Summer		261, 442
Appointments, Choirmaster and		(Review) ...	1111	Belfast Philharmonic Society 75, 459, 1129
Organist 63, 158, 251, 348, 446, 541,		— Part-song, 'The Tower'		Belfast. St. James's, Reconstruction of
637, 734, 835, 929, 1015,	1114	(Review) ...	620	Organ at ...	734
Archer, J. Stuart. Anthem, 'Come, ye		— Part-song, 'To Music'		Belgrade, British Music at ...	652 children' (Review) ...	342	(Review) ...	342	Ben Rhydding, Music at ...	456
— Bach, Air from D major		— Pianoforte, 'The White Path-		Benson, Mgr. Robert. Guildhall School
Overture (Arranged) ...	521	way' (Review) ...	55	of Music, 'The Maid of Orleans' ...	996
— 'Hindoo Song' from Rimsky-		— Song, 'Give a man a horse he		Berkhamsted and District Competitive
Korsakov's 'Sadko' (Arranged for		can ride' (Review) ...	620	Musical Festival ...	360, 443, 650
Organ), 'Londonderry Air'	1111	— Song, 'Ring out, wild bells'		Berkshire Organists' Association ...	636
(Review) ...	521	(Review) ...	1100	Bernardsey Settlement Musical Society	271
— Pianoforte, 'Berceuse'		— Three Songs, 'Dawn,'		Berners, Lord. 'Dialogue between (Review) ...	822	'Sanctuaries,' and 'Spring' (Review)	620	Tom Filoter and his Man, by Ned — Pianoforte, Moto perpetuo		Ballarat, Victoria. Choral Competition	57	the Dog Stealer' (Review) ...	912
(Review) ...	150	Ballymena Competitive Musical Festival		Berrier Parish Church, New Organ at ...	250
— Six short Variations on an		443, 552, 651		Besly, Maurice. Song, 'An Outward
Irish Air (Review) ...	521	Banff Choral and Orchestral Society.		Sail' (Review) ...	343
Arkandj, Katharine. Song Recital ...	168	— Coming Season ...	1120	'Bethlehem' (Rutland Boughton), at the
Armstrong, Thomas. Individuality in		Bangor Abbey, co. Down, New Organ		Regent Theatre ...	164
Music ...	1090	at ...	539	Bethnal Green Public Library, Music
— On getting back to work ...	899	Bangor, Music at ...	361, 651, 1033, 1126	Catalogue ...	614
— Passing of a Tradition, The. By	507	Bannerman, Joyce. Song Recital ...	260	Bewerunge, Henry (Obituary) ...	78
Hubert J. Foss ...	979, 1073	Bantock, Granville (Birmingham).		Bideford Choral Society ...	72
Arundel Choral Society. Coming		'Golden Journey to Samarkand' ...	456	Binns, Richard. Boughton and the Season ...	1120	— Bournemouth Competitive		'Alkestis' ...	231
		Festival, 'Ring out, wild bells' ...	743	— Brahms: Some Thoughts towards a Re-valuation of ...	599

Birmingham and District, Music in	72, 171, 261, 361, 457, 554, 651, 747, 940, 1033, 1126	Brent-Smith, Alexander. Slender Reputations	499	Byrd, String Orchestra, 'The Leaves be greene,' edited by Sir Richard Terry (Review)	618
Birmingham Bach Society. Coming Season	1026	— The Englishness of Parry (see Correspondence, 1115)	977	Byrd, William. Carol, 'From Virgin pure' (Review)	342
City Organist	347, 540	Brewer, A. Herbert. Songs, 'Miller's Green' (Review)	1101
Competitive Musical Festival	261, 650	Brewerton, Erik. Song Translation	893
Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass in D (see 357)	256, 262	— The Tenor and His Songs: A Complaint	787	Caird, Robert. Anthem, 'Praise the Lord upon the harp' (Review)	718
Festival Choral Society. Coming Season	1026	Bridge, Frank. 'Londonderry Air' (Miniature Score)	1111	Calvocoressi, M.-D. A Critic on his Critics	311
Rutland Boughton's 'Wee Men'	170	— 'Miniatures' for Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte (Review)	716	— Advertise Music!	601
Bittner, Julius (Vienna). Comic Opera, 'Die Silberne Tänzerin' (Review)	366	— School Songs, 'Golden Slumbers' and 'Hence, Care' (Review)	342	and Otherwise	117
(Vienna). First Symphony	366	Bridge, John Frederick. A Personal Tribute	306	— Borodin Revised	1086
(Vienna). Opera, 'Das Rosen-gärtlein'	749	— Lectures at Gresham College (Obituary)	226	— Music in the Foreign Press	1099
Blackburn Ladies' Choir	262	Bridgwater, Music at	171, 457, 651	141, 332, 422, 514, 617, 910, 1004, 1009
Blackburn, St. George's Presbyterian Church. Re-opening of Organ at	929	Bridport, Music at	171, 361	— On Broadcasting New Music...	500
Blackpool Festival	939, 1032	Brighouse Choral Society. Coming Season	1026	— The Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism (Review)	142
Blackpool, Music at	747, 843	Brighton and Hove Harmonic Society. Coming Season	1026	Camborne, Cornwall Symphony Orchestra	457, 1126
Blair, Hugh. Anthem, 'Lord, Thou hast been our Refuge' (Review)	342	Bristol Eisteddfod	442	Cambridge, Music at	175, 457
Blanche, Jacques-Emile. 'Dates' (Review)	237	Bristol, Music at 73, 171, 262, 361, 457, 554, 651, 1033, 1126		— University Musical Society	175
Bliss, Arthur (Germany). 'Rout' (Review)	266	— Opera at Victoria Rooms. Clifton	1031	— Coming Season	1026
Songs, 'The Women of Yueh' (Review)	1101	British Empire Eisteddfod, The	261, 360, 651	Campbell, Florence Mary Lucy (Obituary)	462
B.N.O.C. at Covent Garden	162, 163, 255	British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals. The Adolescent Singer	58	Canadian College of Organists, Annual Convention...	1035
Bocherini (Rome). Unpublished Quartet in C minor	364	— (Correspondence) (see 421)	446	Canford Musical Society	69
Bognor Bach Choir	171	British Music Industries Directory for 1924	404	Caplet, André. 'Epiphanie' ('Fresque' for Cello and Orchestra) (Review)	1101
Philharmonic Society	73	British Music Society, The. Fifth Annual Conference (see 698)	558, 743	Cardiff Blue Ribbon Choir. Coming Season	1026
Boito, Arrigo (Rome). Posthumous opera, 'Nerone' (First Performance)	556	British Musicians and Protection against Foreign Artists (Occasional Notes)	135, 236, 252, 334	— Music at 73, 171, 262, 361, 457, 554, 1033, 1127
Bolton Choral Union. Coming Season	1026	British National Opera Company (see 169)	162, 255, 648, 745	— Musical Society. Coming Season	1120
Bonner, Eugene. Songs, 'Flutes' (Review)	152	— 'Alkestis' (Rutland Boughton)	161	Carey, Clive. English songs at Aeolian Hall	260
Two Songs from the Chinese (Review)	153	— 'Gianni Schicchi' (Review)	163	— Song, 'Melmillo' (Review)	343
Bontoft, Frederick. Pianoforte, 'Cortège' (Review)	1103	— Hugh the Drover' (Vaughan Williams)	745	Carillon and Choir	743
Books Received	54	— 'Otello' (Verdi)	163	Carl Meyer Memorial Prize at G.S.M.	742
Boosterstown Parish Church, Dublin. Charles Wood's 'Passion according to St. Mark'	539	— 'Parsifal' (Review)	255	Carl Rosa Opera Company	648, 649
Border Competitive Musical Festival	443, 551	— 'Pelléas and Mélisande' (Debussy)	648	— 'Bubbles' (Bath)	649
'Boris Godounov': Genuine and Otherwise. By M.-D. Calvocoressi (see Germany, 364)	117	— 'Perfect Fool, The' (Holst)	746	— 'Fidelio' at the Scala	648
Borodin Revised. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	1086	British Organ Music (Correspondence)	739	— 'Prince Fereol' ('Gatty')	649
Borowski, Felix. Sonata No. 3, for Organ (Review)	1111	British Pianists and Pianoforte Music (Correspondence)	64	— Rose Cavalier, The	649
Boston Choral Society. Coming Season	1026	'British Players and Singers' (Correspondence)	252	— 'Three Musketeers' (De Lara)	649
Boughton and the 'Alkestis.' By Richard Binns	231	British Women's Symphony Orchestra	455	Carlisle Choral Society	554
Boughton, Rutland. 'Alkestis,' at Covent Garden	162	Britten, James. The 'Adeste Fideles' (Review)	828	Carlisle Competitive Musical Festival	442
'Bethlehem,' at the Regent Theatre	164	Broadcasting Programmes and Concert Attendances (Ad Libitum)	123	Carnegie United Kingdom Trust. Publications	558
Part-Songs: 'Prosperie,' 'Quick March,' 'Contentment' (Review)	619	Broderon, V. String Quartet, Op. 16 (Miniature Score)	911	Carol-Anthem, Three. Publications by the Faith Press (Review)	342
Song, 'Piper's Song' (Review)	342	Bromley Choral Society	455	Carrickfergus Competitive Musical Festival	443, 650
Song, 'The Blacksmith' (Review)	620	— Coming Season	1025	Carse, Adam. 'Concertino' for Violin and Pianoforte (Review)	716
Songs, 'Sister Rain' and 'Foam Song' (Review)	620	Brooke, Harold. Two Books of the 'Forty-Eight,' in one Volume (Review)	1111	— Harmony Exercises (Review)	709
'Wee Men,' at Birmingham	170	'Brows, high and low' (Correspondence) (see 409, 504)	449, 545	— Locke's Suite in G, for Violin and Pianoforte, Edited by (Review)	821
Boulton, Adrian C. Appointment to Birmingham Municipal Orchestra (see 457)	425	Bruckner Centenary, The. By John F. Porte	1028	— Pianoforte, 'A Northern Song' and 'A Northern Dance' (Review)	822
Bournemouth Municipal Choir	73	Bruckner (Vienna). A Posthumous Symphony in D	653	— Song, 'My Lady Wind' (Review)	342
Bournemouth Musical Festival	511	Bryan, Gordon. Song, 'Phantom' (Review)	916	Song, 'The Broomskire's Son' (Review)	618
Bournemouth, Thirteenth Season of Symphony Concerts at	1033	Buck, Percy C. 'The Scope of Music,' (Review)	998	— String Orchestra, 'Two Sketches' (Miniature Score)	911
Bournville Carillon, The	550	Budleigh-Salterton Choral Society	554	Casella, Alfredo. 'The Evolution of Music' (Review) (see 605)	630
Bournville Competitive Festival. Ring out, wild bells' (Bantock)	743	— Coming Season	1026	Castellnuovo-Tedesco, Mario. Six Shakespeare Songs (Review)	916
Bowen, York. Pianoforte Duet, Second Suite (Review)	823	— Music at	71, 554	Castle Cary (Somerset) Choral Society	554
Boyce, Ethel. Four Two-part Songs (Review)	619	Built to Music. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	1033	Cavendish. Faustina hath the fairer face,' S.S.A.T.B. (transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson) (Review)	1104
Part-Songs. 'The Maybush' and 'Ye dainty nymphs' (Review)	1104	Burnley, Music at	1033	Cecil James Sharp. Obituary (see 632)	689
School Songs, 'Daffies and Tulips' and 'The Tortoise' (Review)	342	Bury St. Edmunds, Music at	1033	Cellier, Alexandre. The Pianistic Interpretation of Bach's Music	352
Bradford Festival Choral Society. Coming Season	1026	Busoni, Ferruccio Benvenuto (Obituary) (see Germany, 1035)	847	Cemal d'Amour, The. By E. van der Straeten	40
Bradford, Music at	361	Butt, Dame Clara	260	Central Croydon Musical Society. Coming Season	1025
Bradford Old Choral Society. Coming Season	1026	Button, H. Elliot. Edition of Byrd's 'I joy not in no earthly bliss' (Review)	342	Central London Music Study Circle. Eleventh Season	926
Brahms. Four Serious Songs: Facsimile Reproduction of Manuscript	54	— Weelkes's 'O Care, thou wilt despatch me' (Review)	1103	Ceredigion Choral Festival, Aberystwyth	554
Some Thoughts towards a Re-valuation. By Richard Binns	509	Buxton, North Derbyshire, Competitive Musical Festival	650	Chacewater Musical Society	1033
Brantford (Ontario) Oratorio Society	548	'By Special Request' (Correspondence)	1022	Challinor. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts	646
Braunton Choral Society	554	Byrd. Centenary Celebrations (Occasional Notes)	137	Chaminade, C. Pianoforte, 'Air à danser' (Review)	151
Brent-Smith, Alexander. Accidental Strokes of Genius	885	— Great Service 'by Newcastle Bach Choir (see Occasional Notes, 1002, 1098)	636	— Pianoforte duets, 'Second Gavotte': 'Valse Romantique' (Review)	1103
Ludwig van Beethoven	214	— 'I joy not in no earthly bliss,' edited by H. Elliot Button	342	Chanting: A Suggestion. By Donald MacArthur	934
On Knowing Things	22	— Memorial, at Stondon Massey	355	— (Correspondence)	1017, 1117
One Generation Cometh	115			Chatham, Music at	73, 171

	Page		Page		Page
Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic Society. Coming Season...	1025	Corbett, Samuel (Obituary) ...	270	Dawson, Peter. Song Recital ...	553
Choir-Training: The Responsibility of the Clergy ...	999	Corder, Frederick. A History of the Royal Academy of Music from 1822 to 1922 (Review) ...	523	De Curzon, Henri. 'Ernest Reyer: sa Vie et ses Œuvres' (Review) ...	236
Choral Society Programmes 939, 1025, 1122		— Presentation ...	740	De Falla, M. 'Three-Cornered Hat,' at Queen's Hall ...	70
Christ Church, Westminster Bridge Road. Reconstruction of Organ ...	250	Cornelius, Peter. By Edith A. H. Crawshaw ...	1133	De Hidalgo, Madame Elvira. At Covent Garden ...	260
Church Congress, Oxford, Music at ...	1014	Cornwall Competitive Musical Festival	443	De Lara, Isidore. Opera, 'The Three Musketeers,' First Performance in England (See 649) ...	555
City of London Choral Union ...	175, 943	Cortot, Alfred. Royal Philharmonic Society's Gold Medal ...	69	De Livet, Madame Suzanne. Song Recital ...	260
City of London College Choir ...	158, 636	Cotton, George M. An Inherent Disability of Musical Criticism ...	515	De Lloyd, Dr. (Aberystwyth). New Welsh Opera, 'Gwenllïan' ...	261
City Temple Choral Society ...	158, 636	Covent Garden. 'Alkestis' (B.N.O.C.) ...	162	De Solis, Solito. At the 'Proms.' ...	1028
— Coming Season ...	1025	— 'Bohème' ...	648	— Pianoforte Recitals ...	359
Civil Service Choir ...	72, 939	— de Hidalgo, Elvira, at ...	260	De Ternant, Andrew. Debussy and Brahms ...	608
— Coming Season ...	939, 1025, 1120	— 'Gianni Schicchi' (B.N.O.C.) ...	163	— Debussy and Others on Sullivan ...	1089
Civil Service Orchestra ...	72	— Italian Ballet and Opera at ...	357, 647, 746	— Debussy and some Italian Musicians ...	813
— Coming Season ...	1025	— Keltie, Madeline, at ...	648	Deal and Walmer, Music at ...	457, 554
Clapham, Congregational Church. Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' ...	62	— 'Madame Butterfly' ...	648	Debussy and Brahms. By Andrew de Ternant ...	608
— Two Psalms (Holst) ...	1015	— Norena, Eide, at ...	648	Debussy and Others on Sullivan. By Andrew de Ternant ...	1089
Clare (Suffolk) Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 441	— 'Otello' (B.N.O.C.) ...	163	Debussy and some Italian Musicians. By Andrew de Ternant ...	813
Clarke, Hamilton. Part-song, 'To the Audience' (Review) ...	342	— 'Parsifal' (B.N.O.C.) ...	255	Delius, Frederick. New Violin Sonata (The Music Society) ...	1030
Clarke, Rebecca. Songs, 'Down by the Sally Gardens' and 'Infant Joy' (Review) ...	1100	— Piccaver, Alfred, at ...	647	— Part-Song, 'The Streamlet's Slumber Song' (Review) ...	619
Classical and 'Other' Music (Correspondence) ...	738	— 'Rigoletto' ...	647	— Song, 'What does little birdie say?' (Review) ...	618
Cloughton, Alban. Music in Public Schools ...	427	— 'Tosca' ...	647	— String Quartet (Miniature Score) ...	911
Claypole, Arthur G. Free Counterpoint (see 'Correspondence') ...	447, 545	— 'Traviata' ...	647	— 'The splendour falls on castle walls' (Review) ...	620
Cleckheaton Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1026	Coventry Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Dennison, Herbert. Pianoforte, 'Papillons' (Review) ...	1103
Cleotherpes Musical Competitive Festival ...	747	Cowen, Sir Frederic. Part-Song, 'At Dawn of Day' (from 'The Sleeping Beauty') (Arranged) ...	1104	'Der Zwerg' (Zemlinsky), at Vienna ...	269
Cleveland Harmonic Male-Voice Choir and Cecilia Glee Society. Coming Season ...	1026	Crawshaw, Edith A. H. Peter Cornelius ...	1133	Derby Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1027
Clifton, Victoria Rooms. Series of Operas ...	740, 908, 1031	Crawshawbooth, St. John's. New Organ ...	250	Derby, Music at ...	171
Coates, John. Chelsea Concerts ...	360	Craxton, Harold. Recital ...	175	Derry Feis (Ireland) ...	459
Cobbett, W. W., at Trinity College of Music. On the Need of General Culture for Musicians ...	234	Crediton Male Choir ...	262	Dickinson, Alan E. F. The Fingering of Scales on the Pianoforte (see 542, 640, 737, 837) ...	432 — Competitions at Royal College of Music ...	68, 452, 547, 1025	Cremor, Oscar. How to become a Professional Violinist (Review) ...	623	Dictionary of Modern Music' and Musicians, A. (Edited by Eaglefield Hull) (Review) ...	919
Cockermouth Harmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1026	Crewe Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1120	Dixon, George. The Albert Hall Organ ...	829
Cohen, Harriet. Bach Concert ...	271	Crieff Choral and Operatic Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Do Composers understand the Trumpet? (Correspondence) ...	159
— and Beatrice Harrison ...	356	Critic and the Composer, The. By Jeffrey Mark ...	693	Dobson, C. E. Blyton. Paper on 'Hymn-Tunes and their Story' ...	250
Colchester, Music at ...	457, 1127	Critic on His Critics, A. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	311	Dodds, George. 'The Lord's Prayer' (Review) ...	718
Colchester Musical Society ...	457	— 'Criticism' of the R.C.O. Choir-Training Examinations, A ...	248	Doh-Minor, The. A Reminder (Correspondence) ...	253
— Coming Season ...	1026	— (Correspondence) ...	350	— A Warning (Correspondence) ...	639
Cole, Gladys. At Queen's Hall ...	554	Croiza, Madame. Song Recital ...	553	Dolgely Grammar School, Music at ...	651
Coleman, Esther. Song Recital ...	168	Crowest, F. J. An Apology ...	641	Dorset Choral Association Competitive Festival ...	443
Coleridge-Taylor. Orchestral Suite, 'Othello,' arranged for Organ by Herbert F. Ellingford (Review) ...	522	Croydon Competitive Musical Festival	442	Downland. 'Stay, Time, awhile thy flying,' S.A.T.B. (Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson) ...	1104
Colles, H. C. Some New York Organists and their Organs ...	221	Croydon Symphony Orchestra and Philharmonic Society ...	988	— Two Songs from 'A Pilgrim's Solace' (Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson) ...	1100
Collingwood, Arthur. Presentation ...	67	— Coming Season ...	1025	Drayton, William (Obituary) ...	558
Colson, Betty. Pianoforte, 'The Golden Age' (Review) ...	716	Crystal Palace British Empire Festival ...	261, 360, 651	Drew, W. S. Voice-Training: the Relation of Theory and Practice (Review) ...	827
Colville Competitive Musical Festival ...	360	Crystal Palace Choral and Orchestral Society ...	455	Driver, Percival. Song Recital ...	553
Commentary upon Mendelssohn, A. By Hubert J. Foss ...	404, 497, 595	— Coming Season ...	1003, 1025	Du Caurroy, Eustache. Carol, 'Noël' (Review) ...	342
— (Correspondence) 739, 836, 932, 1017, 1115		Cundell, Edric. Pianoforte, 'London-derry Air' (Arranged) ...	151	Dublin Feis Ceoil ...	261, 551, 650
Competition Festival Record 57, 261, 363, 441, 551, 650, 746, 840, 939, 1032, 1125		— (Review) ...	151	— University Choral Society ...	76
Conductor and His Fore-Runners, The. By William Wallace ...	17, 113, 211	Cunningham, G. D. Birmingham City Organist ...	347, 540	Dubois, François Clement Théodore (Obituary) ...	750
— V.—The Means ...	17	Curves of Caruso, The. By Prof. E. W. Scripture ...	517	Duet Playing (Ad Libitum) ...	1078
— VI.—The Method ...	113	Cwmaman and Aberaman Choral Society ...	171	Dulwich Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1120
— VII.—The Dawn of Modern Conducting ...	211	Cyril Scott and Debussy (Correspondence) ...	448	— Coming Season ...	1027
— (Correspondence) ...	64, 159, 251	D'Aranyi, Jelly, and Béla Bartók ...	71	Dunfermline Choral Union ...	1033
Conductor and the 'Beat,' The (Correspondence) ...	64	D'Averil, Nicolas. Pianoforte, 'Little Sea Pictures' (Review) ...	55	Dungannon Competitive Musical Festival ...	443, 552
Conductor: His Uses and Abuses, The. By Arthur L. Salmon ...	29	Da Motta, Senhor Vianna, and Madame Suggia. Concerts ...	1124	Dunhill, Thomas F. 'Pleasantries' (Snow String Quartet) ...	259
Conductors and Conducting. By William Wallace 593, 690, 785, 891, 985, 1082		Dahms, Walter. Musik des Südens (Review) ...	533	— String Quartet, 'Phantasy' (Review) ...	335
— II.—Dramaturgics ...	690	Daily Mail Year-Book (Review) ...	56	Dupré, Marcel. Recitals ...	732, 1014
— III.—The Conductor in the Making ...	785	Dalcroze Eurhythmics. Adults' Summer Vacation Course ...	609	Dutch Music, The Renascence of. Musical Association Paper, by Herbert Antcliffe ...	1120
— IV.—The Physical Aspect of the Beat ...	891	Dale, Benjamin. Pianoforte, 'Holiday Tune' (Review) ...	822	Dux, Claire. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ...	647
— V.—The Rehearsal ...	985	Darreuther, Gustav (Obituary) ...	175	Dyke, Spencer. Violin Scale-Book (Review) ...	336
— VI.—The Musical Aspect of the Beat ...	1082	Darke, Dr. Harold. New Choral Society for City ...	175, 929, 943	Dyson, Dr. George. Musical Association Paper, 'Criticism of the Living' ...	352
Confusion of Tonality in Elizabethan Compositions (Correspondence) ...	837	— Organ Recitals ...	158
Connell, John. Four Songs (Review) ...	621	Darlington Bach Choir ...	457
Constitution of the Military Band (Correspondence) ...	738	Davenport, F. W. 'Stabat Mater' (Review) ...	342
Contemporary Music Centre ...	259, 358	Davies, Sir Walford. A Students' Hymnal for Use in Schools and Colleges (Edited) ...	707
Contest for Composers (Olympic Games) ...	56	— 'Hymns of the Kingdom' (Edited) ...	707
Cooper, Gerald. Concerts ...	168, 1124	Davis, John David. Pianoforte, Prælium (Review) ...	150
Coppola, Piero. Songs, 'There is a wheel inside my head' and 'Morn in May' (Review) ...	620	Davison, Munro. Recital of Christmas Music ...	175

	Page		Page		Page
Dyson, Dr. George. 'New Music, The' (Review) ... ..	1094	Evans, Edwin (Sen.). Prague Festival	611	Finsbury Public Library Quarterly Guide for Readers ... ..	614
— Part-Song, 'Evening' (Review) ...	342	Evans, T. Hopkin. Song, 'Ingeborg' (Review) ... ..	152	Fischer, Sarah. Song Recital ... ..	1030
— Part-Song, 'Thanksgiving' (Review) ... ..	620	'Eve of St. John, The.' New Opera, by Sir Alexander Mackenzie ... ..	439	Fisher, Anna Priscilla. Two Trios for Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte (Review) ... ..	618
Ealing Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ... ..	1025	Exeter Cathedral. Brahms's 'Requiem' ... ..	62	Fleming, George T. 'The Music of the Congregation' (Review) (see 348) ...	53
Ealing, Christ Church. Re-opening of Organ ... ..	1113	Exeter Competitive Musical Festival ...	746	Fletcher, Percy E. Part-Song, 'The Pilgrim Fathers' (Review) ... ..	1103
Ealing Philharmonic Society ... ..	72, 162	Exeter, Music at 73, 172, 263, 362, 458, 554, 651, 1033, 1127	1127	— Part-Songs, 'Valley of Dreams' and 'Who lives so merry' (Review) ...	1104
— Coming Season ... ..	1026	Exeter Organists' Association Annual Dinner ... ..	539	Flood, W. H. Grattan. New Light on Early Tudor Composers 39, 223, 420, 506	506
Easingwold and District Musical Society ... ..	554	Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts, The. By Arthur T. Froggatt ...	610	— XXIX.—William Pasche ... ..	39
East Anglian Association of Musical Societies (Occasional Notes) ... ..	422	Exmouth, Music at ... ..	73, 172, 1127	— XXX.—Richard Edwards ... ..	243
East Grinstead Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	443	Exmouth Choral Society ... ..	554	— XXXI.—Edward Higgins ... ..	420
East Sussex and Tunbridge Wells Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	360	Expert, Henry. 'Claude Le Jeune: Octonaires de la Vanité et Inconsistance du Monde' (Review) ... ..	997	— XXXII.—William Parsons ... ..	506
Eastman School of Music, The. By A. J. Warner ... ..	43	Extracts from recently published books on Singing ... ..	129	Flood, W. H. Grattan. New Light on Late Tudor Composers 703, 801, 894, 989, 1085	1085
Eberhardt, Goby. Method for Violin (Review) ... ..	526	Fabian, Ladislaus. Claude Debussy (Review) ... ..	53	— I.—William Selby ... ..	703
Edinburgh Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	746	Facsimile Reproductions of Manuscripts: 'Siegfried Idyll,' Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp, Brahms's Four Serious Songs, 'Meistersinger' Overture (Review) ... ..	54	— II.—John Shepherd ... ..	801
Edinburgh, Music at 73, 172, 262, 361, 457, 747, 1127	1127	Fairchild, Blair. Pianoforte, 'En Voyage' (Review) ... ..	150	— III.—William Mundy ... ..	894
Edmonds, Paul. Suite for Quartet, 'A Village Wedding' (Review) ... ..	335	Faith Press, The. Merbecke's Communion Service (Review) ... ..	342	— IV.—Richard Farrant ... ..	989
Edmunds, Chris. M. Part-Song, 'Slave Song' (Review) ... ..	619	— Missa de Angelis' (Review) ... ..	342	— V.—Robert Parsons ... ..	1085
Education Committee's Report on British Music, The (see 261) ... ..	233	— Three Carol-Anthems (Review) ... ..	342	Fogg, Eric. Songs, 'The Dove' and 'Nocturne' (Review) ... ..	917
Educational Basis for Organ Recital Programmes, An. By C. F. Waters	538	Falkirk and District Choral Union. Coming Season ... ..	1027	Folkstone Competitive Musical Festival	360
Edward FitzGerald: Musician. By Llewelyn C. Lloyd ... ..	643	Falkirk Competitive Musical Festival... 'Family Circle, The,' at Royal College of Music. Opera by Dr. Charles Wood ... ..	257	Folk-Song Society, No. 27, 'The Journal of the Folk-Song Society' (Review) ...	827
Edwards. Part-Song, 'In going to my lonely bed' (Review) ... ..	1103	Farjeon, Harry. Art of Pianoforte Pedalling, The (Review) ... ..	823	Foot-Notes to Musical History. By William C. Smith ... ..	886
Edwards, N. Victor. Ernest Austin's 'The Pilgrim's Progress' at St. Matthew's, Croydon ... ..	250	— Pianoforte, 'Elegie Héroïque' (Review) ... ..	1103	Ford, Donald. Cradle Song (Review) ...	343
Eighteenth Century 'Societies of Singers' (Correspondence) ... ..	1021	— Pianoforte. Three Fancy Dances for Children (Review) ... ..	716	— Song, 'Little Shepherd' (Review) ... ..	343
Einstein, Alfred. Hugo Riemann's Musik-Lexikon, Revised by ... ..	149	— Rag-Time (see Correspondence, 1022) ... ..	795	Ford, Harold. 'Pulpit and Platform Oratory' (Review) ... ..	828
Eisler, Hanns (Germany). New Composer ... ..	1130	— Style and Stylishness ... ..	984	Forgotten Prophet, A. By Gerald R. Hayes ... ..	327
Elgar. Appointment, Master of the King's Music ... ..	513	— Unaccompanied Songs, 'Snatches and Catches' (Review) ...	917	'Forty-eight, The.' (Occasional Notes)	30
— Part-Songs, 'The Wanderer' and 'Zut! Zut! Zut!' (Review) ... ..	619	Farnaby, Giles. 'Constume my Meaning,' S.A.T.B. (Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson) ... ..	1104	Foss, Hubert J. Art of Accompanying Songs ... ..	979, 1073
— Pianoforte, Empire March (Review) ... ..	1103	Farrant, Richard. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A minor (edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes) ... ..	718	— Commentary upon Mendelssohn, A (see 739, 836, 932, 1017, 1115)	404, 497, 595
— Quartet in E minor (Dublin) ... ..	1174	Fauré, Gabriel (Obituary) (see 1131) ...	1134	— Salzburg Festival ... ..	845
— Songs Composed for Pageant of Empire (Review) ... ..	917	Faversham Parish Church. Brahms's Requiem ... ..	62	Foster, Megan. Song Recital ... ..	456
— 'The Dream of Gerontius,' a Contradiction (Occasional Notes) ...	235	Faversham Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027	Foulds, John. 'The Tell-Tale Heart' (Review) ... ..	918
Elizabethan competitive Festival 62, 261, 441, 1925 Syllabus ... ..	1032	Federation of British Music Industries. Oxford Summer Course in Music ...	839	Fraser, Marjorie Kennedy and Granville Bantock. New Opera, 'The Seal Woman' ... ..	994
Elkin & Co. (Occasional Notes) ... ..	56	Federation of British Musical Competitive Festivals ... ..	840	Fraser, Mrs. Kennedy. An Old Border Love-lilt, 'Nancy's Hair' (Review) ...	621
Ellingford, Herbert F. Coleridge-Taylor's Suite, 'Othello' (Arranged)	522	— Conference ... ..	1125	Free Counterpoint. By Arthur G. Claypole ... ..	320
Elliston, Thomas. 'Organs and Tuning: A Practical Handbook for Organists' (Review) ... ..	432	Fellowes, Dr. E. H., Edited by Anthems, 'Almighty and Everlasting God' and 'Almighty God, Who by Thy Son' (Orlando Gibbons) ... ..	717	— (Correspondence) ... ..	447, 545
Eltham Choral Society. Coming Season (see 'Gervase Elwes') ... ..	119	— 'Let Thy merciful ears, O Lord' (Thos. Weelkes) ... ..	717	'Free Rhythms, Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in.' By Archdeacon Gardner (Review) ... ..	523
Empire Exhibition, Music at (see 704) 307, 422, 549, 649, 936	936	— 'O Lord, the Maker of all thing' (Wm. Mundy) ... ..	717	— Music in, for the Eucharist, By Archdeacon Gardner (Review) ...	523
Empire Musical Festival at Crystal Palace ... ..	261, 360, 651	Ferroud, P. O. Pianoforte, 'Prelude and Forlane' (Review) ... ..	1102	Freeman, Andrew. The Worshipful Company of Parish Clerks and its Organ ... ..	443
Empire Song Book, The (Review) ... ..	618	'Feste' and the '48' (Correspondence) (see 30) ... ..	252	Freund, Marya. Song Recital ... ..	71
Emsworth Musical Society (Portsmouth) ... ..	75	Festival of the Sons of the Clergy, The 27th ... ..	558	Fridmann-Grammaté, Sonja (Germany). A new Musical Genius ... ..	1130
Enfield Competitive Musical Festival 261, 441	249	Fidler, Florence G. The Re-Standardisation of the Small Orchestra ... ..	134	Froggatt, Arthur T. The Incomplete Orchestra (see 505) ... ..	424
England, Leslie. Pianoforte Recital English and German Musical Life Compared. By Adolf Weissmann ...	137	— (Correspondence) ... ..	251	— Exhibition of the Royal Academy of Arts ... ..	610
English Folk-Dance Society ... ..	175	Field, Jessie. 'Colour and Key' (Review) ... ..	828	Fry, Howard. Song Recital ... ..	456
'English Hymnal, The' (Review) ... ..	707	Fieldhouse, Arthur, and E. Ewart. Income Tax Simplified (Review) ...	54	Furmedge, Edith. Song Recital ... ..	456
Englishness of Parry, The. By Alexander Brent-Smith (see Correspondence, 1115) ... ..	977	Fife, Kinross, and Clackmannan Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	360	Gainsborough Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	551
Erba, Urio, Stradella, and Handel. By P. Robinson ... ..	607	Finchley Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1026	Gainsborough, Music at ... ..	362
Erbe, Kurt. Pachelbel, Fugue in E minor (Edited) ... ..	55	Fingering of Scales on the Pianoforte, The. By Alan E. F. Dickinson ... ..	432	Gainsborough Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027
Erdman, Edward (Vienna). First Symphony ... ..	269	— (Correspondence) 542, 640, 737, 837	837	Galashiels Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	261, 551
'Eroica' Symphony, The. By R. W. S. Mendl ... ..	125	Finlay, Kenneth G. Part-Songs, 'Afton Water,' 'Autumn Song,' 'Ho, ro! my nut-brown maiden,' 'Nocturne' (Review) ... ..	619	Galli-Curci. Concerts at Albert Hall ...	1029
Eskdale Tournament ... ..	443	— Part-Song, 'Inishail' (Review) ... ..	1104	Galli-Curci-itis (see 1096) ... ..	1000
Essex Musical Association Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	442	— Part-Songs, 'Corn-Rigs,' 'Lassie of the witchin' e'ee,' and 'My faithful fond one' (Review) ... ..	1104	'Galliarde by Mr. Cutting, A' (Correspondence) ... ..	1115
Eton College. New organ (see 1114) ...	1014			Galloway Competitive Musical Festival	443
Evans, Edwin (Sen.). Immortal Nine, The: Beethoven's Symphonies fully Described and Analysed (Review) ... ..	239			Gambogi, Elvira. Songs, 'Dew' and 'The Little Rain' (Review) ... ..	152

	Page		Page		Page
Garratt, Percival. Song, 'Gettin' off' (Review) ...	916	Griffith, W. Daily Studies in Singing (Review) ...	918	Heilman, William Clifford. Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and Cello (Review) ...	55
Two Epigrams for Pianoforte (Review) ...	151	— Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A, and F major (Review) ...	522	Helmrich, Dorothy. Song Recital ...	260
Gateshead New Male-Voice Choir ...	554	Grover, J. Maynard. Songs, 'All things passing away,' 'If I had but two little wings,' 'The Dove said, give us peace,' and 'When Mother sings' (Review) ...	620	Hempel, Frieda. At Royal Albert Hall (see 1096) ...	1124
Genius, Accidental Strokes of. By Alexander Brent-Smith ...	885	Grovez, Gabriel. 'Les plus beaux airs de l'Opéra Français' (Review) ...	343	Hemstock, A. On Tuning the Organ (Review) (Revised by the Rev. Noel Bonavia-Hunt) ...	630
George III., Handel, and Mainwaring. By William C. Smith (see 106) ...	789	— Pianoforte, 'Sarabande' (Review) ...	1102	Henschel, Helen. Song Recitals ...	169, 1124
Gérar, Marcelle. At a Ravel Concert ...	553	Grundmann, Alfred. Eleven Choral Preludes (Review) ...	55	Herbert, A. P., and C. Armstrong Gibbs. New Opera, 'The Blue Peter' ...	257
Gerhardt, Elena. Song Recitals ...	456, 553	— Organ Music. Three Preludes in Fugal Form (Review) ...	55	Hereford Festival, The. By Herbert Thompson (see 513, 905) ...	908
German, Edward. Part-Songs, 'My bonnie lass she smileth' and 'Song for Spring' (Arranged) ...	1104	— Three Pastorales on Christmas Carols (Review) ...	55	Hexham Abbey. Mozart's Requiem ...	446
Germany, Music in ...	76, 265, 363, 459, 555, 1035, 1130	Guilford Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Hiawatha 'as Opera ...	407, 551
Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians ...	255, 1097	Guilford, Music at ...	73, 458, 940	Hickey, Vivian. Song, 'A Little While' (Review) ...	912
— (Correspondence) ...	738	Guilddhall School of Music ...	78, 742	Hickin, Welton. Pianoforte Accompaniment' (Review) ...	826
Gesture in Song (Occasional Notes) ...	613	— Carl Meyer Memorial Prize ...	742	Higgins, L. N. Absolute and Programme Music ...	987
'Gianni Schicchi' at Covent Garden ...	163	Guille-Allès Choral Association. Guernsey. Coming Season ...	1120	— Personality and the Artist ...	418
Giannini, Dusolina. Concerts at Queen's Hall ...	744	Hackett, Charles. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ...	359	Highgate Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Gib, Rev. Charles. 'Vocal Success, or Thinking and Feeling in Speech and Song' (Review) ...	238	Hadow, Sir Henry. Lectures on 'English Composers of the Tudor Period,' at R.C.M. ...	257	Highgate (Music in Public Schools) ...	840
Gibbons, Orlando. Anthems, 'Almighty and Everlasting God' and 'Almighty God, Who by Thy Son,' Edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes (Tudor Church Music Series) ...	717	— Musical Association Paper: 'The Balance of Expression and Design in Music' ...	67, 167, 550	Hilder, Olivia. Song Recital ...	554
Gibbs, Armstrong. Part-Songs, 'Come, sleep' and 'I loved a lass' (Review) ...	342	Haigh, E. T. 'Rêve Angelique' (Review) ...	997	Hill, Francis J. Tour of Organ and Violoncello Recitals ...	1015
— Score, 'Midsummer Madness' ...	912	Haileybury School Carol Service ...	69	Hinckley, Music at ...	843
— Song, 'Slow, horses, slow' (Review) ...	1100	— Choral and Orchestral Concert ...	744	Hirst, A. Livingstone. Bach's Two-part Inventions, arranged as Trios for Organ ...	1111
— Songs, 'The Sleeping Beauty,' 'The Tiger Lily,' 'At night in black Gethsemane, Our Lord was praying there,' 'The Galliassi,' 'Lullaby,' 'The Little Salamander,' 'When I was young and twenty' (Review) ...	916	Halifax Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	— Higher Green Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ...	1120
Gibson, The late Alfred (Violinist) (Correspondence) ...	739	— St. Paul's Choral Society ...	458	Hobart Orchestral Society. Concert ...	1135
Girls' Club Choirs. St. Cecilia Festival, Albert Hall ...	1143	Hallé Orchestra, The, in London ...	1122	Hodge, Herbert. Organ Recitals ...	446, 1114
Glasgow Bach Society. Coming Season ...	1135	Ham, Albert. 'Outlines of Musical Form' (Review) ...	921	Hoffman, Josef ...	359
Glasgow Choral and Orchestral Union. Coming Season ...	1027	Handel and Kerl (Correspondence) ...	1017	Hoffmann and America (Correspondence) ...	545
Glasgow Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 442, 1127	Handel and the Earl of Egmont (Correspondence) (see 789) ...	1016	Holbrooke, Josef. 'Danse Moderne,' for Violin and Pianoforte (Review) ...	618
Glasgow, Music at ...	73, 172, 263, 362, 1127	Handel Biography, A New ...	460	— Song, 'The Tea-Shop Girl' (Review) ...	917
Glasgow Orpheus Choir. Visit to London ...	454	Handel-Elgar Overture. Played at Cape Town ...	443	Hollinshead, Harold. Recovery of the Lost Voice (see 450, 543, 641, 737) ...	318
Glyn, Margaret H. 'About Elizabethan Virginal Music and its Composers' (Review) ...	533	Handel Festival Choir. Verdi's Requiem Handel. George III., and Mainwaring. By William C. Smith (see 106) ...	789	Holst, Gustav. 'Hymn of Jesus' ...	357, 358
Goatley, Alma. Song, 'Second Thoughts' (Review) ...	1101	Handel's 'Delicious Profanity' (Correspondence) (see 65, 349, 541) ...	448	— 'Intermezzo' from 'St. Paul's' Suite, arranged by Vally Lasker ...	1102
Godebski, M. Fr. Violin, 'Danse' and 'Bagatelle' (Review) ...	715	Hanley, Music at ...	458	— 'Jig' from 'St. Paul's' Suite, arranged for Pianoforte and Violin by Vally Lasker (Review) ...	997
Godfrey, Sir Dan. 'Memories and Music' (Review) (see 806, 906) ...	524	Harding, Dr. H. A. Retirement of, and Presentation to ...	161	— New Fugal Concerto (Philharmonic Concert) ...	356
Godolphin School for Girls (Salisbury). Miscellaneous Concert ...	1135	Hardy, Edwin. Twenty-five Melodic Studies for Organ (Review) ...	1111	— 'The Cloud Messenger' ...	258
Godowsky, Louis. Menuetto, for Violin and Pianoforte (Review) ...	618	Harlech Music Festival ...	747	— Twelve Sacred and Secular Rounds by the pupils of (Review) ...	1104
Goldmark's 'The Queen of Sheba' (Correspondence) ...	1021	Harris, W. H. 'Abide with me' (Michael Wise) (Arranged) ...	718	Holt, Richard. Music and the Cinema ...	426
Goodhart, Arthur M. 'Sympathy,' for Organ (Review) ...	55	— Anthems, 'Come, Holy Ghost' and 'O Strength and Stay' (Review) ...	523	Home, Ethel. Ear-Training and Musical Dictation (Review) ...	623
Goossens, Eugène. Chamber Concerts ...	168, 357, 445	Harris, William H. Part-song, 'The Huntsman's Song' (Review) ...	1111	Honeyer-Eckardt Edition of Bach's Organ Works (Review) ...	521
Goss, John. Song Recitals ...	360, 456	Harrison, Beatrice, and Harriet Cohen. Joint Recitals ...	356, 552	Honegger, Arthur. 'Pacific,' Performance at New York ...	231, 1130
Grace, Harvey. Associated Board Edition of the 'Forty-Eight' ...	895	Harrison, Julius. Bach's Prelude and Fugue in G minor (Arranged for String Orchestra) ...	997	— 'Song of Joy,' at Queen's Hall ...	69
— Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas ...	34, 130	Harrison, Monica. Song Recital ...	271, 367	Horwitz, Karl (Vienna). New Song-cycle, 'Vom-Tode' ...	366
— (Correspondence) ...	253, 349	Harris, Dr. Charles. Imperial Choir Concerts at Wembley ...	307, 649	Howard - Jones, Evelyn. Pianoforte Recitals ...	259
Grafton Philharmonic Society ...	78	Harris, Mrs. Charles (Obituary) ...	558	Howell, Dorothy. String Quartet. Minuet (Review) ...	335
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ...	60, 153, 240, 355, 440, 534, 631, 718, 823, 923, 1005, 1121	Harrogate College. New Organ ...	62	Howells, Herbert. Sonata for Pianoforte and Violin, in E major (Review) ...	997
Grafelt, Hanna. Song Recitals ...	456	Harrogate Municipal Orchestra ...	1033	— Part-Songs, 'Holly Song,' 'Mother, mother,' 'Sing lully by, lully,' and 'Bells' (Review) ...	1111
Gray, Alan. Twelve Short Preludes for Organ (Review) ...	717	Harrow and Greenhill Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1026	— String Quartet, 'Lady Audrey's Suite' (Review) ...	618
Gray, Cecil. 'A Survey of Contemporary Music' (Review) ...	1094	Harty, Hamilton (Manchester). Pianoforte Concerto ...	264	— Three Part-Songs, 'First in the garden,' 'Sing Ivy,' and 'Swedish May Song' (Review) ...	1111
Greaves, Ralph. Song, 'The Maypole is up' (Review) ...	917	— Modern Composers and Modern Composition ...	328	Hawes, Frank. Notes on Monteverde's 'Orfeo' ...	509
Greene, Maurice. Solo extracts from Anthems, Edited by Stanley Roper ...	1100	— Waldesstille' and 'Der Schmetterling,' for Cello (Review) ...	816	Huddersfield Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Greene, Plunket. Song Recital ...	455	Harwood, M. April Songs, 'Secrets,' and 'A Cotswold Wood' (Review) ...	912	Huddersfield, Music at (see 252) ...	172, 362, 1127
Greenish, Arthur J. Communion Service in D (Review) ...	522	Haslingdon Parish Church. Re-opening of Organ ...	835	Hudson, Rev. H. Kynaston, and B. Vine Westbrook. 'The Simple Psalter and Canticles, pointed for Ancient Tones' (Review) ...	53
Greenish, Frederick Robert (Obituary) ...	175	Hastings Competitive Musical Festival ...	261	— 'Hugh the Drover.' Opera by Vaughan Williams ...	741, 746
Gresham College Lectures ...	825	Hawick and Galashiels Competitive Musical Festival ...	551	Hughes, Dom Anselm. Communion Service (Review) ...	523
Grew, Sydney. 'A Book of English Prosody' (Review) ...	825	Haydn. Mass in B flat (Miniature Score) ...	1111	Hughes, Herbert. Mackenzie's New Opera ...	439
— Ethel Smyth's Mass in D ...	140	— Symphonies, 'London' and 'Surprise' (Miniature Scores) ...	153	— Song, 'Open the door softly' (Review) ...	1100
— Favourite Musical Performers' (Review) ...	150	Hayes, Gerald R. A Forgotten Prophet The 17th Century on Quarter-Tones ...	327, 42	Hull Competitive Musical Festival ...	443, 650
		Hayes, Roland. Recital at Queen's Hall ...	359, 647	Hull Harmonie Society. Coming Season ...	1027
		Hazlehurst, Cecil. Song, 'When June is come' (Review) ...	343	Hull, Music at ...	172, 362, 458, 1127
		Heath, John. 'Reflexions,' for Pianoforte (Review) ...	520	Hull Vocal Society. Coming Season ...	1027
				Humphreys, Granville. More about the Larynx ...	693

	Page		Page		Page
Hungarian String Quartet. Kodály's		Kendal Competitive Musical Festival	261, 442, 551	Leamington Orchestral Society ...	1127
C minor Quartet ...	356	Kensington Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 443	Lee, Dr. Markham. Appointment ...	546
Concert ...	1124	Kent (Dover) Competitive Musical Festival ...	443	Three Pianoforte Duets, 'Prelude,' 'Romance,' and 'Irish Tune' (Review) ...	1103
Hunt, H. Ernest. 'Music Makers' (Review) ...	621	Kerr, Bessie. Chappell Concerts, Queen's Hall ...	260	Leeds Choral Union ('Ad Lib.'). Visit to Paris ...	714, 808
Hurstpierpoint, St. John's College. Recital by Choir ...	835	Keswick Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Leeds Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 442
Hymn Sixteen Hundred Years Old, A ...	61	Kidderminster Choral Society ...	458	Leeds, Music at ...	74, 172, 363, 458
'Hymns of the Kingdom' (Review) ...	707	Coming Season ...	1027	Leeds Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Ilkley (see 'Wharfedale').		Kienzl, Dr. Wilhelm (Ireland). Opera, 'The Apostle of St. Otmar' ...	363	Lehmann, Lilli. 'How to Sing' (Translated by Richard Aldrich) ...	827
'Income Tax Simplified.' By Arthur and E. Ewart Fieldhouse (Review) ...	54	Kilburn, Dr. Nicholas (Obituary) ...	78	Leicester Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1027
Incomplete Orchestra. The. By Arthur T. Froggatt (see 545) ...	424	Kimbell, H. J. Worrying about the Larynx ...	598	Leicester Musical Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Incorporated Society of Musicians ...	78	King, Horace W. A Twelve-year-old Organist ...	445	Leicester Symphony Orchestra ...	74
Annual Conference ...	165	Kingston, Surbiton, and District Musical Society ...	943	Lemare, E. H. : Encore Series of Transcriptions for Organ (Review) ...	522
Individuality in Music. By Thomas Armstrong ...	1090	Kingsway Hall. Opening of Organ ...	1015	Léner Quartet Concerts ...	259, 1124
Inherent Disability of Musical Criticism. An. By George M. Cotton ...	515	Saturday Night Popular Concerts ...	1086	Leon, Mischa. Song Recital ...	260
Instrumental Economy (Correspondence) ...	544	Kirkcaldy Musical Society ...	458	Lewes, Mary L. The Lore of the Welsh Harp ...	814
International Society for Contemporary Music (Germany) ...	266	Kitson, C. H. 'Art of Counterpoint, The' (Review) ...	623	Ley, H. G. 'Abide with us, the orb of day doth vanish' (Melody by L. Bourgeois) ...	523
(Vienna) ...	654	'Canon and Fugue' for Organ (Review) ...	717	Anthems, 'O God be with us' (set to a Bayeux Church Melody) ...	523
Ipswich, Music at ...	1033, 1127	Evolution of Harmony, The' (Review) ...	623	Benedictus, Agnus, and Gloria (Adapted) ...	523
Ireland, John. Sonata for Violoncello and Pianoforte (Review) ...	716	'Passacaglia and Fugue' for Organ (Review) ...	1111	'Darkening night the land doth cover' (Melody by L. Bourgeois, harmonized by Goudimel) ...	523
Songs, 'Skylark and Nightingale' and 'Your Brother has a Falcon' (Review) ...	1100	Klein, Herman. The 'Bel Canto' ...	308	Folk-Song, 'The sheep under the snow' (Review) ...	620
Ireland, Music in 75, 173, 265, 363, 459, 555, 653, 748, 843, 1034, 1129		'The Bel Canto, with particular reference to the Singing of Mozart' (Review) ...	238	'O gladsome Light' (Melody by L. Bourgeois) ...	523
Isle of Wight (Ryde) Competitive Musical Festival ...	443	Kling, Otto M. (Obituary) ...	558	'Round me falls the night' (Melody by A. Drese) ...	523
Islington Choral Society, Address on Choral Singing at the, by Sir Hugh Allen ...	995	Kobbe, Gustav. 'The Complete Opera Book' (Review) ...	709	Leyburn Musical Festival ...	843
Coming Season ...	1027	Kodály's C minor Quartet. First Performance, by Hungarian Quartet ...	356	Library of String Music. Edited by Geoffrey Shaw (Review) ...	335
'It was the Powder' (Correspondence) ...	737	'Cello Sonata ...	259, 552	Liebig, Mrs. Frank. Built to Music ...	224
Italian Ballet and Opera at Covent Garden ...	357, 647, 746	'Duo' for Violin and 'Cello' (Germany). Trio for two Violins and Viola ...	363	Music as a Living Language ...	802
Jacobson, Maurice. Song, 'Jolly good ale and old' (Review) ...	620	Korngold (Vienna). String Quartet, Op. 16 ...	270	Liffl, F. G. Pianoforte, 'Joys of Youth' (Review) ...	54
Vaughan Williams's Ballet, 'Old King Cole' (arr. for Violin and Pianoforte) (Review) ...	1102	Krenek, Ernst (Germany). 'Divertimento' ...	266	Pianoforte, 'Musical Pastime' (Review) ...	54
James, Phyllis M. Song, 'Farewell' (Review) ...	912	Kreutzer's Concerto, No. 18 (Edited by Ries) ...	521	Lightwood, James T. Hymn-Tunes and their Story (Review) ...	53
Janáček, Leoš. Ballad, 'The Fiddler's Child' (Queen's Hall) ...	552	Kurt, Erbe. Pachelbel's Fugue in E minor, Edited by ...	55	Limitations and Art. By Herbert Antcliffe ...	502
(Germany). 'Jenuša' ...	460	Kurz, Madame Selina. At Queen's Hall and Albert Hall ...	71	Lincoln Musical Society ...	74
Jaques-Dalcroze, E. Twelve Nocturnettes and Caprices (Review) ...	997	Labe, Marcel. Prelude and Scherzo, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	150	Coming Season ...	1027
Jeboult, Harold A. 'Somerset Composers, Musicians, and Music' (Review) ...	431	Ladies' London Orpheus Choir ...	332	Liverpool Cathedral, Consecration of (see 834) ...	731
Jenkins, Cyril. Sonata in D minor, for Organ (Review) ...	717	Lah-Minor and Doh-Minor (Correspondence) ...	735	Liverpool Church Choir Association ...	1007
Pianoforte, 'Lament' (Review) ...	1103	Lalo. 'Cello Concerto' (Review) ...	821	Liverpool Competitive Musical Festival ...	360, 442
Jeritz, Maria. 'Sunlight and Song: A Singer's Life' (Review) ...	828	Laloux, F. Organ, Three Pieces for (Review) ...	717	Liverpool, Music at 74, 172, 263, 362, 458, 554, 651, 747, 1034, 1127
Jervis-Read, H. V. Sonnets for Pianoforte (Review) ...	150	Lambert, Herbert. 'Modern British Composers: Seventeen Portraits' (Review) ...	150	Liverpool Music Study Circle ...	162
Joffe, J. A. 'N. A. Rimsky-Korsakov: My Musical Life' (Translated) ...	706	Lamond, Frederic. New edition of Beethoven's Sonatas (Edited) ...	822	Liverpool, St. John-the-Divine. Restored and Rebuilt Organ at ...	62
John Frederick Bridge (see also 'Bridge') ...	305	Lancing College Madrigal Society ...	69	Sefton Park, Presbyterian Church. New Organ ...	62
Jones, Robert. Songs, 'Love's god is a boy' and 'Now what is love' (Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Heseltine) ...	1100	Landormy, Paul. A History of Music' (Translated by Frederick H. Martens) ...	144	Liverpool Welsh Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1027
Three Songs, Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson ...	619	Langham Choral Society ...	258	Lloyd, Llewelyn C. Edward Fitz-Gerald: Musician ...	643
Joseph, Jane M. A Hymn for Whitsuntide (Review) ...	718	'Hymn to the Moon' (Wachtmeister) ...	258	The Present Position of Welsh Music ...	416
Jouve, Jeanne. Song Recital ...	1030	'The Cloud Messenger' (Holst) ...	258	Lloyd's Choir at the Royal Exchange ...	175
Jozé, Dr. T. R. G. (Obituary) ...	462	Laparra, Raoul (New York). 'La Habañera' ...	266	Lochgelly Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1027
Judd, Percy. Song Recital ...	169	Lappas, Ulysses. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ...	72	Locke, Matthew. Suite in G, Arranged by Carse, for Violin and Pianoforte ...	821
Juilliard, A. D. (New York). 'Foundation Fund' ...	1036	Larynx, Still on the. (Correspondence) (see 836) ...	932	Loeffler, L. M. String Quartet (Review) ...	55
Kalisch, Alfred. The National Eisteddfod ...	840	Lasker, Vally. Holst's 'Intermezzo' from 'St. Paul's' Suite (Arranged) ...	1102	London and North Eastern Railway Musical Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Wagner and Richter ...	918	Holst's 'Jig' from 'St. Paul's' Suite (Arranged for Pianoforte and Violin) ...	997	London Choral Society ...	72
Karg-Elert. Organ, 'Cathedral Windows' (Review) ...	521	Launceston Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Coming Season ...	1026
Kastalsky, P. 'Peculiarities of Russian Folk-Music' (Review) ...	999	Laurie, David. 'The Reminiscences of a Fiddle Dealer' (Review) ...	1093	London Competitive Festival 261, 442, 1126
'Kate,' Light Opera, by Gerrard Williams ...	453	Le Jeune, Claude. 'Octonaires de la Vanité et Inconsistance du Monde' (Review) ...	997	Class for Composers ...	442
(Occasional Notes) ...	421	League of Arts Competitive Festival ...	261, 443, 651	London County Council Handbook of Lectures and Classes for Teachers ...	1097
Katting, Rolf (Vienna). Suite, Op. 5 ...	366	Concerts at Victoria and Albert Museum ...	1135	London School of Violoncello, The ...	848
Keighley, Music at ...	74	Hyde Park Performances (see 713) ...	513	London Society of Organists ...	62, 250, 616
Competitive Festival ...	1126	Leamington and County Competitive Musical Festival (see 840) ...	261, 747	Annual Dinner ...	637
Keltie, Madeline. At Covent Garden ...	648			London Sunday School Choir Annual Concert ...	158
Kempe, Mary. Seventy Years of Service as Organist ...	249			Annual Festival ...	540
				London Symphony Orchestra 70, 453, 1031, 1122
				Coming Season ...	1025
				Londonderry Competitive Musical Festival ...	261
				Long Eaton Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
				Lore of the Welsh Harp, The. By Mary L. Lewes ...	814
				Lott, John Browning (Obituary) ...	1037

	Page		Page		Page
Loughborough Competitive Musical Festival	261	Mary Wakefield (Westmorland) Festival at Kendal	261, 442, 551	Mozart Festival at the 'Old Vic.'	164
Loughton Choral Society and Orchestra. Coming Season	1026	Mason, Daniel Gregory. 'Music and the Plain Man' (Review)	621	Quartet in E minor (Edited)	821
Lowther, Brabazon. Song Recital	71	Three Pieces for Flute, Harp, and String Instruments (Review)	55	Symphonies, 'G major' and 'Jupiter' (Miniature Scores)	153
Loxston, J. 'Studies in Scale Variations in all Keys' (Review)	821	Massi-Hardman, F. W. Of what Use are Critics? (Correspondence) (see 700, 800, 989, 1117)	837, 929	The Impresario (Full)	1111
Ludwig van Beethoven. By Alexander Brent-Smith	214	Matthews, John. 'The Organ Described' (Review)	53	'Pocket' Score	1111
Ludwig, William (Obituary)	174	Matzenauer, Margaret. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts	455	Muffat, Gottlieb. 'Zwölf Toccaten und 72 Versets für Orgel und Klavier' (Full Score) (Review)	911
Luening, Otto (Germany). New String Quartet	364	Mawet, Lucien. Collection of Pieces for Organ and Harmonium (Review)	55	Muirella, Joan. Song Recital	1030
Lutkin, Peter Christian. 'Anthem, 'Thine, O Lord, is the greatness' (Review)	523	May, Alan. Lecture, Elizabethan Music	162	Mullinar, Michael. Song, 'Cotswold Love' (Review)	152
Lyon, James. Part-Song, 'Men of Eric' (Review)	619	Mayer-Mahr, M. 'Pianoforte, 'Der Musikalische Klavier-Unterricht' (Review)	821	Song, 'To Daffodils' (Review)	917
Lytham Competitive Musical Festival	443	Meers, E. G. Organ Prelude and Fugue, 'The Old Folks at Home' (Review)	521	Mummary, Browning. British National Opera Company	260
MacArthur, Donald. Chanting: a Suggestion	934	Prelude, Variations, and Fugue on an American Melody (Review)	522	Mundy, William. Anthem, 'O Lord, the Maker of all Things' (Edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes, for the Tudor Church Music Series)	717
MacBride, Winifred. Piano forte Recital	259	Mendelssohn, Elijah (Miniature Score)	153	Murdoch, William. Chopin Recital	259
Macdermott, K. H. Sussex Church Music in the Past (Review) (see 545)	431	Mendelssohn Choir (Toronto)	365, 460	Murray, Stella. Song Recital	71
MacDonald, Sheila. Song Recital	457	Mend, R. W. S. The 'Eroica' Symphony	125	Murray-Aynsley, Elsa. Song Recital	647
Macdowell, Edward. String Quintet, 'From Uncle Remus' and 'At an Old Trysting-Place' (Transcribed by Edmund Tiersch)	816	Merbeck, John. Carol, 'A Virgin and Mother' (Review)	342	Music and the Cinema. By Richard Holt	426
Transcriptions, A.D. 1620 and 'Song' for Piano forte, Violin, and 'Cello (Anna Priscilla Risher)	816	Meredith-Kay, J. The 'Glenaeagles Collection of Old Scottish Dance Tunes, Strathspeys, Reels, and Country Dances' (Arranged) (Review)	822	Music as a Living Language. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	802
Mackenzie, Compton, and Archibald Marshall. 'Gramophone Nights' (Review)	52	Merton College Oxford. New Organ	62	Music at Southampton (Correspondence) (see 939)	1021
Mackenzie, Sir Alexander. A Talk with (see 235)	209	Mexborough. Seventh Festival	1032	Music at Wembley 307, 422, 549, 649, 650, 704	936
'Distant Chimes' for Violin and Piano forte (Review)	618	Mid-Somerset (Bath) Competitive Musical Festival	443	Music Catalogue of the Bethnal Green Public Library (Occasional Notes)	614
'Eve of St. John' (British National Opera Company)	746	Middlesbrough Musical Union. Coming Season	1027	Music in Public Schools 68, 69, 406, 637, 744, 839, 1004,	1039
New Opera, 'Eve of St. John,' By Herbert Hughes	439	Midland Musical Competitive Festival Birmingham	261, 443	By Alban Claughton	427
Presentation to	740	Miles, Philip. Rheinberger Recital	539	Music in the Cinema (Correspondence)	1117
'Song of the Sickle, The' (Reprint from 'The Dream of Jubal')	917	Milford, Robin. Piano forte, 'Three Sea Pieces' and 'A Fairy Revel in the Forest' (Review)	1102	Music in the Foreign Press 141, 332, 422, 514, 617, 910, 1004,	1099
Mackerras, Margarita. Song Recital	456	Milhaud, Darius. 'Catalogue de Fleurs' (Goossens's Chamber Concerts)	168	Music in Worship (Correspondence)	65, 159, 351, 449
Macpherson, Dr. Charles. Presentation to	62	Military Bands at Wembley. Impressions at Rehearsal	549	Music Society, The. Chamber Concerts	1030, 1123
'Song, 'The Crew of the Albion' (Review)	618	Mill Hill Musical Society. Coming Season	1026	Musical Association, The. Antcliffe, Herbert: 'The Renaissance of Dutch Music'	1120
McCormack, John. Concert at Queen's Hall	1029	Mill Hill School (see 57)	60	Dyson, Dr. George: 'Criticism of the Living'	352
McEwen, John Blackwood. A Scottish Rhapsody, 'Prince Charlie' (Review)	997	Millar, Webster (Obituary)	750	Fiftieth Year of	170
New Principal of R.A.M. (see 235)	403	Milnay, Augustus. Song Recital	1030	Hadow, Sir Henry: 'The Balance of Expression and Design in Music'	67, 169, 550
McLaren, Isobel. Song Recital	1030	Minay, W. O. Organ Recitals at Christ Church, Westminster	1014	Pulver, Jeffrey: 'Violin Methods: Old and New'	645
Mahler (Vienna). Symphonic Works	306, 1132	Miniature Scores (Review)	153, 911, 1111	Paget, Sir Richard: 'The Musical Nature of Speech and Song' (Proceedings of, 1922-23)	451
Maitland, Robert. Song Recitals	71, 359	Mistowski, Alfred. Part-Songs, 'Ode to Loreto' and 'Who would be a German bold' (Review)	1111	(Review)	431
Makushina, Tatiana. Song Recital	1125	Modern Composers and Modern Composition. By Hamilton Hart	329	Musical Times, The. Enlargement of (see 236)	17
Malipiero. Piano forte duet, 'Impressioni dal Veri' (Arranged)	823	Moeran, E. J. (Manchester). 'Rhapsody' Part-Song, 'Robin Hood borne on his bier' (Review)	264	Musicians' Bookshelf 44, 142, 236, 343, 429, 523, 621, 704, 824, 919, 997,	1091
Malvern Priory Church. 'St. Matthew' Passion	540	Piano forte, 'Stalham River' (Review)	1103	Myers, Rollo H. Modern Music: its Aims and Tendencies' (Review)	621
Manchester. Coming Season (see 940)	1027	Piano forte, Toccata (Review)	1103	Mysticism in Music. By J. A. Westrup	804
Manchester District Tonic Sol-fa Association	442	Sonata for Violin and Piano forte	151	Nadaud, Prof. Bach's Concerto in E (Edited)	336
Manchester, Music at 74, 172, 263, 458, 743, 940, 1054,	1129	Song, 'The Bean Flower' (Review)	1101	Nadejin, Nikolaj. Song Recital	260
Mann, Adolph. Trio for Piano forte, Violin, and 'Cello' (Review)	335	Songs, 'When June is come' and 'Spring goeth all in white' (Review)	916	Namara, Marguerite. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts	359
Manson, Thomas. Presentation to	346	Molique, B. 'Pour out thy Heart,' from 'Abraham' (Review)	917	Nantwich Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season	1120
Manual of English Church Music, A. Edited by Archdeacon Gardner and Sydney H. Nicholson (Review)	54	Monkseaton Musical Society	75	National Eisteddfod, The. By Alfred Kalisch	840
Manx (Douglas) Competitive Musical Festival	360, 551	Monteverde. 'Il Ritorno d'Ulisse in Patria' (Score)	911	National Institute for the Blind. Two Sets of Six Carols issued by	941
Mareo, Eric. Two Left-Hand Studies (Review)	822	Montgomery, National Council of Music for Wales	843	National Provident and Union Bank Musical Society	72
Margate Festival	938	The fourth Musical Festival	555	Coming Season	1120
Mark, Jeffrey. The Critic and the Composer	693	Moody, Charles H. Presentation to 'The Choir-Boy in the Making' (Review)	53	National Union of Organists' Associations. Congress of the	835, 927
Thomas Ravenscroft, B. Mus. Marlborough College Competitive Musical Festival	551	Moray (Elgin), Competitive Musical Festival	360	'Necessity of Art, The' (Review)	704
Marshall, Archibald, and Compton Mackenzie. 'Gramophone Nights' (Review)	52	More about the Larynx. By Granville Humphreys	693	Neglect of Handel (Correspondence) (see 448)	65, 349, 541
Marshall, Eric. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts	359	Morecambe Festival (see 443)	651	Neglect of Widor (Correspondence) (see 250)	350
Recital at Wigmore Hall	1124	Morgan, Ralph. Testimonial	1113	Neglected Works (Correspondence) (see 127, 252)	350
Marshall, M. E. 'Melodious Piano forte Duets for Teacher and Pupil' (Review)	54	Morpheth Competitive Musical Festival	442	Nejedlý, Zdeněk. 'Frederick Smetana' (Review)	828
Martin, Easthope. Masefield's 'Cargoes' (Review)	343	Motherwell and Wishaw Competitive Musical Festival	360	Nelson Clef Club. Coming Season	1027
'Song, 'The Daffodils' (Review)	343	Moulton, Dorothy. Song Recitals	71, 260	New Light on Early Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood 39, 223, 420,	506
'Song, 'When you come to me' (Review)	1101	Mountain Ash, Aberpennar Orchestral Society	75	XXIX.—William Pasche	39
Martyn, Edward (Ireland). (Obituary)	76	Mountain Ash, Music at	173	XXX.—Richard Edwards	223
		Moy, Edgar. Piano forte, 'Rills and Ripples' (Review)	716	XXXI.—Edward Higgins	420
		School Song, 'Dream Island' (Review)	342	XXXII.—William Parsons	506
				New Light on Late Tudor Composers. By W. H. Grattan Flood 703, 801, 894, 989, 1085	703
				I.—William Selby	703
				II.—John Shepherd	801
				III.—William Mundy	894
				IV.—Richard Farrant	989
				V.—Robert Parsons	1085

	Page		Page		Page
New Supplement to The Musical Times ...	905	Oldroyd, George. Part-Songs, 'Spring, the sweet spring' and 'Sister, awake' (Review) ...	619	Peel, Graham. Song, 'In City Streets' (Review) ...	1101
New System of Musical Notation, A. By Howard Parsons ...	900	— Phantasy-Prelude and Choral (Review) ...	717	Pencoed Choral Society ...	362
— (Correspondence) ...	1021, 1117	— Song, 'Fair Daffodils' (Review) ...	917	Penge and District Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ...	1026
New York, Music at 76, 266, 364, 460, 941, 1036, 1150		— Song, 'To a Snowflake' (Review) ...	917	Penistone and District Musical Society ...	1128
— Wagnerian Opera Company, Collapse of the ...	266	— Song, 'Tresses' (Review) ...	917	Penrith Musical Society ...	459
Newcastle Bach Choir ...	62, 636, 1128	— Three Hymn-Tune Meditations, for Organ (Review) ...	522	People's Palace Choral Society 161, 258, 1135
— Byrd's 'Great' Service (see 1002, 1098) ...	636	Olsson, Otto. Sonata in E, for Organ (Review) ...	1111	— Coming Season ...	1026
Newcastle, Music at (see 1098) 75, 173, 264, 362, 555, 1034, 1128		Olympic Games. Contest open to Composers ...	56	People's Palace Musical Competitive Festival ...	261, 443
— 'North of England' Tournament ...	690	On Broadcasting New Music. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	500	Performance of Elizabethan Church Music, The. By Heathcote D. Statham ...	710
— United Methodist Church, Sandyford. New Organ ...	1113	On Getting Back to Work. By Thomas Armstrong ...	899	Perkins, Charles William. Retirement	347
— (Staffs) ...	173	On Knowing Things. By Alexander Brent-Smith ...	22	Perslye, Osbert. String Quartet, Edited by Sir Richard Terry ...	336
Newlands, St. Margaret's Episcopal Church. Song Recitals through B.B.C.	1014	On Neglected Works. By Kaikhosru Sorabji ...	127	Personality and the Artist. By L. N. Higgins ...	418
Newman, Robert. Concert at Queen's Hall ...	70	— (Correspondence) ...	252, 350	Perth Choral Society. Coming Season	1027
Newport, Music at ...	75	On the Wrong Tack (Correspondence) (see 806, 1022) ...	930	Perthshire Competitive Musical Festival	442
— Choral Society. Coming Season	1027	One Generation Cometh. By Alexander Brent-Smith ...	116	Petersfield Competitive Musical Festival	443
Newton, E. Nine English Country Dances (Review) ...	822	Ontario, St. George's Church, Oshawa. Clockwork Carillon of Fifteen Bells ...	928	Petherick, Ada (Obituary) ...	462
— 'Theory of Music Copy-Books' (Review) ...	55	— Toronto. Musical Festival	653	Pfitzner, Hans. Eight Songs (Review)	621
Newton, John. 'A Few Thoughts on Hymns and Tunes' (Review) ...	53	Organ Music: 'A Little Organ Book' (Review) ...	716	Philharmonic Choir, The (see 905), 358, 455, 646, 1123
Newton (Montgomeryshire) Choral Society ...	363	— Easy Pieces by British Composers (Review) ...	717	— Coming Season ...	1026
— Fourth Annual Competitive Musical Festival ...	355	— Twenty Short and Easy Pieces (Review) ...	55	Phillips, Ivy. Song Recital ...	553
— Music at ...	264	Organ Recitals (see 'Recitals').	53	Pianistic Interpretation of Bach's Music, The. By Alexandre Cellier ...	353
Nicholls, Frederick. 'The Language of Music, or Musical Expression and Characterisation' (Review) ...	621	Organists' Benevolent League, The. Fourteenth Annual Report ...	539	Pianoforte Music. 'Springtime,' for Beginners (Review) ...	716
Nicholson, R. T. The Why and Wherefore of the Rules of Harmony	633	Oriana Singers, The ...	1031	Piccaver, Alfred. New Tenor at Covent Garden ...	647
Nicholson, Sydney H. Cantata, 'Jackdaw of Rheims' (Review) ...	610	Orpington and St. Mary Cray Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ...	1026	'Pierrot Lunaire' in Germany ...	265
— Free-Chant Canticles (Review)	523	Orr, C. W. Song, 'Plucking the Rushes' (Review) ...	916	Pizzetti, Ildibrando (da Parma), First visit to England ...	70
— President of the Organists' Benevolent League ...	540	— Three songs from 'A Shropshire Lad' (Review) ...	916	— Sonata for Cello and Piano-forte ...	70
— Special Service at St. Paul's, Onslow Square ...	1015	Orton, Albert. Bach Recital ...	636	Plébscite Programme at St. Fin Barre's Cathedral, Cork ...	734
Niecks, Frederick (Obituary) ...	749	Osset Orchestral Society ...	459	Plumstead Central Hall Choir and Orchestral Society. Coming Season	1026
Niemann, Walter. Tchaikovsky's B flat minor Concerto (Arranged) ...	520	Otis, Philo A. 'Impressions of Europe, 1873-74' (Review) ...	826	Plymouth Competitive Musical Festival	360
Norena, Eide. At Covent Garden ...	648	Oundle School ...	68, 744	— Madrigal Society ...	362
North and East Herts Competitive Musical Festival ...	443	— B minor Mass (see 57) ...	68	— Music at 75, 173, 264, 362, 555, 940, 1034, 1129
North Lincolnshire (Brigg) Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 360	Overton (Hants) Glee Class ...	459	— Orchestral Society ...	362
North London Competitive Musical Festival ...	60, 1126	Oxford, Merton College, New Organ ...	62	— Organ in Guildhall Rebuilt and Enlarged ...	928
North Northampton (Oundle) Competitive Festival ...	360	— Music at 75, 173, 264, 362, 555, 652, 748, 1128		Poldini, Edward. Pianoforte, 'Petite Suite' (Review) ...	715
North Notts (Retford) Competitive Musical Festival ...	261	— Music at Church Congress ...	1014	Poldowski, Pianoforte, 'Caledonian Market' (Review) ...	715
North Staffs District Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	— Summer Course in Music: Federation of British Music Industries	839	— Songs, 'La Passante' and 'A poor young shepherd' (Review) ...	916
Northamptonshire (Central) Competitive Musical Festival ...	360	Pachelbel. Fugue in E minor. Edited by Kurt Erbe ...	55	— Songs, 'My silks and fine array' and 'Reeds of Innocence' (Review) ...	916
Northern Counties of Scotland Competitive Musical Festival ...	443	Paget, Sir Richard. Musical Association Paper, 'The Musical Nature of Speech and Song' ...	451	— Two Pieces for Violin and Pianoforte (Review) ...	152
Norwich Bach Study Circle ...	62	Paisley Choral Union ...	459	Pole, William. 'The Philosophy of Music' (Review) ...	429
Norwich Festival, The. By Herbert Thompson ...	1112	Palaschko, M. J. Pieces for the Violin (Review) ...	715	Pollack, Mary. Song Recital ...	456
Norwich Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Palestrina. Carol-Anthem, 'Shepherds, lo! from the Orient' (Review) ...	342	Ponsonby, Noel. Bach Recital ...	62
Notation of the Horn: Some Altered Meanings. By Tom S. Wotton (see 908) ...	808	— 'Missa Papae Marcelli' (Miniature Score) ...	911	Pontefract Competitive Musical Festival ...	443, 650
— (Correspondence) ...	1018	Paris, Music at ...	652, 1036, 1131	Pontypridd, Music at ...	173
Notes on Monteverde's 'Orfeo,' By Frank Howes ...	509	Parratt, Sir Walter (Obituary) ...	401	Pope, Henry (Obituary) ...	462
Nottingham. High Pavement Chapel ...	250, 540, 636, 734	'Parsifal' at Covent Garden ...	255	Popular Taste in Music ('Ad Libitum') (see 449, 545, 797, 1117) ...	315, 409, 504
— North Midland Section of I.S.M. ...	1015	Parsons, Howard. A New System of Musical Notation ...	900	Portadown Competitive Musical Festival ...	360, 442, 552, 651
— Sacred Harmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1027	— (Correspondence) ...	1021, 1117	Porte, John F. The Bruckner Centenary ...	1028
— William Woolley Choral Society	264	Parsons, Robert. String Quartet, Edited by Sir Richard Terry (Review) ...	336	Portsmouth, Competitive Musical Festival ...	443
Novello Choir, The ...	72, 271, 346	Pasley, Norah. Song Recital ...	169	— Music at ...	75, 264, 362, 1129
— 'Farewell' Concert ...	553	Passing of a Tradition, The. By Thomas Armstrong ...	507	— (North End) Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1120
Occasional Notes ...	56, 135, 235, 334, 421, 512, 612, 712, 805, 905, 1002, 1097	Pastoral Symphony, The. By Dr. Vaughan Williams ...	167	Potentialities of Jazz Music, The (Correspondence) (see 797) ...	1117
Of what Use are Critics? (Correspondence) (see 700, 800, 989) ...	837, 929, 1117	Patron's Fund, Royal College of Music ...	68, 354, 643, 741	Pothier, Dom Joseph (Obituary) ...	174
Offenbach (Vienna). First Production of Opera, 'Princess Tanagra' ...	365	— 'Coming of Age' Reception ...	643	Potteries Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Ogden, Robert Morris. 'Hearing' (Review) ...	621	Paxton's 'Eleventh Folio of Pianoforte Music' (Review) ...	1102	Pouishnov, Leff. 'Petite Valse' (Review) ...	822
Okehampton Choral Society ...	362	Pazmor, Radiana. Song Recital ...	553	— 'The Musical Box' (Review) ...	822
'Old Vic.' Mozart Festival at the ...	164	Pearce, Charles E. 'Sims Reeves' (Review) ...	705	Poulenc, Francis. Sonata for Horn, Trumpet, and Trombone (Miniature Score) ...	911
Old Village Church Musicians (Correspondence) (see 431) ...	545	Pearce, Charles W. Questions and Examination Papers (New Edition) (Review) ...	823	Practical Side of Congregational Singing, The (Correspondence) (see 53) ...	348
Oldroyd, George. 'Missa Sancti Francisci' (Review) ...	523	Pearce, Doris. Song Recital ...	359	Prague and Salzburg Festivals, The. Programme of the ...	438
		Pearsall's Letters. By W. Barclay Squire ...	24	Prague Festival, The. By Edwin Evans ...	611
		Pearse, W. C. H. Bach Recital ...	636	Present Position of Welsh Music, The. By Llewelyn C. Lloyd ...	416
				Preston, James M. Opening Organ Recital at United Methodist Church, Sandyford ...	1113
				Priest-Organists (Correspondence) (see 539) ...	641, 739, 836, 1020
				— the Historical Position (Correspondence) ...	931

	Page		Page		Page
Priscilla, Anna. Two Trios for Violin, Violoncello, and Pianoforte (Review) ...	618	Richmond (Yorks) Choral Society ...	303	Royal Institution. William Wallace's Lectures at the ...	254
Programme-Music and Programme-Notes. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	20	— Coming Season ...	367	Royal Philharmonic Society 69, 257, 356, 453 ...	453
Prokofiev's Third Pianoforte Concerto, at Queen's Hall ...	70	Ries, 'Kreutzer' Concerto, No. 18 Edited ...	521	— Coming Season ...	1002, 1025
Promenade Concerts at Queen's Hall ...	842, 937, 1028	Rimsky-Korsakov, N. A. 'Hindoo Song' from 'Sadko', Arranged for Organ ...	1111	Royalty Songs (Correspondence) (see 409) ...	545
Publicity for Music (Occasional Notes) ...	612	— 'My Musical Life' (Review) ...	706	Rutland (Oakham and Uppingham) Competitive Musical Festival ...	360
Pudsey Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1027	Rinaldini-Dasateli, Josef (Vienna). 'Romantic Night' ...	366	'Sacre du Printemps' (Stravinsky) (Germany) ...	265
Pulver, Jeffrey. Musical Association Paper, 'Violin Methods: Old and New' ...	645	Ripon Cathedral and Oratorio Choir. Brahms's Requiem ...	62	St. Alban's Bach Choir ...	347, 1015
— What is wrong with Welsh Music? ...	225	— 'St. Matthew' Passion ...	446	— 'Christmas' Oratorio and 'Blest Pair of Sirens' ...	1015, 1113
Purcell's Church Music. By H. D. Statham ...	419, 535	Ripon Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	St. Andrew's, Plymouth. Bach's 'St. John' Passion ...	539
Purcell's 'Dioclesian.' Royal Holloway College ...	69	Robbins, Reginald. Four Songs (Review) ...	918	St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood. 'A Hymn Sixteen Hundred Years Old' ...	61
Purley Choral Union. Coming Season ...	1026	— Eleven Songs, for Bass or Baritone (Review) ...	1101	St. Athanasius Church, Liverpool. Reconstruction of Organ ...	1015
Purley Congregational Church, New Organ ...	539	Roberts, Dr. John Varley, Memorial to Roberts, Rev. R. E. 'A Transition Hymn-Book' (Review) ...	707	Saint-George, George (Obituary) ...	174
Queen's Hall ...	260, 357, 554, 928	Roberts, W. A. Lecture ...	446	St. James's Choral Society, Edmonton. Coming Season ...	1026
— Coming Season ...	1025	Robinson, P. Erba, Urlo, Stradella, and Handel ...	607	St. John-the-Divine, Fanfield, Liverpool. Rebuilt Organ ...	62
— London Symphony Orchestra ...	70, 453, 1031	Robson, Dorothy. Recital ...	647	St. Mark's, Portsmouth. Reconstruction of Organ ...	1114
— Orchestral Concerts 69, 70, 167, 258, 552, 1031 ...	1028	Rochdale Corporation. An Experiment in Municipal Music ...	508	St. Mark's, Portsmouth. Reconstruction of Organ ...	1114
— Promenade Concerts 847, 937, 1028 ...	1028	Rochdale Philharmonic Orchestral and Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	St. Matthias's Church, Richmond Hill. Oratorio Choir ...	62, 446
— Royal Philharmonic Society 69, 257, 356, 453, 1002 ...	1002	Roger-Ducasse. Pianoforte, 'Romance' (Review) ...	821	— 'The Hymn of Praise' ...	1114
— Sir Henry Wood's Symphony Concerts ...	70, 167, 258, 1031	— 'Poème Symphonique' (Miniature Score) ...	1111	St. Michael's, Chester Square. Reopening of Organ ...	61
— Sir Thomas Beecham's Concerts ...	70	Rome, Music at ...	77, 267, 364, 556	St. Michael's College, Tenbury. Commemoration Festival ...	1008
Quilter, Roger. 'An Old Carol' (Review) ...	621	— Royal Academy of St. Cecilia ...	354	— (Occasional Notes) ...	1098
— Song, 'I will go with my father a-ploughing' (Review) ...	1101	Romford Competitive Musical Festival ...	442	St. Michael's, Cornhill. Bach Festival ...	1004
— Song, 'The Fuchsia Tree' (Review) ...	152	Ronald, Landon. Five Songs, 'Pastels' (Review) ...	917	— Barclay's Bank Male-Voice Choir ...	250
Rachmaninov. C sharp minor Prelude (Occasional Notes) ...	32	— 'Song Fancies' (Review) ...	152	— Organ Recitals ...	158, 1113
Racster, Madame Olga. 'Chats on Big and Little Fiddles' (Review) ...	920	Roper, Stanley. Solo Extracts from Anthems by Maurice Greene (Edited) ...	1100	St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Selections from B minor Mass ...	835
Radley College Concert (Music in Public Schools) ...	406, 839	Rosenbloom, Sydney. Pianoforte, Polonaise in A flat (Review) ...	520	St. Paul's Cathedral. Two-hundred-and-seventieth Festival of the Sons of the Clergy ...	558
Rag-Time. By Harry Farjeon ...	795	Rosseter, Philip. Song, 'When Laura Smiles' (Transcribed by Peter Warlock and Philip Heseltine) ...	1100	St. Paul's (Deutsche Kirche), Aldgate. Bach Concert ...	62
— (Correspondence) ...	1022	Rowley, Alec. Anthem, 'When the whole heart of man turns unto God' (Review) ...	522	St. Paul's Girls' School. Bach's 'Sleepers, wake' ...	69
Railway Clearing House Musical Society ...	162	— Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in A minor (Review) ...	522	St. Paul's, Portman Square. Organ Recitals ...	250
Rathbone, George. Part-Song, 'Dream Song' (Review) ...	1104	— Part-Song, 'Coming through the craigs of Kyle' (Review) ...	1103	St. Peter's, Brockley. Memorial to Past Organists ...	249
— Part-Song, 'When Christ was four years old' (Review) ...	619	— Part-Song, 'The Nightingale' (Review) ...	342	St. Stephen's, Bow. Bach's 'St. John' Passion ...	347
Ravel, Maurice. Concert ...	552	— Part-Song, 'The sweet rose in June' (Review) ...	620	Salmon, Arthur L. Emotion and Technique ...	119
— Pianoforte and Violin, 'Tzigane' (Review) ...	1102	— School Songs: 'My master hath a garden'; 'A Song of bold Robin Hood'; 'A Hill Song'; 'The Star Elf'; 'Windlass Song' (Review) ...	342	— The Conductor: His Uses and Abuses ...	29
Read, Ernest. Pianoforte, Nursery Rhyme Pieces (Review) ...	716	— Songs from the Poets' (Review) ...	1101	Saltire Competitive Musical Festival ...	442
Reading, Music at ...	173	— Three Union Songs, 'Star Time', 'A Fairy Wing', and 'Gossamer Threads' (Review) ...	1104	Salteni-Mochi, Madame ...	646
Recitals, Organ 62, 158, 250, 348, 446, 540, 637, 734, 835, 929, 1015, 1114 ...	1114	Royal Academy of Music (see 1097) ...	68	Salzburg Festival, The. By Hubert J. Foss ...	844
Recovery of the Lost Voice. By Harold Hollinshead ...	318	— 256, 354, 451, 546, 642, 740, 1024, 1119 ...	1119	Samuel, Barbara. Song Recital ...	260
— (Correspondence) 450, 543, 641, 737 ...	737	— McEwen, John Blackwood, New Principal of the ...	403	Samuel, Harold. Bach Week ...	552
Redman, Douglas (Obituary) ...	174	Royal Albert Hall (see 'Albert' Hall). Royal Choral Society 167, 357, 454, 551, 939, 1031, 1123 ...	1123	Santoliquido, Francescos. Pianoforte, 'Ex humo ad sidera' (Review) ...	151
Reed, W. H. Part-Song, 'My lady fell a-sighing' (Review) ...	342	— Coming Season ...	939, 1025	Sauer, Emil. Recital at Wigmore Hall ...	168
Reigate, St. Mark's. 'The Hymn of Praise' ...	734	— 'Hiawatha' in Costume ...	407, 551	Sauer, Franz. Handbuch der Orgelliteratur (Review) ...	533
Reissiger. 'Romance' for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello (Review) ...	997	— Hymn of Jesus' (Holst) ...	357	Savill, Agnes. Music, Health, and Character' (Review) (see 56) ...	44
Renton, Marjorie. Organ Recital at Queen's Hall ...	928	— 'Sea' Symphony (Vaughan Williams) ...	454	Scandiana, Blanche, in 'The Magic Flute' ...	261
Reply to 'The Traveller' (Correspondence) (see 409, 449, 504, 545) ...	640	Royal College of Music 68, 166, 257, 354, 452, 547, 643, 741, 1024, 1119 ...	1119	Scarborough, Music at 75, 363, 459, 1129 ...	1129
Respighi's Second Suite of Ancient Lute Dances and Airs (Rome) ...	364	— Cobbett Prizes ...	68, 452, 547, 1025	Schöller, Victor, at the Promenade Concerts ...	1028
Re-standardisation of the Small Orchestra, The. By Florence G. Fidler ...	134	— Opera, 'Hugh the Drover' (Vaughan Williams) ...	741	Schmidt, Franz (Vienna). Opera, 'Fredigundis' ...	461
— (Correspondence) ...	251	— Opera, 'The Blue Peter' (A. P. Herbert and C. Armstrong Gibbs) ...	257	Schmitt, Florent. 'Légende,' for Orchestra (Review) ...	1102
Retford Competitive Musical Festival ...	442, 650	— Opera, 'The Family Circle' (Charles Wood) ...	257	— Pianoforte, 'La petite elfe "Ferme-l'œil"' (Review) ...	821
'Reyer, Ernest: sa Vie et ses Œuvres. Par Henri de Curzon' (Review) ...	237	— Patron's Fund ...	68, 354, 643, 741	Scholes, Percy A. 'Crochets' (Review) (see 315) ...	345
Rheinberger and England (Correspondence) ...	349	Wesley Exhibition ...	166	— The First Book of the Gramophone Record' (Review) ...	621
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace ...	34, 130, 227, 322, 412	Royal College of Organists 61, 154, 248, 346, 443, 636, 720, 829, 927, 1007, 1113, 1119 ...	1119	Schönberg. Mimodrame, 'Die glückliche Hand' ...	1132
— (Correspondence) ...	253, 349	— Annual General Meeting and Sixtieth Annual Report ...	730	— (Germany) ...	1036, 1133
Rhené-Baton. 'Danse à sept temps,' for Pianoforte (Review) ...	150	— Choir-Training at the ...	927	— (Vienna). First Performance of New Pianoforte Suite, Op. 23 ...	558
— Song, 'Au coin de l'âtre' (Review) ...	153	— Criticism of the R.C.O. Choir-Training Examinations, A (see 350) ...	248	— (Vienna). New Work, 'Serenade' ...	749
Rhonda Orchestra, The Upper Rhos Male Choir ...	264	— Distribution of Diplomas (see 250) ...	61, 154, 636, 720	School Marches, for Pianoforte (Review) ...	1103
Riccitelli, Primo (New York). 'I Compagnacci' ...	266	— Lecture, 'The General Principles of Choir-Training' ...	1119	School-Songs (Review) ...	342
Richards, Dr. H. W., Elected President of the R.C.O. ...	1007	— Richards, Dr. H. W., elected President of the ...	1007	— 'The Ash Grove' and 'The British Grenadiers,' with Descants (Review) ...	1104
— Lecture at the R.C.O., on 'The General Principles of Choir-Training' ...	1119	Royal Exchange, Carols at the Royal Holloway College. Purcell's 'Dioclesian' ...	69	Schools and the Educational Side of Music ...	57, 68, 69

	Page		Page		Page
Schreker, Franz (Germany). New Opera, 'Irrelohe' ...	459	Smith, Alexander Brent. Ludvig van Beethoven ...	214	Stoke - on - Trent Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Scotney, Evelyn. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ...	553	— One Generation Cometh ...	116	Stondon Massey. A Byrd Memorial at Storr. M. 'Music for Children' (Review) ...	355
Scotson, 'Clark' at Westminster Cathedral? ...	636, 732	Smith, David S. Sonata for Violin and Piano (Review) ...	1101	Stour Choral Union. Competitive Musical Festival ...	922
Scott, Cyril. 'My Years of Indiscretion' (Review) ...	343	Smith, William C. Foot - Notes to Musical History ...	886	Stowmarket. East Anglian Association of Musical Societies ...	1129
— (Correspondence) ...	448	— George III., Handel, and Mainwaring (see 106) ...	789	Stratford and East London. Competitive Musical Festival ...	443
— Piano (Review) Suite, 'Karma' (Review) ...	1102	Smyth, Ethel. Autobiographical Works: 'Impressions that Remained' and 'Streaks of Life' (Review) ...	150	Stratford-on-Avon. Music at ...	555
— Song, 'In the Silver Moon-beams' (Review) ...	152	— Mass in D. By Sydney Grew ...	149	Strauss Cycle at the Staatsoper (Vienna) ...	653
— Song, 'The Garden of Memory' (Review) ...	917	— Mass in D. at Birmingham ...	256	Strauss, Richard. Ballet, The New: 'Schlagobers.' By Paul Bechert ...	547
— Technical Studies for Piano-forte (Review) ...	152	— Mass in D. at Queen's Hall ...	357	Strauss's 'Intermezzo' at the Dresden Staatsoper ...	1130
— Transcription for Violin and Piano-forte, 'Valse Caprice' (Review) ...	821	Snell, Beatrice. Piano-forte Recital ...	259	— 'Salome' at the Costanzi, Rome ...	267
Scott, Harold E. Piano-forte Pieces, 'From the Southland,' 'The Tinkling Sheep-bells,' and 'The Bells of St. Nicholas' (Review) ...	1102	Snow String Quartet ...	259	Stravinsky (Germany). 'Sacre du Printemps' (New York). 'Le Rossignol' ...	266
Scott-Baker, H. Piano-forte, 'From Tudor Times' (Review) ...	520	Some MSS. of the late F. J. Crowest's: What has become of them? (Correspondence) (see 641) ...	449	— Miniature Score, 'L'Oiseau de Feu' ...	911
— Sonata Pathétique ...	701	Some New York Organists and their Organs. By H. C. Colles ...	221	Stravinsky's Ballet Suite, 'The Soldier's Fiddle' ...	168
Scripture, Dr. E. W. Lectures ...	169	Some Persian Folk-Songs (Correspondence) ...	1116	Strolling Players' Amateur Orchestral Society ...	939
— Singing off Pitch ...	121	Somerén Godfrey, M. van. Four Preludes (Review) ...	822	— Coming Season ...	939, 1025
— The Curves of Caruso ...	517	— Songs, 'Snow' and 'The Ballad of Semmerwater' (Review) ...	917	Stuart Ford String Quartet ...	446
Scunthorpe Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Sonate Pathétique. By H. Scott-Baker ...	701	Student Christian Movement, The. 'The Necessity of Art' (Review) ...	704
Seaton Choral Society ...	264, 652	Song Translation. By Erik Brewerton ...	893	'Students' Hymnal for Use in Schools and Colleges, A.' Edited by Sir Walford Davies (Review) ...	707
Seaton, Music at ...	652	Sorabji, Kaikhosru. On Neglected Works ...	127	Style and Stylishness. By Harry Farjeon ...	984
Seder, Edwin Stanley. Widor Recitals Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool. New Organ ...	62	— (Correspondence) ...	252, 350	Suffix 'ed' in Chanting, The (Correspondence) ...	837
Selby Philharmonic Society, 'Caractacus' ...	459	— Piano-forte Concerto, No. 2 (Score) ...	912	Suffolk (Ipswich) Competitive Musical Festival ...	261
Send (Surrey). Organ Recital ...	734	— Piano-forte, Second Sonata (Review) ...	520, 1102	Suggia, Madame, and Senhor Vianna da Motta. Concerts ...	1124
Seventeenth Century on Quarter-Tones, The. By Gerald Hayes ...	42	South Africa, Dutch Reformed Church, Fransch Hoek. New Organ ...	348	Summer School, A, for the Study of the Arts of the Middle Ages ...	462
Shanahan, Leonard (Ireland) (Obituary) ...	843	South-East London Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 1126	Summer School of Folk-Song and Dancing ...	450
Shanghai, Holy Trinity Cathedral. New Organ ...	636	South London Philharmonic Society ...	455, 462, 837	Sunday Evening Concert Society, Report of the ...	1003
— (Correspondence) ...	1021	— Coming Season ...	1026, 1120	Surrey (Guildford) Competitive Festival ...	443
Sharp, Cecil James (see 'Cecil James Sharp') ...		South Place Sunday Popular Concerts ...	1003	Sutton Musical Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Sharpe, Cedric. Barrett's Highland Lament, 'Coronach' (Arranged) ...	1102	South Somerset (Yeovil) Competitive Musical Festival ...	443	Swainson, Willan. Presentation ...	366
Sharps and Flats 65, 161, 254, 351, 450, 546, 642, 739, 838, 933, 1023, 'Shaun the Post.' New Irish Opera. By H. R. White ...	940	South-West Choral Society ...	72	Swaledale Tournament of Song ...	443, 650
Shaw, Geoffrey. A Simple Te Deum and Benedictus (Review) ...	523	— Coming Season ...	1026	Swansea, Music at ...	75, 264, 363
— Anthem, 'The day draws on with golden light' (Review) ...	522	South-Western College of Music ...	941	Sweeting, E. T. Part-Song, 'Ode to Tobacco' (Review) ...	1104
— School-song, 'A Tiny Calendar' (Review) ...	342	Southampton, Music at ...	1034, 1129	— Part-Song, 'The Wind' (Review) ...	1111
— Variations on an Old English Melody (Review) ...	717	Southampton Philharmonic Society (see 939) ...	555	— Six-part Song, 'Evening' (Review) ...	619
Shaw, Martin. Part-Songs, 'Peaceful slumbering on the ocean' and 'I cannot eat but little meat' (Review) ...	619	— Coming Season ...	1027	— The Canadian Boat-Song, for Baritone Solo, Chorus, and Small Orchestra (Review) ...	1104
— String Quartet, Suite in A minor (Review) ...	335	Southern Counties, at Torquay. Competitive Musical Festival ...	261	— Three Pieces, 'Aubade,' 'Minuet,' 'Romance,' for Violoncello and Piano-forte (Review) ...	912
— Three Sketches, for Piano-forte (Review) ...	520	Southport Orchestral Subscription Concerts ...	1034	Swinstead, Felix. Piano-forte, 'Five Pastels' (Review) ...	715
Sheffield, Music at ...	75, 363, 459	Southport United Choir. Coming Season ...	1027	— Piano-forte, 'Good Morning' (Review) ...	1103
Sheffield Musical Union. Coming Season ...	1027	Southwark Cathedral ...	348	Tabernacl Choral Society, Pontypridd. Coming Season ...	1027
Shera, F. H. 'Musical Groundwork' (Review) ...	623	— Festival of Southwark Diocesan Plain-song Association ...	445, 835	Talk with Sir Alexander Mackenzie, A Tallis, Thomas. Motet, 'Salvator Mundi' (Tudor Church Music). Edited by Percy C. Buck ...	717
Sheridan's 'The Duenna' at the Lyric, Hammersmith ...	1122	— Musical Festival ...	235	Taunton Choral Society ...	173
Sherwood, Cecil. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ...	71	— Musical Service ...	158	Taunton Competitive Musical Festival ...	261
Shipham (Somerset). Mendip Musical Society ...	1129	— Musical Services for 1924-25 ...	1014	Tavistock Competitive Musical Festival ...	747
Shore, Royle. Visit to Portugal ...	636	Spanner, H. V. Organ Recitals ...	539, 1113	Taylor, E. Douglas. 'Mind Power in Music, for Students, Teachers, and Performers' (Review) ...	828
'Short Cuts and Royal Roads' (Correspondence) (see 215) ...	449	Speer, W. H. Piano-forte, 'Caprice' (Review) ...	1102	Tchaikovsky. B flat minor Concerto, Arranged for two Piano-fortes, by Walter Niemann ...	520
Shrewsbury, Music at ...	264, 459	Spelman, Timothy. Mather. Five Whimsical Serenades, for Piano-forte (Review) ...	821	Tcherepnin, Alexandre. Piano-forte, 'Quatre Preludes' (Review) ...	821
Shrewsbury Philharmonic Society ...	264, 459	— Ditto, Miniature Scores ...	911	— Rhapsodie Géorgienne, for 'Cello and Piano-forte (Review) ...	1102
Siddall, Dr. S. Bertram, and his Glee Club, at St. Helen's (Occasional Notes) ...	1003	Spontini, Gaspare (Rome). 'Vestale' Spreading the News (Correspondence) ...	267	Teignmouth Choral Society ...	173
Sidmouth Choral Society ...	555	Squire, Barclay (see 'Barclay Squire'). Stanford, Charles Villiers. Obituary ...	401	Tenor and His Songs, The. By Erik Brewerton ...	787
Sidmouth, Music at ...	75, 264, 363, 555, 1129	— Song, 'The Pibroch' (Review) ...	1101	Terry, Sir Richard. Osbert Perslye's String Quartet 'In Nomine' (Edited) ...	336
Siedle, Perla. Song Recital ...	1030	Stanley, Albert. Greek Themes in Modern Musical Settings' (Review) ...	922	— Retirement from Westminster Cathedral ...	422
Silk, Dorothy. Concerts ...	168, 260, 360	Statham, H. D. Obituary ...	654	— Robert Parsons's String Quartet 'In Nomine' (Edited) ...	336
Simon, Ingo. Song Recital ...	456	Statham, Heathcote D. Battishill's Voluntary in A (Edited) (Review) ...	1111	— String Orchestra, Byrd's 'The leaves be greene' (Edited) ...	618
Simpson, Alma. Song Recital ...	456	— Purcell's Church Music ...	419, 535	Tertis, Lionel. Recital ...	357
Singing off Pitch. By Prof. E. W. Scripture ...	121	— The Performance of Elizabethan Church Music ...	710	Tetbury Choral Society (see 1098) ...	1034
Sittingbourne and District Musical Society. Coming Season ...	1027	Steggall, Reginald. Song, 'Villanelle' (Review) ...	912	Tetrazzini, Luisa. 'How to Sing' (Review) ...	827
Sixty Years Ago 65, 254, 546, 739, 933, Skeffington, Martin Southwell (Obituary) ...	462	Steingraber Edition. Music for the Organ (Review) ...	55
Slender Reputations. By Alexander Brent-Smith ...	499	Stevens, Dora. Song Recital ...	456
Sligo Feis Ceoil ...	360	Stewart, C. Hylton. How bright these glorious spirits shine' (Review) ...	718
Smetana's Centenary (Germany) ...	364	Stirlingshire (Falkirk) Competitive Musical Festival ...	261, 443
		Stockhausen, Julius. Centenary ...	535
		Stockport Vocal Union. Coming Season ...	1027
		Stoessel, Albert. 'Epilogue,' 'Suite Antique,' for two Violins and Piano-forte (Review) ...	1101
		Stoeving, P. Concerto in E, for Violin and Piano-forte (Review) ...	335

	Page		Page		Page
Teyte, Maggie. Recital ... ..	646	Verdi. 'Otello' at Covent Garden ...	163	Warlock, Peter, and Philip Wilson. Two Songs from Dowland's 'A Pilgrim's Solace' (Transcribed) ...	1100
Thame Choral Society. 'Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast' ... ..	1034	— 'Requiem' by the Handel Festival Choir ... ..	744	— 'Willow Song' (Edited) ...	342
Thames Ditton, St. Nicholas. Organ by Robson, 1860 ... ..	559	'Vestale' (Rome). By Gaspare Spontini ...	267	Warner, A. J. The Eastman School of Music ... ..	43
Thistleton, Frank. 'The Art of Violin Playing' (Review) (see 346) ...	237	'Vicar of Bray, The' (Correspondence) ...	543	Wasielewski, J. W., and 'Andreas Moser. A History of Violin-Playing (Review) ... ..	344
Thomas, Megan. Song Recital ...	1124	Vienna and the I.S.C.M. ... ..	269	Waters, C. F. An Educational Basis for Organ Recital Programmes ...	538
Thomas Ravenscroft, B. Mus. (c. 1583-c. 1633). By Jeffrey Mark (see 346) ...	881	Vienna, Music at 269, 365, 461, 557, 653, 749, 1036, 1132 ...	1132	Watson, Geoffrey. 'Three Miniatures' for Pianoforte (Review) ...	822
— (Correspondence) ... ..	1018	— Second Municipal Music Festival ... ..	1036, 1132	'Wee Men' (Birmingham). By Rutland Boughton ... ..	170
Thompson, Herbert. The Hereford Festival ... ..	908	Vienna State Opera Company, &c., The (Correspondence) ... ..	252	Wee k e s. Tercentenary. Memorial Tablet at Chichester Cathedral ...	78
— The Norwich Festival ... ..	1112	Viennese Opera Company v. B.N.O.C. (Occasional Notes) (see 252) ...	135, 236, 334, 422	Weelkes, Thomas. Anthem, 'Let Thy merciful ears, O Lord,' edited by Dr. E. H. Fellowes (Tudor Church Music Series) ... ..	717
'Three Musketeers, The.' Opera, by Isidore de Lara. First Performance in England (see 649) ... ..	555	Vierne, Louis. Organ Recitals in England ... ..	61, 157	(Edited by H. Elliot Butten) ...	1103
Thursfield, Anne. Song Recital ...	71	Voice Failure (Correspondence) ...	160	Weidig, Adolf. 'Harmonic Material and Its Uses' (Review) ... ..	824
Thynne, Grace. Song, 'The Crimson Poppies' (Review) ... ..	620	Voice Production (Correspondence) (see 932) ... ..	836	Weill, Kurt (Germany). 'Frauentanz' ...	266
Tierney, Evelyn. Song Recital ...	554	Von Riesenmann, Oskar. 'Monographien zur Russischen Musik' (Review) ...	52	Weissmann, Adolf. English and German Musical Life Compared ... ..	137
Tiersot, Julien. 'Lettres de Musiciens écrites en Français du 15 <sup>me</sup> au 20 <sup>me</sup> Siècles' (Review) ... ..	533	Voynich, E. L. Part-Songs (Review) ...	619	Wellingtonbrough Orchestral Society ...	459
Tobias Matthey Pianoforte School ...	742, 848	Vuillermoz, Emile. 'Musiques d'Aujourd'hui' (Review) ... ..	144	Wells. The Kendal String Quartet ...	363
— Annual Medal Competitions ...	848			Welsh Music at Wembley ... ..	936
Todmorden. Ronald Cunliffe's Boys' Choir ... ..	906	Wachtmeister, Count A. R. 'Hymn to the Moon' (Langham Choral Society) ...	258	— (Correspondence) ... ..	251
Toronto. Mendelssohn Choir ... ..	365	Wagner. Facsimile reproduction of 'Meistersinger' MS. ... ..	54	Welsh Orchestral Music Festival, Aberystwyth ... ..	66
— (see New York) ... ..	460	Wagner and Richter. By A. Kalisch ...	918	Wembley, Military Bands at ... ..	549
Toronto, Music at 77, 268, 365, 460, 557, 553, 941, 1036, 1131 ...	1131	Wagnerian Calumnies (Correspondence) ...	641	— Music at ... ..	307, 422, 649
Torquay, Music at 173, 264, 363, 459, 555, 652, 1129 ...	1129	Wagnerian Opera Company Collapse (New York) ... ..	266	— Music in the Queen's Dolls' House ... ..	514
Touch, The Act of (Correspondence) ...	543, 640, 736	Wakefield, Music at ... ..	75	— Pageant ... ..	650
Touzé, Maurice. 'Précis de Musique Intégrale: La Mélodie' (Tome i.) (Review) ... ..	630	Walker, Ernest. 'A History of Music in England' (Review) ... ..	709	— Welsh Week at (see 704) ...	936
Trantoul, Antonin. Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ... ..	359	— Part-Song, 'Hymn to Diana' (Review) ... ..	619	Wensleydale (Leikburn) Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	360
'Traveller, The' (Correspondence) (see 409, 594, 640) ... ..	449, 545	— Part-Songs, 'To an Autumn Rose,' 'Sleep,' and 'A Hawk's up, for a Hunt's up' (Review) ...	619	Werrenrath, Reinald. Song Recital ...	647
Trayherne's 'Mazeppa' Galop (Correspondence) ... ..	1017	— School-Song, 'Sweet Obscurity' (Review) ... ..	618	West Bridgford Choral Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027
Trecynon, Music at ... ..	173	Walker, Lawrence. Opening Recital at St. James's Parish Church, Belfast ...	928	West Bromwich Choral Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027
Treorchy. The Rhondda Musical Festival ... ..	173	Wallace, William. Conductors and Conducting ... 593, 690, 765, 891, 985, 1082 ...	690	West, Harold E. Organ Recital, Christ Church, Baling ... ..	1113
Trinity College of Music 68, 167, 234, 257, 355, 547, 643, 741, 839, ...	1025	— II.—Dramaturgics ... ..	785	West, John E. Part-Song, 'John Peel' (Review) ... ..	619
— W. W. Cobbett on the Need of General Culture for Musicians ...	234	— III.—The Conductor in the Making ... ..	891	— Sullivan's 'Orpheus with his lute' (Arranged) ... ..	342
Trowell, Arnold. Three String Trios, by Bach (Arranged) ... ..	716	— IV.—The Physical Aspect of the Beat ... ..	985	— Weekes's 'Ha, ha! this world doth pass' (Arranged) (Review) ...	342
Trumpet? Do Composers understand the (Correspondence) ... ..	159	— V.—The Rehearsal ... ..	1082	West Lindsey (Gainsborough) Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	360
Truro, Music at ... ..	1129	— VI.—The Musical Aspect of the Beat ... ..	1082	West London Choral and Orchestral Society. Coming Season ... ..	1026
'Tudor Church Music' (Review) ...	717, 1100	— Royal Institution Lectures: 'The Couperin Dynasty' and 'The Influence of Mechanical Improvements in Musical Instruments upon Composition' ... ..	255	West London Choral Union. Coming Season ... ..	1026
'Tudor Edition of Old Music,' Series B (Review) ... ..	1100	— The Conductor and His Followers ... 17, 113, 211 ...	211	West Lothian (Linlithgow) Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	261, 442
Turner, W. J. 'Variations on the Theme of Music' (Review) ... ..	1091	— V.—The Means ... ..	17	West Middlesex Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1026
Twickenham Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027	— VI.—The Method ... ..	113	— 'The Revenge' ... ..	1135
Twynham Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027	— VII.—The Dawn of Modern Conducting ... ..	251	Westerby, Herbert. The History of Pianoforte Music' (Review) ...	430
Tynedale Competitive Musical Festival ...	360, 442	— (Correspondence) ... ..	644, 159, 261	Westminster Abbey Festival Service of Cathedral and Collegiate Choirs (see 614) ... ..	732
Uckfield and District Musical Society. Coming Season ... ..	1027	Wallasey Parish Church. Reconstruction of Organ ... ..	734	Westminster Cathedral Recitals ...	445, 636
Ukrainian National Chorus (Toronto) ...	268	Walthew, Richard H. Pianoforte Duets, Introduction, Air, and Jig (Review) ... ..	823	Westminster Choral Society ... ..	72
Ulsterville Presbyterian Church, Belfast. New Organ ... ..	929	Wandsworth Male-Voice Choir ... ..	455	— Coming Season ... ..	1026
Unity Church Choral and Orchestral Society, Islington ... ..	558	Warlock, Peter. 'An Old Song,' for Small Orchestra (Score) ... ..	911	Westminster Madrigal and Orchestral Societies (Music in Public Schools) ...	406
University College of North Wales ...	643	— 'Candlelight,' A Cycle of Nursery Jingles (Review) ... ..	620	Weston-super-Mare Choral Society ...	265
Upper Clatford Church Musical Service ...	928	— Five Songs, 'Lillygay' (Review) ... ..	152	— Coming Season ... ..	1027
Upper Ward of Lanarkshire Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	443	— Part-Song, 'The Full Heart' (Review) ... ..	1103	Westrup, J. A. Mysticism in Music ...	804
Urbano, Umberto. At Albert Hall Sunday Concerts ... ..	553	— Songs, 'Sleep,' 'Rest, sweet Nymphs,' and 'Balulalow' (Review) ...	1100	Weymouth Municipal Orchestra (Occasional Notes) ... ..	806
— At Covent Garden ... ..	260	Warlock, Peter, and Philip Wilson. Cavendish's 'Faustina hath the fairer face' (Transcribed) ... ..	1104	Wharfedale (Ilkley) Competitive Musical Festival ... ..	443, 650
Van der Straeten, E. The Cembal d'Amour ... ..	40	— Dowland's 'Stay, Time, awhile, thy flying' (Transcribed) ... ..	1104	What is Fair Criticism? (Correspondence) ... ..	350
Van Geuns, Miss. Song Recital ... ..	359	— Giles Farnaby's 'Consture my meaning' (Transcribed) ... ..	1104	What is Wrong with Welsh Music? By Jeffrey Pulver ... ..	225
Van Kerschaever, M. E. Fortieth Anniversary of Appointment ... ..	1015	— John Bartlett's 'When from my love I looked for love' (Transcribed) ... ..	619	Wheeler, James David (Obituary) ...	750
Vaughan Williams, Dr. Ballet, 'Old King Cole' (Arranged by Maurice Jacobson) ... ..	1102	— Robert Jones's 'My mistress sings no other song,' 'Farewell, dear love,' and 'Sweet, come away' (Transcribed) ... ..	619	Where is that Critic now? (Correspondence) ... ..	253
— Mass in G minor, for Soli and Double Chorus (Review) ... ..	718			White, Felix. Pianoforte, Bumpkin's Dance, 'A Viennese Echo' (Review) ...	151
— New Opera, 'Hugh the Drover' (see R.C.M., 741) ... ..	746			— Pianoforte, 'Robinson Crusoe' (Review) ... ..	821
— 'On Wenlock Edge' (Newly Scored) ... ..	257			— Song, 'I bended unto me a bough of May' (Review) ... ..	620
— Part-Song, 'Bushes and Briars' ...	342			— Song, 'The New Moon' (Review) ... ..	618
— 'Sea' Symphony (R.C.S.) ... ..	454			— Songs, 'Mother, I will have a husband?' 'Desolation,' 'The Shepherd's Daffodil' (Review) ...	620
— Song for Massed Choirs, 'Let us now praise famous men' (Review) ...	618			White, H. R. New Irish Opera, 'Shaun the Post' ... ..	940
— The 'Pastoral' Symphony ... ..	167			White, Robert T. Nativity Play, 'Stella Mundi' (Arranged) ... ..	342
— The Turtle Dove, for Baritone Solo and S.S.A.T.B. ... ..	620

	Page
White, Robert T. Unison Song, 'Fisher Maiden's Lullaby' (Review)	1104
Whitlock, Percy W. Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, in G (Review)...	523
Whittaker, W. G. An Australian Choral Competition ...	57
Song for s.s.a., 'The Song and the Bird' (Review) ...	1104
Three Unaccompanied Part-Songs, 'The cock has crowed an hour ago,' 'The day grows hot,' and 'The day's grown old' (Review) ...	619
'Why and Wherefore' of the Rules of Harmony, The. By R. T. Nicholson	633
Widor, Ch. M., and Maurice Léna (Paris). New Opera, 'Nerto' ...	1131
Widor Symphony Recitals at New York (see 350) ...	250, 636
Wilbye, Part-Songs, 'The Lady Oriana' and 'Adieu, sweet Amaryllis' (Review) ...	1103
Willan, Healey. Six Motets (Review)	1103
Willesden Green and Cricklewood Choral Society, Coming Season ...	1026
William Baines (1899-1922) ...	614
Williams, Anna (Obituary) ...	1037
Williams, C. à Beckett. 'Five Impressions and Three Pastoral Sketches for Pianoforte' (Review) ...	822
Trio for Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello (Review) ...	821
Williams, Gerrard (Birmingham). 'A Cycle of the Sea' ...	457
'Hate' Song (Review) ...	620
Indian Cradle Song (Review) ...	620
'Kate' or 'Love will find out a way' at the Kingsway Theatre (see Occasional Notes) ...	453
Part-Song, 'Thou sent'st to me a heart' (Review) ...	619
Part-Song, 'Whither runneth my sweetheart' (Review) ...	620
Pianoforte, 'Propriety,' 'Prunes' and 'Prisms' (Review) ...	821
Two-part Songs, 'A Shepherd kept sheep,' 'Arise, fair maid,' and 'All in a garden green' (Review) ...	1104
Williamson, Sidney. Appointment ...	606
Wilmot, Raymond (Exmouth). Presentation ...	172
Wilson, Philip (Obituary) ...	847
Wiltshire (Devizes) Competitive Musical Festival ...	443
Wimbledon Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Wimbledon Competitive Musical Festival ...	1126
Wimbledon Philharmonic Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Winchester Competitive Musical Festival ...	441
Winchester Glee Club ...	69, 839
Winchester Nightjars Madrigal Society	69
Windsor and Eton Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Wireless Again (Ad Libitum) ...	123
Wireless Notes 239, 452, 616, 719, 828, 925
Wise, Michael. 'Abide with me' (Arranged by Harris) ...	718
Witney and Cogges Competitive Musical Festival ...	360

	Page
Wiveliscombe Male Choir ...	265
Woburn. First Musical Festival ...	555
Woking Music Club ...	459
Wolf - Ferrari (Rome). 'Quattro Rusteghi' ...	267
Wolstenholme, William. Organ Recitals 250, 346
President of the London Society of Organists ...	1115
Wolverhampton Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1027
Wood, Dr. Charles. Appointment to University Professorship at Cambridge ...	614
Irish Folk-Song, 'The Fairy Queen of the May' (Review) ...	618
New Opera, 'The Family Circle,' at R.C.M. ...	257
Te Deum and Benedictus' (Review) ...	336
Wood, Sir Henry. Symphony Concerts ...	70, 167, 258, 1031
Coming Season ...	1025
Wood, Thomas. Organ, 'The Hill Country' (Review) ...	55
Part-Songs, 'To the Virginian Voyage,' and 'The Lowlands of Holland' (Review) ...	1111
Pianoforte, 'The Orchard at Hunthay' (Review) ...	520
Woodbridge Competitive Musical Festival ...	441
Woodgate, Leslie. Songs, 'Cherry Garden' and 'Wind Flowers' (Review) ...	343
Woodside Choral Society. Coming Season ...	1026
Woodward, Rev. G. R. Lecture on Carols ...	1015
Mus. Doc. Degree, honoris causa ...	512
Work, On Getting Back to. By Thomas Armstrong ...	899
Worrying about the Larynx. By H. J. Kimbell ...	598
Worshipful Company of Parish Clerks, The, and its Organs. By Andrew Freeman ...	443
Wotton, Tom S. Notation of the Horn: Some Altered Meanings (see 908, 1018)	808
Wrong 'Bus, The (Correspondence) (see 806, 930) ...	1022
York, Music at ...	173, 363, 1129
The Rhoda Backhouse String Quartet ...	459
Yorke Trotter, T. H. 'Music and Mind' (Review) ...	621
Young, R. C. Organ Recitals at Shanghai ...	636
Younger, Madame Constance (Obituary)	270
Yourievsky, Princess Catharine. Song Recital ...	1124
Zachner, Madame Lily. Concert at Queen's Hall ...	260
Zemlinsky's 'Der Zwerg,' at Vienna ...	269
Zoltan, Kodály. Chamber Works ...	259

OBITUARY

(Abstract from General Index)

	Page
Battishill, P. F. ...	941
Bewerunge, Henry ...	78
Bridge, John Frederick ...	305
Busoni, Ferruccio Benvenuto ...	847
Campbell, Florence Mary Lucy ...	162
Corbett, Samuel ...	270
Dannreuther, Gustav ...	175
Drayton, William ...	558
Dubois, Francois Clément Théodore ...	750
Fauré, Gabriel (see 1131) ...	1134
Greenish, Frederick Robert ...	175
Harriss, Mrs. Charles ...	558
Jozé, T. R. G. ...	462
Kilburn, Nicholas ...	78
Kling, Otto M. ...	558
Lott, John Browning ...	1037
Ludwig, William ...	174
Martyn, Edward (Ireland) ...	76
Millar, Webster ...	750
Moneypenny, W. J. (Ireland) ...	1034
Niecks, Frederick ...	749
Parratt, Walter ...	401
Petherick, Ada ...	462
Pope, Henry ...	462
Pothier, Dom Joseph, The Abbot of Solesmes ...	174
Redman, Douglas ...	174
Saint-George, George ...	174
Shanahan, Leonard (Ireland) ...	843
Sharp, Cecil James ...	689
Skeffington, Martin Southwell ...	462
Stanford, Charles Villiers ...	402
Statham, Henry Heathcote ...	654
Wheeler, James David ...	750
Williams, Anna ...	1037
Wilson, Philip ...	847
Younger, Madame Constance ...	270

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

JANUARY I 1924

Our issue for June, 1919, contained as a supplement a facsimile of No. 1 of the Musical Times, dated June 1, 1844. The point that seems to have struck most readers, we remember, was the size—or lack of size—of that first number: apart from the musical supplement it consisted of four pages. For some years past the usual size of the Musical Times has been seventy-two pages, and we thought it had finished growing. But lately, owing to the introduction and development of new features, even seventy-two pages have proved to be insufficient. We are glad to be able to announce that with the present issue, the Musical Times is enlarged to ninety-six pages, which, it is hoped, will remain the normal. There will be no increase in price. Readers who send copies through the post are advised that the postage will now be 2d. instead of 1½d., but the subscription will still be 7s. 6d. per annum. We take this opportunity of pointing out to the large number of readers who find a difficulty in obtaining the journal promptly and regularly through their local newsagents that the subscription brings the Musical Times to their door on the first of the month. The subscription may start at any period of the year, and the subscriber is reminded when its renewal is due.

With the increased space we intend to develop such features as have proved to be most acceptable to readers in general. This means a growth on the literary side rather than in the matter of news. As we pointed out some months ago, when discussing the problems of the musical press, a monthly journal devoting much space to news must end by overloading its pages with stale matter. The daily and weekly press, London and provincial, can do the job so much better that a monthly organ must be content to serve as a condensed record, convenient for reference when the newspapers are no longer at hand. But the newspapers, for obvious reasons, are unable to devote much space to critical, analytical, and other articles, especially those in which music-type illustrations are necessary. Nor can they give anything like a comprehensive review of the flood of new music and books dealing with the art. This is the province of the monthly journal, and the Musical Times will, we hope, more and more prove its value to readers who wish to keep abreast of the activities of composers, writers, and publishers.

One new feature, however, seems to be forced on us—an inquiries department. Already we answer a large number of questions, but, owing to lack of space, the replies are sent by post. As many of the questions are of general interest, the replies should be of service to the bulk of our readers. In future, therefore, questions will be answered in the journal. We have made arrangements for inquiries on educational subjects to be dealt with by well-known teachers. No fee will be charged, and no coupons need be sent. Questions must be received at our office, 160, Wardour Street, W.1, not later than the 10th of the month. They must be clearly and briefly expressed, and, if several are sent, each must be written on a separate sheet of paper. Only questions of general musical interest will be considered, and only in exceptional cases will replies be made through the post. We say this in self-defence against readers who bombard us with questions which they will find answered in easily-accessible books of reference. Hitherto we have weakly submitted; in future such readers will bombard in vain.

Reverting for a moment to the question of news, we take this opportunity of clearing up a point in connection with our reports of London concerts. We are sometimes asked why some are noticed and others ignored. The answer is that, as London's musical happenings are far too numerous to record, we have to select those that are of special interest, either on account of the performers, the programme, or for some other reason. A chamber concert at (say) Moreton-in-the-Marsh is an important event, and we therefore make a note of it. A chamber concert in central London is merely one of many, and must be passed over, unless it is of special interest in some way. It is, we think, better to give fairly full and critical reports of the outstanding London concerts, than to fill columns with a mere catalogue of events.

Finally, we invite suggestions as to other ways in which the journal may increase its usefulness. It is now bigger than it has ever been, but mere bulk is easy of achievement. It must now try to beat its own record for quality as well as quantity.

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS

BY WILLIAM WALLACE

V.—THE MEANS

(Continued from December number, page 834)

If the sturdy Agricola inveighed against lute-tablatur there were others who had not a word to say in favour of the instrument itself. Brancour* quotes the observation of Mersenne (1588-1648), who declared without much exaggeration that:

A lutenist who has reached the age of eighty has certainly spent sixty years in tuning his instrument; and, what is worse, among a hundred players, especially if they are amateurs, it is difficult to meet two who are capable of tuning together. . . . They tell me in Paris that it costs as much to keep a lute in order as it does to feed a horse.

Nearly a century later, Mattheson, in his Neu eröeffnetes. Orchester (Hamburg, 1713), * René Brancour: Histoire des Instruments Musicaux. Paris, 1921, p. 54.

reproduces the passage in Sec. 14* with his customary extravagance of language, interlarded with much Germanized French, and speaks of the greatly over-rated (schmeichelnden) lute, which has more partisans than it deserves. After these emphatic pronouncements we are not surprised by the sarcastic remark of a wit who said that he had often heard lutenists tuning, but never playing.

[Was there not some potentate who, on hearing an orchestra for the first time, thought their tuning-up was his own national anthem?]

What was this instrument, and why were its players dismissed with scorn? Into its pedigree it is not necessary to enter, but it may be said that in Tudor times, and later, by far the most popular stringed instruments were those known by the generic name of lute, of which there were many varieties, such as mandore, pandore, theorbo, arch-lute or chittarone. Specimens of these, sumptuously decorated, are to be seen in the Victoria and Albert Museum. Elsewhere† I have sketched briefly the instruments of the 15th to the 18th centuries that were employed by the composer under conditions which apply equally to the conductor, and I there asked 'whether these instruments were put to practical use, or were merely instruments de luxe, which graced the salon and bore witness to the taste and wealth of their possessors?' In the Descriptive Catalogue of Schlosser, already mentioned, there is a heliogravure of a cistre (of the guitar family), made in 1574 for the Archduke Ferdinand of Tyrol, the head of which is the head and bust of a girl, richly jewelled and adorned with real pearls. It is only twenty-nine inches long, but its maker, Girolamo de Virchio, of Brescia, has decorated every part with fanciful figures. It is the finest specimen in existence, and though its tone to-day is said to be 'very beautiful, full, and penetrating,' we may wonder if it was ever used as an instrument or not put into a glass case as an exquisite piece of handicraft.

We shall presently meet with two distinguished collectors, but meanwhile we may ask what became of the 'rank and file' lutes with all their imperfections. What remain to us are assuredly instruments de luxe: the then 'commercial' instrument is now dust. Even in playing condition it was not 'fool-proof.' At a performance many years ago, the instrumentalist, reading from tablatur, had to stop every now and then to explain his difficulties! The truth is that it was mechanically bad: constructed without regard for the tension of the strings upon the weakest part of the body, which was the chest. This appears to have been dimly recognised, for every conceivable shape seems to have been tried, and all with the same result.

In Schlosser's Descriptive Catalogue, plate xvi., there is shown an Italian 'fidel' of the year 1500 which has a tail-piece and knob, and we may assume that this was the outcome of a desire to construct an instrument that would stand the tension necessary to compete with the voice when 'instrumentalising' vocal music, i.e., playing the voice-part on the instrument. We shall find later a direction for a voice-part to do the opposite, that is, to reproduce the tone of an instrument, a device that has crept into modern unaccompanied choral music.

Among collectors of musical instruments, the palm must be given to Henry VIII. (1491-1547). The inventories are to be found in Galpin* and in Rawdon Brown, showing the immense interest that Henry took in music. The authenticity or value of his compositions may be, challenged—these matters do not concern us here—but he certainly brought together an amazing collection from which his band of about eighty players drew their instruments.

What with 'paiers of Regalles, Virgynalles, a Horne of Iverey, Clariordes, Vialles greate and small, Gitteronnes, Lutes, Crumhornes, Shalmes, Dulceuses, Phiphes of black Ibonie,' we feel tender towards the little Venice Lute, lonesome amid this prodigious host bristling with 'fflutes' and recorders by the dozen. Think of the manual labour required to produce them when the only mechanical appliance known—and a wonderful affair it was—was the lathe.

Whatever else it may have done, the Throne in Tudor times had a strong bent towards music. Anne Boleyn, mother of Queen Elizabeth, was reputed to be the best lute-player of her day, and an excellent and artistic singer. These, perhaps, were the attractive qualities that Henry saw in her; for, collector as he was of musical instruments, he was also, as we know, a dilettante in other directions.

And here comes Elizabeth, red in hair and in eye, sharp in nose, cheek, and chin, imprisoned in surely the most uncomfortable costume that ever disgraced the female form. There in her closet with her long fingers she pats the 'keies' of her pair of virgynalles, a virginal queen turned virtuoso.

Did she ever trip and trill those Fitzwilliam numbers on the nimble jacks? Well, we have the word of an eye-witness. In the year 1564, Mary Stuart, Queen of Scots, sent her good servant, Sir James Melvil,† on a mission to her kinswoman, Cousin Eliza. Eliza, no doubt in her best clothes, wanted to know everything about Cousin Mary—surely all in one breath: Was she short or tall, fair or dark, blue-eyed or brown, teeth white or black, what had she on, was she * Francis W. Galpin: Old English Instruments of Music. London, 1910, p. 292.

Rawdon Brown: English edition of Giustiani's Four Years at the Court of Henry VIII. London, 1854, vol. i., p. 297.

† Memoirs of Sir James Melvil of Hal-Hill: The Bannatyne Club, 1827. The same, edited by George Scott, Gent., published from the Original Manuscript, 3rd ed., London, 1752.

* Quoted by Julius Schlosser: Die Sammlung alter Musik-Instrumente, Kunsthistorisches Museum in Wien. Vienna, 1920, p. 47.

† The Threshold of Music, ch. ix., 'The Luthier and his Art.'

musical, how did she play? His answer was, 'Reasonably for a queen.' You can see Eliza flushing beneath her rouge. So Jamie goes on: 'That same day my lord of Hunsdean drew me up to a quiet gallery, where I might hear the Queen play upon the virgynalles.' Attracted by the sound, he slipped into the chamber and surprised the Queen at it, whereupon she said she used not to play before men, but when she was solitary, to shun melancholy. (The sly puss!) Then came the question, Which Queen played best?—and what else could he do but set it down in his Memoirs, 'In that I gaf hir the prayse.'

Musical competitions in those days were rare, but Royalty was not above entering into them. High politics apart, was Cousin Eliza not a little jealous of Cousin Mary with the joyous eyes, plump face, well-shaped cheek and chin, against Cousin Eliza's dried-up mask over the bones of her skull?

Mary of the gentle name went under to the strident Elizabeth, and ambition, climbing to its heights, met its fall—its 'dying fall' in a very different sense—through music. . . . Who can tell? Who can say what lay beyond that tragedy? Music was all in all to those in high stations at this period, and the embitterment of Elizabeth, despite the greatness of her fortune in finding herself enthroned amid dauntless adventurers and men of golden tongue, may, at the root of things, have lain less in dynastic problems than in the more immediate concerns of looks, dress, and accomplishments.

The high esteem in which music was held by the Court could not have been without its influence in stimulating the art. Music had a prominent place in daily life, and was not merely an unessential part of education. How far it reached, and into what households it has penetrated, is shown in the Diary* of Mr. James Melvill, a Scots Minister of the Kirk, educated at St Andros. He was then in his eighteenth year:

Mairower in these yeirs I lerned my music, wherin I tuk graitter delyt. . . . I lerned the Gam, Pleau song, and monie of the treables of the Psalmes. . . . I louit singing and playing on instruments passing weil . . . for twa or thrie of our condisciples played fellow weil on the Virginals, and another on the Lut and Githorn. Our Regent [professor] haid also the Pinalds in his chalmir [Spinnet in his chamber].

But the Regent 'dishaired' him, and his conscience began to prick him, for . . . . giff I haid attened to anie reasonable missure therin I haid never don guid vtherwayes, in respect of my amorus disposition, wherby Sathan sought even then to deboiche me.

But Sathan had not a chance to 'deboiche him in vtherwayes,' because 'for archerie and goff I haid bow, arrose, glub [club] and bals.' So we leave him at his royal and ancient game on the links of St Andros, and return to our own, this time at the Court of France.

In the reign of François I. (1494-1547) orchestras were common, and performed on all occasions. They were attached to a Court Establishment, known as the Écurie, or stable, which included the entire retinue not of horses alone, but pages, attendants, and officials as well. (We still have our grooms in waiting and bridegrooms.) The instruments were flutes, oboes, trombones, and crumhorns. English players on trombones enjoyed a great reputation, and jealously guarded the secret of how to play them. This probably is the reason why, in 1604, Charles III., Duc de Lorraine, imported English players for his band.

The Écurie had two divisions, the Grande Écurie (probably made up of 'extras') and the Petite. It was from these establishments that Lulli obtained his additional players.

In Italy the nobility had their own private bands. The best known was that of the Duke of Ferrara, Alfonso II., whose maestro di cappella was Fiorino, born at Ferrara in 1540. He is mentioned in the 1882 edition of de la Barre Duparcq's Life of Henri III. This author says:

The real difficulty in these days was the absence of a uniform system of tuning. But there was unity in a certain sense in that the Master of the King's Music was ordinarily the Director of all music, whether it was public or private. The conductor of an orchestra, whether he was a man or a woman, held a long and elegant baguette, with which, when every performer was ready, the signal was given, and this person continued to beat time.

When a woman conducted she was called maestra di cappella.

Alfonzo had not only his private band, but a museum as well, in which he kept instruments that were out of date or of antiquarian interest. His Duchess shared his tastes, and she, too, had her band, composed of women, with a woman as conductor. Strict discipline was enforced at her concerts. The women entered a large room in silence, and each laid her instrument on a long table, at one end of which was the clavichord. Then the woman-conductor came in and took her seat at the other end of the table, and with a long, flexible, and polished baton, gave the signal to begin. How they tuned their instruments is not mentioned.

In a tapestry woven between 1560-68 there is a representation of a mixed orchestra with a conductor. The women play trombone, viola da gamba, harp, mandore, lute, and triangle. The men play viola da spalla (épaule = shoulder), a cornet, and oboes.

These orchestras, which we would call 'scratch,' were common in convents. A Frenchman, Charles de Brosse, who was travelling in Italy in 1749, noted in his Diary* that the best music to be heard in Venice was at the four Foundling Hospitals, where the children played violins, flute, organ, oboe, 'cello, and bassoon, no instrument being too large for them. There were forty in the orchestra. He remarked that there was nothing more delicious to be seen than a young and pretty nun in her white habit, and with a sprig of myrtle in her hair, beating time with all the grace and precision imaginable.

* The Diary of Mr. James Melvill, 1556-1601. Bannatyne Club, 1829, p. 23. The original spelling is retained.

* Charles de Brosse: Lettres historiques et critiques sur l'Italie. Three vols. Paris, An. vii. (1798-99).

He complained of the indifferent rendering of the recitatives at the opera, during which the audience played chess, and the absence of a conductor left the players to come in as they chose. But in the churches there was always a conductor.

From the orchestra described by de Brosses it will be seen that the older instruments had been discarded. The lute went first. In the early years of the 18th century there were only three or four old men in Paris who could play it. No doubt the larger volume of tone obtainable from the violin displaced the viol, and also the financial aspect of one violinist being better than three violists was not to be ignored. When we consider how our orchestral players treat the most advanced music as mere child's-play, it strikes us as extraordinary that between 1715 and 1724 there were not three violinists in the French royal band who could read at sight. Not only that, but the violins and flutes protested against the difficulty of passages written for these instruments, and it was not without violent altercations that composers could hear their own works. Until the orchestra became conventionalised, as in Mozart's time—if even then—composers and conductors had to make the most of the material at hand. Thus it was that in the music of the 16th and 17th centuries, written for concerted instruments, there was no standardised plan. Wild as appears to us the score of Monteverde's Orfeo, produced in 1607 (see Grove s.v. 'Orchestra'), another Orfeo, the first opera to be given at Paris (1647), introduced us to a proceeding to which we have become case-hardened. The composer was Luigi Rossi.* One of the airs had this 'specification': Three bars of 6-8, five of 3-4, two of 6-8, eight of 3-4, three and a-half of 4-4, three of 3-8, eight of 4-4, six of 3-8, five of 3-2, one of 3-8, and eight of 3-4, eleven changes of time-signature in fifty-two bars. In Moussorgsky's Ragamuffin the time-signature is changed in twenty-four out of seventy-six bars, and in The Feast there are thirty-three changes in thirty-eight bars. Soon shall we have—but why look for trouble?

(To be continued.)

PROGRAMME-MUSIC AND PROGRAMME-NOTES

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

So many weird and wonderful things are being written under colour of 'explaining' music that people have begun, quite rightly, to sit up and take notice. I hope and trust that the protests now arising against certain current types of programme-notes will multiply and bear fruit. The clearest result of such notes is that they foster the development of parasitic outgrowths, which not only stand in the way of a genuine comprehension of music, but threaten to sap and destroy whatever inborn musical sense the trustful reader may possess.

Granting that the main thing is to induce the layman to take an interest in music, and that to this end all means are good, it remains true that means which, under pretence of calling the reader's attention to music, really achieve the end of drawing it away from the musical interest of music, cannot be good.

This is no mere theory: instances of the evil wrought are continually cropping up. When it comes to a student inquiring whether there exists a book supplying the programmes to all Beethoven's Sonatas, or whether he had better devise the programmes for himself, and another asking for the 'programmatic explanation' of Grieg's Anitra's Dance (both queries appeared recently in the correspondence column of a musical journal), it is time indeed to hoist the danger signal. Obviously there exists a growing tendency to consider music as a kind of logograph, and to believe that once the logograph is solved the message of the music is understood.

It is sometimes alleged that the fault lies with the composers of programme-music. This line was taken some time ago by a concert-goer who complained in print of the pabulum provided by the analytical programmes he bought, and suggested as a drastic remedy that 'no composer should be allowed to write impressionistic music for a space of thirty years.' Why thirty, and not three hundred, I am at a loss to guess. But it is safe to say that although certain composers of programme-music do bear a share of responsibility in the matter, even if three hundred years elapsed without one bar of programme-music being written, authors of programme-notes would be found continuing the merry game.

The root of the trouble lies deeper. In my opinion it is greatly laziness of mind or lack of flexibility that are primarily responsible. It is never easy to say anything worth saying about music proper, simply because the meaning of music (or ninety-nine hundredths of it) is impossible to reduce to words. It is especially difficult for certain writers to say anything about music which they cannot appraise by rote or rule of thumb. A Fétis was very much at ease when consigning works to perdition because they contained consecutive fifths or irregular harmonies: but a time came when a feeling prevailed that this kind of thing could no longer be done. Yet certain people continued to believe that there existed things which could not be connived at from the point of view of music as understood by them: for instance, Beethoven's superimposition of the harmonies of tonic and dominant in his Op. 81A, or Balakireff's beginning Tamara in one key and ending it in another. To explain such things by referring to a 'programmatic justification' was far simpler than to try to think and feel without reference to 'the rules.' Thus does Prof. Klauwell (in his Geschichte der Programm-Musik, pp. 79 and 324) dispose of these two cases in strict accordance with the principle of lesser effort. He is in that respect only one among many. We are left to wonder what kind of a programme would be needed to account for the atonal and polytonal things in the music of to-day.

* Quoted by Romain Rolland in Musiciens d'Autrefois, Paris, 1908, p. 95.

Schönberg, in the Preface to the score of his Pierrot Lunaire, warns performers against seeking to emphasise his supposed intentions by doing more than exactly what he prescribes. 'This,' he says, 'would be not adding, but detracting.' Certain writers of programme-notes would be well-advised to seek guidance in some similar principle.

Even when a composer's intentions are most obvious, and he himself discloses them, it is fatally easy to detract from his music by laying undue stress upon these intentions. It is easier still, and more harmful, when readers are led to look for intentions where the 'programme' has been merely an incentive.

Let us consider both cases separately. For many years I enjoyed a certain delightful, wistfully tender episode in Liszt's Faust Symphony without being aware that Liszt, when he wrote it, had in mind Margaret consulting the oracle of the daisy. Whoever is alive to the pure musical beauty of that passage will surely deplore the possibility of a programme-note's diverting attention from the music and leading listeners to check the plucking of each petal. Here, I know, the fault is Liszt's own. Every time a composer gives hints of that kind he lays himself open to the suspicion of having written music that is not self-supporting. It is, however, the business of expounders and listeners to look for the essential beyond the obvious.

Cases of 'programmes' acting as mere incentives are, of course, countless. I remember that d'Indy, showing me a new work of his, remarked that while writing it he constantly thought of its first theme as 'the good theme,' and of the second as 'the evil theme.' But he added that this was only the play of his mind, and that he did not think any such explanation needful.

This contrast between good and evil, by the way, together with its near relative, hope versus despair, is a great favourite with annotators. I have found it resorted to with regard to hundreds of works—Liszt's Sonata among others. There could be nothing more commonplace, more hopelessly inane. It stands to reason that something of the kind can be said of all works founded on two more or less sharply-contrasting themes.

When Beethoven, in an unguarded moment, spoke of 'Fate knocking at the door,' he failed to realise the kind of seed he was sowing. These words have led to fundamental misinterpretations of one of his most wonderful poems of energy and strife, and practically created the school of sentimental explanatory notes. I cannot help suspecting that he found replies of that kind useful with certain kinds of inquirers. When asked, for instance, what the Finale of his Appassionata meant (heavens, what a question!), he replied, 'Read Shakespeare's Tempest.' It is a mercy that we should have been spared so far a note telling us where, in the said Finale, to look for Prospero and Miranda and Ariel and Caliban.

It often occurs that programme-annotators provide explanations without the slightest encouragement or excuse. When we are told which motive, in Debussy's Nocturne, Nuages, may be taken to express 'the slow, solemn movement of the clouds,' and which 'the unchanging aspect of the sky,' is not the incongruity of the comment patent? I remember reading somewhere that the first theme in Mozart's G minor Symphony 'conveys a sense of foreboding.' If the word 'foreboding' is meant in its usual sense, the sentence is just so much idle talk: for it would be a poor theme, indeed, that did not, when it first appears, arouse some kind of anticipation. If the word is used to suggest something ominous, we may ask whether the construction placed upon Mozart's lovely theme is not a trifle fanciful.

In such cases, however, the writers might argue that they are merely offering their own views. And no doubt if they were doing so on the battlefield of criticism, and not on the neutral ground of the programme-note, they would have as good a right to assert their opinion as the next man would have to challenge it. But there are cases when evidence is forthcoming to prove that zeal has led annotators grossly to overshoot the mark.

The score of Rimsky-Korsakov's tone-poem, Fairy-Tale (Op. 5), bears, by way of epigraph, the first lines of Pushkin's Russlân and Liudmila, written in the style of the traditional openings to Russian fairy-tales:

By the sea an oak is standing, around the oak a chain of gold is wound. Along the chain a cat is roving. When she turns to the right she sings a song, when she turns to the left she tells a tale; here is one of the tales she tells.

It seems clear enough that this epigraph stands as a mere introduction, characterising the mood of the music exactly as does Ravel's epigraph to his Jeux d'Eau, or Elgar's to his second Symphony. Yet I have seen notices in which it is described as a 'programme,' and the music is 'explained' accordingly. I still live in hope of seeing a note that will describe the tone-poem as founded upon the story of Russlân the knight and Liudmila his lady-love.

Even when there can be no doubt that a composer's incentives have been correctly determined, and when their function is neither exaggerated nor distorted, the danger of readers misinterpreting the information subsists. The study of the part played by incentives is useful through the insight it affords into a composer's mentality, into the workings of musical imagination and craftsmanship. It does not afford the slightest insight into the music itself. It is of interest to the specialist, to the student of musical psychology, but not to people in quest of the way towards apprehension of musical beauty.

I shall now try to make the point clearer by referring, not to programme-notes, but to the writings of the highest and soundest extant authorities on Bach's music.

I am aware that when experts such as Schweitzer, Pirro, and Harvey Grace—not forgetting 'Feste,' of course—agree on a method of analysis, it is perhaps late in the day, and certainly presumptuous, to dissent. If I now raise my voice it is in order not to disagree, but to suggest in all humility that an adjustment might prove useful. Ever since the appearance of Schweitzer's book on Bach, I have entertained grave doubts as to some of his poetic interpretations of Bach's motives—but this is not the point I wish to make. I am merely concerned with the value of such interpretations to the music-lover.

Devoting a few minutes to experiments on the lines suggested by the discovery of matter-of-fact imagery in the musical setting of the words, 'Let Him be crucified,' as demonstrated by 'Feste' (see Musical Times of November, 1923, page 767), I found, naturally, that crosses could be drawn between the notes of motives of all kinds, from those of tunes in pianoforte primers to those of Siegfried in the Ring, of Walther's Preislied in the Mastersingers, and to the very arabesque occurring in Bach's cantata Ein' Feste Burg at the word 'verbinde'—which arabesque, we are sometimes told, graphically describes the movement of tying a knot.

There may be a danger, then, that the layman, encountering a remark of that kind, will fail to realise that the value of Bach's setting does not reside in the possibility of drawing a cross between the notes; and that the reason why Bach wrote:

rather than, for instance:

must be sought deeper.

All this reduces itself to the question of ascertaining to what use readers will put the tools provided by expounders. Even the right tools may work havoc in the hands of the tyro. There exists just now a most laudable tendency to volunteer assistance to the music-loving public at large. The more we feel in sympathy with the movement, the more we feel in duty bound to point out where helpers may err, generally through over-eagerness.

What the ideal programme-note should be I know quite well, not by virtue of superior wisdom, but simply through having encountered many instances of excellence in this country and elsewhere. Concert-goers, by comparing the various analytical programmes they purchase in the course of a season, will soon learn to see where a pinch of salt is necessary.

POSTSCRIPT

Needless to say, this article was written long before the London performance of Strauss's Alpine Symphony, and was not intended to have any special reference to that work. Besides, there can be no danger of being unfair to Strauss by laying stress upon his representative intentions. These are obvious enough, and proclaimed definitely enough. If, however, my article points to a moral, I have not the slightest objection to its conclusions, specified or implied, being considered as applicable to Strauss's work. After having heard the Alpine Symphony, I do not wish to change one word of what I wrote; if anything, I might wish to state my views even more emphatically.

ON KNOWING THINGS

BY ALEXANDER BRENT-SMITH

I.—KNOWING THINGS BY HEART

Some people who do not keep parrots, believe that the ability to memorize music is in itself an absolute proof of musical genius. I never heard that the ability to memorize The Battle of Hohenlinden was an infallible proof of histrionic skill, but that may be because I have moved in other circles. Of course we do expect perfect memorization from concert-performers as much as we do from any actor or actress not in the front rank, but that these performers can memorize the music in no way predisposes us to expect inspired performances. Indeed, I have heard perfectly memorized works of Bach that brought to my mind visions of the Sahara, and note-perfect performances of Beethoven's Sonatas which set me thinking of poor old Thomas à Becket.

There are, doubtless, a few passages in pianoforte music which must be memorized. I cannot imagine any pianist attempting to play Liszt's Mazeppa or Schumann's Fantasy (Op. 17) from the music. But in these instances the mere learning of the notes will fix them in the memory, and the playing will accordingly gain in certainty and abandon. On the other hand, there are passages so simple, yet so involved, that I cannot understand any pianist playing them by heart, because the mental effort necessary to memorize the details will inevitably distract the mind from the interpretation. There are a few bars in the Presto of Beethoven's Sonata Op. 109, which are a tangle of ties and dots and rests. No two bars are marked in the same way, and yet at the pace no difference can possibly be detected. To play the passage by heart means that the mind, instead of being filled with the music, is conscientiously repeating 'now a tie, now a dotted note, rest, tie,' &c. If Beethoven had been a practising pianist at that time he would never have cramped his music with those troublesome and wholly useless complications. Another passage, very easy to play but very trying to memorize, is the demisemiquaver variation from Sonata Op. 111. These nimble little notes shimmer above and below the outline of the tune with as little controlled direction as a swarm of gnats about an herbaceous border. Their memorization becomes a real mental effort which must detract something, be it ever so little, from the pianist's freedom of interpretation. It is a fixed rule that instrumentalists shall play by heart, and even though the music should suffer, the rule is strictly obeyed. On the other hand, singers who have but a tenth part of the work to do to memorize their solos, have no such unwritten law. If a singer were to sing the solos in Elijah, the Passion, or the Dream of Gerontius by heart, the fact would be commented on by half the audience, yet I have never heard any outburst of admiration for an instrumentalist who has just played a new concerto by heart.

The memorization of scores by conductors is in a class by itself. Conductors who have known symphonies since babyhood, and conducted them since boyhood, must indeed know them by heart; but the memorization of an opera, with all its intricate details, must be an unnatural achievement born of a desire to astonish. To conduct Tristan by heart is a tour de force, but the performance will not necessarily be better than that in which the conductor has had the score before him in readiness for any unexpected mischance. The duties and responsibilities of a conductor are so great that a man who is prepared to risk the reputation of the singers, instrumentalists, and the composer in order to satisfy his delight in the profitless performance of signs and wonders, must possess an astonishingly high idea of his own infallibility.

Memorization is valuable only so far as it improves a performance. In itself, as a tour de force, it stands with the Zancig's thought-reading, an example of phenomenal mental exertion, and not necessarily an indication of great musical genius.

II.—HALF-KNOWING THINGS

Less valuable commercially but more valuable critically is a faulty or imperfect knowledge of a piece of music. I do not refer to those sad aberrations of memory which occasionally give both performer and listeners such a bad quarter of an hour. Some music is as full of traps for the forgetful as the Troon golf-course is for the erring golfer. I have heard a pianist play Chopin's third Scherzo, in which the return of the chorale depends upon a slight change of harmony. If the change is forgotten we are whirled back about two hundred bars in a way reminiscent of that hideous game of Snakes and Ladders, when an unlucky throw of the dice leads us to within an inch of victory only to discharge us into the maw of some venomous snake who gobbles us down to a paltry thirty-three. I have heard that von Bülow made a similar mistake, and continued playing in a circle from beginning to end until in despair he cut the connection and plunged into the Coda, an experience as alarming as that of an old lady who, being afraid to step out of the Inner Circle in any other way than backwards, was in consequence repeatedly pushed into the train by well-meaning porters who mistook her peculiar method of alighting for the more rational form of departure.

The value of half-knowing a thing is that frequently it isolates it from its surroundings so that we know neither what it is nor whence it came. In this way our critical faculties are freed from prejudice, and we can estimate the real value of the unknown music. The other day I found myself repeating the following three words: 'sparkles gan dart.' I could not think what they meant, who wrote them, or whence they came. Were they some gibberish from the Jabberwock of a limerick of Edward Lear? At last I remembered their connection, and realised with no little surprise that they came from Browning's Saul.

Musically this half-knowing reveals unsuspected subconscious knowledge. We discover hidden pedigrees and affinities. I used to wonder why I always found myself singing May the sinner, worn with weeping* after I had been playing or hearing Brahms's Sonata Op. 100. Then I discovered one day that those very bars occur in its first movement. A more remarkable revelation occurred when I left a performance of Parry's Coronation Te Deum (I do not remember which) singing quite soberly and coherently The Vicar of Bray. Then I discovered that The Vicar of Bray had been translated into 'the glorious company of the Apostles.'

This half-knowing, partially-remembering phase is useful to the composer who, after a couple of days' passionate performance of a theme for a new symphony, hears the housemaid, as she dashes away with the smoothing brush, whistling Hitchy-koo. It then dawns upon him that what to him was the cream of all music is to her but a poor variant of an unfashionable music-hall song. On the other hand, he may find himself singing some phrase with real pleasure, and oh! the joy of recognising his own work! This experience I am told is very, very rare.

III.—KNOWING THINGS BACKWARDS

When my friends ask me what I am reading, and I reply, Pride and Prejudice or The Mayor of Casterbridge, they exclaim half-contemptuously, 'You must know that book backwards.' I regret that I do not deserve the compliment yet, but I hope to do so some day. To anyone who reads books to discover what happens (as we read newspaper reports) the re-reading of the classics must appear inexplicable. But the truth is we do not read these books to find out what happens, but how it happens. Consequently to know a book backwards is but getting to within a measurable distance of the author's own mind. And such knowledge of a book, so far from diminishing our appreciation, serves to increase it, for we are able to estimate a man's conduct both backwards and forwards; and for the moment we become as gods, knowing simultaneously the Past and the Future, the Cause and the Effect.

* Last chorus of the St. Matthew Passion. Ed. Elgar and Atkins

Similarly, to know music backwards is to begin to understand the mind of the composer, and to those who reach this standard the great works do not become hackneyed any more than do the pictures of Raphael or the dramas of Sophocles. How little the first hearers of the Symphonies of Beethoven can have loved them as we do now, who know exactly what significance to attach to apparently insignificant fragments. The first hearing of the Allegretto from the eighth Symphony is a very different affair from the twenty-fifth. Those crisp wood-wind chords meant nothing to the man who did not know that the strings were to come bouncing in with that brilliant, epigrammatic melody at the end of the bar. But we who know can enjoy the reediness of those wood-wind chords, because we can anticipate the contrast which the strings will supply.

Knowing music backwards, then, in no way lessens our enjoyment; it is the ability to smell the rose when we behold the bud. A first hearing of the ninth Symphony must be bewildering rather than astounding, because, not knowing the size of the music, its proportions seem faulty. We must know the distance of our object before we can focus our camera or our field-glasses. And we must know the size of the music before we can focus our hearing.

Is it necessary to add that only that music which has a real progress forwards in any way gains by being known backwards? Music that repeats itself loses its charm by too great a familiarity. The most intimate knowledge of Chopin's G minor Nocturne will not make us appreciate its beginning in relation to the end, for we know only too well that the beginning and the end are identical and that, the first part once heard, no further interest is added. If such music loses its freshness (some endures by its intrinsic worth) the composer has only himself to blame. He has been content with repeating instead of developing, and he no more deserves our sympathy if his music loses its place in the world's affection than does a poet who should write a three-stanza poem of which the first and third stanzas are the same.

One of the reasons why fugues do not grow old is that they defy intimate knowledge. They are difficult to learn backwards; they are scarcely less difficult to learn forwards. I doubt if even a very skilled listener can appreciate a fugue at one hearing. How unintelligible is the subject of the F sharp minor Fugue ('48,' Bk. 2) at a first hearing, and how deliciously right it is when we know its relation to the succeeding subjects. And this is true of all well-wrought music as it is true of well-wrought literature. Incidents in a work of Victor Hugo, melodies in a work of César Franck, though pleasant in themselves, do not achieve their proper and intended effect until we know their dependence one upon another. They are fragments in a jig-saw puzzle—shapely, but with little significance. How different their value when they become part of a large design!

The desire to know things backwards may be carried to an unprofitable extent. And I would certainly not wish anyone to imitate the example of an enthusiastic but semi-lunatic friend of mine, who wound his pianola-roll of Schönberg's three pianoforte pieces backwards, because he insisted that they sounded much nicer that way.

PEARSALL'S LETTERS

By W. BARCLAY SQUIRE

(Concluded from page 359 of our May issue, 1923)

XI.

To the same.

[At end:] Wartensee, March 17, 1847

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND,—If you think that the enclosed Psalm will suit the Antlitz Society, I beg that you will give it to Mr. Ferd. Huber and ask him to produce it there. If it is heard with pleasure I will publish it. I have written it in a less severe style than I usually adopt, and as it is not difficult to sing, I am inclined to hope that it may succeed. At any rate it is better than some of the things which you showed me in the printed book when I was last with you.

Since my return to Wartensee I have thought much on the mi contra fa, and am disposed to think that the prohibitory rule is open to many exceptions which are nowhere to be found in books of theory. The rule, rather than the old dictum on which it is founded (Mi contra fa diabolus, &c.) is very ancient, and existed, I believe, at a time when music was merely employed as melody; that is to say, before our present system of harmony was in use, and I believe that it was originally applied to melody alone. In later times, contrapuntists applied it to their doctrine concerning harmony in the way which I have pointed out to you. I am not too sure, however, that in the time of Guido Aretin the same signification was applied to mi contra fa as it has since obtained. But I am clearly of opinion that the prohibition cannot be universal, and for this simple reason—that it would be impossible to conclude an exercise in F (in the first sort of counterpoint) without having a mi-fa at the end of it, e.g.:

and yet this is strictly according to imperative rule. But it will be objected to this that the last fa (No. 3) is in reality an ut, and that if this passage were set in C the note in question would not be the positive fa but the C fa ut, e.g.:

This must be admitted, but still even here we have a lawful progression of fa contra mi, and it seems to me to be deducible from the passage in its original position (namely in F $\sharp$ ) that the position mi contra the positive fa (i.e., E $\sharp$  contra F $\sharp$ ) may occur in an exercise written in the key of C $\sharp$ , whenever the mi is under the influence of an immediately preceding B $\sharp$ , so as to remove all idea of any connection with a hidden H (or B $\sharp$ ). My meaning will appear more clearly through the following example, e.g.:

Canto Fermo. N. B.

Counterpoint.

mi

fa

Here the mi (E $\sharp$ ) is influenced by the preceding  $\flat$ , for if the exercise was set in three or four parts, it (the mi) must be accompanied by a B $\flat$  and not by a B $\sharp$ , because the mi is on the strong part of the measure, and any contradiction of the preceding B $\flat$  must occur on the weak part of it. I am sorry that I cannot continue this dissertation, for I am suffering to-day under a sharp attack of the Grippe, which has deprived me of all mental energy, so that it is a sort of labour to me to think. However, when we next meet I shall be able to explain myself viva voce, and in the meantime I will suggest to you the expediency of calling E (which is the mi par excellence) the lower mi, and H the upper mi, for these two mi's seem to me to have a distinct character. For example, let us take the following passage:

ut re mi fa mi fa re ut

Now if one wanted to employ this passage as the subject of a fugue free from all licence and in a particular tone, we must choose the Twelfth Tone, (for it will suit no other), and answer it thus :

Gut    A re    mi    fa, &c.

A musical staff with a treble clef and a key signature of one flat (B-flat). The melody consists of the following notes: G4 (quarter), A4 (quarter), Bb4 (quarter), C5 (quarter), Bb4 (quarter), A4 (quarter), G4 (quarter), F4 (quarter), E4 (quarter), D4 (half). The lyrics 'Gut A re mi fa, &c.' are written above the staff, aligned with the notes.

You will observe that in this answer the intervals are all correspondent to those of the Dux, and, to my ear and mind at least, each passage seems to have its own character. On hearing the Dux I experience a sensation different to that which I experience on hearing the Comes. Whether this is mere imagination on my part I do not know, but if it is not there must be then a reason for the thing.

One word more about mi contra fa. The common example of prohibited progression is this :

which is said (and I think rightly so) to be bad on account of the presence of two Great Thirds in it moving by whole-tones. One may therefore lay down perhaps the following general rule, viz., that the mi contra fa may occur whenever it is not influenced by the presence of two Great Thirds or their inversions, expressed or implied, moving by whole-tones. Thus in three-part counterpoint the following passage might occur :

because the C in the middle part is inconsistent with the presence of any H in the middle part. But in two-part Counterpoint one cannot, as a general rule, allow the progression of these extreme parts, i.e. :

because it is uncertain whether the mi may not be accompanied by an understood, or hidden, H. thus:

which would be bad, because the H is not only a mi in itself but a Great Third (which by inversion becomes a Sixth) to G. But this passage would be tolerated if thus altered :

though the mi fa would remain unchanged.

When I returned to Rohrschach last Saturday I met at the Hotel de la Poste there M. Alois Alberti and Dr. Tschudi. They were of opinion that in order to ensure a good musical performance at the Consecration of the Bishop, a Commission would be necessary, so that the Chor Regent should be exclusively occupied with the execution of the pieces and should have nothing to do with the choice of them. This, if I understood them rightly, was the general feeling of the Kath. Administrations Rath; if therefore you should be appointed commissioner pray do not refuse the office. I do not know what will take place, but it seemed to me that some proposal of the kind may be made to you.

If I conclude abruptly pray pardon me. My head aches to that degree that it is very painful to me to continue my letter, but believe me notwithstanding, that I am,

Very faithfully yours,
R. L. P.

P.S.—Be so good as to write on the first page of my Psalm a direction for singing the first verse with solo voices and then repeating it with the chorus.

The Psalm written for the Antlitz Society is 'Frohlocket dem Herrn' (Ps. xcix.) for five voices, solos, and chorus. A copy is among the Pearsall MSS. in the British Museum. The consecration alluded to in the latter part of the letter is that of Dr. Johann Peter Mirer (d. 1862), who was consecrated Bishop of St. Gall on June 24, 1847. Pearsall wrote music for the ceremony, and many references to these compositions will be found in subsequent letters.

XII.

To the same.

[At end:] Wartensee, April 19, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND,—Yesterday evening I received your last very kind letter, and I wish to my heart that your kind prayers in my behalf could free me from the annoyances by which I am surrounded, but I fear that they will continue for some time in spite of every prayer either on your part or mine. I have just finished a letter of twenty-six closely written pages to my lawyer in England, where I have a very intricate affair in operation, which I fear will lead to a long process, therefore you may well believe me if I say that I am weary both in body and soul. But enough of this, which is interesting to nobody but Advocates.

Be so good as to express to the Mars Verein my thanks for the compliment which they have paid to my very undeserving ability, and to tell them that as soon as I can free myself a little from business, by which I am at present rendered incapable of any other occupation, I will try to produce something for their band. It must be something, of course, of a military cast, and I have therefore sketched something in my mind which I think will do. But before I can instrument it I must become better acquainted with their resources. There are some instruments in their list the capabilities of which I do not understand. The Flügel Horn is, I presume, what I know under the name of Klappen Horn. The Alt-Horn is perhaps the same instrument as the Cornet-à-piston. I do not however understand whether these are instruments which can be brought into action if needful, or if they are to be considered as a permanent part of the band. I should like to know more about this before I go to work, and to know also something more about the construction of their trumpets. For both trumpets and horns in modern military bands are somewhat different to what one has been accustomed to see in theatre orchestras, and this sort of instrument has been lately so much improved that a new style of dealing with it in partitions has been gradually established. In a few days I shall be at St. Gall, and I will then ask you to go with me to the chief trumpeter. If he will show me his trumpet and answer me one or two questions I shall be ready to commence operations. In the meantime give my best remembrances to Pater Gall and tell him that I am looking forward with great impatience to the Bishop's consecration, since it will bring me the additional pleasure of seeing him at Wartensee. I hope that he will stay at St. Gall till I come there, in order that I may have the pleasure of repeating it to him personally.

The five pieces which you have mentioned as likely to suit Mr. Zollikhoffer may be easily fitted with a German text, and to these I will add a five-part madrigal which I have written to Salis's song on the Spring, 'Unsere Wiesen grünen wieder,' and then there will be a set of six compositions, which will form a Cahier, and if they succeed others may be published at a future time. Does Zollikhoffer publish instrumental music? If so, I could give him a Violin Quartet. But I do not think that this is in his way. It is a composition which I intended to send to Leipsic, but I have waited for an opportunity of transmitting it to Breitkopf there by the hands of a trustworthy friend, and this has not yet occurred. You need not give yourself the trouble of writing me an answer to this question, because in the course of the next ten days I shall certainly be at St. Gall and then we will talk the matter over.

You flatter me much by your proposal to have my portrait drawn by Mr. Tanner. But do not put yourself to any expense for this purpose, which is really such as might be devoted to having painted the portrait of someone much more important than I am. In the beginning of the month of May I shall be at Augsburg, and if I can remain there a few days, I dare say that my daughter will be able to take my portrait, and this will cost you nothing. If she should not be able to do this—why then we may on my return talk about the other plan of distinguishing my very unworthy person. Adieu till we next meet, and believe me to be,

Most faithfully yours,

PEARSALL DE WILLSBRIDGE.

It is uncertain whether anything came of the suggestion that Pearsall should write 'something of a military cast.' The madrigal which was included in 'Naturfreuden' has been already dealt with in the notes to the last letter. The String Quartet may be identical with one composed in 1834, the score of which is preserved in the Library of the Monastery of Einsiedeln; it is described as 'Quartet No. 1,' and the same collection contains a 'Sonata 3rd' 'in imitative counterpoint,' for String Quartet. With reference to the end of the letter, there is a portrait of Pearsall by his daughter Philippa (Mrs. Hughes), in the National Portrait Gallery. Its date is unknown, but it was probably painted late in the 'forties or early in the 'fifties.

XIII.

To the Rev. H. T. ELLACOMBE.

[At end:] Wartensee, June 10, 1847.

MY DEAR ELLACOMBE . . . I am much obliged to you for sending me the prospectus about the Gloucester Music School. I have sent a letter for the Secretary enclosed in this. You can read it if you like, so as to be able to talk with him about the subject of it if you should meet. I want you to send him this letter, but before you send it seal it with an impression of something or other that may make it look as if it came to you unopened. If you know him I should like you to tell him something from me, namely, that being a Gloucestershire man, I should be glad to harmonize the Responses, &c., for the Gloucester Cathedral, believing that my musical studies and experience will enable me to execute the task not unworthily. I do not like to propose this myself, because I am not known perhaps as a composer there, and he that offers his goods for nothing is sure to have them regarded contemptuously; and I very much doubt whether any of the School Committee (the Precentor and organist included) may be familiar with the mysteries of Counterpoint. I have never yet seen the Responses set entirely to my satisfaction. Mr. Corfe has set them better than anyone that I know. They have been set and published by someone who is organist at Leeds and chorister at Durham, in five parts, and who appears to have been a pupil of the Royal Academy at London. And the setting is so very bad and vulgar (for there is a vulgarity even in the progression of parts which is very perceptible to anyone who has been accustomed to read the works of the great Italian Masters) that I can only account for their being performed at Leeds and Durham by supposing that everyone there is as ignorant as their arranger. If I am sufficiently known at Gloucester as a Madrigal composer to make the people desirous of having my arrangement, they must send me the Responses exactly as they are sung there, with the Bass usually employed by the organist. It will be enough to figure the Bass. I don't want any more, unless they are already set in parts, and in that case I should like to see what has been the usual way of singing them so set. There is another thing which I wish to mention to you. In the year 1842 I began a Collection of Psalm and Hymn Tunes for the use of our Church. I took only those which were as well known and approved of all over Prussia, Bavaria, and Wurtemberg, &c., as the 'Old Hundredth' Psalm is all over England; or such other Psalms and Hymns as were interesting from intrinsic worth and originality or from historic reminiscences. I accompanied each tune with a notice of its origin, and I wrote a Preface which was an Essay on Psalm Tunes and remarks on their proper construction, pointing out the features to be attended to in Church Music generally and the faults to be avoided. The book I intended to have dedicated to you. It was in such a state that I might have published it in 1843. But I delayed its publication because I wished to increase my collection of tunes, and because there were some points on which I wanted particular information. In 1843 my domestic trouble came to its height,* and then all musical matters came to an end, and I had not courage nor inclination to go on with the work. The collection of tunes contains about fifty Psalms and twenty-five Hymns set in four parts, and includes a few which I have myself composed. I think it would be very useful to the Gloucester people, inasmuch as it would furnish them with better Psalmody than they are perhaps in the habit of singing, but I ought not to say this. I do not like to offer the book to them for the reason before given, for after having received on the Continent invitations to compose music for Festivals, I could not condescend to go begging to the School Committee of Gloucester, who perhaps, with the exception of the organist, are not particularly capable of explaining the difference between mi and fa; that is to say, I cannot beg to preach before an ecclesiastical authority who does not know how to spell Abraham! I have nevertheless a wish to bring into use what I have collected, and if you feel any interest in the matter and can help me on, I will get the MS. copied and send it over to you. I should like also to communicate some observations on chanting. Try to find out what sort of persons the organist and Precentor are, particularly with respect to musical knowledge. I have written my letter to the Precentor, who is Secretary to the Music School, because I presume that he had received a better education than the organist, and is therefore a more efficient man at correspondence.

* Sic in original.

The 29th of this month is fixed for the consecration of the Bishop of St. Gall, and my Psalm Ecce quam bonum will be then performed, and also a Veni Creator which I have written for the occasion. I will try to send you over copies of these, but as the first is rather long and has a heavy score I may not immediately be able to find a person competent to the labour of copying it correctly. I should like, however, to deposit the song with the Madrigal Society or somewhere or other where it may be preserved. . . . I should like nothing better than to realise your wishes and sit down once more in the neighbourhood of Bitton, even though it were in a cottage at Bitton, but I dare not hope for any such good fortune. Depend on it that there is much trouble in store for me, and that I shall never be quit of it till I am in Bitton or some other churchyard. However, I am trying to get rid of Wartensee, and I have sent you the draft of an advertisement which I will beg you to get inserted in the Morning Post. . . . And now God bless you. Give my kindest remembrances to Mrs. Ellacombe and all your family, think of me sometimes and believe me to be always Affectionately yours,

R. L. P.

The omitted portion of the beginning of the above letter deals at great length with Bitton Church and its monuments.

I have been unable to identify the 'organist at Leeds and chorister at Durham' whose setting of the Responses is so severely criticised. R. W. Smith was organist of the Parish Church at Leeds from 1828 to 1833, and was succeeded by S. S. Wesley until 1849. A. J. Swallow was organist of St. John's Church in the 'forties, but none of these published any Responses harmonized in five parts.

Pearsall's Collection of Psalm and Hymn Tunes, to which he refers, has never been published. It forms the second of the two MS. volumes entitled Psalmodia, now in the British Museum (Add. MSS. 38,549, 38,550). The Observations on Chanting were written a few years later: they were printed in the Quarterly of the International Music Society for 1906-07. The latter part of the letter refers to the consecration of the Bishop of St. Gall. Copies of the Ecce quam bonum and Veni Creator which Pearsall wrote for this occasion are in the British Museum and Einsiedeln Libraries.

XIV.

To Chancellor OEHLER.

[At end:] Wartensee, St. John's Day, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND,—The partition of Ecce quam bonum and your letter did not reach me here till yesterday evening, and I will now return it to you with the extra part which I have written for the Bombardon. Be so obliging as to send it to Professor Greith, and (if you have an opportunity) tell him that I have abstained from writing any organ part because, if the church organ is a half-tone below the pitch of the wind instruments, that, of itself, would be an insuperable objection to my project; the more especially as one could not risque any transposition of the organ part unless one were sure that the half-tone consisted of neither more nor less than five commata, so as to enable the Organist to play in A flat. My wish to add an organ part arose out of a conversation which I had with Professor Greith when I paid him a visit with you some ten or twelve days ago. I thought that he then proposed to me to let the Organist accompany the Sicut erat, &c., at the thirty-fifth bar of the concluding movement of the Psalm. I understood him at the same time to say that he feared that there would be difficulty in mustering a sufficient number of contra-bass players. My object therefore in writing this additional part was to reinforce the Bass where I wished it to be heard distinctly, and to limit the organ accompaniment to such parts of the composition as might bear it with effect. But I must have misunderstood him with regard to the organ.

The Bombardon accompaniment which I have written is transposed into E natural, that is to say, a minor semitone below the key of the Psalm (G natural), for such must be its position if the pitch of the instrument is in Es (i.e., E flat). But I am so unacquainted with this instrument that I am by no means confident as to its intonation. Seyfried of Vienna, in his Appendix to Albrechtberger's book on Composition, speaks thus of it: 'Ein Bass instrument, wegen seiner Kraft: Bombardon genant, und besonders bei Regiments-musiken anwendbar, hat 10 Klappen und diese Tonleiter' . . . [scale given]. He says nothing about its being set in Es, so that I suppose that, as in the case of the Clarinet, there must be more than one species of Bombardon. If this be really the case I fear that also on this instrument it may be more difficult to play in some particular keys than in others, and that perhaps the key of E with four sharps in the signature may inconvenience the performer! Should my apprehension be correct in regard of the difficulty of playing in E natural, or should there be no performer on the Bass Trombone in the orchestra, then I will beg Mr. Greith not to employ the Bombardon part which I have sent but to let matters remain as they were. I presume that what he has said in his letter to you, about giving the second Trombone part to the Bombardon, is an error. He probably meant the Third or Bass-Trombone part.

Yesterday at the table d'hôte of the Poste at Rohrschach I met with a friend of mine, the Baron de Poelnitz, who wishes to be present with some ladies of his family at the Consecration. In the belief that you would find but little difficulty in obtaining a place for them I took the liberty to give him a letter addressed to you requesting him to transmit it as soon as he knew how many of his family would accompany him . . . And now let me repeat most sincerely my thanks for all the trouble which you have taken in relation to my compositions, and for the good opinion which you have expressed of them. I wish I could flatter myself into a belief that they deserved it. Be so obliging as to express in the kindest terms to Mademoiselle Falk my regret that the conduct of Prof. G. should have produced so disagreeable an interruption to my wishes. It is infinitely better that she should not sing than be exposed to such tormenting annoyance, and however great the mortification on my part may be at not being able to hear and profit by her beautiful voice, still I cannot wonder at the very natural resolution which she has adopted, not to expose her feelings to any further attack.

Believe me to be,

Very faithfully yours,

PEARSALL DE WILLSBRIDGE.

XV.

To the same.

[At end:] Wartensee, July 10, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND,—First of all let me congratulate you on your advancement. Gratulator oechaliam, or, rather, Cancellarium titulis accedere vestris, and afterwards let me thank you for the very kind letter in which you communicated to me a fact so in harmony with the wishes of all your friends. I should have written to you earlier than the present moment had I been perfectly well, but for the last few days I have been afflicted with a sort of drowsiness which has so overpowered me at times, that I have been incompetent to any continued exertion. But I am better to-day, and I am glad of it, for to-morrow I must go to Stuttgart.

I cannot sufficiently regret your having passed so near to Wartensee without having been able to give me the pleasure of your society there. The day after you were in the neighbourhood I met the Nuncius at Wartegg. He had been invited there by the proprietor, Mr. Meyer, and was entertained with great hospitality and with a homage and attention which must have astonished him, coming as it did from Protestants. At his departure, Mr. and Mrs. M. (the one a Lutheran and the other a Zwinglite) both kissed his hand. This was very amiable, but it was carrying the matter rather too far, for now (after having offered this mark of devotion to an Archbishop) should the Pope himself ever come to Wartegg they cannot in civility do less . . . I thought that Mr. Curti's Latin speech was a great humbug, but this hand-kissing fairly goes beyond it. And yet I am myself very wrong to smile at the weakness of these people, for I have accepted their civility and their bread and wine, and I have no doubt that what they did was done with the best intention; therefore pray accept my remarks in confidence. The Nuncius was pleased to say many agreeable things to me about the Ecce quam bonus. He seems to be acquainted with the compositions of some of the great masters of Italy, and spoke to me of Marcello in terms of warm admiration. He seems to me to have, like most of his countrymen, a quick perception of anything beautiful, but to have an erroneous idea of the sublime.

Since I have left St. Gall I have thought much of the ceremony, and particularly of the Te Deum, as it was sung at the Vespers on the Monday evening. Under many disadvantages and badly accompanied on the organ, it was still more effective and genuinely ecclesiastical than anything else which was performed.

As soon as I return from Stuttgart I will either come to St. Gall or apprise you by letter of my presence at Wartensee. In the meantime I will beg you to make such an arrangement with Mr. Falk as will enable me to have the pleasure of seeing you, him and his daughter (to whom I am much indebted) some day after the 15th of the present month. I met him accidentally on the day after the Fête, and he then promised to pay me a visit at Wartensee, and to fix with you a day for that purpose. I will beg you also to keep another sacred for me on which you may accompany M. L. G'mür and Mr. Höfliger to Wartensee. I saw Mr. G'mür at Wartegg, and he promised that he would spend a day with me. I should be most happy to see him with Mr. Falk, but I have only two servants, and am so far removed from any assistance that I cannot conveniently entertain more than three or four persons at a time.

Excuse me if I conclude rather abruptly. It is rather late in the evening, and I have some arrangements to make for my departure to-morrow. Accept therefore a repetition of my congratulations, my best thanks for your kindness to me when at St. Gall, and believe me to be Ever faithfully yours,

PEARSALL DE WILLSBRIDGE.

XVI.

To the same.

[At end:] Wartensee, August 8, 1847.

MY DEAR SIR AND FRIEND,—Many thanks for your last letter and for your kindness in inquiring about the water-pipes and in paying Locher for me. . . . Let me thank you also for the interest which you have taken in my compositions, and for your wish to have them performed at the consecration of the Bishop of Rottenburg. If they are accepted for this purpose I should like to make a few corrections in the partition of the Ecce quam bonum (the Horn parts are not as I wish them to be), and to alter the partition of the March, before they are sent out [of] Switzerland.

In the interior of the present letter you will find a new composition of mine. It is set to words which form part of our Burial Service and which are taken from the Revelation of St. John, xiv., 13. I have sent you this because it is an attempt on my part to write the composition in question in the First Tone, and because I think that I have succeeded and that you may wish to copy what I have written into your book. For the convenience of singers, and to keep the Alto voice within the stave (for with us the Alto parts are always sung by men), I have transposed the music a tone lower so that instead of being written in D without any flat or sharp, it is written in C with two flats. I am afraid that the words are not easy to translate so as to make them fit the music; otherwise I would ask you to translate them for me, because I am almost sure that it would have, when sung, a more than usually good effect. At all events you can copy it as a remembrance of me and as a specimen of modern Church Tone writing. One knows the rule in the First Tone for taking the B flat in an ascending scale, but I do not so clearly understand the application of this rule to a descending scale. But I have remarked that whenever a phrase begins with the diatonic seventh of the Tone (i.e., with C which is a fa) and descends gradually, the flat is always taken, and this is natural and imparts a peculiar character to the music when brought into contrast with the employment of the B mi under other circumstances. You will find an example of what I mean at the words 'Even so, saith the Lord,' and this, contrasted with the close in the dominant and with the greater third (which was usual) at 'They rest from their labours,' imparts to the music (in my humble opinion) a solemn and affecting peculiarity, and helps to distinguish it from prophane compositions written in the common major and minor scales.

In the hope of seeing you very soon at St. Gall and with many cordial greetings to the Regierungsrath Falk and his amiable family, believe me to be

Most faithfully yours,

R. L. P.

The above letters do not require much comment, referring as they chiefly do to the music which Pearsall wrote for the Episcopal Consecration at St. Gall. Copies of the March and Te Deum are to be found in the British Museum; the latter is one of Pearsall's best works, and deserves to be better known. In letter xv. reference is made to the setting of the anthem I heard a voice from heaven; this was published in W. T. Trimmell's edition of Pearsall's Sacred Music.

THE CONDUCTOR: HIS USES AND ABUSES

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON

In a strictly artistic sense, the position of the conductor is an incongruity. He is a supernumerary, the odd man, a director who does not perform, an officer who does not fight. He may be everything or nothing, according to his own capacity; he may be indispensable or superfluous. His importance varies from that of an executant on a manifold instrument, to that of a mere metronome. He may himself be the actual performer, or he may be simply a time-index. Sometimes he appears a mere impertinence, sometimes a presiding and controlling spirit. At the one extreme he is effaced by his musicians; at the other he himself effaces them. At the best, he and his musicians are welded into a single soul, swayed by a single impulse; something greater, a uniform undivided emotion, dominates and directs all. And this last condition, we feel, is the only justification of the conductor's existence. If he unduly dominates, his players have deteriorated into a subservient machine; if he is dominated, he becomes an unnecessary and rather absurd unit. Whether it is better that he should control or be controlled, depends entirely on individual capacity. Neither condition is ideal.

It is a natural and, perhaps, a praiseworthy ambition, to become a potent and magnetic conductor. The young musician dreams of this as a pinnacle of glory: as some men long to govern great empires, mighty communities, he longs to control a powerful orchestra. The position seems one of absolute authority, of undisputed autocracy. The baton is at once the symbol and the instrument of office. A successful conductor looms large in the public eye; if no more, he is at least the figure-head, the prominent personality. To all appearance he controls his performers as if they were puppets at his command. He is like the player of a great organ, sitting on his stool and directing the varying voices of the obedient pipes; king in the region of sound, choosing at his will whether the forces under his sway shall wail or rejoice or thunder. No organ yet constructed has the powers and resources of a full orchestral body—none ever will; and in this sense the conductor is greater than the organist, with vaster potentialities to direct. But undoubtedly to liken him to an organist is the nearest we can get to a just parallel; yet in doing so we are lessening the rights, the responsibilities, of the units that he controls, we are depreciating the claim of their united impulse, we degrade them to a mere instrument on which he is the player. In very fact, this is often the case; a single personality has triumphed and a hundred others are dominated. This has been the position of the world's most eminent conductors; they have been players on an instrument, have imposed and asserted themselves, to the subjection of those beneath their baton. What we listen to is one man's reading, a single interpretation; possibly satisfying, but, in any case, the dominance of an individuality. It may almost be said that the composer himself takes a second place, so completely is he at the mercy of this autocracy. We may be grateful for the genius that is thus uttering itself through the work of another, and with the hands or lips of others; yet in essence the process is a one-man performance. We are listening to the conductor, and the executants under him are the keyboard, the stops, that he manipulates. This is the triumph of a great magnetism, a despotic will. The result may be fine. But in our hearts we have a suspicion that, given a perfect orchestra, the conductor should be a superfluity. With a perfect orchestra, he might even become an offence.

Because orchestras are not perfect, or are perfect very rarely, the conductor remains indispensable. For this reason, under the best conditions, we have to tolerate him; under less satisfying conditions he becomes necessary because his absence would mean absolute chaos. He beats time. Knowing the deficiencies of the average player, we realise the force of those simple words. The rigours of time itself are a limitation, a defect, a support imposed for our weaknesses; but we know well how the raw recruit has to learn to keep in step and 'form fours.' In cases such as this, the conductor takes the place of a mechanical device for beating time; and there are occasions when he displays no higher ambition. He is satisfied, and his performers are satisfied, if he sufficiently notifies them of the recurring accent. His function is rhythmical, not musical or interpretative; and the rhythm itself is generally of the sing-song quality. When his players advance to a soul of their own, or when a single enterprising performer so advances, he is gently thrust aside or politely ignored; a band of some personality can easily take its conductor in hand, or leave him out of the reckoning altogether. All of which is as it must be, on occasion, but is certainly not as it should be. The conductor remains an incongruity.

Is it necessary that the conductor should thus remain incongruous or superfluous, either absorbing his players into himself, or himself absorbed by them, or figuring as a mere mechanical time-beater? The question is difficult to answer. One can conceive of something different, something rarely attained yet assuredly possible, when conductor and performers form a single-minded unity, swayed by a magnetism conveyed from each to each—not the outcome of a dominating personality, but the merging of many under a supreme emotional impulse. But the very achievement of such conditions would render the conductor's position at least questionable, and possibly undesirable. It is never really a desirable thing to have that figure in front of us, waving his arms. Whether we are listeners or players, he is an intrusion, an exposure of the mechanism that should so far as possible be ignored in every good performance, a suggestion of artificiality. Very often, in listening to beautiful music, it is a delight to close our eyes; we seem to hear better. And sometimes it is natural to close the eyes with a different reason—to shut out the view of the conductor. Let him not take it as an affront, for we still have to admit the conclusion that his existence is a necessity—because conditions are not perfect in this world of vast possibilities and many shortcomings.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

I have to thank readers for some interesting letters on the Forty-eight, though I am sorry to say they one and all shirk that matter of the text in bar 7 of the Prelude in G. After my notes were in type and out of reach, I found that Riemann had edited the work, and a copy of his version lies before me. Evidently he had considered the doubtful bar, and had come to the conclusion that the C should not be sharpened. But that he felt there was a likelihood of players wanting to play C sharp is shown by his putting a natural in brackets. Nevertheless I stand out stiffly for the sharp, and all the able editors in the world won't persuade me that Bach and/or his copyists did not make a little slip. There are plenty of similar cases, as must needs be in so vast an amount of manuscript, so that mere collation of various editions proves little.

On looking through Riemann's edition I find he was as foggingly analytical as he alone can be. I have no wish to poke fun at a scholar who in various departments of musical pedagogy has done useful work, but I grow hot when I think of the way he has made stacks of simple, beautiful music look complex and ugly. (My first acquaintance with Schubert's Moments Musicaux, for example, was made through Riemann's edition, and I shall never forget nor forgive the irritation I felt, even at that tender age, on seeing poor Franz's obvious little themes split up into motives and motivettes, garnished with all sorts of accents, some of them impossible and most of them fussy. The sight of those pages of poor little helpless dissected tunes made me think of chopped worms, and I have ever since figured Riemann as a kind of Ghoul—benevolent and bespectacled, perhaps, but still a Ghoul.)

Not a subject in the Forty-eight is allowed to escape. Little wisps of tune have their anatomy laid bare, and dots and accents are peppered into the wounds. You may imagine what happens when a really complicated passage comes under the Herr Doktor's knife.

Among the letters that have reached me on the Forty-eight is one of special interest from

Dr. E. T. Sweeting. He quotes from page 110 of vol. 3 of the History, Burney's view of Bach's fugues:

I have never seen a fugue of this learned and powerful author upon a motive that is natural and chantant, or even an easy and obvious passage that is not loaded with crude and difficult accompaniments.

As Dr. Sweeting says, Burney evidently wrote this before making real acquaintance with the Forty-eight, if we may judge from a note in Crotch's handwriting at the end of the Saints in Glory Fugue in his own copy of the Forty-eight:

Dr. Burney showed me this about 1790, and it made a deep impression on me. It is finest of all, I think.

Evidently Burney had at last discovered that 'the learned and powerful author' could write music that was 'natural' and not overloaded by crudities. Dr. Sweeting sends photographs of portions of a couple of pages of Crotch's copy, one containing the comment quoted above, and another of a pencilled note at the end of a Fugue (not named), in which Crotch says:

Ye subject wants a more marked character; one does not know it when one meets it, like the lawyer and his conscience.

Crotch, as is well known, seems to have spent his enthusiasm mainly over the purely scientific side of the Fugues. Dr. Sweeting's letter recalled to my mind the fact that some years ago he wrote an article in the Musical Times on Crotch's opinion of the Forty-eight, as shown by marginal notes of the kind I have quoted. I have turned up the article (November, 1903), and re-read it with much interest. It is pleasant to find that Crotch indicated his estimation of each Prelude and Fugue by a star over its opening bars. The more he liked the work, the bigger the star, so that, as Dr. Sweeting says, sometimes the star is 'as small as an asterisk, at others as large as a goodly-sized chrysanthemum.' I resist, sternly and with difficulty, the temptation to quote these dicta of Crotch, with one exception—an exception that gives us a clue to much of the contemporary valuation of Bach. The E flat major Fugue, in Book I., he waves aside with the truly amazing comment, 'More genius than science'! Those of you who have the November, 1903, Musical Times on your shelves, should take it down and read Dr. Sweeting's article in the light of present-day views on Bach. In fairness to Crotch, I add one proof that he had the root of the matter in him, and was not entirely desiccated by learning. One of his special favourites was the G sharp minor Fugue in Book II. Half-way through he expresses his feelings by a note: 'Every bar is a separate wonder'; and at the end he lets himself go with: 'What is the greatest possible musical treat I could have after hearing this? Answer: To hear it again.'

I don't know that anything could better sum up our feelings in regard to the best of Bach than old Crotch's encore.

I have been favoured with a sight of the proof of Mr. Calvocoressi's article on programme music, which appears in this issue. I am not surprised at his falling foul of my suggestion that Bach set the word 'crucified' in such a way that four of the notes joined up make a cross. I felt a qualm when I wrote the passage, but the idea is not mine; I met with it many years ago in a critical article on the St. Matthew Passion. I forget the writer's name, but I remember it was one that carried weight. Mr. Calvocoressi is right in saying that Bach commentators are apt to read into the music a good deal more than is there, but I think he is inclined to go to the other extreme. The real state of the case is this, so far as I can see it: Schweitzer was sound in his view that Bach had a kind of musical language with melodic figures and formulæ on which he drew pretty regularly for the expression of various emotions, and for pictorial purposes. But Bach was not singular in this. Every composer more or less does the same, and for certain purposes composers even use the same formulæ, and, indeed, have done so for centuries.

For example, fragments of the chromatic scale were used as a basis for the expression of grief long before Bach's day, and are still so used. Apropos of this, I notice that Mr. Rollo H. Myers, in his recently-issued book on Modern Music, its Aims and Tendencies, quotes a passage from Boris Godounov in which a descending scrap of the chromatic scale is used, adding the comment:

The technical device of the descending semitone might appear to be almost childishly simple, but as a musical transcription of the effect of exhaustion and despair it succeeds triumphantly, because it is close to nature and therefore rings undeniably true.

Similarly, the chromatic scale, played quickly, has been for centuries the safest of recipes for musical storm passages. The Flying Dutchman Overture—one of the best bits of bad weather in all music—is a proof that the primitive instinct that seized on a rapid succession of semitones for the purpose was sound. When the quarter-tone system becomes a commonplace we shall find the wind whistling round Queen's Hall more realistically than ever. Bach, then, merely did as his contemporaries did, but, being Bach, he did it better and more systematically. Where Schweitzer goes off the track is in crediting Bach with using such formulæ always with intent, whereas it is inevitable that some of them, being the small change of musical material, must often have entered into schemes where their pictorial side had no point. Perhaps I can make this clear by an instance that will be familiar to many readers. When Dr. Schweitzer gave an organ recital in Westminster Abbey last year, he played the C minor Fugue (the one orchestrated by Elgar). To the general astonishment he played it slowly, making it elegiac in style. In his programme notes he told us that his reading of the work was based on the fact that the middle section is concerned with 'the grief motive'—that is, a fragment of the chromatic scale. But the character of the Fugue as a whole is strong and challenging. The Fantasia that forms its prelude is clearly a kind of elegy, not because of its making use of any kind of formula, but because of the character of its themes and texture throughout. The Fugue, instead of carrying on this mood, answers and dispels it. The fragment of the chromatic scale that plays so big a part in it is not a bit melancholy. On the contrary, its rising by semitones is full of purpose. I have never yet heard an organist (other than Schweitzer) play the Fugue without noticing that he made the little chromatic theme a principal means of working up to a climax at the da capo. And it is worth noting that Elgar took the same view of the figure, giving it to the brass, and making a tremendously virile effect with it. This is only one case in which Schweitzer rides his theory too hard, and it may serve as a warning to Bachites. If we want to know what Bach is driving at in a given work we must think far more of the work as a whole and not peer short-sightedly at a detail. To our surprise we shall often find he was driving at nothing at all, but merely writing music. 'Tis a pity poor old Bach was born too soon. Were he alive and composing to-day, a good deal of his music would be hailed by the elect as a 'juxtaposition of sonorities' and 'free from literary associations.' Simple-minded John Sebastian and his colleagues all wrote a heap of music that was pure sound, and nothing more. They would be as surprised to find they had been juxtaposing sonorities as M. Jourdain was on learning that he had been talking prose all his life.

But coming back to that cruciform theme, I am not convinced by Mr. Calvocoressi's argument against it. He quotes a subject from The Mastersingers that lends itself to similar treatment, but the example proves nothing. Isn't this a case where the law of circumstantial evidence comes in? I fancy that law is pretty much as follows: one piece of circumstantial evidence has little weight, and a whole heap of it alone would not hang a fly, because all of it might be due to coincidence. But add to circumstantial evidence a motive, and the judge looks round for the black cap. Nobody supposes that Wagner wrote that Mastersingers theme with a view to making a cross between its first four notes: we know that he had no motive for doing so. It is merely one of thousands of themes in which four notes step across one another. Moreover, Wagner was not given to such naive pictorial effects. But Bach had a motive, and was most decidedly addicted to tone-painting of the most naive—even puerile—description. So all the evidence is in favour of the theme having been designed as a symbol. But that is a detail, of course. Themes stand or fall as themes, not as symbols, and the real excellence of this one lies in its significance, due mainly to the diminished fourth with which it opens, and to its rhythm.

Although I argue this point, it does not really affect the question at issue. I gave it as an example of Bach's writing for eye as well as ear, but there are so many other familiar instances that I can afford to make Mr. Calvocoressi a present of this one and still have a bagful left. The other one I mentioned in my November article—the scourging theme in the St. John Passion—will serve quite well, and the Chorale Preludes contain many more.

The Editor asks me to comment on a letter from a correspondent concerning Rachmaninov's C sharp minor Prelude. The letter appeared in the November Musical Times, and for the benefit of readers who have not a copy at hand, I quote the main points. The writer began by asking why Rachmaninov is to be pitied for having written the Prelude, and goes on:

In a back number of the Musical Times, and also in the Musical News and Herald, are articles written on Rachmaninov's recital at Queen's Hall on May 6. Both writers of the articles express great solicitude for him. In the Musical Times, 'H. G.' says:

'Rachmaninov knew what was coming if his depressed air was any guide. He had hardly sunk on to the pianoforte-stool when cries of "C sharp minor!" were fired at him.'

And in the Musical News and Herald, 'E. E.' says:

'Can anybody wonder that Rachmaninov regards that feat of his youth as the worst enemy of his manhood?'

And, again:

'Rachmaninov is cast down, groaning under the weight of that C sharp minor Prelude.'

And yet again:

'I have respected his mortification and grief at having written the C sharp minor Prelude. . . .'

I shall feel truly grateful if someone will enlighten me. Perhaps either 'H. G.' or 'E. E.' (both of whom I know write for the Musical Times) would kindly explain.

Although my acquaintance with both 'E. E.' and 'H. G.' is slight, I think I know enough of their views to be able to answer for them on this point, more by token that I happened to be present at the concert in question.

First, let me assure the writer that Rachmaninov did look depressed and resigned when the Prelude was called for, so both 'E. E.' and 'H. G.' as good reporters, were merely recording a fact. No less clearly, he was depressed because for years past the public had shouted and clapped and encored and bullied him into playing the Prelude until he had got sick of it. Most composer-performers suffer in this way. I remember a famous organ recitalist telling me that he rarely ended a recital without having a slip of paper thrust at him, begging him to play his Andantino in D flat—one of the earliest and easily the feeblest of his works. He had grown to loathe the Andantino (like most other organists), but what could he do? The public, having paid the piper, proceeded to call the tune. If they happened to call for a rotten one, composed by that particular piper, so much the worse for the p.p. (No; wild horses cannot make me tell you this recitalist's name.) We needn't sympathise with the composer-player who suffers in this way. The facile success has usually made him popular and has brought him cash, directly or indirectly, and all the encorists in the world, combined in one gigantic ass, couldn't compel him to play it if he chose to make a stand.

But in the case of Rachmaninov there is, I fancy, something more than mere weariness of the Prelude. He takes himself seriously as a composer, having written full-sized orchestral, choral, and chamber works, as well as a largish number of pianoforte pieces. How much of all this music is familiar in the concert-hall? How would you feel if, having arrived at middle age, with a good list of works to your credit, some of them of large scale, and all aided by your long-continued success in the concert-room, how would you feel, I say, if you still continued to be known mainly as the composer of a little piece written in your youth? . . . Exactly; and that's how Rachmaninov feels, you may be sure.

Extra bitterness must come from the fact that the obstinate success of the Prelude is due largely to the fantastic and grisly 'programmes' that have grown up round it. Yet, as we know, it is merely one of a set of five pieces (Op. 3) with no fancy title. (By-the-bye, not many of us know that the set of pieces in which the Prelude occurs was written for four hands, in which form it should certainly be far more effective than as a solo.) 'E. E.' and 'H. G.' may (and probably do) feel as tired of the Prelude as Rachmaninov himself, yet I fancy they will admit that, though threadbare and ill-used in every conceivable sort of transcription, it still proves its vitality by dying very hard—in fact, by not dying at all. I am sure that if by common agreement it could be rested entirely for a year or two 'E. E.' and 'H. G.' would re-hear it with much of the pleasure they felt when it so roused them thirty odd years ago.

It is curious to think that every day somebody is hearing the Prelude for the first time, and that for months they will simply eat it. The writer of the letter quoted above has evidently come under its spell only recently. Her letter ends:

I have a very strong liking for the Prelude. It seems great to me, and I am unable to fathom the reason for so much commiseration. None of my musical friends can tell me.

Well, I envy the writer her state of mind. I remember a soaring human boy who felt just like that about the Prelude. Now that it moves him no longer (except perhaps towards the door), he consoles himself by reflecting that with the advance of age he has come to enjoy much that passed over his youthful head unregarded. Nevertheless, he begs the writer of the letter to believe that neither he nor 'E. E.' nor 'H. G.' look down with sniffing superiority on people to whom the Prelude is one of the greatest and most significant of works. One 'grows out' of musical as of other likings, and neither credit nor discredit is attached to such changes of taste. Nine-tenths of the disputes between the trained musician and the neophyte (with slinging of such names as 'high-brows,' 'snobs,' &c.) are due to the fact that the trained musician forgets that progress in taste must begin at the beginning, while the neophyte forgets that it mustn't stay there.

Judges and barristers are so given to flaunting their ignorance of music that one is disposed to make honourable mention of any legal official who does the other thing and parades a little bit of musical knowledge. At Willesden a few days ago—(What is there in the air of Willesden that breeds such a crop of curious and amusing police-court cases? This is no mere fancy. Some time ago a newspaper had a standing caption, 'WONDERFUL WILLESDEN,' under which appeared day by day a long series of such cases.) At this wonderful suburb a few days ago, then, a landlord told the magistrate that his lady tenant had obtained a summons against him because he had threatened her for that she, the said lady tenant, played the Moonlight Sonata late into the night, reducing to hysterics the wife of the landlord aforesaid, and 'driving the next-door neighbour mad.'

Was the player a humorist, or was she taking her performance in deadly seriousness when she replied by calling in a police sergeant and offering to play the Sonata to him? The report says that the officer refused to hear it, 'and went off hurriedly.' I like that hasty departure. Can't you see Robert edging out of the front door, holding up a deprecatory hand? 'No, lady; it's no part of my dooty to hear you play. This gentleman complains that you play the piannah late at night, and so constitute a nuisance within the meaning of the Act. It's not for me to say whether it's a nuisance or not. I like a bit of harmony—in fact, I don't mind telling you that I'm not above doing a bit of vamping myself on the quiet, but I can't stop to hear you play.' And he didn't.

We shall never really know how good or bad the playing was. True, we have the evidence of the landlord; but he was a tainted witness. 'As a matter of fact,' he said, 'the lady could not play the Moonlight Sonata, though she had practised it daily for two years.'

Substitute 'because' for 'though,' and I am inclined to think we have a fact and its cause neatly stated.

So far there seems to have been no jape from the bench, and at this point His Worship evidently realised that if he didn't work one off soon the chance would be gone. So he said:

They say that music hath charms to soothe the savage breast, but this seems to be an exceptional case.

It was a mild effort, but let due honour go to His Worship: he didn't misquote by saying 'beast' for 'breast,' and he didn't ascribe Congreve's tag to Shakespeare. The fact that in the newspaper report the quotation is not followed by 'Laughter' seems to imply that it was received in rich and respectful silence. A silence broken by the Clerk: 'I know the Moonlight Sonata well. It is one of the most beautiful works in the world, but only a very few people can really play it.'

Good man! (though I can't go all the way with you in our pæan over the Moonlight). May you be raised to the Bench yourself some day, so that our art may be represented! Yet who knows? Environment is a deadly thing, and might be too much even for such an enthusiast as you. We may yet hear you convulsing your court with 'What is a Sonata?'

I have lately sat under a gentle shower of copies of a hymn-tune. They have come from readers in various parts of the country, with notes explaining that the copy has been received as a specimen from the composer. The letters usually add that the tune is sent to me 'for keeps,' though when you see a few bars of it you will understand why the senders were willing—even anxious—to get rid of it. I am sorry that fear of infringing copyright makes it impossible for me to reproduce the whole tune. Here is the second half, and you may judge of the first when I tell you that it is quite as good:

The composer writes the words also, and is as deft a hand at poetry as he is at music.

Here is the puzzle a tune of this kind sets us: How in the name of all sorts of things does such 'harmony' get through the reading-rooms of a reputable publishing house? The publishers in this case are Messrs. Elliot Stock, and I cannot bring myself to believe that so eminent a house is entirely destitute of some one in a responsible position with a knowledge of music. Reverse the case: Would any music publisher of like status put forth a piece of English as faulty in grammar and construction as is this 'tune' in regard to musical elements? Of course not, and the moral is obvious: book publishers, if they must poach on the fields of the musical house, should begin by seeing that their reading-staff includes at least one member able to deal with music. Having named the publisher, ought I to pillory the composer? It is an unpleasant thing to do, but seeing that he is the Rector of a parish, and bearing in mind the influence for good or bad an incumbent may—indeed, must—exercise on the music of his parish, and perhaps of the surrounding district as well, I think the unpleasant thing will have to be done.

After all, he was not bound to compose it, and still less bound to publish it. Having done so, and so thrown down a challenge to criticism, and having moreover courted publicity by sending specimen copies to choirmasters throughout the country, he cannot complain if he gets a bit more publicity than he bargained for. I am sorry to say, then, that the composer of this unspeakably bad piece of music is the Rev. Thomas Elms Fisher, M.A., T.C.D., Rector of Yelling, Huntingdonshire, to whom, with all respect, I commend the old saw about the cobbler and his last.

From the advertisement columns of a church newspaper:

Organist wanted. Salary £40 . . . No pupils, no house, no other work.

And, I venture to guess, no applicants.

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from December number, page 858)

NO. 12, IN D FLAT, OP. 154 (1888)

Phantasie (Maestoso lento—Allegro agitato): Pastorale; Introduction and Fugue

Most players will agree that this is the finest of the Sonatas, and the remainder will, I think, admit that if not the first, it is at least second to none. Its thematic material is arresting, the development is of the quality we expect from Rheinberger, and the contrast and balance of the work as a whole are better than usual, because the middle movement provides the necessary relief in style by being quiet and delightfully tuneful throughout, and is also sufficiently long to give the ear the needed rest between the powerful first and third movements. Rheinberger too often limits the usefulness of his slow movements as relief, by inserting a longish loud section—usually fine enough qua music, but in character rather too suggestive of the first- and third-movement material to which it is supposed to provide contrast.

The title Fantasia has been made an excuse for a flood of incoherent organ music. Composers so busy, lazy, or inefficient as to be superior to considerations of form, have boldly put their ideas on paper, helped them out with passage work of approved design, labelled the mixture Fantasia, and so made a large and inexpensive noise. The youthful Bach fell into the snare like lesser men, but when he grew up he got out; the lesser men stayed there and fantasied fluently. (To see the thing in a nutshell, compare Bach's early Fantasia in A minor—Novello Edition, Book xii.—with the 'Great' G minor, or the best of the big Chorale Fantasias.) Rheinberger slipped into the rambling, old-fashioned style in the Fantasia of the B flat Sonata—an unaccountable lapse, for he had shown years before in the Fantasia Sonata an unusual power in the direction of ordered freedom. In the D flat Sonata we have an example of the form at its best; here is real phantasy (which, we are apt to forget, is merely 'fancy' writ large), with all it implies in the way of variety of mood, warmth of feeling, and inventive power, controlled (but not cramped or checked) by a fine technique.

The Sonata opens in a way that promises a big work—a broad tune so simple that a small composer would hesitate before setting it down unadorned, for fear of being thought unoriginal:

EX. 1. Maestoso lento. ♩ = 72.

and so on, the whole theme filling fourteen bars. Its opening is then repeated with a fresh continuation, a full close in the tonic being reached eleven bars later. Delightful points in this continuation are the three-fold use of the dropping figure B-D-D-C and the descending scale in thirds that overlaps the third appearance of the figure.

Dr. Bennett, in the lecture previously quoted, says that 'the second subject commences in the first bar of page 4.' One hesitates before differing with Rheinberger's old pupil, but is there a second subject in the ordinary sense of the term? What Dr. Bennett describes as such is merely the second half of a longish section in dotted quaver rhythm; when it reappears at the end of the movement it is again led into by a portion of the dotted-note passage; it does not stand out so clearly as a second subject should; and it receives no sort of development. Surely the simplest plan is to regard the whole of the section from the middle of page 3 to the Allegro agitato as an episode. We may imagine Rheinberger's problem here to have been something like this: The core of the movement is to be the Allegro agitato; to start it immediately after the giving-out of the first subject section (twenty-six bars) would be to make the prologue too short; to lengthen the prologue by further repetition of the first subject, would be weak; to begin developing the subject would be a mistake, because all requirements in the way of development and animation will be provided by the Allegro agitato itself. The solution is a passage differing in rhythm and style from the broad opening subject, and rather more animated, yet not so much so as to discount the energy of the Allegro agitato into which it leads.

The pedal-point before the change of key is worth notice in several respects. The double-dotted rhythm seems to have its origin in some well-known drum passages of the throbbing, ominous type; the dropping treble part is not mere chance, but derives from bars 5 and 6, and the treble figure in bar 4, line 3, page 4, and in the succeeding bar, is an augmentation of that carried down so effectively from right hand to pedal part in line 2 of this page. Bridge-passages of this kind are often played casually because we hastily conclude that they are mere stuffing, whereas the best examples, though apparently only marking time, are also looking either backward or forward.

Properly managed, the burst into the Allegro agitato is splendidly effective. But it is not an easy take-off for the player. The rall. in the bar before the change must be carefully graded so that the rhythm be not lost; there must be no break at the double-bar; the ff must be brought on at exactly the right point; and the pedals must get to work at once with the quaver figure. There is nothing very difficult in the music itself; the trouble is to start off at a quaver's notice with a full head of steam, so to speak. The join will need—and repay—a good deal of practice. If we imagine how an orchestra would mutter its way quietly to the double-bar and then suddenly launch out, we shall have our model:

EX. 2.

Allegro agitato. ♩ = 76.

Though Rheinberger begins a slur over the top A, the context shows that the phrase really begins with the preceding quaver. The passage would have been more convenient in all ways had it been written with the change of signature made earlier, and the manual parts so disposed that they can be played with ease and certainty and the phrasing shown, thus:

EX. 3.

Allegro agitato.

As there can be no doubt that this is the effect the composer wants, we need not hesitate to recast the passage.

The after-phrase of this is a sequential subject with energetic leaps of sevenths and ninths. The whole of this section—four pages and-a-half—is marked ff, but to follow this direction would be to destroy much of its effect. We may reduce to f on the fourth crotchet of line 2, page 6, and to mf at line 2, page 7, increasing at the last bar of the next line, and working up gradually to a climax on the Neapolitan sixth in line 4, page 8. In view of the return of the first subject on page 9 (where ff will again be required), we should subside after this climax, the four bars leading into the Tempo mo being played on mf diapasons. Note that the rit. in this passage should be managed in such a way that the dotted minim C sharp and the crotchet B sharp should be the rhythmic equivalent of the dotted crotchet and quaver with which the main theme opens (see Ex. 1). This is another case of a connecting link that contains more than meets the eye; it looks both ways—back to bar 6 on page 7, where the same notes very happily and unexpectedly lead to an interrupted cadence and some fresh material; and forward to the resumption of the main theme. These are the touches in construction that show a composer knows his job when flats have to be joined.

The final section of the Phantasie is mainly a reprise, with just enough enrichment to keep the interest well alive. As a touch of this kind, notice how the quaver triplet figure in the left hand at the beginning of page 3 blossoms out into this effective flourish on page 10:

EX. 4.

An awkward point occurs at the end of the second line of the last page, where Rheinberger suddenly goes from mf to ff in a way that seems clumsy, and has the further defect of bringing on the power a beat too soon. The latter point is proved by a reference to the first bar in line 2 of page 4, where the same passage occurs. Here the increase takes place on the second beat of the bar. Rheinberger, we know, was notoriously casual about registration details, so we need not be shy about making corrections in such cases as this. I give the passage as written :

Ex. 5.

The drawbacks are obvious. Here is a suggested version which is effective, and not difficult :

Ex. 6.

This noble movement may claim to be the perfect out-voluntary for use when organ, building, and occasion are all alike big.

The best tribute we can pay the Pastorale is to say that it does not let us down after the splendour of the Phantasie. Its effects are made by a truly delightful tune, by some pleasant interplay between contrasted manuals, and by a broader section in which a fairly loud diapason tone is used. No further comment is called for save a reference to the fact that in the first page the composer begins with a solo stop, and then apparently forgets it as early as the fourth bar! Fortunately, the few notes beyond the reach of the left hand in this bar may easily be thumbled by the right. Later, where this is impossible (bars 11-15), we must regard the effect as analogous with that in an orchestra when a couple of woodwind instruments, hitherto playing in unison, divide. This means that the two manuals must differ in colour rather than in power. Clearly the composer's suggestion of mf for the higher manual, p for the lower, and pp for the pedal must not be followed.

The third movement links itself up to the Pastorale by opening with a figure obviously drawn from its first subject. The second page settles down with a broad theme, and gradually opens the way for the Fugue by building up a big climax on the dominant of C sharp minor. Although the whole of this page is marked ff we shall of course save a fair amount of power for the climax.

The syncopation of the opening bars of the fugue subject is apt to mislead the listener unless the player shows that the accent comes, not on the first note but on the second. This can be done, of course, by detaching the first note and using the Swell pedal for a sf on the second :

Ex. 7. Con moto.  $\text{♩} = 72$ .

Incidentally we may notice how the opening of this fine subject becomes trivial if the rhythm comes out as :

When the fugue is well under way, the rhythm is clear enough. Only the opening bars need defining.

The Fugue is largely in five-part writing, and for so long a movement contains very little in the way of episode. The subject is nearly always on the scene, yet the writing is very free, with a wide range of keys. The composer has no thought for players with small hands, and many passages call for a good deal of thought and skill in sharing the work between right and left. In one or two cases some slight recasting of the parts may be necessary for players with a small grasp. I venture to quote two of the worst passages, with suggestions as to the division of the inner parts between the hands and a few fingering marks :

Ex. 8.

In the following passage the second bar is impossible as Rheinberger wrote it, save for a few exceptionally large-handed players. The rest of us, I think, had better get over the difficulty by the dodge of transferring the D sharp and C sharp of the second tenor part (shown in small type) an octave higher. The effect is so near that of the original that nobody will spot the difference, and the passage becomes quite easy. The rest of the passage, when properly divided, pretty well fingers itself, though it still remains a trying one to play cleanly and legato up to speed :

Ex. 9.

Fortunately these and similar passages that abound in the work are well worth while, being splendid as music and excellent for finger-stretching purposes.

As was said above, the subject is very much in evidence throughout this long Fugue, but the player will notice that as the work progresses the composer gradually sheds the latter half of the subject and more and more develops the opening bars, the first two being very fruitful, especially in the Coda (pages 25 and 26). There is real emotional intensity here. As Dr. Bennett says, 'the composer fairly lets himself go,' and not only keeps up a steady crescendo of feeling and power from the end of page 23 to the middle of page 26, but still has up his sleeve a final outburst in the shape of an emphatic question asked three times over a rising pedal arpeggio. There is quite a Beethovenish flavour about this, and in the way the answer is held off by a few quiet bars. When the answer does come, it is a clinching one—the noble theme with which the Sonata opened, and which fittingly rounds it off.

In leaving this work it may be worth while to point out that, more perhaps than any other of its companions, it has suffered from over-loud playing. I have met listeners who have been set against the D flat Sonata through having made its acquaintance at the hands of a player who followed the composer's directions faithfully—which of course meant page after page of full organ. Rheinberger's organ music, like that of Bach, may easily be ruined by fussy registration, because, like Bach's, its effect lies in its texture, melodic interest, and development. But (again like Bach's) it can be made intolerably heavy and monotonous by too constant use of power. All polyphonic music places a considerable strain on the listener, and long spells of full organ make the strain intolerable, partly because the power itself becomes a burden, and even more because the resultant fogging of the texture takes away from the interest of the music. For copyright reasons, a new edition of Rheinberger's Sonatas, re-phrased and registered, is not likely to be available for a good many years. All the more reason, therefore, for players to take thought and make their own practical versions. Good taste, common sense, and a lead pencil will give them all they need. Many an audience has left a recital accusing Rheinberger of dullness and heaviness. Dullness and heaviness there had been, no doubt, but only the trained listener knew that they were shown, not by the composer, but by the player.

NO. 13, IN E FLAT, OP. 161

Phantasie; Canzone; Intermezzo; Fugue

After the Phantasie of No. 12, this of No. 13 is so unexciting that a hasty critic might call it dull. We can best appreciate it by looking on it as an example of the serious prelude form. The pace is moderate throughout, and, despite appearances, there is no real change of tempo. The change on page 4, and the Tempo primo on page 7, are not apparent to the ear, the alteration being merely one of unit—the crotchet of the opening Maestoso and the quaver of the Adagio middle section (Adagio) both equalling 88. This persistence on a slowish gait during the whole movement (seven pages) is a blemish. Even the player, for whom there is really plenty of interest, begins to feel about half-way through that he is too much of a pedestrian—and in a very real sense, too, for the pedals are kept going in every bar. Yet there is so much good stuff in the movement that it must not be dismissed as a failure. Personally, I have made very frequent use of it as a voluntary, and have never failed to enjoy its breadth and simplicity. The plain opening theme, with the descending scale in the pedals (which may be made a fine feature on its reappearance on pages 3 and 7 by the addition of a 16-ft. reed), the cadenza-like passage that starts page 4, and the thoughtful polyphony of most of the movement, have an appeal of their own. Best of all is the little second subject—little, in that it is nothing more than the first four notes of a descending scale, yet big in the way it sails up on to a six-four at its second bar. In fact, with the sixth below in the right hand and the dominant in the tenor as the next most prominent part, the effect of the whole is a string of second inversions :

It is worth noting that Rheinberger sticks to this harmonization on every appearance of the theme. Even when brought in full organ at the close of the movement, and again at the end of the Sonata, the harmony and laying-out remain the same. The Phantasie, despite the effects of monotony in pace and style, and the lack of rest in the pedal part, remains a good movement, especially if we modify the defects by good judgment in grading power, and by using only 8-ft. pedal tone for a spell in the middle—say from the second line of page 5 to the tempo mo on page 7.

The Canzona is one of the most attractive of the slow movements, with a charming tune for a solo stop, some delicious harmony, and a few little touches of rhythm (e.g., the left-hand part at the beginning of page 10) that suggest Brahms. As in the Pastorale of No. 12, Rheinberger soon forgets the solo stop arrangement with which he set out, so we must again use two manuals of almost equal power. The best arrangement, I think, is one that gives the left-hand part to a quiet but definite stop of flute quality. The occasional chords and extra parts in the right hand are apt to sound lumpy unless played with a string-toned stop. With a good balance on these lines much of the movement can be made delightful, with a suggestion of orchestral strings and wood-wind at times, for example :

EX. 11. Solo.

Very effective is the series of pianissimo suspensions at the end.

The Intermezzo cannot be played as a separate movement, as it ends on a dominant chord and leads into the Fugue. It is partly fantasia, partly toccata, and although it suffers from this want of determination, it has some very effective moments. It is ungrateful to the player, however, because from time to time an otherwise comfortable and rather showy manual part suddenly becomes decidedly awkward (middle of page 16). It can be made into a very good prelude to the Fugue, if one be wanted, but if the whole Sonata is played the Intermezzo is better omitted, as it adds five minutes to the length without quite compensating player or hearer. Moreover, it is better to come to the Fugue unfatigued, seeing that it is largely in solid five-part writing, and is on the big side throughout.

Whatever we may think of this Sonata as a whole, I believe that most players who have spent much time over its Fugue will agree that it is one of the best of the set. The subject recalls that of Bach's 'Dorian' Fugue in its noble melancholy :

EX. 12.

I omit from the quotation the counter-subject which accompanies the second half. It leads us to expect a fugue on two subjects, but Rheinberger drops it after its second appearance. The first two and-a-half pages give us a rather sombre working in five parts—the very thing to show off diapasons. A modulation is then made to D flat, and a full close in that key seems certain, when the cadence is rudely interrupted and a plunge is made into entirely new matter and style :

EX. 13.

The wedge-shaped quaver theme holds the field for a page, after which the fugue subject reappears in A minor, accompanied by a single part in quavers, which thus carries on something of the feeling of the wedge theme and prepares the way for an emphatic statement of the first half of the subject in F minor by the pedals, under free and animated manual writing, with a bit of stretto thrown in.

The Coda follows—one of Rheinberger's finest pages, with rich harmony, and constantly fresh treatment of the opening half of the subject, leading into a climax which is stirring as it stands, and may be made even more so by its antiphony being brought out thus :

Ex. 14.

If no solo reed is available the effect can be got by use of full Swell and Great instead of Great and Solo. This passage—not unlike that at the end of the C sharp minor Fugue—brings us into the epilogue—the simple second subject of the Phantasie (Ex. 10), now in E flat major, played full organ and developed into a really imposing peroration.

The use at the close of a sonata of a theme from one of the earlier movements is sometimes a drawback when the Finale is played alone, because it is no longer relevant, but here the broad, simple major theme comes in so naturally after the stress of the Fugue and the liberal use of the minor key, and is so naturally developed into four times its length, that one wishes for no better ending. It seems to be the finest of answers to the passionate questioning of the Fugue.

(To be continued.)

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

By W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXIX.—WILLIAM PASCHE

In the oft-quoted Addendum to Morley's Plaine and Easie Introduction to Practical Musicke, in 1597, among the names of the Early Tudor 'Practicioners,' pride of place is given to 'Mr. Pasche.' It is to be observed that in Morley's list the name of 'Mr.' or 'Master' is given to Pasche, Byrd, Tallis, White, Parsons, Wilkinson, Sturton, and Risby, showing that these were 'Masters of Arts,' or else outstanding 'Masters of Musicke.' Thus, the reputation of Master Pasche must have been very great, even among a race of giants.

The name Pasche or Pasche—also written Passhe—occurs under Henry VI., Edward IV., and Henry VII., and we find a Master Thomas Pasche as Prebendary of Windsor from 1449 to 1474, he being also sub-almoner to King Henry VI. Possibly this Canon of Windsor was an uncle or relative of William Pasche.

Biographical data, up to the present, as to William Pasche may be described as 'nil,' and the only information to be found in the new edition of Mr. Henry Davey's History of English Music (1921) is one solitary sentence, as follows :

William Pasche (Pasche) may have been the Pasche whose will was proved in 1525; but I should have supposed his period rather earlier, perhaps 1430-1500.

Let me here say at once that William Pasche was the Pasche whose will was proved in 1525; and his period was not so early as '1430-1500,' but probably from 1460-1515. Yet though scanty details are forthcoming of Pasche's biography, we are fortunate in having ample evidence of his musical powers. Admirable specimens of his gifts are to be found at Cambridge—namely, at Caius and St. John's Colleges, at Peterhouse, and at the University. The musical MSS. at St. John's and Cambridge University may be dated as circa 1515, while those at Peterhouse are not so early—probably circa 1540.

Pasche's greatest work is his delightful Mass Christus resurgens, of which Caius College possesses a complete score, while Cambridge University has a contra-tenor part and St. John's a bass part. A beautiful Motet of his, Sancta Maria, is at Peterhouse, and it is described by Mr. Henry Davey as 'an attractive piece allied in spirit to Josquin's Ave vera virginitas. There is also a Magnificat by Pasche at Peterhouse, though it would seem, from Dr. Jebb's list, that formerly there were two Magnificats in that Library. Portions of a Mass by Pasche are in the Cambridge University Library, and there is a Motet by him in the British Museum among the Add. MSS. 5665—at least if we are to assume that the piece marked as by 'W. P.' is to be identified with William Pasche. I may here observe that an ingenious friend suggested to me that 'W. P.' may have been meant for William Parsons, who harmonized eighty-one Psalms in Day's edition of 1563; but the British Museum MS. containing the Motet is apparently of the early years of the 16th century; in fact, the dates '1510' and '1511' are to be found in it—much too early for Parsons.

In regard to the biography of Pasche very few facts have come down. The late Dr. Cummings, in answer to an inquiry of mine, gave it as his opinion that the composer was attached to the Chapel Royal or the Court. After a close search of the various lists of these two Royal establishments, I could find no name resembling that of Pasche. A further search of the lists of various Cathedral establishments yielded no better results, nor was I more successful in a careful examination of the Patent Rolls, nor yet in a search of Hennessy's Novum Repertorium. At length, when I had almost abandoned hope, I made a search of 15th-century wills, and was rewarded with a clue to the family of the composer. Following up this clue, I was fortunate enough to run to earth this elusive composer, who I have good reason to believe, belonged to the Chapel of the Duchess of Exeter, sister of King Edward IV., about the year 1479. I also discovered that a Richard Pasche—probably a younger brother or a nephew of the composer—was one of the Wardens of the Guild of Holy Trinity of New Windsor in 1513.

William Pasche was one of the Gentlemen of the Chapel of Anne, Duchess of Exeter, in 1476, so we can safely assume the date of his birth as circa 1450. The Duchess—who was sister to King Edward IV. and Richard III.—died in 1480, having taken for her second husband Sir Thomas St. Leger, who was granted a licence on March 30, 1481, to found a perpetual chantry of two chaplains in the Chapel Royal, Windsor, to be called 'the Chantry of Anne, late Duchess of Exeter.' Of course the attainder of Sir Thomas St. Leger and the death of King Edward IV. (April 9, 1483) must have affected the chances of promotion for Pasche under Richard III.

It is not a little remarkable that the few facts we know of the biography of Pasche are derived from two wills—one proved in 1516 and the other in 1525. In the former will, made by Richard Gumby, chaplain to the Duchess of Exeter, a bequest is made to the Church of Compton, in Gloucestershire, and to Master Stratford (chaplain to King Edward IV.), also to Master Newman and Master Pasche. This will was proved on May 29, 1516, by John Veysey, Dean of the Chapel Royal (Cal. Lett. Hen. VIII., 1515-18, part 1, page 566).

Apparently Pasche had to live in retirement during the reigns of King Richard III. (1483-85) and of Henry VII. (1485-1509), and we hear no more of him till his death in 1525. He made his will on May 17, 1525, and directed that his body be buried 'in the chancel of St. Margaret's Church, in Friday Street, in London.' He bequeathed the sum of xlii*l.* to the high altar of the same Church, and a similar sum to the high altar of Dursley (Gloucestershire):

The Residue of my goods not bequeathed, my funeral and my debts paid, I give them to Alice, my Wife, and to John, my son, the which I make my two executors for to dispose them for the health of my Soul and all Christian souls, with the supervision of John Hyskins and Thomas Hevyn, they to have for their labours both xxvi*s.* viii*d.*

The will is witnessed by Stephen Padley, priest, Watkyn Woodward, and William Clotesboke, with others.

Pasche must have died a few weeks later, as the will was proved on July 12, 1525, in the Cathedral Church of St. Paul, London.

THE CEMBAL D'AMOUR

BY E. VAN DER STRAETEN

In the summer of 1921 I had occasion to examine at the State and University Library at Hamburg a large collection of manuscripts by John Mattheson, known to the present generation chiefly by Das neu-eröffnete Orchester ('The Newly-Revealed Orchestra') (Hamburg, 1713), and by his connection with Handel. Among the numerous bundles of papers labelled 'Politica et Musica,' there was one which apparently had never been opened since it reached the Library. It contained a very fine-toned, pen-and-ink drawing of an instrument called 'Clavir d'amour,' a reproduction of which—taken from a photograph which I obtained through the courtesy of the director, Prof. Dr. Wahl—is given below. It represents the only authentic illustration of this instrument, except one which is stated to be in an extremely rare 18th century work by Adelung—whereof, however, I have so far not been able to see a copy.

Cembal d'Amour.
von Silbermann.

The cembal d'amour was invented by Gottfried Silbermann, the famous organ and harpsichord (clavicembalo or cembalo) builder of Freiberg in Saxony, in the year 1721, as he said, 'after untiring thinking and planning.' The idea of an instrument combining the softness of a clavichord with the tone-power of a small harpsichord was suggested to Silbermann by the wife of Privy-secretary Joh. Ulrich Koenig, of Dresden, who is described as 'an incomparable artist.' Her husband, also a friend of Silbermann, was the first to give an account of the new instrument in the Breslawische gedruckte Sammlungen of 1721:

Where [he asks] could ever one [a keyboard instrument] be found which could accompany the lute and the viol d'amour in such a manner that it would not drown their gentle strains, as does the rattling harpsichord, yet would balance them by a right proportion of strength, and thus not be like the common clavichord? An instrument which, moreover, would respond as easily, and with the same tenderness and elasticity, to the touch of the fingers?

Such an instrument has been constructed by the famous artist, Herr Gottfried Silbermann, of Freyberg, in Meissen, in such a manner that one has reason to proclaim it publicly as a novel work of art, to his undying fame.

Later on he explains how the instrument received its name:

... it also blends with the viol d'amour in such a charming manner that many Royal Polish virtuosi at Dresden unanimously decided to name it the 'Cymbal d'amour,' to distinguish it, as an entirely new thing, by an appropriate name, from other similar instruments.

Nevertheless, this is an entire misnomer, for, firstly, the strings are not plucked as in the cembalo (harpsichord), but, on the contrary, are struck from below by metal pins, resembling in their action the tangents of the clavichord; secondly, the word 'd'amour' suggests the presence of separate sympathetic strings, as in the viol d'amour, whereas this instrument has but one string to each note. The name was evidently chosen by the above enthusiasts on account of the cembal d'amour blending so well

(Clavier D'Amour wird nun doppelt Clavier, es resonirt auf beiden Seiten und kann Piano und Forte gespielt werden, die Herrn Liebhaber halten es besser als ein Flügel, weil es ihnen lieblicher in die Ohren klingt) with the viol d'amour and because of the sweetness of its tone. With the illustration was a slip in Mattheson's (?) handwriting (reproduced above) which states:

[Translation] Clavier d'amour, or a double clavier. It resonates on both sides; it can be played piano and forte. Amateurs consider it to be better than a 'Flügel' [harpsichord], because it sounds more sweetly in their ears.

The strings of the cembal d'amour were twice as long as those of the ordinary clavichord, and, being struck by the pins, acting as tangents, exactly in the middle, they were divided into halves, each producing the higher octave together with the fundamental note of the open string, and giving greater richness of tone than the harpsichord or clavichord possessed. So long as the finger rested on the key, the pin was held against the string, whereby the vibration of its two halves was prolonged and the tone sustained to some extent. It was probably by the quick release or holding down of the key, as well as by hitting the string sharply or touching it gently, that the dynamic modifications between forte and piano became possible without the use of stops. The importance attached to this invention at the time may be gauged by the fact that it procured for Silbermann the appointment as 'Court and Country Organ-builder to the King of Poland and Elector of Saxony.' This flattering acknowledgment of his merit did not, however, satisfy Silbermann, who was anxious to secure the fruits of his invention, and, supported by J. B. Volumier, the master of the Royal Chapel, Joh. George Pisendel, the famous violinist, and Christ. Pezold, the organist, he obtained from the King a patent for his invention, on June 21, 1723. But he was not destined to enjoy the fruits of this protection for long. Pantaleon Hebenstreit, the virtuoso on the cymbal (dulcimer), planned an instrument similar to that of Silbermann which he called 'Cymbal royal,' and entrusted its construction to Ernest Hänel, of Meissen. Silbermann obtained an injunction against Hänel, who appealed. Hebenstreit had the effrontery to accuse Silbermann of plagiarism, and a law-suit followed which dragged on for about five years, ending, through the intrigues of his opponents, in a very unsatisfactory manner for poor Silbermann. He abandoned his experiments for the improvement of his instrument, and turned his attention to the development of the 'Hammerclavier,' which Christofori, of Florence, had constructed with a fair amount of success in 1711. According to J. S. Bach's testimony, his first attempts in that direction were not very successful. How far he succeeded afterwards cannot now be ascertained, as none of his instruments appear to have survived.

One of his apprentices, who worked with him between 1740-50, revived the cembal d'amour after his master's death, but in a much more complicated form. Stein's cembal had three superimposed manuals, each provided with a separate set of strings. The first manual was attached to a harpsichord mechanism, the second to a hammer-clavier (pianoforte), and the third to a cembal d'amour. All three manuals could be coupled, thus combining all the existing forms of the clavier of that period. The original of our illustration bears an inscription which, Englished, is as follows :

I, Bartholom. Opperman made such [a Cembal d'amour] at Hamburg in 1748, and received 150 thalers [about £22 10s.] for it. It resonates on both sides of the bridge [he means of the tangents] as long as one holds the finger down, and can be played piano and forte.

The last attempt to revive the instrument was made by Franz Jacob Späth, of Ratisbon, about 1770, but without lasting success.

THE 17TH CENTURY ON QUARTER-TONES

By GERALD HAYES

Signor Busoni has written a new book on modern tendencies in music which has just been published in Germany. English readers who recall his former learned work, A Sketch of Musical Aesthetics, will hope that a translation of these new essays will soon be available, in order that they may see how he now regards his earlier suggestions on Atonality, Tripartite- and Quarter-tones, and the hundred and thirteen new scales which he had worked out.

It is only natural that the more minute subdivision of the octave should have been engaging the attention of the advanced musician of to-day, but in spite of our orchestral experiments, and keyboards with four notes to a tone, we cannot claim to be altogether pioneers in this field. Some of the modern developments—such as the chord of natural over-tones, which has given us the wonderful Sonatas of Scriabin, or the use that men like Debussy, Vincent d'Indy, and others have made of the whole-tone scale—are, of course, real innovations, but the 17th century had a good deal to say about quarter-tones which had been seriously tried, and the matter is discussed in the text-books of the period, sometimes from the purely musical, and occasionally from the more mathematical point of view.

By the beginning of the 18th century it seems to have been disposed of, for we then hear no more about it; indeed, in 1724 we find William Turner in his Sound Anatomized stating that 'the semitone is the smallest interval in music.' Christopher Simpson, in his Compendium of Practical Musick (1667), gives us a good deal of information on the subject. As a composer and a player on the viola da gamba, he was one of the foremost musicians of his day. His great work on the Division Viol is a monument of thoroughness and sound sense and, besides his Compendium, he wrote part of Playford's well-known Skill of Musick. What he says on quarter-tones may be taken as reflecting the formed opinion of his generation.

Speaking of the different scales, he says :

The Enharmonic Scale rises gradually by Dēises or Quarter-Notes ; of which 24 make up the octave ; and is so far out of use that we scarce know how to give an example of it.

This rather suggests that it was all a thing of the past, but from a later remark it appears there had been attempts again to use quarter-tones :

I am slow to believe [he says] that any good Music (especially in many parts) can be composed by Quarter-Tones, although I hear some talk much of it. Some do fancy, that as the Diatonic Scale is made more elegant by a mixture of the Chromatick ; so likewise it might be bettered by help of the Enharmonic Scale, in such places where those little Dissonances do occur.

It must be remembered that this was written in the great days of English music before our free contrapuntal style was overwhelmed by the Italian manner, and that therefore 'musick in many parts' represented the principal form of composition. Also that the problem of the 'even-tempered' scale had not yet been completely solved, so that 'those little dissonances' were often a source of trouble.

It refers of course to the fact that the two semitones making up a whole-tone were not equal, being in the proportion 4:5, though opinion was divided as to whether the upper or lower semitone was the greater. Attempts had been made to equalise them, notably by Athanasius Kircher in his great work Musurgia Universalis (1650). Accepting the nine commas into which, by general consent, the tone was divided, he proposed to divide the middle comma into two 'schisms' so that each semitone should consist of four commas and a schism. But the age was nothing if not logical, and his opponents argued that this did not solve the problem, as his two schisms ought to be in the proportion of 4 to 5 also !

There are many other works in which the curious may pursue the subject. Much attention is given to it by William Holder, in his Treatise on the Natural Grounds of Harmony (1694), where the structure of the octave is explored in all its possibilities. The learned Mersenne, in L'Harmonie Universelle (1635), of course speculates a good deal on these small intervals, though his attempt to subdivide the octave into 58½ commas was a bad shot that his contemporaries were not slow to point out.

Simpson gives a diagram to show those who used them endeavoured to indicate such degrees in scores. The sign for the semitone is the usual sharp sign of double crossed lines, and for the respective quarter-tones single and triple crossed lines were employed.

He sums up his reasons against the use of these minute sound differences as follows :

As to their use in Practical Musick, I am yet to seek. For I do not conceive how a natural voice can Ascend or Descend by such Minute degrees, and hit them right in tune. Neither do I see how Syncopes or Bindings with Discords (which are the chief ornaments of Composition) can be performed by Quarter-Notes. Or, how Concords (by them) can be removed from key to key, without much trouble or confusion.

He admits that there might possibly be a use for it in the Tierce de Picardie ('The Binding Cadence of the Greater 3rd'), but that, he says, is commonly covered by the trill of the voice or shake of the finger. And he concludes the whole matter with the remark :

As to my opinion concerning our common scale ; taking it with its mixture of the chromatick ; I think it lies not in the wit of man to frame a better, as to all intents and purposes for Practical Musick.

For the present—so far as quarter-tones are concerned, at any rate—even the genius of Signor Busoni will hardly persuade the majority of us to disagree with Simpson.

THE EASTMAN SCHOOL OF MUSIC

BY A. J. WARNER

(Music-Editor of The Times-Union, of Rochester, N.Y.)

[Much interest has been aroused by recent appearances of prominent British musicians at the Eastman School of Music; we are glad, therefore, to be able to give a report of the institution, from the pen of one who played an important part in its organization.—EDITOR.]

Music in the provinces of the United States has received a direct challenge in the gift of George Eastman, founder of the Eastman Kodak Company, to the people of the City of Rochester, New York, of the Eastman Theatre and the Eastman School of Music, which have been 'trusteed' to the University of Rochester, thus insuring their permanent administration. Although one great building houses both the theatre and the school, they are, in a sense, separate institutions, the Eastman School of Music being virtually a college of the University of Rochester, and operated as such, while the Eastman Theatre is maintained with the primary objects of supporting a symphony orchestra, training listeners—who are drawn from the general public of the city—and serving as a laboratory for the School of Music. Mr. Eastman's gift amounts to a total of approximately 8,750,000 dollars, 2,250,000 dollars of which represent an Endowment Fund, available for the School of Music only, while 1,500,000 dollars still remain in the Building Fund.

Vast in money expenditure as is this enterprise, there is back of it a purely idealistic conception on the part of its donor that gives it a world significance. Mr. Eastman has told me something of the purpose on which is based his unique and magnificent undertaking. In the midst of his notably active and philanthropic life there has gradually come to him a realisation that music, and the power to appreciate its message, is of supreme importance as a means of escape from the highly standardised existence of the present day; that music, with ever-gaining sway, has brought him relief from business pressure and a degree of pleasure so poignant that he has determined to share his experience with the public of Rochester. Moreover, Mr. Eastman is eager to have the people of his city make good use of the increase in the amount of leisure that is theirs as a result of the new systems of efficiency that govern so many of the factories and manufacturing plants in the commercial centres of America.

The Eastman School of Music building is possessed of the latest developments as regards planning and equipment. The studios are so constructed that they are sound-proof, the resonance of the various apartments being controlled by cork floors and sound absorbing 'blotters' in panels on the walls. In the way of ventilation and heating, which is under thermostatic control, the system installed is of the most modern type. The fourth floor of one wing of the building contains thirteen practice and two teaching organ studios, the organs being placed overhead in the roof trusses so that their pipes speak down through the ceiling; only the consoles are visible in the rooms. Other features of the school building are fifty-one practice rooms for students of the pianoforte, and several studios for the study of the theory of music which are equipped with lantern, pianola, phonograph, and pianoforte, to be used in illustrated lectures.

One of the significant elements in the equipment of the school plant is the Sibley Music Library, which has been collected by Hiram W. Sibley, of Rochester, and which now ranks as the third or fourth important collection in America. In this library, by the way, is the original manuscript of Home, sweet Home, recently purchased by Mr. Sibley.

The largest auditorium in the School of Music is Kilbourn Hall—named in honour of Mr. Eastman's mother—which seats about five hundred. The decorations are of the most exquisite kind. This hall is particularly adapted for the giving of chamber music concerts, and is also proving highly useful as a demonstration room for pupils' recitals. There is placed in Kilbourn Hall a hundred-stop organ. Between the School of Music and the Eastman Theatre is a Grand Corridor, 25-ft. by 186-ft., which is on the second floor. In addition to serving as a corridor for the school, this splendid apartment is utilised as a foyer for both Kilbourn Hall and the Theatre. On the walls of this promenade are hung paintings by well-known modern artists. The pictures, which are obtained through the courtesy of the Memorial Art Gallery, given to the University of Rochester by Mrs. James Sibley Watson, are changed every month, or as often as the Art Gallery brings a new loan collection to Rochester.

The Eastman Theatre is an auditorium seating 3,568 people. Its acoustics are regarded as among its most notable features, for one can hear perfectly in any corner of the great structure, so carefully has it been designed. The Theatre is equally remarkable hygienically, washed air being constantly circulated through pipes under every seat, while the lighting is considered one of the marvels of the day. Experiment, long and arduous, has made it possible to have motion pictures shown with the house almost as light as during the giving of concerts. This has overcome one of the serious obstacles in film presentations. The proscenium arch of the theatre is 60-ft. wide; the stage is of ample size, and supplied with every appliance for the handling of scenery and the giving of grand opera. In the theatre is an organ of a hundred and forty speaking stops, with an Echo organ installed in the roof trusses.

One of Mr. Eastman's special aims was that all the seats should be uniformly desirable and comfortable. With this in view the grand balcony was made to lead from a foyer of great beauty and luxuriousness in the way of furniture and decoration. The balcony has proved so successful that many people resort to it who could afford more costly seats. There are no boxes in the Theatre, this form of seating being considered undemocratic in America. Instead, there is a mezzanine gallery containing four hundred and nine chairs, which are sold as reserved seats to persons willing to pay for the privilege of special luxury and ease.

The interior of the Theatre is acknowledged by the different authorities who have seen it to be the most distinguished, artistic, and elegant of any theatre in the world. On the walls are mural paintings by Mr. Ezra Winter representing a music festival, with lyric, martial, and sylvan music illustrated, and by Mr. Barry Faulner, who has suggested sacred, pastoral, and dramatic music. The entire colour scheme of the interior of Kilbourn Hall and the Eastman Theatre was chosen and supervised by Mr. Ezra Winter. The ceiling is slightly domed, and treated with coffer embroidery in colour and gold. From a gilded sunburst, in the centre, hangs one of the largest and most resplendent chandeliers in existence, from which a flood of light is thrown upon the ceiling of the Theatre.

It is, however, the vision that has led Mr. Eastman to erect this great institution, rather than its cost and beauty, that is of most interest to the world at large. He is just now chiefly concerned with creating listeners, feeling that they, at the moment, are the crying need of the average provincial city of America. In the possession of intelligent music listeners, outside of New York and Chicago, and possibly Boston and Philadelphia, the United States, seems, to the writer, to be far poorer than England. To be sure, large audiences are available for concerts given by celebrated artists, who have already been made familiar through the medium of the gramophone, but the desire to hear good music—mainly orchestral—is as yet distinctly circumscribed. The great symphony orchestras of America are, practically without exception, run at a huge deficit—from 200,000 to 250,000 dollars a year—which is made up by affluent subscribers, who pay, in excess of the admittance, considerably more than a dollar for each person who hears the various symphony concerts in most American cities.

Mr. Eastman has come to the conclusion that this system is economically and artistically wrong, and that the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, which he has founded, must largely be self-supporting. As a means toward achieving this end he has arranged that on six days a week motion picture features at fifty cents for the best seats shall be shown at the Eastman Theatre—a concert by some well-known artist or orchestra is given each Wednesday night throughout the season—and that the pictures shall be accompanied by an orchestra of symphonic proportions, the nucleus of the Rochester Philharmonic, which now numbers ninety players, and which will give as many concerts as the public will support. The programme is headed at each performance by an Overture of high grade orchestral music, and the remaining parts of the accompaniment are of excellent musical standard. Mr. Eastman, who has based his calculations on actual results, estimates that over two million people annually will hear good music well performed, and is firmly convinced that thus, quite unconsciously, these citizens will become imbued with a love for the best in orchestral composition—a circumstance which will, in the end, automatically create a large and real musical public at Rochester. To such, a symphony orchestra will become a necessity. In the meantime, the proceeds of the 'movies' will pay the expenses of the Theatre and the Theatre orchestra. The orchestra already numbers more than sixty players, and will be increased in size as conditions warrant. The fact that the Eastman Theatre is a part of the University of Rochester, and that no profits or interest on the investment are required is, of course, a vital factor in the success of the scheme.

The main object of this orchestral plan is a reduction in the expense of orchestral music from 2.50 dollars per listener—including admission fee and deficit—to twenty-five cents. This is to be attained by increasing the number of listeners ten-fold, not by reducing the cost of the orchestra, which is impossible in America at the present time. The number of listeners played to by the leading orchestras in the United States is only about 120,000 to 150,000 in a season. This total comprises not more than a tenth of the number of individuals who are potential orchestral enthusiasts. The Eastman Theatre Orchestra has already played in nine months to about 1,250,000 listeners; on several occasions to nearly 60,000 in one week—this number comprising more than a quarter of all the adults in the City of Rochester.

Another use of the Theatre is as a laboratory for the School of Music; the two are to be interchangeable as regards their use. In this way students who show sufficient talent will be offered opportunity, so often denied, for a public hearing. Among the future activities of the enterprise are performances in the Theatre each year by a visiting Opera Company, with which certain pupils are to be allowed to appear in the ballet and in minor rôles. Fortune Gallo, head of the San Carlo Opera Company, has already been in conference with Mr. Eastman concerning the practical consummation of this idea, and students in the ballet school and the opera department of the school will thus be given a chance to demonstrate publicly their fitness for an operatic career. The Metropolitan Opera Company, to the board of directors of which Mr. Eastman has recently been elected, is also likely to honour Rochester and the Eastman Theatre with an annual visit. The most recent addition to the School of Music curriculum is a department for the training of opera students, and the ultimate establishment of permanent opera organizations. This work is at present under the direction of Vladimir Rosing.

It is recognised that it will be years before this far-reaching scheme is in full operation, but many of its ramifications have this year taken coherent form. Those most deeply interested in its future are fully aware that success or failure is indissolubly intertwined with the choice of the right people to guide the destinies of the School and the Theatre. On the type of musicians connected with the enterprise depends the realisation of Mr. Eastman's plan, which is certainly without parallel in the history of music.

The Musician's Bookshelf

Music, Health, and Character. By Agnes Savill.

[London: John Lane, 7s. 6d.]

Mrs. Agnes Savill, described in Who's Who, as 'M.A., St. Andrews; M.D., Glasgow; M.R.C.P., Ireland; Physician to the London Skin Hospital, Member of the Council of the British Association for the advancement of Radiology and Physiotherapy,' &c., having previously published works upon X-Ray treatment, Vaccine treatment, and Electrical treatment, has suddenly appeared as the author of a very valuable book upon Musical treatment. In her Music, Health, and Character, she has chapters upon the 'Physical Effects' of music, and upon its 'Psychic Effects,' and her discussion of these subjects constitutes about the last third of her book. The previous two-thirds are taken up with a personal confession, and one of the highest value.

Dr. Savill was for long a music hater, and her conversion is but recent. 'It was not until the year before the war that there came the initiation into the beauty of pianoforte music; the power of the orchestra was not revealed to me till long after peace was declared.' This confession is made with a purpose:

It must be recorded because many an adult believes he or she is so unmusical by nature that it is useless to attempt to cultivate an interest in the subject. I was

(Continued on page 52.)

ANTHEM FOR GENERAL USE

Isaiah lv. 1, 3, 12

Music by HUGH BLAIR

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO. SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Larghetto. ♩ = 76

ORGAN

p Sw.

*Ped. 16 & 8 ft.
Sw. coupled*

SOLO TENOR OR SOPRANO

p

O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst - - eth, O

p cres.

come to the wa - ters, ev - 'ry one; in - cline your ear, and

mf

come . . to Me: . . hear, . . O hear, and your souls shall live.

mf p Ch.

Copyright, 1923, by Novello and Company, Limited

January 1, 1924

CHORUS

CHORUS

O come, ev - 'ry one that
O come, ev - 'ry one that
O come, ev - 'ry one that
O come, ev - 'ry one that

p Sic.
senza Ped. Ped.

thirst eth, O come to the wa - ters, ev - 'ry one; in thirst eth, O come to the wa - ters, ev - 'ry one; in thirst - - eth, O come to the wa - ters, ev - 'ry one; in thirst - - eth, O come to the wa - ters, ev - 'ry one; in

cres.
- cline your ear, and come . . . to Me, . . . in - cline your ear, and
- cline your ear, and come to Me, . . . in - cline your ear, and
- cline your ear, and come . . . to Me, . . . in - cline your ear, and
- cline your ear, and come . . . to Me, in - cline your ear, and come . . to Me, . . hear, . . and your souls shall live,

come . . to Me, . . hear, . . and your souls shall live.

come to Me, . . hear, . . and your souls shall live.

come . . to Me, . . hear, . . and your souls shall live.

f Gt. Sw. coupled. p Ch.

Gt. to Ped. in Gt. to Ped.

Solo
Con anima
mf Ye shall go out . . with joy, and be led forth with

Con anima
(Ch.)

mf Sw. Reed p

Ped. mf Ch. coupled.

cres. peace; . . the moun - tains and hills shall break forth be-fore you in - to

cres.

f sing - ing, shall break forth be-fore you in - to sing - ing, sing - ing, . .

mf

f Gt. both hands reduce Gt. mf Sw.

Gt. to Ped.

and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

mf Gt.
Ped.

CHORUS

Ye shall go out with joy, and be

f led forth with peace; the moun-tains and hills shall mp cres.

break forth be-fore you in - to sing - ing, and all the trees of the field . . shall clap their hands, . . shall clap their hands.

Solo p. rit.
O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst

p. Sw. rit.

Tempo 1mo.

eth,

O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst - eth, O come to the wa - ters,

O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst - eth, O come to the wa - ters,

O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst - eth, O come to the wa - ters,

O come, ev - 'ry one that thirst - eth, O come to the wa - ters,

Tempo 1mo.

p Sw. to Ped.

cres.

in - cline your ear, and come.. to Me.

mf

ev - 'ry one, in - cline your ear, and

mf

ev - 'ry one, in - cline your ear, and

mf

ev - 'ry one, in - cline your ear, and

mf

ev - 'ry one, in - cline your ear, and

p Ch. cres. mf Sw. to Ch. senza Ped. Ped.

hear, . . . and your souls shall live, . . .
 come . . . to Me, . . . hear, . . . and your souls shall live, . . .
 come to Me, hear, . . . and your souls shall live, . . .
 come . . . to Me, hear, and your souls shall live, . . .
 come to Me, hear, . . . and your souls shall live, . . .

pp hear, . . . and your souls, rit. your souls shall live. . . . f p
pp hear, . . . and your souls shall live. . . . rit. f p
pp hear, . . . and your souls shall live. . . . rit. f p
pp hear, . . . and your souls shall live. . . . rit. f p
pp hear, . . . and your souls shall live. . . . rit. f p

(Continued from page 44.)

one of those adults for so long that I begin to hope the majority of people in a similar position resemble me in that they have the sense of music lying dormant, not absent. There is a key which will unlock the door and allow the sleeping gift to awaken and develop. How to find the key is the problem in the individual case. If only one could persuade the unmusical that the door once opened leads to untold and undescribable joys, they would surely take some trouble to discover a method of entry.

The history of Dr. Savill's former determined 'unmusicality' is briefly this. She was brought up in a Scottish provincial home, where the sense of duty was inculcated by precept and punishment, and the sense of art received little recognition. She had pianoforte lessons, but 'teachers of music in those days seemed to regard it as a duty to instil only difficult and dull music.' The only music for which she cared, then, was that of the Scottish folk-songs:

Our father held that no music except that of the old Scotch songs was worth listening to; we agreed with him, and enjoyed a feeling of superiority over those who went to concerts.

That feeling of 'superiority' lasted thirty years, and in 1913, Dr. Savill, in passing Queen's Hall, on the way to Harley Street, would smile pityingly as she saw the audience assembling or departing, and agree with a companion that 'those who attend concert-halls belong to a degenerate class.' Whatever class they belong to, it is one of which she is now a member, for Queen's Hall has become one of her haunts.

The stages of conversion have been, roughly, this: (a) One visit each, during six years of University life, to play, concert, and opera—no result. 'Left to myself, I should never again willingly have read of music or listened to it'; (b) Marriage to a husband who, although preoccupied with scientific research, yet realised the joy of music, and consequent recognition of the fact that 'there was something lacking in me, that some unknown sense required development'; (c) A pathetically early widowhood and a cessation of this influence; (d) An interest in the dancing of Maud Allan, and, through it, in the music to which it was set; (e) Purchase of a player-piano, upon which the Maud Allan music could be played; (f) Attempts to appreciate the 1913 Russian Opera and Ballet performances—with failure; (g) Attendance at a Busoni recital, with interest in a skilfully-written programme-book, and through this in the twenty-four Etudes of Chopin; (h) Return home to many evenings spent in trying to reproduce the Busoni rendering on the player-piano; (i) An enthusiasm for Pachmann; (k) A decision to try whether orchestral music also had attractions; Beethoven's V., VII., VIII., and IX. found to be comparatively unmoving; (l) Tchaikovsky's Pathetic does the trick! (m) Gradually Tchaikovsky diminishes in attraction, whilst Beethoven steadily gains.

There the catalogue must end, so far as this review is concerned, but it is very incomplete, for much remained to be done, all of which is closely recorded in the book. Note that in the later stages of initiation, as in the earlier, the player-piano was the medium by which intimate understanding was achieved.

This is a day when the bounds of musical appreciation are rapidly widening. The circle of music-lovers grows apace. But there are still many to whom music is an unknown kingdom, as for so many years it was to Dr. Savill. Every page of this book is interesting, not least so the pages given to consideration of the subject indicated by the title. But that title is nevertheless rather unhappy. It suggests a dull seriousness, and gives no hint of the personal intimacy of the book. A title already appropriated by another author would have suited this one; in general scope, the first part of her book much resembles Mr. Rorke's A Musical Pilgrim's Progress. We cannot have too many confidential accounts of personal musical growth. They are instructive documents to all who are engaged (as every professional musician should be) in the attempt to make music of greater service to a bigger proportion of the country's population. P. A. S.

Gramophone Nights. By Archibald Marshall and Compton Mackenzie.

[Heinemann, 5s.]

Up-to-Date Gramophone Tips. By Capt. H. T. Barnett.

[The Author, 12, Whittington Chambers, King's Road, Southsea, 1s.]

The first of these books contains thirty-one programmes, each author compiling half. An inevitable drawback to the plan is that only gramophonists with a comprehensive stock of records can carry out even a part of the scheme. Still, the book is useful in drawing attention to a very large number of records that should be in the library of all to whom the gramophone is more than a toy or a jazz-purveyor. The book is written in entertaining style, and contains a good deal of useful information on such matters as needles, sound-boxes, &c., in addition to more or less helpful comments on the chosen records.

Capt. Barnett's book is concerned mainly with the technical and mechanical side of the gramophone, and all who delight in experimenting with various makes of needle and sound-box will be in clover. The author gives much good advice on the care of machine and records, and writes throughout like a practical enthusiast. A testimony to the value of this little book is the fact that this is a reprint, with additions, last year's edition of three thousand having gone, evidently like hot cakes.

'DISCUS.'

Monographien zur Russischen Musik. Vol. I. By Oskar von Riesemann.

[Munich: Drei Masken Verlag, 1923.]

This first volume contains four monographs devoted to Russian music before Glinka, Serof, and Dargomijsky, all of them substantial, accurate, and readable.

The writer has used the available sources of information—memoirs, published correspondence, and other histories—to excellent purpose; and his compilation is rendered all the more useful by the fact that Russian sources are not easily accessible. Nor are all writers on the same topics as thorough and as judicious as he is. The book is purely historical; it contains no attempt to characterise, describe, or appraise the music of the composers referred to. M.-D. C.

Claude Debussy. By Ladislaus Fabian.

[Munich: Drei Masken Verlag, 1923.]

An excellent little book. Dr. Fabian is one of the very few critics of whom it cannot be said that when confronting Debussy's music they cannot see the wood for the trees. He goes straight to the point in the matter of Debussy's idiosyncrasies of style and technique, and further in the matter of his evolution. Debussy, he tells us, broke with 'impressionism' at the time when he wrote La Mer and Iberia; the works of the later period are conceived and carried out in a spirit of neo-classicism, and represent organization after conquest:

Debussy was no mere incomplete genius. His work embodies a constant progress and shows ever-increasing mastery. His inspiration, during the last years of his life, blossomed more vigorously than ever. He was not only a pioneer, but an artist who achieved his ideals in the fullness of variety. He was no specialist; his output comprises great and lasting works in all orders of music.

Dr. Fabian's remarks on the absurd readings of Debussy's music which so often pass muster are as well worth reading as his remarks on the music itself. M.-D. C.

BOOKS FOR THE ORGANIST

A number of books dealing specially with the work of the organist and choirmaster call for notice, and must be dealt with briefly. One of the most important happens also to be one of the smallest—The Choir-boy in the Making, by Charles H. Moody (now 'Dr.' Moody, we are glad to be able to add). The value of this admirable treatise lies in the fact that it is written by one who has long since shown conclusively that first-rate results are to be got from the material that is at hand in the average town. Too often choirmasters take the view—natural, but mistaken and discouraging—that in order to make a good choir we must have picked boys, a choir school, and other costly paraphernalia. Yet there are not wanting cases to show that even with all these advantages the result is sometimes poor. The vital factor is not the picked material or the thousand-a-year choir school, but the trainer with tact and gumption. Here is a book by such a trainer, and it deserves to be carefully studied far and wide (Humphrey Milford, 2s. 6d.).

In John Newton's A few Thoughts on Hymns and Tunes (The Author, Christchurch, Hants, 1s.) are sound views badly expressed. Mr. Newton should get a literary friend to overhaul his construction and punctuation.

John Matthews is already well-known as a writer on the structural side of the organ. He has just published a capital little book, The Organ Described, in which he gives in simple language and condensed style an account of the early history and present condition of the instrument (Musical Opinion Office, 2s. 6d.).

James T. Lightwood's Hymn-Tunes and their Story has long been a popular book—it first appeared in 1905. The author has now issued a new and revised edition (Epworth Press, 6s.). Space allows us to discuss only a few points. Mr. Lightwood gives a version of Luther's Hymn set to 'Great God, what do I see and hear?' as arranged by Baumgarten about a century ago for solo voice and trumpet obbligato—futile calls, ta-ra-ra-ta-ra-ra between the lines. (By the way, the alto and tenor are missing at the end of the second line as printed in the book.) Mr. Lightwood will be interested to hear of a version by T. D. Thomas with a trumpet part exactly the same as Baumgarten's. It appeared in Sacred Harmony, a book published at Winchester, compiled and arranged by Thomas, a lay-clerk at Winchester Cathedral. The book is not dated, but a clue is provided by the fact of Thomas having been appointed in 1804.

Has Mr. Lightwood got the right version of Angels on page 58? It does not agree with that of the E. H., which is supposed to be the original form. Mendelssohn uses Aus tiefer Noth in the first, not the second, movement of his third Sonata. Among the many curiosities quoted by Mr. Lightwood nothing is better than J. B. Sale's (1837) combination of Beethoven's Romance in G and a phrase from the Hallelujah Chorus for use as an Easter hymn. How many know that St. Helena (A. & M., 395) is really St. Ephraim (E. H., 196), changed from long metre into short and robbed of its passing-notes—and of most of its life, too. See both tunes side by side in this book, and take off your hat to the A. & M. 'reformer,' who made the old tune behave itself. I wish Mr. Lightwood, when preparing this new edition, had added a chapter, so that he could have brought into the scope of the work the 1910 A. & M., the E. H., and other recent collections of note. Moreover, much of our old hymn-music that was neglected in 1905 has been restored to favour. During the past dozen years, for example, we have seen something like justice done to S. S. Wesley as a writer of hymn-tunes. However, there can never be any finality in matters of this sort, so we must be grateful for what Mr. Lightwood has given us—an enthusiastic, well-written, informative book on a fascinating subject.

A third edition of The Simple Psalter and Canticles, pointed for Ancient Tones, by the Rev. H. Kynaston Hudson and B. Vine Westbrook, has just been issued (Faith Press, 1s.)—a very cheap and handy book. The Table of Proper Psalms from the 1917 Report to Convocation has been added. It is a pity to continue the old method of printing in heavy capitals the syllable following the recitation, but no doubt the question of cost prohibits a change. And, after all, experience shows that a good choir will chant well in spite of typographical eccentricities, whereas with a badly-taught one the boot is on the other leg.

Now that congregational singing is being taken up systematically, there is room for a manual on the subject. Such a book comes from the Faith Press (1s. 6d.), in George T. Fleming's The Music of the Congregation. There are some points on which most of us will not see eye to eye with the author. In discussing the relative merits of plainsong and Anglican chants in regard to flexibility, he seems to overlook the fact that the fixed harmony of the latter makes it difficult—sometimes impossible—to adapt in the case of very short verses. He says the plainsong tones are monotonous because the reciting note is the same in both halves of the verse. This may be so (though I have never been conscious of it), but the monotony is nothing compared with that induced by the constant full closes of the Anglican chant. The reciting note may be saved from monotony by the rhythmic variety of the text concerned, but nothing can redeem a string of conventional cadences. Mr. Fleming exaggerates the difficulty of free-rhythm hymn-tunes. The average member of a congregation has little trouble in mastering the syncopation of a fox-trot or popular song. Why under-rate the intelligence, as well as the taste, of a congregation? Mr. Fleming, on page 32, speaks of 'a dominant minor seventh,' when it is clear that he means a tonic seventh, and he uses the term elsewhere when he appears to mean a dominant seventh. What is 'a dominant minor seventh,' anyway? He puts in a plea for an organ interlude between the verses of a hymn, and even goes so far as to say a good word for the old custom of inserting a few bars of organ music between the lines of slow tunes. I don't know whether Mr. Fleming has ever seen in print examples of the 'twiddle-bits' that were used in this way, here and in Germany. I have several old hymn-books in which they appear. Mr. Fleming doubts whether the revival of the practice 'would find acceptance with English congregations.' There need be no doubt; it wouldn't. Speaking of varied harmonies to hymn-tunes, Mr. Fleming pleads for discretion. 'It must be remembered,' he says, 'that most congregations include a certain number of members who like to sing one or other of the lower parts, and the varying of the harmonies tends to inconvenience these singers.' But if these members cannot take their cue from choir and organ, and sing an occasional verse in unison, they deserve all the inconvenience they get. In the matter of starting a hymn, Mr. Fleming suggests that after the playing-over, 'the organist must allow the congregation ample time to rise and make a firm start well together.' I fancy the experience of most organists is that an indefinite wait after the playing-over is the way to ensure anything but a firm start. Far better instruct the choir to take breath immediately the last chord of the playing-over ceases, and then go ahead. A congregation will soon realise that it has to be up and doing, whereas, no matter how 'ample' the time the organist allows them, there will always be some laggards. In a service where there is no conductor, nothing is more irritating and fatal to good attack than vague waits between verses, or after introductions of any kind. Nor can I admit that there is anything to be said in favour of a preliminary treble note on the organ, though Mr. Fleming says 'it is often necessary in the accompaniment of a congregation.' Never! It has seemed worth while to discuss the above points because, as the first book on the subject, this work will attract, as it deserves, a good deal of attention. It contains much that is excellent, but on the debit side must be set a good many statements and suggestions that seem to point to some lack of experience and musicianship on the part of the author.

In a multitude of counsellors there ought to be wisdom. Everything depends on the choice of counsellors. A Manual of English Church Music, edited by Archdeacon Gardner and Sydney H. Nicholson (S.P.C.K., 10s. 6d.), employs a large number whose names guarantee the wisdom that comes with long and wide experience—Dr. Fellowes, E. T. Cook, H. C. Colles, Dr. Bairstow, the late Sir J. D. McClure, Francis Burgess, Dr. Dearmer, Dr. Macpherson, Basil Johnson, Dr. Frere, &c., &c. The book covers all the ground, from organ loft to choir stalls, the Cathedral system, the Public School Chapel service, Music in the Mission Field, the Organ from an Architectural Point of View (a valuable chapter by Sir C. A. Nicholson), Carols, Cantatas, Processions, Choral Festivals, Orchestral Accompaniments—in fact, we look in vain for the omission of any important subject. Well edited, practical, and simple in style, it is a book for all parsons, organists, and choirmasters, as well as for keen laymen. H. G.

From the Drei Masken Verlag, of Munich (English agents, Le Livre Français, 20, Brompton Road, S.W.7.), come further examples of their facsimile reproductions of composers' manuscripts—the Siegfried Idyll, Beethoven's Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp, Brahms's Four Serious Songs, and the Meistersinger Overture. It is impossible to over-praise these wonderful reproductions. One seems almost to be looking over the composer's shoulder and watching his pen at work. Perhaps the chief marvel is the beauty and neatness of Wagner's manuscript. Here indeed was a genius for taking pains! Bach, Brahms, and Beethoven wrote like men with an eye on the clock, but Wagner would seem to have had ample time, and to have enjoyed the task that most composers hate above all others. H. G.

Every musician's bookshelf should find a corner for Arthur and E. Ewart Fieldhouse's Income Tax Simplified (the Authors, Trinity Street, Huddersfield, and Simpkin, Marshall & Co., 1s. 6d.). It shows him how to prepare the return for assessment, and tells him how to obtain repayment of tax, besides giving him a lot of useful information in regard to death duties, land tax, corporation profits tax, &c.

BOOKS RECEIVED

[Mention in this column neither implies nor precludes review in a future issue.]

A Student's Hymnal. Edited by Sir Walford Davies. Oxford Press.

Byzantine Music and Hymnography. By H. J. W. Tillyard. The Faith Press. 4s. 6d.

Saint-Saëns. By George Servièrès. Schubert. By Th. Gérold. Librairie Félix Alcan, 108, Boulevard Saint-Germain, vie., Paris. 7.50 fr. each.

Handbuch der Orgelliteratur ein Wegweiser für organisten. By Franz Sauer. Wiener Philharmonischer Verlag.

Sussex Church Music in the Past. By K. H. Macdermott, Rector of Selsey. Second edition. The Author. 5s. 6d.

Favourite Musical Performers. By Sydney Grew. Foulis. 6s.

New Music

EASY PIANOFORTE MUSIC

For beginners M. E. Marshall's Melodious Pianoforte Duets for Teacher and Pupil (Bosworth) will be found useful. They do not go beyond the five-finger position, and are graded in four groups increasing in difficulty. They are published in two books.

F. J. Lift's Joy's of Youth (Bosworth)—a set of ten easy pieces in the compass of five notes—will interest young people just out of the preliminary stage. They are well varied in style, the left hand is not neglected, and they provide good practice in rhythm and phrasing.

The same composer's Musical Pastime (Bosworth) consists of five easy pieces of rather greater difficulty. They are mostly in dance form, and would doubtless be regarded by many youngsters—particularly, perhaps, the average schoolboy—as a welcome change from more severe fare.

Edgar L. Bainton's The White Pathway (Elkin) is a collection of three easy pieces which may be recommended. They are well written, and might usefully be given to pupils of about elementary standard.

Little Sea Pictures, by Nicolas d'Averil (Elkin), are admirable. They consist of twelve five-finger pieces, and are more difficult than the five-finger pieces referred to above. The composer is considerably more enterprising in the matter of keys than is usual in music of this type. Two pieces bear the signature of four flats, one is in C sharp major, and accidentals are freely introduced in the later numbers.

The third book of E. Newton's Theory of Music Copy Books (Paxton) exercises the student in the writing of triads and inversions, simple progressions in four-part harmony as far as the dominant seventh and its inversions, musical abbreviations, transposition, modulation, &c. G. G.

ORGAN MUSIC

Of unusual variety and interest is a set of Twenty Short and Easy Pieces (Novello). It contains works by Bach (the early and beautiful Prelude on Erbarm' Dich mein), Blair, Best, Gray, Handel, Mozart (an arrangement of the well-known Ave Verum), Stanford (Intermezzo on the Londonderry Air), Rheinberger (Prelude in C and Monologue No. 9), Schumann (the first of the Four Sketches and a transcription of the charming Chanson Orientale), S. S. Wesley, Merkel, West (an expressive Lament), Wolstenholme, Dubois, &c. The collection should be no less popular than the four preceding albums.

Lucien Mawet is a composer new to most English players. He is organist at St. Jacques, Liège, and professor at the Conservatoire of that city. Judging from his Collection of Pieces for Organ and Harmonium (Hérelle, Fortemps, Paris; Novello), he is a composer with high ideals. There are thirty-six pieces in the book, and all are based on ecclesiastical themes, many of them plainsong. Some are for manuals only, but the majority call for pedals, so the set is one for the organist rather than the harmoniumist. As a whole they demand, too, considerable technical skill, though few are very difficult. The music is contrapuntal in style, and not slavishly modal. In a few cases—e.g., the group of Pieces in Free Style—M. Mawet shows the true French feeling for piquant harmony. A drawback from the English point of view is the frequent use of two staves in cases where the pedal is obligatory. Organists on this side of the Channel like the pedal on a separate staff. Moreover, a composer who limits himself to two staves and attempts to lay out his music so that a harmonium player can at a pinch manage the whole thing, almost invariably ends by getting his texture all top and bottom; the real bass is either too far away from the rest of the harmony or is in octaves. These drawbacks apart, I have very much enjoyed playing these pieces.

Several numbers in the Steingraber Edition have been received (Steingraber, Leipzig; Bosworth). A Fugue in E minor by Pachelbel, edited by Kurt Erbe, has little beyond antiquarian interest. Pachelbel did far better work as a choral prelude writer. Three works by Alfred Grundmann are of greater value than most organ music received from Germany during the past few years. Aus grosser, ernster Zeit is a set of eleven choral preludes, well written rather than original. We miss the glow that Karg Elert's Choral Improvisations have led us to look for; on the other hand, there is none of the turgidity that Reger could rarely keep out of his choral preludes, even the simplest. Grundmann's Three Preludes in Fugal Form are well-made, sturdy stuff, with no surprises and no subtleties. His Three Pastorales on Christmas Carols—In dulci jubilo, Vom Himmel hoch, and Quem pastores laudavere—are more immediately attractive, especially the first two. The third is too much like an ordinary vigorous postlude. It has an industrious pedal part, and is the only one that will give an average player much trouble.

Thomas Wood's Fantasy in A, The Hill Country (Stainer & Bell), strikes me as being too consistently discordant in an uncouth way, and the numerous short cuts from one remote key to another are not convincing. For example, on page 7 six consecutive bars open with a six-four in B flat, A, C, A flat, E, and D flat respectively, and the same thing is done a little later. A couple of plunges of the sort are enough at a time; to make six is to overwork a device that is nowadays fairly obvious. A good deal of Dr. Wood's dissonant harmony could be scored effectively for the orchestra, but the organ, with its unyielding tone, makes much of it seem crude. In fairness, I ought to add that I am judging merely from the copy and the pianoforte. Perhaps if I heard the work played on the organ by Dr. Ley (to whom it is dedicated) I might be converted.

A. T. Lee Ashton's Scherzo-Fantasia in D minor (Stainer & Bell) is straightforward and animated—an attractive piece for recital purposes, though by the time the player has got it up to the right slickness he will probably be tired of the over-used main theme.

Arthur M. Goodhart's Sympathy (Augener) is an emotional—even sentimental—little piece with a clarinet solo that in style suggests the genuine instrument rather than the organ-stop of that name. Players who have a good specimen (enclosed, of course) will be able to show it off to great advantage in this piece. H. G.

NEW AMERICAN PUBLICATIONS

To command success is not within anyone's power, but it is certain that American music-lovers are doing much to deserve it. They support generously opera and concerts; they have endowed their orchestras; native composers have the support of a Society whose publications as regards neatness of appearance and clearness of print are equal to the best that we can do in Europe. Sooner or later no doubt these efforts are bound to meet with the reward they so richly deserve. In the meantime, while applauding their enterprise, we can only mark each step of the Gradus ad Parnassum. The latest publications of Messrs. G. Schirmer, of New York (for the Society for the Publication of American Music), consist of the score (1.50 dollars) and parts (2.50 dollars) of a Quartet by L. M. Loeffler, of three pieces for flute, harp, and string instruments by Daniel Gregory Mason, and of a Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello by William Clifford Heilman. Although naturally differing in some ways (Mr. Mason's work is more modern in texture than Mr. Heilman's and less artificial than Mr. Loeffler's), these compositions have certain qualities in common. They are the work of men who know their mind (and their work) but too well—who, having hitched their wagon to a certain star, do not intend to stray very far from it. To the casual observer such music might appear shallow and superficial. And undoubtedly if we are to insist on depth and originality of expression it will be found wanting. But we are apt just now to appraise originality and depth perhaps at more than their real value. Certainly here exist composers who base their claims to consideration on the simple fact that they do not hesitate to do what no one thought worth while doing before. Great music has been written also for the modest purpose of giving pleasure to a few friends, by men who had no thought of immortality. And considered from a more modest and also more generous point of view this American music reveals some pleasing features. If it does not evoke deep emotion, the ingenuity of its even course will interest both performers and listeners.

F. B.

Occasional Notes

On January 1 the firm of Messrs. Elkin & Co. comes of age, having been founded twenty-one years ago. During that time the house has played no small part in the development of British music of the best class, having brought forward many admirable works by Elgar, Cyril Scott, Bantock, Quilter, Baines, &c. It has also to its credit a very large share in the popularity of MacDowell, not only in this country but throughout the world. A publishing business so securely built up on a combination of good taste and sound methods is something more than a mere commercial affair: it is an asset to the artistic life of the community, and our readers, we are sure, will join us in congratulations and good wishes to Mr. and Mrs. W. W. A. Elkin and their son, Mr. Robert S. Elkin.

In Dr. Agnes Savill's Music, Health, and Character (a review of which appears on page 44) occurs a paragraph that cries out for comment. Speaking of the concert-notices that appear in the daily press (and which strike her as inadequate), she says:

There may be journals, reserved exclusively for musical news, which do more justice to these events. I do not know them, and certainly they can take no place in the reading of the general public whose support is so desired and so necessary for the success of music in Britain.

Let us enlighten Dr. Savill. There are journals reserved exclusively for musical news, though they necessarily concern themselves with so many other things besides concert-notices that they cannot perhaps claim to do more justice to those events than do the daily papers. But they exist, and they certainly do take a place in the reading of a good many thousands of the general public. Dr. Savill may be surprised to hear that in this country there is one musical weekly, one fortnightly, ten monthlies, and two quarterlies. In addition, there are two American weeklies, one monthly, and one quarterly, that are easily obtainable, and that, we believe, have a considerable circulation on this side.

Now suppose Dr. Savill had been suddenly converted to the drama, pictorial art, or literature, as her book tells us she was converted to music. Is it conceivable that she would have made no effort to discover what journals, if any, were devoted to those arts? It is not. The more we read her enthusiastic book the more we are astonished that she somehow managed to dodge every one of these eighteen journals. We intend to send her a copy of this issue of the Musical Times, and we suggest to our fellow-editors that they join us in showing the Doctor what a lot of us there are, and how much she has missed all these years.

We are asked to draw attention to the fact that in connection with the Olympic Games to be held at Paris next year, there will be a contest open to composers of the nations represented in the Games. The works submitted must be unpublished, and may be in practically any form and for any medium. They must, however, deal with some aspect of sport, and no work must take more than an hour in performance. Manuscripts must be received at the Offices of the French Olympic Committee not later than February 1, 1924. Orchestral works should be sent also in a pianoforte arrangement (two-handed or four-handed). If the work submitted be a song, a French translation of the text must also be sent. All indications of tempo, &c., must be in Italian. There seems to be no rule as to anonymity; the regulations merely state that composers must send name in full, nationality, and address. An international jury (quaintly described in the regulations as 'of artistic and sportive personalities'), with a majority of musical composers, will act as judges. The three prizes consist of Olympic medals and diplomas. Readers who wish for fuller particulars should write to the Executive Committee for the book of regulations, 30, Rue de Grammont, Paris.

We note that the 'Jury of Music' consists of over forty well-known European composers, conductors, &c., with Widor as president. The only English name in the list is that of Mr. Cyril Scott. How is it that these alleged international affairs somehow manage to give this country a large portion of cold shoulder? . . .

Except when money is wanted.

It is high time the compilers of the Daily Mail Year-Book took some expert advice about the biographical section of that work. We should naturally complain if music and musicians were excluded, but on the whole that course would be better than the half-baked method that has so far obtained. The Year-Book for 1924, under its heading 'People of To-day,' makes a considerable flourish about giving a 'Thousand Biographies of Men and Women of Our Time.' But it treats music very casually, and so far as we can see (after a pretty thorough examination) the musical side of the 1924 edition consists of last year's biographies brought up-to-date by the simple expedient of adding one year to the ages of the subjects. The result is sometimes curious. Richard Strauss, for example, is spoken of in 1924, as in 1923 (and probably in 1900), as 'the most discussed musician of the day'—which is manifest nonsense. Nor is it true to say that 'By some his work is looked upon as "the music of the future," others seeing in it cacophony and noise.' A good deal has happened since the days when folk regarded Strauss's music as being of the future, and a canvass to-day would probably lead to a substitution of the word 'past.' We look in vain for such names as Bax, Vaughan Williams, Ireland, Goossens, Frank Bridge, Holst, Bliss, Stravinsky, Bartók, Pizzetti, Ravel, or any other of the dozen or so composers whose music really is being discussed to-day. It is a poor recompense to read instead that Dame Clara Butt 'started on another long tour, September, 1923,' or that Tetrizzini 'published her autobiography, 1921.' Incidentally we wonder why space is found for a note on the retired organist of Westminster Abbey, when none can be spared for his successor or for the organist of St. Paul's Cathedral.

A section is devoted to the 'Drama in 1923,' to cricket and other sports during the past year, as is right, but there is nothing about music in 1923. Stay! A further search brings to light one tiny reference, which, however, happens to be out of its place. In Mr. S. R. Littlewood's pages on 'The Year's Drama' we find this: 'In opera, Mr. Gustav Holst's The Perfect Fool, produced by the British National Opera Company (Covent Garden, May, 1914), was the chief event, but appealed doubtfully.' As a fact there was abundant material in the B.N.O.C. efforts alone for an article on 'Opera in 1923,' instead of this poked-away reference in a corner of an article written not by a music critic. We suggest that before the Daily Mail gets to work on its 1925 Year-Book it should call in the aid of its excellent music critic, and so make the work as good on the musical side as it is on such matters as sport, politics, the Bolshevik Navy, the Trade Union slump, Peeresses in their Own Right, the Chiltern Hundreds, and the Defeat of Joe Beckett.

One or two developments in the educational side of music ought to be recorded. Elsewhere in this issue will be seen reference to the performances of Bach's B minor Mass and Christmas Oratorio, at Oundle and Mill Hill Schools respectively, and to an orchestral concert given at Aberdeen to 2,500 school children. Similar concerts have been given with like success at Edinburgh and Bradford. In London, children's concerts have for some time been well established, but a new direction was taken on December 15, when, at Central Hall, the Philharmonic Choir sang the B minor Mass to 2,500 children drawn from Secondary schools. We hear that the Choir hopes to give a similar concert at the end of the next school term, when it will sing, among other works, Holst's Hymn of Jesus. There is surely no musical activity of the present day more full of encouragement for the future than such efforts as these. The splendid work now done in schools of all kinds, and the steady growth and wide appeal of the Competition Festival movement, leave the pessimists without a leg to stand on.

The record for attendance at The Beggar's Opera is even higher than we thought, one patron having been present over three hundred times. Some wealthy amateur? No; a pianoforte tuner. How many professionals who merely play the pianoforte can afford to be so lavish as this lucky man who tunes it?

We read in the Musical Courier of 'The English Trio, comprising Messrs. Melzak, Manucci, and Krish.' The old country's stock is rising! A few years ago musicians bearing such typical, good old English names as these would not have flaunted their nationality in this reckless way.

Von Bulow's crusher on tenors has now a worthy companion. Mr. Deems Taylor, an American critic, has just told his readers that Fleta 'has a tenor but pleasing voice.'

The Title-page and Contents of Volume 64 (January to December, 1923) of the Musical Times will be ready shortly. Subscribers can obtain it post free on application to the Publishers.

Competition Festival Record

AN AUSTRALIAN CHORAL COMPETITION

BY W. G. WHITTAKER

Ballarat, Victoria, is well known as a once-famous gold-mining region. It is now renowned for three things. One is the variability of its climate, which staggers even an Englishman. Another is that owing to numerous bequests it has the finest collection of statuary in Australia: it is a great pleasure to visit its fine gardens and noble lake, and to see the many splendid pieces of sculpture. The third is the renowned South Street Eisteddfod. This runs for five weeks. Its length is partially due to the fact that only one session exists at a time; most large British festivals need to have three or four running simultaneously to keep the proportions within bounds. An analysis of the guide-book shows that there is a larger proportion of non-musical classes than is usual with us. Fifty-four classes are occupied with music other than brass. There are eight brass band and an equal number of brass solo competitions. There are six bagpipe and one drum and bugle band sections. Folk-dancing—English, Scottish, Irish—account for ten; elocution and reading (including 'humorous recital,' 'musical monologue,' 'story without words,' 'twelve original tongue-twisters'), sixty-seven; and calisthenics and gymnastic displays, twenty-three.

I was fortunate enough to be present at the 'Champion Choral Contest,' which is considered the principal event of this sort in Australasia. We in the Old Country reserve the term 'champion' (speaking musically) for brass bands. Here it is applied to everything. A singer will advertise as 'champion soloist.'

The audience was fascinating. Six thousand people assembled in a large hall built by the committee. Considering that Ballarat numbers only thirty-five thousand inhabitants, this is remarkable. The attitude of the great crowd was vastly different from that at similar gatherings at home. The Australian is a contented, happy person under most circumstances, an ideal holiday-maker, well-satisfied with himself, his country, and his amusements. A keen observer said to me, 'For a picture of perfect enjoyment, give me an Aussie with his best girl and a bag of peanuts at the cinema.' And this crowd sat through the enormously long session with evident enjoyment, and without a sign of disapproval at the unduly-protracted proceedings. Sessions have been known to last until 1 a.m., with the audience unwearied and attentive. Then, again, the Aussie is a born sportsman and gambler. The open-air life, the free-and-easy manner of living, and the quick rise and fall of fortunes, probably depending upon a chance shower of rain or an unusually long drought, all contribute to this national characteristic. Race-meetings exist everywhere, and with a frequency which surprises the visitor. The chief topics of conversation in the train are the weather, the crops, and horse-racing. Men will wager as to which of two flies rises earlier from the table, or which of two drops of rain reaches the bottom of the window-pane before the other. This sporting instinct showed itself markedly during the competition. One sweet child, scarcely in her teens, asked my fellow-examiner, Mr. Percival Driver, and myself, if we would like a copy of 'the list of the choirs in the order in which they run.' The excitement at the announcement of the decision was tremendous. Roaring, waving of hats and handkerchiefs, and swaying of bodies, revealed the tenseness of feeling. It was all the more so that the win was a popular one. For five successive years conductor and choir had been placed second, and had shown fine spirit in defeat. This cheery tenacity appealed to the sport-loving crowd. Probably there was also a cause for pride in the fact that the conductor, who carried off the Prince of Wales's cup, was an amateur, a milkman by trade.

Each of the six choirs had to present three numbers—unaccompanied pieces by Bantock and Jenkins, and the impossibly-dull final chorus from Mendelssohn's Lobgesang, made still more intolerable by being accompanied on a badly-tuned upright pianoforte, utterly inadequate for the needs of the great building. Four of the choirs I had had the privilege of conducting in combined rehearsals and performance at Melbourne some time previously, and I had been delighted with their fine voices, their alertness, and their keen responsiveness. The climate seems to produce splendidly rich sopranos and contraltos, but unfortunately leaves tenors and basses unaltered. This handicaps choirs from the start, and all six suffered from lack of power in the bass line. No choir sang all three tests with anything like an equal degree of excellence; the standard varied greatly from piece to piece. Only one conductor managed to make the Mendelssohn work sound at all interesting, and his reading was condemned by the adjudicator. To my friend and myself the debarred interpretation was 'grateful and comforting.' Although the competition did not reveal any really superlatively fine singing the general level was high, and there were many moments when we were lifted above the merely sound and good. It certainly promised well for the development of choral singing in the Commonwealth. It must be remembered that difficulties exist that we wot not of in the Old Country. Towns lie far apart, railway travelling is slow. Some of the choirs came distances which would be represented by a journey from Land's End to John o' Groats by slow train. All honour to their enthusiasm!

My many Australian friends will pardon me for saying (for they have whispered the same thing in my ear in strict confidence) that the average Aussie has a difficulty in seeing things in correct proportion. Separated by huge distances from the centre of the world's activity, with a magnificent country, boundless possibilities, a nation and a civilization created by the enterprise of little more than a century, without traditions, without a heritage of things ancient, he is apt to assume that little of worth exists outside of Australia. It is a pardonable and virtue-like failing. It is patriotism rather than pride. This was exhibited in a speech by a young Ballarat musician just returned from a long sojourn in Europe. He told the audience that the tone of the best choirs in England and Germany was inferior to that of that evening. Newspapers came out with head-lines about London and Berlin being second-place. We cannot help regretting this habit; when art becomes self-satisfied it withers and dies. One priceless stimulus in the Old Country is the knowledge that if progress is not made continually the sceptre will pass from our hands to those of our neighbours.

One surprising feature was the amount of time spent over the competition. The adjudicator kept each choir standing five or six minutes before ringing on the next number, and generally ten minutes elapsed before the new choir was signalled into the arena. To any experienced adjudicator these long breathing spaces seemed quite unnecessary—decisions were not difficult to make. To us the issues seemed clear enough. We cannot imagine how long the crowded festivals of the Motherland would last were this leisurely procedure adopted. Certainly the audience would become impatient or vanish altogether. The singing and intervals lasted from 7.30 until after 11.0, and adjudications were not completed until after 11.30. Even then there was no detailed comment. That was reserved for the press.

One serious need of the South Street Eisteddfod is a higher standard of music. Numbers by Scarlatti, Chopin, Liszt, Brahms, and John Ireland, are counter-balanced by pianoforte pieces by Chaminade, Zilcher, and Gurliitt, and by dreadful shop-ballads by names too puerile to mention. Thanks to the splendid children's music being produced by British composers to-day, there is no need to seek material in obscure Continental writers. With all the wealth of modern British song, there is no occasion to perpetuate the insipid inanities by caterers to the worst popular taste. Moreover, there are too many classes in which the selection is left to the competitor. The requirements of one class were 'oratorio or operatic selection and a ballad,' and of another, 'ballad.' Not only is any standard of judgment impossible in such cases, but the most important duty of an Eisteddfod—that of cultivation of taste of competitors and audience—is not being fulfilled.

The Australian is ready for the right lead in music. The audience was keenly alive to the merits of the best performances; at the hotel we found that most of the visitors, commercials and the like, had been in the audience, and were ready to discuss the event enthusiastically. On examining visits to small country places we found many more people interested than would be the case in an English market-town. The possibilities are great. This splendid Festival should see that its choice of music is immaculate. It can do untold good.

One point of unconscious humour in conclusion—not actually musical, but indirectly connected with the subject. The guide-book contained an advertisement of the City Tramways, giving particulars of points of interest for visitors. The first route called attention to the Municipal Abattoirs and—the Hospital for the Insane!

THE ADOLESCENT SINGER

I have just read with great interest a verbatim report of the Annual Conference of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals (which, by the way, really ought to lie awake o' nights and worry out a shorter handle). In the December Musical Times Mr. Harry Cooper discussed one or two of the points raised, concerning himself specially with the question of money prizes.

The chief debate, however, had to do with the singing of young girls, and the subject is so important that no one who has had much experience of festival work ought to be backward in expressing his views. The discussion at the Conference could of course lead to no action, because the Federation has no power to prohibit classes for young girl soloists. Nor was the debate conclusive. On one side were authoritative voices saying that singing during the adolescent period was bad for both voice and singer, and on the other side were speakers with no less authority holding that it was not bad, but even good. The subject was opened by Dr. Somervell, who brought forward the motion:

'That owing to the damage often done to the voices of adolescent girls by too early specialising in solo work, this Conference of the British Federation of Musical Competition Festivals is of the opinion that solo classes for girls between the ages of fourteen and eighteen should be discouraged.'

Dr. Somervell had strong support from Mr. Plunket Greene, and against him were Mr. Robertson, Mr. W. S. Nesbitt, Mr. R. H. Wilson, and Mr. Granville Humphries. Sir Walford Davies was evidently torn between his desire to sympathise with what he called the 'paternal care' of Mr. Plunket Greene, and his feeling that Mr. Robertson was right in his view that as young girls will sing it is important that as many as possible shall come under the influence of the festivals and be helped to sing aright. Sir Walford suggested a way out, viz.; the appointment of a small committee to consider the matter fully; but as it soon became evident that the feeling of the Conference was in favour of a vote on the subject, he put one leg over the fence on the Robertson side:

'If I had to vote at this minute [he said], I should plump for keeping the girls singing continuously, with the proviso that the test-pieces should be suitably chosen, and another proviso which Mr. Edward Lloyd gave me when I was blamed for being about to ruin a boy's voice. I wrote to him, and he said, "Let the boy sing as often and when he likes, but he is never to sing unless he wants to, or if he feels a strain."'

Finally the Conference, with two dissentients, adopted the amendment of Mr. F. H. Bisset:

'That this Conference is unable to accept Dr. Somervell's motion, but remits to a Committee to be appointed by the Central Board to report how adolescent solo singing in the festival movement can be best guided.'

This was surely the only solution, seeing that the Federation is merely an advisory body so far as the local working of festivals is concerned. It is to be hoped that when the Committee gets to work it will concentrate on some practical points that were passed over or merely touched on at the Conference. Findings on psychological and physiological data will carry little conviction, because the weight of evidence at the Conference showed that classes for young singers are not only popular but valuable. The real need now is for strong recommendations on practical points of a type that stand a good chance of being carried out by local committees.

SUITABLE TEST-PIECES

First, and most important of all, there is the question of test-pieces. It is all too common an experience to hear a string of young girls struggling with a song that is far beyond their powers in range and vocal technique, and that, on the expressive side, calls for emotion and mentality of a type that only the adult can experience. The songs for such classes should have the simplicity and directness of a folk-song. A perfect example occurs to me at once—Stanford's The City Child, wherein is a pretty thought set forth verbally and musically in such a way that the youngest of singers can grasp and express it, and the oldest of hearers appreciate it. If there is a dearth of the right kind of song, a demand will soon create the supply. We have a group of British composers doing admirable work in giving the festival movement what it needs in the way of unison and part-songs for children's choirs. Publishers and composers are now well aware of the valuable market opened up by the festivals, and a hint as to the need for good songs for young soloists will not be lost on them.

ADOLESCENTS IN OPEN CLASSES

The Committee might well give a thought to the advisability of an age limit in the open classes for female soloists. At present one often finds young girls competing, overweighted by the test-piece, and increasing the difficulties of the judge, rent between his duty to give the award to the best and his natural desire to encourage to the utmost a young singer of special promise. There is need for a systematic age classification. Too often the sixteen-years-old is roped in with the adults. The Committee should urge the general adoption of the commonsense method followed at Glasgow and other large festivals, of dividing the women soloists into three classes: (a) Girls (age under fifteen); (b) juniors (age fifteen to eighteen); and (c) general (age over eighteen), with test-pieces carefully chosen in accordance with this division.

YOUNG SINGERS IN BIG HALLS

In the matter of halls, local committees have to cut their coat according to their cloth. Nevertheless, I am sure there is rarely any need for the painful and too-frequent sight of a very young girl with a small voice singing in a vast hall to an audience of thousands. If she sings as she should, her efforts are practically lost; if she tries to overcome the vast area, she does so at the expense of a strain on voice, physique, and nervous system. Almost invariably the preliminary rounds of these junior solo classes take place in a small hall attached to the large one, and it is to be hoped that the time will soon come when the finals will take place there too.

LONG WAITS BEFORE FINALS

This raises another point that seems to have been passed over at the Conference. The preliminary rounds of these junior classes take place in the day-time—often in the morning. Yet in order to give the evening audience in the big hall the opportunity of hearing the final, the unhappy selected ones have to wait for anything between five and ten hours, with the ordeal hanging over their heads, often too nervous to eat a proper meal, exposed to draughts if they wait in the hall, to bad weather if they go out, and to fatigue anyway. All finals in junior classes, whether in singing, playing, or elocution, should be decided at the end of the preliminary session, and in the small hall. Whether the winners be asked to sing at the prize-giving concerts should be left to the discretion of the committee. If they are satisfied that the winning singer has a voice and style suitable for a large hall and a big audience, they may well let her sing. There is far less strain at a performance of this kind than at a final in the same hall, because the singer has no competitive side to worry about, and, moreover, she can come to the concert fresh, whereas the evening final has to be waited for. If it is not convenient to hold finals at the close of the preliminary contests, they should take place on the following morning or afternoon. In the case of very large classes of young singers, it might be advisable to divide them into groups. Each group would have its prize-winner, and the group winners might compete again on another day for a kind of special award—with a different test-piece, of course. In fact, it would be like the Blackpool 'Rose Bowl' Competition in miniature, and could be made into a popular and useful event.

THE ADJUDICATOR'S PART

But in the long run perhaps as much depends on adjudicators as upon anybody. In the smaller festivals, where everybody knows everybody, a judge has to screw himself up to do his duty when he hears youthful singing of the type that Mr. Plunket Greene truly described as 'appalling.' The judge sees it is the result of downright bad teaching, but he sees, too, that everybody present knows who taught the bad singer. If he tells the truth about the teaching the teacher's living will be jeopardised. What is he to do? Well, if the festival is to fulfil its objects he has to tell the truth—kindly, if possible, but unmistakably. If, as a result, an incompetent teacher retires from the profession in which he/she ought never to have got a footing, so much the better for the festival, for the young singers in the district, and, in the long run, for the incompetent teacher too. I mention this point because nobody can see much of the festival movement without becoming uncomfortably aware that local officials, although they want nothing but the truth, are apt to shy at the whole of it when it is liable to upset a few local teachers or parents who are strong supporters of the festival.

The Committee set up by the Federation might well draw the attention of adjudicators to their responsibilities in the matter of bad teachers of young singers. No tenderness to teachers or local supporters should weigh when bad methods have to be condemned. When the judge gives the right consideration to the young voices concerned, there will be none left over for the 'dud' teacher, nor need there be.

H. G.

NORTH LONDON

Marked progress in every way was shown at this now well-established Festival. Eight string orchestras, over sixty choirs, and sixteen hundred soloists competed. Very promising new classes were those for Boy Scouts and Girl Guides, the singing of eleven choirs in the latter being an outstanding feature. The Festival seems to have tapped a new and rich vein in these organizations.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

This month's output is of unusual interest. First and foremost is the remarkable set of Meistersinger records issued by H.M.V.—twelve double-sided. The chief soloists are Florence Austral, Doris Lemon, Robert Radford, Tudor Davies, and William Michael, with full orchestra, Albert Coates conducting. This is a good deal more than a mere series of 'Gems from the Opera'; it is the opera in tabloid form—if one can apply the word 'tabloid' to a version that takes well over an hour to work off. The cutting and piecing together has been done with such skill that, hearing the records with the score on my knee, I found it easy to skip from point to point and pick up the thread. I shouldn't like to say that a gramophonist ignorant of the opera, or unhelped by a score, would get a very clear idea of the work. But then how many hearers can grasp it even in the opera-house without some preliminary priming? And, after all, does it matter very much in the case of an opera with such a wealth of transparently beautiful music as this? Anyhow, the H.M.V. issues a booklet which is the next best thing to a score. After repeated hearings, this batch of records strikes me as being the finest achievement in the gramophone world so far. A particularly strong point is the ensemble. Records in which the crowd sings or cheers are unexpectedly stirring. The palm in this respect must go to the record of the burly-burly that follows Beckmesser's song at the end of Act 2. The soloists generally distinguish themselves, though at times—a good many times, in fact—the pace and orchestra combined kill their words. Tudor Davies's singing of the 'Prize Song' strikes me as being over-strenuous, and there is at times a suspicion of hustle. The only two real blemishes in the series, however, are Mr. Michael's clowning in the above-mentioned Beckmesser's song, and the playing and recording of the Introduction to Act 3. Mr. Michael sings so well in the earlier parts of the opera that we are astonished to find him overdoing things later on. After all, the comic side of Beckmesser is all there in the music and words, and there is no need for the singer to turn on a grotesque tone and hash the florid passages. Moreover, we cannot believe in a Beckmesser who is at one moment an accomplished singer and at the next a bleating, incompetent nincompoop. I can't make up my mind as to whether the playing or the recording is at fault in the Introduction to Act 3. There is a want of clearness in the high string-passages, and the ensemble is poor, especially at the end. This is more notable as the orchestral playing in the other records is so good. I add that the Overture is not included in this set, as it was recorded under Mr. Coates a few years ago. (By the by, despite the progress now being made, this record of the Overture still stands as one of the finest reproductions of a big orchestral work.)

One hears a good bit about the wireless telegraph as a rival to the gramophone, but it will have to make a mighty step forward in every respect before it can make us put these Meistersinger records on the top shelf. Congratulations to H.M.V. and all concerned.

The Columbia Company follows up its policy of backing up living British composers by giving us a third number of The Planets—'Uranus the Magician,' a capital reproduction of a good performance under the composer's direction (12-in. d.-s.). An even more daring step is the recording of Vaughan Williams's London Symphony—or rather a portion of it—on two 12-in. d.-s. The label untruthfully says, 'A London Symphony, in four parts,' leading the uninitiated to suppose that the whole work is recorded, whereas only the first movement and the Scherzo are done. The orchestra is the L.S.O., conducted by Sir Dan Godfrey. Both performance and recording are worthy of this fine work. I hope the Company will not stop short at these two movements.

Another first-rate orchestral record issued by the Columbia Company is that of Delius's Dance Rhapsody, played by the Queen's Hall Orchestra, under Sir Henry Wood. A delightful feature in this is the wood-wind playing. The record is on three sides 12-in., the remaining side being filled with a piquant orchestral version of Rameau's well-known Tambourin.

Not to be backward where modern music is concerned the Æolian Vocalion Company has made successful records of Ravel's Suite, Le Tombe de Couperin, conducted by Cuthbert Whitmore (two 12-in. d.-s.).

One light orchestral record may be noted at this season—a Col. 12-in. d.-s., A Musical Jigsaw, wherein a few dozens of old friends are dovetailed with amusing effect. The Company issues a leaflet giving a list of the tunes maltreated, but gramophonists who turn on the medley at a festive gathering will be well advised to keep the list out of sight and let the hearers compete as to who can 'spot' the most. This record is both ingenious and amusing. Few musicians will keep a straight face when Tchaikovsky's Chanson Triste gradually fades into the hymn-tune Now the day is over, and still less when they are launched from Who killed Cock Robin? into the 'Venusberg' section of the Tannhäuser Overture.

Two good chamber music records call for mention—the Léner Quartet in the Scherzo from Tchaikovsky's D major Quartet, and the Notturmo from Borodin's Quartet in D (H.M.V. 12-in. d.-s.). (Why these snippets? Now that it is possible to give complete records of orchestral works, surely chamber music need no longer be doled out in isolated movements); and the London String Quartet in the Minuet and Finale of Brahms's Op. 51, No. 2, the first two movements of which were reviewed last month (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s.). The Brahms is the better-wearing of these three works, chiefly because of its development; the Tchaikovsky and Borodin, attractive though they be (especially the former), are concerned overmuch with repetition.

Lamond is recorded by H.M.V. playing the Appassionata Sonata (two 12-in. d.-s.), and the same Company sends a 10-in. of Paderewski in Chopin's G sharp minor Etude—a delightful record this latter, with pianoforte tone of more than average purity.

Among the vocal records, outstanding examples are a set of four 12-in. d.-s. Columbia of Stanford's Songs of the Fleet, sung by Harold Williams and a male-voice quartet, accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by the composer. The ensemble is occasionally bad, and the orchestral part often lacks clearness, but the songs are so fine that these records will, I feel sure, give more pleasure than the average operatic aria, especially to gramophonists who know the songs, and so are able mentally to supply such deficiencies as occur. There is a real thrill in the 'Stand by' refrain of The Little Admiral, the 'Lead the line' in Sailing at Dawn, and little is lost of the stirring endings of the verses in The Song of the South-Wester.

The Columbia Company is to be congratulated on this step towards bringing the vocal repertory of the gramophone up to the level of the orchestral. (Last month, it will be remembered, the Company recorded a complete song-cycle of Roger Quilter.) Already the stock of operatic arias is running low. Sooner or later the output of our best British song composers will of necessity be drawn upon. Now that the recording of the best modern orchestral and chamber music has proved to be a sound business proposition, there is no excuse for fighting shy of the best songs.

Only two more vocal records in this month's lot call for mention. Frank Titterton's performance of 'The Prize Song' from the Meistersinger (Æ.-Voc. 12-in. d.-s.) inevitably leads to comparison with that of Tudor Davies in the H.M.V. set discussed above. Comparison, however, proves to be another example of the swings and roundabouts. Titterton is better so far as voice is concerned; his tone is fuller, and free from the frequent squeezed reediness that shows itself in Tudor Davies (I hasten to add that I am judging entirely from the gramophone, which, like the camera, may alternately lie and flatter); moreover, Titterton's slightly steadier pace in the first two verses is an improvement. On the other hand, the orchestral accompaniment is poor compared with that of the H.M.V. record. It seems to have been rather badly re-arranged, and is sketchily played, the result being a loss of warmth and richness in the record as a whole. On the other side Mr. Titterton is recorded in the 'Flower Song' from Carmen, again singing with a manly tone that, to my mind, is streets ahead of the snivelling, sobbing, and suffering sounds produced by most of the foreign operatic tenor 'stars.' The remaining record is that of Malcolm McEachern, whose fine voice is unusually well suited in 'The Calf of Gold' from Faust and The Hundred Pipers. Mr. McEachern will do well to follow up this vein of Scots folk-song. He has the dialect, of course, and can be relied on for the right touch of humour, whether grim or pawky.

Finally, here is something quite new from H.M.V.—a set of 10-in. d.-s. records giving spoken instructions and band accompaniment to a series of twelve physical exercises. The directions are clear, and the band helps you along with well-played extracts from familiar sources. The results are sufficiently telling for use with a class. The exercises are of the now familiar and generally approved Swedish drill type. So now, as a change from singing in the bath-room, you may turn on these records and body-bend in time to the 'Bridal Chorus' from Lohengrin and other old friends.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

The distribution of diplomas by the President, Dr. Alan Gray, to the successful candidates for Fellowship and Associateship will take place on Saturday, January 19, 1924, at 11 o'clock. During the proceedings Dr. Gray will play upon the College organ the following organ pieces selected for the July examination, 1924:

Fellowship

Prelude and Fugue in E minor ('Wedge')... J. S. Bach
(Novello, Bk. 8, p. 98.)

Canon in B minor ... .. Schumann

Associateship

Psalm xii. No. 1 of Three Preludes, from the Genevan Psalter ... .. Charles Wood

Cantabile in G ... .. Jongen

Sonata No. 4 (1st movement) ... .. Mendelssohn

Members and friends are cordially invited. No tickets are required.

The Regulations for the Choir-Training Examinations (Diploma and Certificate) are now ready, and can be obtained on application to the Registrar.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

LOUIS VIERNE: RECITALS IN ENGLAND

Organists will hear with pleasure that Louis Vierne is to pay this country a visit early in the New Year. No French organ composer of to-day—perhaps of yesterday as well—has more admirers here than Vierne. He owes much of his popularity to the fact that he has catered for players and organs both great and small. His Symphonies tax the powers of the finest player and exploit the resources of the biggest organ; yet his admirable set of Twenty-four Short Pieces in Free Style and his Messe Basse may be played by an average performer on a harmonium with good effect. But Vierne is not only a composer of unusual skill and originality. During the past twenty years his playing at Notre Dame has been one of the features of musical life at Paris. Both as player—especially of Bach and Franck—and improviser he has long been prominent among the group of brilliant French organists.

He will be heard at Westminster Cathedral on January 3, at 6.30; at Trinity College, Cambridge, in the morning (11.30) of the same day. He will play also at York Minster (January 5), Leeds Parish Church (January 7), Manchester Town Hall (January 8), St. Anne's, Edge Hill, Liverpool (January 10), and at Renfield Street U.F. Church, Glasgow (January 12). We understand that Vierne will be staying in England for a short time after the last of these recitals, and so will be available for a few vacant dates. Mr. Henry Willis, jun., of Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co., Ferndale Road, Brixton, is acting as his honorary agent in the matter, and inquiries should therefore be sent to him.

We make a special point of drawing attention to the matter, because, as our readers know, Vierne has since 1914 passed through experiences that without exaggeration may be called tragic. His friends and admirers in this country will welcome this opportunity of showing their sympathy, and their pleasure at his improved health.

† A HYMN SIXTEEN HUNDRED YEARS OLD

A correspondent writes:—The excavations in Egypt have yielded many treasures, but few of them can be used to-day. One of these few was put to good use on Sunday, November 11, at the morning service at St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Upper Norwood. Among the papyri discovered at Oxyrhynchus during the past few years, was found a fragment on which was written part of a Christian hymn, music as well as words, which was judged to date from about the year 300 A.D. Dr. Witherow, the minister of St. Andrew's, obtained a copy of this very ancient hymn, and his son, Mr. Mervyn Witherow, in collaboration with Miss E. M. Lucas, the organist of the Church, translated it into a form of words and music which could be produced by a 20th-century choir and instrument. The following is the translation:

*Of the light of the dawn let nought be silent,
Nor let the bright stars be wanting in praise.
Let all the fountains of the rivers lift up their song
To the Father and Son and to the Holy Spirit.
So let all powers on earth cry aloud, cry aloud

Amen, Amen,

Might and honour, glory and praise to God,
Only Giver of all that is good.

Amen, Amen.

At St. Andrew's, the melody was first sung in unison unaccompanied, and then repeated with a harmonized organ part. Probably this hymn had not been sung for sixteen hundred years, and almost certainly had never before been sung in a church in this kingdom. It provided a unique experience for those who took part and for those who heard.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CHESTER SQUARE

The organ originally built by the late Robert Hope Jones for this Church has been rebuilt, enlarged, and entirely revoiced by Messrs. Henry Willis & Sons and Lewis & Co., to the specification of Mr. Reginald Goss Custard. The Echo organ has been moved from its original position on the west wall of the North Aisle to the west gallery of the War Memorial Chapel. The acoustic properties of this chapel are so good that the Echo organ will be far more effective than hitherto. The organ now consists of four manuals, with forty-two speaking stops—eleven on the Great, eleven on the Swell, six on the Choir, five on the Echo, with a Solo organ of one stop, Tuba 8-ft. Eight stops are new, and there are twenty-eight combination pistons and pedals. The opening recital by Mr. Goss Custard was announced for December 8.

The Newcastle Bach Choir gave a recital of Bach Church Cantatas in the Cathedral on November 24, the programme consisting of No. 6 (Bide with us), No. 159 (Behold, we go up to Jerusalem), No. 87 (As yet have ye asked nothing in My Name), and No. 95 (Since Christ is all my being). The soloists were Miss J. W. Fleming, Miss Etta Scott, Mr. Frank Aikens, Mr. J. Webster, Mr. A. L. Lewis, and Mr. E. G. Robinson. There was an orchestra of strings, oboes, and bassoons, with Mr. Alfred M. Wall as leader, Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted, and Mr. William Ellis was at the organ. The recital, by the way, was the fifty-first of a series of Saturday afternoon music-makings at the Cathedral. They take various forms, from oratorio performances to organ recitals. Apropos of the latter, a correspondent tells us that it is heartening to see the increasing number of men who attend from the surrounding districts, some coming even twenty miles. A large proportion are young organists. We think it is worth while drawing attention to the latter point. Recitalists can hardly fail to realise their responsibilities in the choice and performance of their programmes if they remind themselves that among their hearers are invariably some who come to learn. It depends on the recitalist whether they learn something good or bad in regard to taste, style, &c.

New organs have recently been erected by Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper, at Merton College, Oxford—a two-manual of seventeen stops; and at Sefton Park Presbyterian Church, Liverpool—a four-manual of thirty-nine stops. Perhaps the latter may claim to be described as a five-manual organ, seeing that one of the four in the specification is described as 'Choir and Solo organs,' with five stops enclosed (Gegen diapason 8-ft., Claribel Flute 8-ft., Dulciana 8-ft., Flauto Traverso 4-ft., and Piccolo 2-ft.), and three unenclosed (Harmonic Flute 8-ft., Gamba 8-ft., and Tromba 8-ft.). One of the remaining manuals is an orchestral organ of seven stops, in a separate Swell box. There is a liberal supply of accessories, including thirteen combination pistons.

Church choirmasters who have as yet taken no part in the revival of Tudor music are reminded that a convenient opening is offered in the Elizabethan Competitive Festival (Kingsway Hall, February 28, and following days). There are classes for choirs of men and boys, and for mixed-voice choirs, the test-pieces being more or less familiar works by Gibbons, Byrd, and Farnaby. The fact of a whole choir being unavailable need be no bar, for experience shows that the best results in most music of this kind can be obtained by a few capable voices to each part. The syllabus may be had from the hon. secretary, Mr. Alan May, 31, Bonham Road, S.W.2. (Stamp.)

In connection with the Norwich Bach Study Circle, Mr. Noel Ponsonby gave a Bach organ recital at St. Andrew's, Norwich, on November 28, playing the D minor Trio-Sonata, the 'Great' Prelude and Fugue in C, the Prelude and Fugue in B minor, the Fantasia in C minor, and a string of Chorale Preludes, including the complex and rarely-heard canonic treatment of Vater unser. Somebody in the Circle deserves praise for the programme-notes with musical examples—eight foolscap pages very clearly cyclostyled. Where there's a will there's a way out of the printing difficulty!

The restored and rebuilt organ at St. John-the-Divine, Fairfield, Liverpool, was dedicated on November 30, Mr. Paul Rochard giving a recital, and playing among other works Bonnet's Variations, Julius Harrison's Tonus Pergerinus, the first movement of Widor's fifth Symphony, and Boëllmann's Gothic Suite. The rebuilding has been carried out by Messrs. Charles Whiteley, of Chester, and the instrument is now a three-manual with thirty-four stops.

Brahms's Requiem had a fine performance at Ripon Cathedral on December 5, by the Cathedral and Oratorio choirs combined, augmented by a contingent of singers from Leeds. Dr. C. H. Moody conducted, and an excellent accompaniment was provided by Mr. Percy Richardson (organ), Mr. G. F. Guyll (pianoforte), and Mr. George Dearlove (timpani).

An oratorio choir has been formed in connection with St. Matthias's Church, Richmond Hill, and gave its first performance on December 16, when it sang excellently in Brahms's Requiem. The soloists were Miss Evelyn Kendall and Mr. Herbert Heyner, and Mr. Ambrose P. Porter was at the organ. The choir is rehearsing Dvorák's Stabat Mater for a performance in Lent.

A Bach concert was given at St. Paul's (Deutsche Kirche), Goulston Street, Aldgate, on December 2, when the choir, directed by Mr. Eric A. Seymour, sang the cantata, Bleib' bei uns, and other choral works, with Miss Bertha Seymour, Mr. Norman M. Stone, and Mr. George R. Hughes as soloists. Violin and organ pieces were played by Mr. Douglas Crittenden and Mr. R. W. Edmunds.

Brahms's Requiem was admirably sung at Faversham Parish Church on December 10 by the choir, augmented by some members of the Philharmonic Society. Mr. W. J. Keech conducted, and the accompaniments were in the able hands of Mr. Arthur Keech (organ), Miss J. Ougham and Mr. F. A. Poulteney (pianofortes), and Mr. E. Honey (timpani).

At a meeting of the Council of the London Society of Organists, Mr. Herbert Westerby raised the question of the need for organization in the musical profession, and the Council unanimously resolved to give sympathetic consideration to any practical scheme brought forward with that end in view.

Bach's Sleepers, wake! was well sung at Clapham Congregational Church, on November 25, by the choir. The soloists were Master Harold Ware, Mr. Alec Leman, and Mr. Martin Attwater. Mr. Henry F. Hall was at the organ.

The ninety-third anthem and organ recital at Brighton Parish Church, on November 13, was of an In Memoriam character, the programme including Elgar's To Women and For the Fallen, sung by the choir, and organ solos (Stanford's Verdun, &c.), played by Dr. Chastey Hector.

Brahms's Requiem was sung in Exeter Cathedral on December 10 by the Augmented Choir. Dr. Ernest Bullock conducted, and obtained a fine performance. Mr. F. G. Bradford was at the organ, Mrs. Bullock at the pianoforte, and Mr. Hibbins, of Bristol, was the timpanist.

At a dinner held in celebration of the fiftieth Annual Festival of the London Church Choir Association, Dr. Charles Macpherson was presented with a gold watch and chain in appreciation of his services as honorary conductor during the past fifteen years.

A new organ has been built for the Chapel of the Harrogate College for girls, by Messrs. Abbott & Smith—a three-manual of twenty stops. Mr. C. L. Naylor gave the opening recital on November 11.

ORGAN RECITALS

Dr. H. G. Ley, Exeter Cathedral—Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Adagio in E, Frank Bridge; Fantasia and Fugue, Parry; Two Trumpet Tunes and Air, Purcell.
Mr. Alfred H. Allen, St. Clement's, Great Ilford—Rhapsody No. 3, Saint-Saëns; Sonata No. 2, Mendelssohn; Suite, Purcell; Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Choral Preludes, &c., Bach.
Rev. L. G. Bark, Christ Church, Penrith—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata No. 8), Rheinberger; Largo (Sonata No. 5), Bach; Christmas Rhapsody, Gigout.
Mr. C. J. Wood, St. Barnabas, Wellingborough—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Prelude on 'St. Thomas,' Parry.
Mr. A. E. H. Nickson, St. Paul's Cathedral, Melbourne—A Karg-Elert programme: Sonatina; Sequence in C minor; Canzona; Aria Serioso; Funerale, &c.
Master George Stone, All Saints', Southampton—Prelude and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Fantasia, Alcock; Fantasia on 'By Babylon's Streams,' Harris; Improvisation, Saint-Saëns.

Mr. Alban Hamer, St. Andrew's, Pretoria—Pæan, Harwood; Cradle Song and Réverie on 'University,' Grace; Fugue, Reubke; Fantasy-Prelude, Macpherson.
 Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh—'St. Francis preaching to the birds,' Liszt; Dithyramb, Harwood; Noel, Balfour Gardiner; Fantasia on two Christmas Carols, West.

Mr. William Ellis, Newcastle Cathedral—Phantasia from Sonata No. 11, Rheinberger; Fugue in E flat, Bach; Concerto No. 8, Avison; Caprice Héroïque, Bonnet.

Mr. W. W. Thompson, St. Margaret Pattens—Sonata No. 4, Rheinberger; Triumph Song, Rowley; Choral Prelude on 'St. Peter,' Darke; Réverie on 'University,' Grace.

Mr. A. T. Batts, Christ Church, Isle of Dogs—Two Pedal Studies, Karg-Elert; March on a Theme of Handel, Guildmant; Chorale Preludes, Bach. (Violin solos by Purcell and Loeillet, Mr. G. Austin Plank.)

Mr. Purcell J. Mansfield, Newcastle Cathedral—Fantaisie in D flat, Saint-Saëns; Prelude in B minor, Bach; Fugue, Reubke; Prelude on 'Abridge,' Charlton Palmer; Toccata on King's Lynn, Grace.

Dr. Gordon Slater, St. Michael-on-the-Mount, Lincoln—Concerto in F, Handel; Elegy, Baird; Two Preludes, Stanford.

Mr. J. T. Horne, St. Fin Barre's Cathedral, Cork—Imperial March, Elgar; Choral No. 3, Franck; Idyll No. 6, Gray; Prelude and Fugue in E, Saint-Saëns; Psalm-Prelude No. 2, Howells; Passacaglia, Bach.

Dr. Harold W. Rhodes, Exeter Cathedral—Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Fantasia and Toccata in D minor, Stanford; Allegro (Sonata in G), Elgar; Prelude in B, Saint-Saëns.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. John the Evangelist, Upper Norwood—Fugue on B A C H, No. 6, Schumann; Four Versets on Magnificat, Dupré; Symphony in E flat, Maquaire; Chorale Preludes, Bach.

Mr. H. C. J. Churchill, St. Lawrence Jewry—Prelude and Fugue in D, Bach; Two Chorale Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 12, Rheinberger.

Mr. H. Vincent Batts, St. Mary Magdalene, St. Leonards-on-Sea—Sonata No. 5, Rheinberger; Pastorale, Franck; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach.

Mr. Bertram Hollins, St. Lawrence Jewry—Toccata in F, Bach; Fugue in G, Bertram Hollins; Meditation, Grace; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vienne.

Mr. William Robson, Parish Church, Eggescliffe—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor and three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Scherzo, Baird; Fantasia 'In Festo Omnium Sanctorum,' Stanford.

Mr. John Pullen, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Canzona, Boillmann; Improvisation-Caprice, Jongen; Three Preludes from the 'Little Organ Book.' (Franck's Psalm 150, sung by the Cathedral Choir.)

Mr. Henry F. Hall, Clapham Congregational Church—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Three Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger.

Mr. Stainton de B. Taylor, Temple of Humanity, Liverpool—A Bach programme.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Mary's Baptist Church, Norwich—Concerto in E flat, Felton; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke; 'Evening Rest,' Rheinberger; Fantasia in E minor, Silas.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Marche Héroïque and Fantaisie in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Two Preludes on Welsh Hymn-Tunes, Vaughan Williams; March on a Ground Bass, Dohnányi.

Mr. S. Thorne, Mint Chapel, Exeter—Prelude and Fugue in C, Bach; Chorale Preludes by Bach, Brahms, Darke, and Vaughan Williams.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Allanson G. Y. Brown, organist and choirmaster, Tadcaster Parish Church.

Mr. Stephen C. Chantler, organist, St. Luke's, Bermondsey, to be choirmaster also.

Mr. Leonard Dorsett, organist and choirmaster, St. Peter's Presbyterian Church, Upper Tooting.

Mr. Alfred Mann, organist and choirmaster, Trinity Church, Cambuslang, Glasgow.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, organist and choirmaster, Stepney Parish Church.

Mr. Henry Poole, organist and choirmaster, Littleton Parish Church, Shepperton.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

'Cellist (gentleman), good amateur, required to join violinist, pianist, and singer.—Write, KAY, 105, Highbury New Park, N.5.

'Cellist (gentleman) wishes to meet pianist (lady or gentleman) for mutual practice. Kensington district.—M. R. H., c/o Musical Times.

Overseas Club Orchestra. 'Cellos, violas, and bass urgently needed.—Apply, Miss HANSLEY-SMITH, 'Vernon House,' Park Place, S.W.1.

Pianist wishes to meet violinist, 'cellist, or singer for mutual practice, or another pianist for duets.—Call or write, Miss SENNETT, 238, Richmond Road, Hackney, E.8.

Pianist (lady) would like to meet violinist or vocalist for mutual practice of accompaniments. South Birmingham.—King's Norton, Moseley, or Selly Oak districts.—X. Y. Z., c/o Musical Times.

Chiswick and Gunnersbury Philharmonic has vacancies in Orchestra and Choir. Practices resumed at Chiswick Town Hall, January 7 and 10.—Mr. E. LESLIE SIKES, 223a, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

Young pianist would like to meet string players for study of chamber music.—Write, D. R. LANGDON, 87, Meadowpark Street, Dennistown, Glasgow.

Accompanist (gentleman) wishes to meet 'cellist or other instrumentalists for mutual practice. Good music only. Keen amateurs, also able vocalists interested, please write. Croydon district preferred.—C. P. COCKS, 'Trenance,' Morland Road, Croydon.

Tollington Orchestra resumes practices on January 7, and Tollington Choir on January 9. New members, especially contraltos, will be welcomed.—Apply, CONDUCTOR, 19, Heathville Road, Crouch Hill, N.19.

Young lady vocalist (trained) wishes to meet pianist and 'cellist for mutual practice, and with a view to forming a trio. Crouch End district.—L. G., c/o Musical Times.

Good amateur instrumentalists (all instruments) are required in the orchestra of the West Middlesex Musical Society.—Mr. J. H. CUDDINGTON, 21, Selby Road, Ealing, W.5.

'Cellist and pianist wish to meet violinist for mutual practice. Tuesday or Thursday, 7.30 to 9.30 p.m. Good library of orchestral music.—PIANIST, 66, Patshull Road, Kentish Town, N.W.5.

Gentleman (organist and pianist) wishes to meet singer for study of good class song accompaniments.—S. W. EMBREY, 112, Hunloke Avenue, Boythorpe, Chesterfield.

Madrigals.—Wanted, enthusiastic amateurs—S.A.T.B.—to join existent party of madrigal singers meeting Saturday afternoons at Victoria. Good reading and regularity essential. Morley, Byrd, Wilbye, and moderns.—R. P. TANSLEY, 10, Colville Gardens, Talbot Road, W.11.

Organist would like to meet violinist or 'cellist for mutual practice of chamber music. Bradford (Yorks) or Shipley districts.—ORGANIST, 39, Woodview, Manningham, Bradford.

Lady flautist wishes to join amateur orchestra.—B., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist desires practice with violinist or 'cellist, or both. Best music only.—D. JOHNSON, 18, Compton Road, Wimbledon, S.W.19.

Letters to the Editor

THE DOH-MINOR: A WARNING

SIR,—The Tonic Sol-fa College desires to warn school teachers and others that in a certain series of songs, duets, and trios now being published, what at first sight appears to be a Tonic Sol-fa translation is, so far as the minor mode is concerned, nothing more than a travesty of that notation.

For instance, in one of the songs of this series, the following simple phrase:

is translated into what is termed the Doh-minor notation, thus:

{ :d' | ta : s | f : ma, r | d : ta, la, | s, ||

instead of:

{ :l | s : m | r : d., t, | l, : s, .f, | m, ||

Thus out of this simple phrase of ten notes, not one of which is out of the key, no less than four are chromatically altered in the Doh-minor version. The effect is to make simplicity itself grotesque and difficult.

The Tonic Sol-fa College does not recognise this Doh-minor notation, and is glad to find that all the leading music publishing firms in this country adhere to the rational Lah-minor notation in translating the numerous oratorios, cantatas, Masses, anthems, part-songs, school-songs, &c., into the Tonic Sol-fa notation.

It should appear obvious that, as the minor notation is the same in principle both in Tonic Sol-fa and Staff, if any alteration is necessary in the one, it is equally necessary in the other. Hence to be consistent the Staff notation version of the above extract should have likewise appeared in the Doh-minor notation, thus:

But the publishers of the series of songs, &c., above referred to have taken good care not to alter the Staff, for they know that if they did so they would have the whole of the musical world against them.

On behalf of the Tonic Sol-fa College.—Yours, &c.,
WALTER HARRISON (Secretary).
26, Bloomsbury Square,
London, W.C.I.

THE CONDUCTOR AND THE 'BEAT'

SIR,—In your December issue a correspondent refers to a part-song from the September number of your journal. As this was a composition of mine, I would ask your permission to answer his question regarding the final chord, which ends thus:

He asks: 'Why the half-beat extra? What is the use of the quaver?' The use of the quaver tied to the semiquaver is to show that the composer desires the sound to be continued to the length of one quaver into the final bar. If I had desired the chord to be held for one bar only, I should not have troubled to write this extra quaver. The prolongation of sound and the beating of the time will be exactly the same as if the composition had ended thus:

Regarding his further query as to the absolute position of the baton at the finish, I may say that I really do not mind where it is, provided the choir finishes at the place indicated in the score.

I agree there may be confusion among amateurs in the matter of the technique of the baton, but many composers have considerable experience of conducting and are not likely, as your correspondent suggests, to write 'useless adjuncts' as a result of any misconception on their part of the principles of time-beating.—Yours, &c.,

His Majesty's Theatre,
London, S.W. PERCY E. FLETCHER.

'THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS'

SIR,—In his interesting articles it is a pity that Mr. Wallace does not make it quite clear what kind of music he is speaking about. He refers to the Ecclesiastical music down to A.D. 1200. This was plainsong, i.e., melodic, unharmonized music. His principal quotations, however, refer to organ playing and to harmonized music. But this was only in its infancy then, and had not deserved nor won an established position in Ecclesiastical music. There is no question of any need for a beat in the modern sense in the performance of plainsong. I do not see any justification for Mr. Wallace's statement that 'the singing during the Offices must often have been a hopeless scramble,' at least in the palmy days of plainsong, but no doubt it is true of the early efforts at harmonized singing. And Mr. Wallace's misunderstanding of this point is made still more evident by his further statement that 'the character of the singing can be gathered from the description of the organ music given above,' which is a complete non sequitur. Plainsong was originally sung without any accompaniment whatever, and when in later times organs began to be used for this purpose it was only for some kinds of plainsong, e.g., the sequences, and with ruinous effect on the rhythm.

As to the pneumes (not neumes, or neums, which means a single note) on the A after the Alleluia, these were a later addition, and were very long, and no doubt hard to remember without words attached to them. They were different in character from the classical plainsong, and became more different still when a syllable was attached to each note, as this necessarily made the performance heavier.

The distinction which Mr. Wallace draws between the sequence and the prose is not correct: these names were applied to the same thing in different countries.—Yours, &c.,

E. G. P. WYATT.

Rustington, nr. Littlehampton.

SIR,—I welcome Mr. F. T. Arnold's criticism of my translation, but he does not make any comment on the punctuation, which is as given in my authority for the sentence. The passage evidently puzzled one commentator of the 18th century, who in paraphrasing it, still in Latin, made it more obscure by a multiplicity of genitives and commas. My version was deliberately free. How else would Mr. Arnold render without offence the sentence next but one after my quotation?—Yours, &c.,

II, Ladbroke Road, W.II. W. WALLACE.
December 8, 1923.

BRITISH PIANISTS AND PIANOFORTE MUSIC

SIR,—Your remarks on Pachmann express publicly what a good many musical people have long been saying.

But the Pachmann craze is only one out of many crazes that flourish at the present time. During my years at Cairo, where every decent European family has a good pianoforte—it was rare to find an ancient rattle-trap such as many a well-to-do English household is content with—I was struck by the tremendous circulation of pianoforte music by Chopin and Grieg. That circulation is equally extensive on the Continent, or indeed all over the civilized world. Yet we look in vain for a British pianoforte piece in Continental homes and music-shops. Meanwhile our publishers go on pouring out claptrap of the 'Golliwog' or 'Children's Hour' type by the thousand, month after month, to the exclusion of better and finer examples. It is time that this 'youth' craze, which has proved so profitable to several inferior musicians, was put in its proper place.

The publication of a book of really first-class English pianoforte music would be an artistic event of the first magnitude; for whereas even the great choral works of Elgar, set to English words, can only naturally be circulated chiefly in English-speaking countries, pianofortes are played in most decent homes throughout the world, and pianoforte music is independent of any question of language or nationality.

It is absurd to say that we have no fine pianists, or no composers who, given encouragement, could create fine music for the instrument. The subject is treated, whenever it is mentioned at all, inartistically and unintellectually. Any long-haired, foreign madman can go through his monkey-tricks here and get the maximum of money and applause, whereas if an Englishman were to cut the same capers he would most likely be sent to an asylum.

To any budding Chopin or Schumann (if such exist) we might say: Give us fine pianoforte music, but let it be fine without being too difficult for the moderately advanced pianist to play. There's the rub! How many players could tackle the Dale Sonata, for example, fine thing that it is? But commonsense is notoriously a rare quality.—Yours, &c., FREDERICK KITCHENER.
Manchester.

NEGLECT OF HANDEL

SIR,—I should be glad if any of your readers could tell me the reason of the systematic neglect of Handel's Pianoforte Fugues, some of which seem to be very fine indeed. Those of Bach are constantly before the public, and quite rightly so, but surely room might also be found for some examples of his great contemporary, whose sole claim to fame, one might almost think, is that he wrote a number of noble oratorios—and of these only about a couple seem to be known to-day.—Yours, &c., Thame, Oxon. W. HAROLD PEARCE.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP

SIR,—All honour to those good people who are trying to teach us how to sing hymns; but surely they would be well advised not to select their words and tunes solely from the English Hymnal, but to distribute their favours equally between this book and Hymns Ancient and Modern! As it is, their efforts seem to me to be an advertisement of the E. H. and the party in the Church allied with it.

And is it not time they gave up condemning poor old Barnby's tune to For all the Saints? The false accents are in the words, and I doubt if it is worth while varying the music to fit the words, as doing so simply puzzles both choir and congregation.—Yours, &c., Far Greengate, H. A. MARRINER.
Keighley.

December 11, 1923.

'AN APPEAL AND A PROTEST'

SIR,—Mr. Benjamin Beeton's letter in your December issue came like a friendly handshake from another world. I have always respected the stand taken by Mr. Ashton, and I hope he will join with Mr. Beeton and myself in an energetic fight for recognition of the forgotten masters.

I am well over eighty years of age, and can still recollect the delightful renderings an aunt of mine used to give of the compositions of Scotson Clark (a very fine March) and Brinley Richards (Warblings at Eve), as well as a moving battle-piece, the name of which, unfortunately, has escaped my memory.

A musical friend tells me that Mr. Ashton alone has carried the traditions of those masters into an age which accepts the wicked cacophonies of Brahms, Wagner, and Cowen.

May I add that I have written seventeen pianoforte pieces (including three 'marches' and two 'warblings'), a trio for violin, violoncello, and pianoforte, a reapers' dance for orchestra, and a number of much admired songs. The state of the musical world to-day may be judged by the fact that these are not yet published, although they were composed between 1862 and 1894.

Two of the songs were performed at a charity concert in 1867. I am surprised that neither Mr. Ashton nor Mr. Beeton has mentioned them.—Yours, &c.,

Crimea Lodge, JACOB COOK.
Pitchcombe, Glos.
December 6, 1923.

[We have received several letters on this subject. It seems incredible, but it is a fact, that all the writers save Mr. 'Cook' failed to perceive that Mr. 'Beeton' was gently chaffing Mr. Ashton.—EDITOR.]

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of January, 1864:

ST. ANDREW'S (Wells Street).—The Dedicatorial Festival of the Church of St. Andrew's, Wells Street, was observed, as usual, on St. Andrew's Day. The most conspicuous feature in the music selected for use, was an adaptation of the Communion Service from Gounod's Mass in G, generally known as the St. Cecilia Mass. The fine unison passages in the Creed were well delivered by the highly-trained choir, and the solo singing, much abridged from the original, was all that could have been desired. So far as we have heard, this is the first occasion on which the music of Gounod has been introduced into the Service of the English Church. The Mass itself was performed with full orchestra, about four years ago, at St. Martin's Hall, under the direction of Mr. Hullah.

CHELTEMHAM.—Mr. Von Holst gave a grand musical soirée on Wednesday, December 9, at Hale's Music Room, Clarence Parade.

Sharps and Flats

One single egg banged in the middle of a bad picture would be heard in the heart of Los Angeles.—Mr. James Agate.

Among the new gramophone records there is one named 'Yes, I've got the "Yes, we have no bananas Blues to-day," to-day.' There is the sad case of a lady enthusiast who had not this gem in her collection. She tried to say to the shop assistant: 'No! I haven't got the "Yes, I've got the we have no bananas Blues to-day, to-day," record.' She failed, of course, miserably, but there is some talk of patenting the phrase as a new parlour game for Christmas.—Daily News.

Le riviste serie straniere non ne parlano od ebbero accenni talvolta molto duri, come quello del Musical Times, di alcuni mesi or sono, a firma del suo direttore Harvey Grace, organista dell' Abbazia di Westminster.—Musica d' Oggi.

I have never won a prize.—John Coates.

I think my ideals are as high as those of any man in the profession, but my business instinct has convinced me that it is fatal to give nothing else except highbrow music. What does it matter to me if I give a jazz programme and even include 'rubbish' occasionally in order to provide funds for our symphony concerts?—Sir Dan Godfrey.

I should like to protest against the tendency of some organists to extemporise at all possible moments of silence, as if silence was an evil which needed musical exorcism.—Bishop of Southwell.

I was playing Beethoven's Moonlight Sonata last night, and had just reached that seductive slow movement in C sharp minor, which you will, of course, remember well, when in rushed my landlord, roaring like a bull and shouting, 'Look what it's done to my poor wife!'—Woman Applicant at Police Court.

The Amen at the end of hymns is an offensive redundancy, and should be abolished.—Bishop of Manchester.

Instead of abolishing the Amen at the end of hymns, it would be better if we could abolish some of the hymns themselves.—Canon Charles.

The programme was composed entirely of the works of Chopin. Among the several pieces was a sonata with Chopin's Funeral March, which was magnificently played.—Edinburgh Evening Dispatch.

The choir distinguished itself greatly in the rendering of the anthem.—Parish Magazine.

As the vicar remarked, 'That's torn it!'—Punch.

WELSH MUSIC

FIRST WELSH ORCHESTRAL FESTIVAL

The first festival concert of the Welsh Orchestral Music Festival took place at University Hall, Aberystwyth, on Thursday, November 15. It was decided to inaugurate this venture after the Aberystwyth Festival of last June, in which no works by native composers appeared. A guarantee fund was formed, to which Sir Walford Davies himself contributed generously, and the festival concert was the result. As it is not unlikely that it may be an important date in the development of Welsh music, it will be well, for purposes of record, to print Sir Walford Davies's Foreword to the programme; the full programme should also, for the same reason, be reproduced:

'It is not difficult to imagine that though this festival concert seems little more than one of a series of happy College concerts, it is possibly an event of even greater importance to us all than the June Festival. It is a beginning; and so far as is known it is an unique event, but it must obviously not remain so. Those specially concerned with the progress of the art of painting in Wales would probably hail a first University Exhibition of the work of Welsh artists with delight and hope. We are intimately and greatly concerned here with the progress of Music in Wales, so that an exhibition of a series of orchestral pictures by living Welsh composers should be welcomed with delight by all. The scores of the works to be performed one and all show vitality and inspiration. But there is more than these qualities in them. The suggestion may be ventured here that if any group of gifted composers consistently write that which delights them, and write with fearless directness, alertly imaginative, and without affectation, then a ringing native note must emerge. All fine music, as it seems to me, is like fine form depicted to perfection in the world of sound. Just as a self-conscious effort to be a gentleman is not favourable to gentle manners, so a self-conscious effort to be national is not favourable to national art. But the diligent and unself-conscious pursuit of beauty must bring about the desired result; and this Festival will manifest both diligence and natural beauty enough to encourage all who look for healthy advance in the music of our loved land. Whatever the result of our efforts this year may be, it is greatly hoped that this will prove to be the first of a series of annual "Autumn Exhibitions" of native orchestral works.'

The programme was as follows:

Brythonic Overture ... ..	T. Hopkin Evans
Caneuon (songs) ... ..	D. J. de Lloyd
Miss Dilys Jones,
Welsh Fantasy ... ..	Hughes Clarke
'Saith O Caneuon' (six songs) ...	D. Vaughan Thomas
Mr. T. J. Pickering,
Fantasy—'The Ramblers' ... ..	W. T. David
'Happy Breezes' (Air from Cantata, 'A Hymn to the Sea') ... ..	J. Owen Jones
Symphonic Allegro in D ... ..	Hubert Davies
Welsh Folk-Songs ... ..	—
Miss Dilys Jones,
Prelude ... ..	Kenneth Harding
Suite in D minor ... ..	D. C. Williams
Choral Song—'The Heavens declare the Glory of God' ... ..	Beethoven
(Scored for Orchestra by Haydn Jones.)

Welsh national orchestral music has to contend against many difficulties of an economic nature, but there are others which are not concerned with questions of pounds, shillings, and pence. We are loth to refer to the violent controversies which rage around the subject, but, as a matter of historical accuracy they have to be mentioned. It should be emphasised also that there are in the programme the names of some composers who hitherto have been in opposition to Sir Walford Davies rather than numbered with his allies. This is a point of no little importance. We cannot help also seeing that there is a certain amount of irony in the situation—for here we have a raging, tearing campaign against Sir Walford, who is denounced as the enemy of national music, and we find him making what is perhaps the most significant gesture that has hitherto been made on its behalf. If the hatchet is buried, things will surely go on much quicker.

In another manifesto regarding this concert, Sir Walford Davies said that there must be a generous intake of music before there could be a liberal output. The chief point at issue seems to be that the Chauvinists—wrongly, to my thinking—would prefer to place the output first. Others protest that the intake at the present moment is too limited, and confined to the classics. On closer examination this will be found to be rather a question of what is financially possible. It is not at all unlikely that concerts of modern music would, as things are at present, find no audiences in Wales. Lastly, to put the question in other words, Has Wales at present absorbed enough of the classics to be able to appreciate modernity?

It is naturally too much to hope that Welsh national music can and will emerge as a distinct entity from one day to the other. At present there is no sort of unity. Without going into details as to the nine composers represented in the programme, it will be found that their musical antecedents are of a most varied kind. One at least is completely self-taught; there are others who have been trained at the Royal Academy of Music in London; one other had his education in the North of England; yet another is a product of the Leipsic Conservatoire; and there is at least one who was educated at the University of Wales. A generation at least must elapse before such different elements can be welded into one whole.

In conversation after the concert with Sir Walford, I heard that it had been a most valuable experience, because for the first time it enabled Welsh musicians to know where they are and where they stand. Taken as a whole the concert may be said to prove that Welsh musicians are themselves striking off the shackles of mid-Victorian Mendelssohnian sentimentalism. Another little fact, sufficiently surprising to close observers, is that one of the compositions shows the strongest possible traces of Debussy and Stravinsky-ism. Still more remarkable is it, however, that this particular composer has been educated exclusively in Wales. This tends to show that the conservatism of Welsh musicians is not wholly due to innate characteristics, but clearly is partly the result of circumstances.

Such general considerations in the circumstances seem to be more instructive than detailed criticism of the individual works. Personally I was most struck by the songs of Dr. Vaughan Thomas, accompanied by strings and harp. They are truly national in character, and the texts are of Welsh poets of various epochs dating from the 14th century, two being by Dafydd ap Gwilym, who is known as the Welsh Chaucer, and was practically a contemporary of the English poet of the same name. Though the songs are national, they are not archaic. They are contemporary in spirit, and are a genuine attempt to exhaust the musical possibilities of the Welsh language in modern musical idiom. The songs of Dr. de Lloyd were also admirable in the sympathy they show for the language, but foreign influences are more noticeable. The Brythonic Overture of Mr. T. Hopkin Evans has a good martial swing. The Symphonic Allegro of Mr. Hubert Davies is very well knit and has a fine healthy feeling about it, but is not very original, and reveals Wagnerian influences. Mr. David's Rambler is pleasing, and has a certain psychological interest because the music seems to represent things totally different from what is suggested in the composer's programme. Mr. Kenneth Harding's Debussyish Prelude is an extraordinarily promising work for a youth of nineteen.

Under Sir Walford Davies and the various composers, the performances were capable, especially if we realise that the orchestra, led by Mr. Hubert Davies, included a good many amateurs.

A. K.

THE BALANCE OF EXPRESSION AND DESIGN IN MUSIC

The second meeting of the Musical Association, on December 4, was devoted to the first of a course of three lectures by Sir Henry Hadow on 'The Balance of Expression and Design in Music,' in which he dealt with the philosophical basis and the æsthetics. Subsequently Sir Henry will discuss the relation of form and content in the past of musical history, and also present conditions and outlook, the balance between the two, what use we are making of them, and what the younger generation seems likely to make of them.

Sir Henry Hadow said it was no new subject, but even if it were threadbare it was not transparent, and it was desirable to get at its basis. In his World as Will and Idea, Schopenhauer, speaking of the platonic idea of art, contended that music differed from all other arts because they copied, whereas music expressed the will of which the idea was the justification. Plato was struck by the transitoriness of things; but behind them was an ideal world, a world of form and ideas. These ideas were the basis and substratum of each thing we felt, tasted, touched, in this world. If we took the ideas of wisdom, humanity, integrity, they all crossed each another. The whole of the phenomenal world was simply one continuous interplay of those principles or laws or ultimate ideas of something or another which was real and behind them. This had more to do with music than appeared at first sight. All our practical apprehension of the world, just so far as it was practical, dealt with the particular phenomenon in front of us, not so much because we wanted to apprehend it, as because we wanted to use it, to bring it under the control of our will and make it serve our will.

So far as the ordinary sensuous appreciation of the everyday man was concerned, ideas did not come into consideration. In natural science, the whole business was to discover the laws latent in the manifestations of nature. This was done by a process of building up stage by stage, by observing instance after instance, then forming deductions and generalising until at length we got the law, whatever it might be. But the pictorial artist, said Schopenhauer, went straight to the idea; he saw something behind the phenomena which made those phenomena real, but which the ordinary man did not see at all. If three men painted the same landscape, we should have three different pictures, each truer than the landscape appeared to the sight of the ordinary man, because the artists had penetrated the phenomenon and saw the reality behind.

Had we any of us in the course of our life come across a Falstaff, a Cleopatra, or an Iago? Not one. Shakespeare did not take his characters from human beings. They were real because he got behind individual phenomena to the idea of which those phenomena were only the transitory embodiment. The realistic method was bound to be a failure, bound to be out of scale. It was the negation of art, not because art ought to be more beautiful than life, but it ought to be more real than life. In every pictorial art there must be a certain fidelity to the idea of which the art was the embodiment, which implied a model outside which the artist saw; but in music this fidelity was not required. There was only emotion, and there was the pattern, the design through which that emotion was expressed. The object of the great Spanish painters was to get at the ultimate reality in a painting. The object of the Venetian painters was to make a beautiful design or a beautiful combination of line and colour. That was found also in music. Some musicians were more intent on presenting the immediate emotion they felt. Others were more intent on expressing that emotion in the most beautiful possible curves and combinations of sound. One could not be had without the other, but they could be had in varying perspective and in varying degree. Of all the arts music was unquestionably that which made the keenest emotional and sensuous appeal. We could not imagine anybody being affected by the sight of a picture in any way comparable to the effect produced by hearing for the first time Beethoven's Violin Concerto or any other great masterpiece. It gripped our emotions in a way which even the greatest literature does not wholly do.

It was sometimes said that the technical study of a piece of music, a knowledge of what it was all about, impaired the enjoyment of it, and detracted attention from what it meant, and that it was better to listen with unsophisticated ears. Such a statement was very foolish. The entirely amateur critic was all very well when dealing with the emotional side of music, but was in great difficulties when he came to technicalities. All the representative arts—painting, sculpture, even literature, so far as it was representative—had got to see in front of them the phenomenal world, but they did not copy it; they copied the idea behind it. If there was not this phenomenal world to give them a transitory perception of the ideal behind, they would not have faculties to see the idea at all. But in music there was no representation. We did not see the ideas as God made them through the manifestation of phenomena, but went behind the idea to the central mind itself. That was what Schopenhauer meant when he said that the representative arts copied the ideas and that music went straight back to the will of which these ideas were the representation.

When we really gave ourselves up to the appreciation of a great work of art, and especially of a great work of music, we were, in a way, identified for a moment with the composer. When we loved Beethoven we were for a moment Beethoven himself. Our souls came into communion with his, and we got a divine moment of experience, something of the same nature that must have inspired him when he conceived the idea. The artist let us see nature through his eyes. The composer let us hear, not nature, but something behind nature, through his ears. And he had two vehicles by which to do it. He could raise us up through the emotional nature of which love, beauty, goodness, were the highest point; or he could lead us along the path which led through truth up to beauty, because the basis of all art was truth.

It had been said that music was mathematics become self-conscious, but it might be said rather that music was the body of which mathematics was the skeleton. Music was very different from mathematics; it added to it the emotions of beauty and of wonder. It was because of its completeness, because of the exact balance which in ultimate perfection it held between emotion and design, between content and form, between line and colour, with which that emotion was expressed, that it seemed to be the most divine of all the arts. The pure music in a Beethoven Quartet was Beethoven's vision of divine reality, the aspect of that reality he wished to put forward, and was the medium of appealing to us, of making us Beethoven for the moment. Intertwined with this was the wonder and delight which he gave in watching the unfolding of his scheme of musical design. Where we get the highest and most perfect form of music we get that at the apex.

PRESENTATION TO MR. ARTHUR COLLINGWOOD

The Aberdeen Male-Voice Choir has just completed twenty-one years of successful work. The conductor during this period has been Mr. Arthur Collingwood, who since his arrival at Aberdeen twenty-five years ago has played a prominent part in the musical life of the city. The Male-Voice Choir marked its coming of age by presenting Mr. Collingwood with a revolving book-case, and his Choir at West U.F. Church and friends in the congregation gave him a solid silver salver and a gold pencil-case. Among Mr. Collingwood's recent achievements was an orchestral concert for children, which was so successful that it ought to prove merely the first of a series. The hall was packed, six thousand applications having been received for the two thousand five hundred seats. Children of the Secondary School paid 1s., those of the Primary Schools, 6d. All the youngsters had been primed for the occasion by 'talks,' with pianoforte and gramophone illustrations. At the beginning of the concert each instrument was put through its paces, members of the orchestra and children alike entering into the spirit of the show. The programme included Finlandia, Handel's Largo, the Pizzicato from Delibes's Sylvia Ballet, the Overture to William Tell, the Peer Gynt Suite, and Pomp and Circumstance in D.

Mr. Collingwood conducted, and also contributed some excellent notes to the programme. It should be added that the orchestra was the Scottish, who on the evening of the same day (November 21) gave a concert conducted by M. Kussewitzky. The arrangements of these orchestral concerts are also in Mr. Collingwood's hands, with the support of a number of guarantors—who, however, during the five years in which the concerts have been run have not been called on. Aberdeen is to be congratulated, first, on the presence of so live and all-round a musician as Mr. Collingwood, and, secondly, on making such good use of him.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The second half of the Michaelmas term has been a busy one in connection with public performances. The chamber concert on November 21 was specially interesting on account of the modern English chamber music included in the programme. This comprised Dale's Sextet for violas and the first movement of his Violin and Pianoforte Sonata in E, the first movement of Frank Bridge's String Sextet, and a set of Three Dances, founded on French, Japanese, and Scottish melodies, for string quartet, by J. B. McEwen.

On December 7 and 8, two performances of Shakespeare's Much Ado about Nothing were given by the members of the Dramatic Class, under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond.

The terminal orchestral concert took place at Queen's Hall on Tuesday afternoon, December 11, Sir Henry Wood being the conductor. The concert opened with a good performance of Brahms's Tragic Overture, but the outstanding item of the programme was the very fine performance of three movements of Beethoven's Eroica Symphony—the first movement under the direction of a student (Mr. W. Ifor Jones) and the last two under Sir Henry Wood. The playing of the Scherzo was evidence of the fine training which the orchestra had received during the past term under Sir Henry Wood. In César Franck's Variations Symphoniques, for pianoforte and orchestra, the solo part was played with intelligence and refinement by Miss Madeleine Windsor; while later in the programme Mr. Harry Isaacs gave a brilliant interpretation of the first movement of Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor. In Weber's exacting Scena, Miss Doris Hemingway showed the possession of a voice of pleasing quality and considerable power, and Mr. Eric Greene sang a Handel air with much refinement.

Boëllmann's Fantaisie-Dialogue, for organ and orchestra (organ, Mr. Bertram Orsman), brought an excellent and interesting concert to a close.

An extra chamber concert took place on December 12, when a selection of pianoforte and string quartets was played by the pianoforte ensemble class (under the direction of Mr. Charles Woodhouse). These included Quartets by Schumann, Friskin, César Franck, Brahms, and Schubert. Palestrina's Stabat Mater, a Motet by Bach, and madrigals by Byrd, Weelkes, and Holst were sung by the a cappella choir, conducted by Mr. Ernest Read.

The Fred. Walker Prize (sopranos) has been awarded to Evelyn M. Hedgecock (a native of Faversham), Jennie West being highly commended, and M. Cicely Chapman commended. The adjudicator was Miss Margaret Hoare.

The Westmorland Scholarship (female voices) has been awarded to Anita Edwards (a native of Llanelly), Margaret Hale and Stella Browne being very highly commended, and Vera Kneebone, Lillian Ottman, and Doris Sheppard highly commended. The adjudicators were Miss Nina Rose, Miss Adelaide Rind, and Dr. Mary Davies (in the chair).

The Potter Exhibition (male pianists) has been awarded to Clifford M. Curzon (a native of London). The adjudicators were Messrs. Egerton Tidmarsh and W. J. Kipps.

The Hubert Kiver Prize (organists) has been awarded to Owen Le P. Franklin (a native of London), Bertram J. Orsman being highly commended. The adjudicator was Mr. Fred. Gostelow.

The R.A.M. Club Prize (vocal quartets) has been awarded to Doris Sheppard, Laura Turner, Denys Erlam, and Roy G. Henderson. The adjudicator was Mr. William Wallace.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

If one may judge from the programmes of the concerts, composers and conductors would seem to have enjoyed an unusually good time this term. Works by more than a dozen students have been performed, and not only have students appeared as conductors of opera on four occasions, but at one orchestral concert no less than five students took charge of various works.

At one of the three Patron's Fund Rehearsals opportunity was taken to make use of the Parry Opera Theatre, and scenes from Walküre and Aida were given, with full orchestra. This enabled young conductors and artists to do scenes with a short preliminary band and stage rehearsal, that is, about as much rehearsal as they could reasonably hope for in professional life. Mr. Leonard Willmore and Miss Odette de Foras showed conspicuous merit and stage aptitude in the closing scene of Walküre, and students from the London School of Opera made an excellent impression in the third Act of Aida. Mr. A. Davies-Adams and Mr. Guy Warrack proved themselves to be possessed of many of the qualities that go to make a first-rate conductor.

The Cobbett prizes for a short chamber work are now announced; the first prize goes to Mr. A. Davies-Adams, for a Keltic Fantasy for string quartet, and the second prize to Mr. H. Strickland-Constable for a Fantasia for the same combination of instruments. The competition for performances of these works will take place in February next.

The term's awards are as follow:

Grove Exhibitions.—Alice M. Nixon (singing), Dorothy M. Ansell (pianoforte), Gwynedd M. Corry-Smith (pianoforte). Council Exhibitions.—W. Carlowitz Ames (harp), Marjorie T. Renton (organ), D. Keith Falkner (singing), Simone Cohen (pianoforte), Flora K. Young (singing), Leonard Rooker (pianoforte), Philip B. Warde (singing), Eleanor Gregorson (cello), Andrew Fenner (organ), Gwendoline Higham (violin), Ethel M. Pearce (pianoforte). Special grants were made to Winifred Burton and Richard B. Kyle.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Following the usual culmination of the special work of the term, the students of the College gave, in addition to a 'house' concert, an orchestral and a chamber music concert at Queen's Hall and Steinway Hall respectively. At Queen's Hall the solo playing of Miss Macpherson, in the first movement of Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, aroused particular enthusiasm. The Steinway Hall concert was made notable by the first performance of a Quintet by William Lovelock, and a String Quartet by Eric Cundell, both of which composers were until recently scholarship holders at the College.

At a recent meeting of the Senate of Durham University, Dr. E. F. Horner, Director of Examinations of the College, was appointed an examiner for degrees in music at that University.

At the Grand Welsh Eistedfodd held at Central Hall, Westminster, Elga Collins, a College scholar, won the three-guinea prize offered for the best performance of Brahms's Capriccio. This competition, it will be remembered, is open to all comers, amateur and professional.

MUSIC IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The usual end-of-the-term activity has to be recorded. Unfortunately the early press-day brought about by Christmas makes us close up the column while programmes are still arriving.

OUNDE surpassed even its own past achievements in its second performance of the B minor Mass, on December 16, with a choir of two hundred and forty, a 'non-choir' of two hundred and eighty-eight boys (whose alertness made them worthy of a less negative label), and an orchestra mainly drawn from the boys and staff (twenty-five boys played strings, and boys were also in charge of four flutes, two oboes, one bassoon, one Bach trumpet, and the drums), stiffened by fourteen members of the London

Symphony Orchestra. The soloists were Mesdames Carrie Tubb and Margaret Balfour, Messrs. John Adams and Topliss Green. The Morning Post of December 18 well describes the performance as 'an example of corporate effort without a parallel in the history of English education.'

At BEDFORD the chief work was Holst's King Estmere, which had a capital performance. (This early work of Holst's, by the bye, has been performed at other public schools during the past few years. It is well suited to this purpose, not only on account of its character, but also because the accompaniment is to be had for small as well as large orchestra.) The Bedford programme included also the first movement of the Unfinished Symphony and the Minuet and Trio from Mozart's Symphony in B flat, and a well-chosen list of miscellaneous items, vocal and instrumental.

The ALDENHAM concert led off breezily with a couple of Stanford's Songs of the Fleet, with Glee Society and orchestra taking part. The orchestra played also Schubert's Marche Militaire and two movements from Eric Coates's Miniature Suite. Among the remaining items in a capital programme stood out the first movement of Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet in E flat.

At CHIGWELL the choral side was strong, with a choir of about seventy singing Holst's Autumn Song, Balfour Gardiner's Sir Eglamore, Vaughan Williams's Wassail Song, Elgar's The Snow, and 'A Regular Royal Queen' from The Gondoliers. The orchestra played some Schubert.

The musical society at CANFORD gave a very diverse scheme that embraced a couple of Handel movements by the orchestra, sea shanties and folk-songs by the 'folk-song branch,' carols and part-songs by the choir (Pearsall, Shaw, Parry, and Wood), and some capital solos of various kinds.

MILL HILL boldly attacked Bach, giving an excellent performance of Parts 1 and 2 of the Christmas Oratorio.

At HAILEYBURY the term wound up with a Carol service, the House Competitions (solo and choral), and spirited performances of Box and Cox and Trial by Jury.

The Madrigal Society of LANCING COLLEGE gave a programme of carol music by Holst, Prætorius, and Byrd, in addition to Brahms's six-part song Vineta, Holst's Festival Chime, and Berlioz's 'Shepherds' Farewell,' from The Childhood of Christ. There were also miscellaneous vocal and instrumental works by Bach, Campion, Stanford, Schumann, and Ley.

Two concerts were given at WINCHESTER. The Night-jars Madrigal Society sang, in Chapel, Mendelssohn's Judge me, O God, anthems by Byrd and Weelkes, No. 2 of Holst's Two Psalms, and carols. The Glee Club, over seventy strong, gave at the School concert an attractive programme of small choral works, old and new, relieved by pianoforte solos.

At ST. PAUL'S GIRLS' SCHOOL Bach's Sleepers, wake, was sung, the tenor and bass parts being supplied by fathers, uncles, and friends of the girls.

PURCELL'S 'DIOCLESIAN'

PERFORMANCE AT THE ROYAL HOLLOWAY COLLEGE

On Saturday, December 1, a performance of the Masque from Purcell's Dioclesian was given by forty-five students of the Royal Holloway College, University of London, assisted by an orchestra of about twelve students, and members of the staff (pianoforte and strings only). Some of the more beautiful numbers from the opera had been introduced, and, thanks to skilful stage-management, the whole performance approximated rather to a pastoral than to the somewhat mechanical Masque of the late 17th century. Unlike Dido and Æneas, which was produced at this College in 1919, the Masque in Dioclesian has no big solo parts: the all-round excellence shown by these amateur soloists and chorists was the more remarkable. Their singing of Purcell's music, often pitched very high, had all the freshness and simplicity which it demands. Miss Nicol's Faun was especially charming. The dances, arranged by three of the performers, included country dances, fitted to Purcell's own music, as well as the less familiar 'Canaries,' 'Passe,' and 'Ritornellos' of the 17th century, and an early Gavotte and Minuet. Here again it is scarcely fair to select one performer for mention, but Amor (Miss Willis), in her grace and spontaneity, was the very genius of the music no less than of the scene. The conductor and stage-manager, Miss Sybil Barker, Director of Music at the Royal Holloway College, is to be congratulated on a finished performance of a delightful work.

London Concerts

QUEEN'S HALL ORCHESTRAL CONCERTS

Ernest Ansermet conducted the Royal Philharmonic Society's concert on November 22. The demeanour of the audience showed how many still are the friends he made in the heyday of the Russian Ballet. For some reason the Symphony, Mozart's in G minor, which was played by a reduced orchestra, was a disappointment. The strings were scratchy. But, worse than that, the spontaneous grace of the music was not allowed free play, and we became restive. M. Ansermet is either no Mozartian or else has not mastered the peculiar art of making the most of the scantiness of rehearsals which is nowadays such a drag on London musical doings.

The work on which he had evidently concentrated was the second Suite from Ravel's Ballet of Daphnis and Chloë. This music clearly is Ravel's high-water mark. It is a fairyland of orchestral colouring, and the concluding dance is irresistible. The performance went capitally, and sustained the conductor's fame. The novelty was a short but uncommonly strident Song of Joy, by Arthur Honegger. The form and matter were obvious to the last degree, but were given a strong flavour by brazen scoring and the fierceness of the discords. The impression remained that Honegger had not adequately explained his grounds for such uncouthness. There is the uncouthness of a giant—and also that of a cheeky boy.

Miss Dorothy Silk was the soloist. She contributed Bach's aria, Comfort sweet, my Jesus comes, and floated us into a region beyond cavilling or any disquietude. Liszt's Battle of the Huns, with which the concert ended, had never before figured on the Society's programmes—and no wonder! It will, we imagine, almost certainly never figure there again.

The next Philharmonic concert was on the day of the General Election, and of a fog. Nevertheless, the hall was full. A great favourite of Londoners, Alfred Cortôt, the pianist, was to receive the Society's gold medal. Before this interesting act of homage, M. Cortôt played in the E flat Concerto of Beethoven—not the best choice in the circumstances. M. Cortôt is a moody and variable player, who on his best days can enchant us with the music of the romantic period. We prefer in Beethoven an austerer mind and, particularly, a more solid technical assurance. This performance, had it been given by a new-comer, could hardly have won a compliment. Sir Landon Ronald conducted. The Symphony was Elgar's in E flat, a work which is a virtual novelty to the quite young people, but to some of us brings back the essence of our 'pre-war' life, and the days of some twelve years ago. The performance was tremendously competent, but we felt it to be coarse. An opinion which on this head is most assuredly not negligible paid it the highest possible homage. It was declared to be superior to the composer's own reading. For our part, we were offended in each of the first three movements by too broad an emphasis. It was a reading à la Tchaikovsky. But in Elgar the big, devastating gestures are not the all-in-all, and it is not quite the thing to approach them impatiently to the disadvantage of the beautiful, general interest. We should have said, if it had not been for the above-mentioned considerable opinion, that it was a performance calculated principally to strike the non-Elgarians. The last movement, possibly because it is inherently somewhat less than a match to the rest, seemed to answer better to this treatment, which certainly gave to it a new importance in the scheme.

The second of Sir Thomas Beecham's concerts, given immediately after his recovery from indisposition, touched at hardly any point the perfection of the first. The first had seemed to promise for the series a singular degree of finish. The second was inclined to be sketchy, except at moments in a Mozart Symphony (C major, K. 425), wherein the Trio of the Minuet and the Finale disclosed again a matchless Mozartian interpreter, a master of fineness and grace who could teach, as they say, 'a thing or two' to both the eminent visiting conductors who had just been playing Mozart to us. It was a night of unpleasant weather, and Sir Thomas may have felt offended at the sight of many empty seats. There was a complete break-down in Madame Selma Kurz's Handelian aria (the 'Nightingale Song' from Il Penseroso—Milton sung in German!), and in Beethoven's third Pianoforte Concerto conductor and soloist (W. Backhaus) were not at one.

There was likewise a Beethoven Concerto (No. 4, soloist, Eugène d'Albert) at the Beecham concert of December 13, when the Alpine Symphony of Richard Strauss was played here for the second time this autumn. The work—or possibly the performance, over which great pains were spent—was applauded. Yet it seems inevitable that this inflated music must lapse. The processes of its rhetoric are all to be known in other works of Strauss which have the advantage of more substance and sense.

Felix Weingartner is very welcome—except when he smuggles one of his tiresome compositions into the programme. On November 26 he conducted the London Symphony Orchestra. The C minor Symphony of Brahms had not sounded so well for long, and the performance spoke for Weingartner's cool judgment and finely cultivated feeling. Mozart's E flat Symphony was well played, but a thought on the over-serious side. At this concert, Pablo Casals was the soloist, and created a diversion by breaking off early in Dvorák's 'Cello Concerto with a complaint of cramp. It was, however, so slight a visitation, that he was able to return later on and play the Concerto unsurpassably. Such an incident, and also that of the Beecham-Kurz mishap, was naturally grasped at by newspapers which begrudge the scantiest space for merely musical intelligence.

Serge Kussewitzky conducted the next concert of the L.S.O. It began with a Suite of Ancient Airs and Dances, modernised by Respighi. Perhaps it was because of Kussewitzky's extremely forcible manner of conducting that these 16th- and 17th-century measures appeared ill at ease. The Suite certainly seemed to fall between stools—neither really old nor really new. Berlioz's Roman Carnival Overture was excitingly played, and Debussy's Faun, taken extra-slowly and very carefully, sounded beautiful. There followed Elgar's Introduction and Allegro for strings. Kussewitzky's extraordinary vitality and prestige worked on the players to produce a strength and solidity of tone we do not always get. He seemed at the same time to be a stranger to Elgar, seeking in the work some critical decision which is absent from this passionate meditation. The Symphony was the Eroica. The public was at Kussewitzky's feet.

The programme of Sir Henry Wood's fourth Saturday afternoon symphony concert was Humperdinck's Hänsel and Gretel Overture, Elgar's second Symphony, Prokofiev's third Pianoforte Concerto (C), and three Dances from M. de Falla's Three-Cornered Hat. Was the hall over-heated on that grey winter afternoon, or was one's particular stall ill-placed, that the Symphony's great and familiar beauty seemed somewhat dim and overcast? If the Concerto were new, we certainly had heard M. Prokofiev do something uncommonly like it before. It is a queer thing to see and hear a Prokofiev Concerto. None but the composer has yet been known to play one. In a way it is infantile. You think of a singularly ugly baby solemnly shaking a rattle. But, no; it is not so human as that. It is curiously inhuman, and, at the same time, clever. You have it—it is marionette music. Prokofiev's art takes all the natural warmth out of the pianoforte and the orchestra, but inspires them with a sort of jerky, elfin nimbleness. You are as amusingly surprised at these five-finger exercises and the like, as at the unexpected feats of the rather dreadful little creatures of the Roman Teatro dei Piccoli. M. Prokofiev is a pince-sans-rire. We quite like him at a symphony concert once in a way. As for the de Falla Dances, how we all delight in them! Here is an exception among our great contemporaries—and reckoned great even by the Revue Musicale. He writes what quite a simple sense of hearing recognises as unmistakable music. He is like Holst in this—that he does not compose only for those initiates who have been passed through all the possible ordeals of a musical life.

Mr. Robert Newman's concert a fortnight later began in stately fashion with that Handel Overture (from one of the Chandos Anthems), as scored by Elgar, which brightened up a dull Sunday afternoon at the last Worcester Festival. The scoring is handsome without being so audaciously gay as that of Bach's C minor Fugue. Pablo Casals played Haydn and Bach at this concert. Casals's playing of the unaccompanied 'Cello Suites of Bach is a considerable compensation to us for living in this rather uncomfortable age. Let grumblers think of this when they wish they had lived under Nero, Julius II., or Queen Anne. C.

ILDEBRANDO PIZZETTI

Among the events of major interest this season must be reckoned the first visit to this country of Ildebrando Pizzetti (da Parma), who has taken part in several performances of his own works, besides devoting to them a special concert, at Wigmore Hall, on December 10. This provided the opportunity for the first hearing of his Sonata for 'cello and pianoforte, dated 1921, a worthy pendant to the Violin Sonata of two years earlier. Both works were included in the programme, the composer having for partner Mr. Arnold Trowell in the new work and M. Arrigo Serato in the Violin Sonata. The performances were, in the circumstances, authoritative. At this stage of his career, interest in Pizzetti's music centres upon the solution he will provide for the equation in which one factor is his own personality and the other the linear beauty of the old-new cantilena which has such attraction for him. He is not alone in presenting problems of this kind. They confront every composer who is at the same time a romantic in thought and modern in manner. Such men retain a sense of beauty that seeks a vehicle of expression reconcilable with the current vernacular. Pizzetti has found such a vehicle in a melodic line of plainsong-like character, whose new connotations give it an appearance of novelty—or, rather, rejuvenation. It is a fascinating medium, for to its charm it adds the precious quality of plasticity. It can be moulded to good purpose by a composer of Pizzetti's idiosyncrasies. But such modes of expression, like certain modes of verbal eloquence, carry their own danger. In the Violin Sonata this form of cantilena was used sparingly with considerable effect. In the Violoncello Sonata, Pizzetti uses it more freely, and the effect is sensibly lessened. Not that the work stands much below its predecessor—it runs it very close—but the mere fact that it is not its equal awakens doubts as to the durability of a beauty thus expressed. The Finale of the new work, in the form of a dialogue, is the best of its three movements, in the sense that it conveys the most vivid feeling of personality; but the second, molto concitato e angoscioso, is, perhaps, more satisfactory in the formal and technical sense.

The programme also included two groups of Pizzetti's songs, admirably sung by Mrs. Anne Thurnfield, save that one could easily tell which were old friends and which new acquaintances. The composer is one of the best song-writers of the day. That much has long been established by such examples as San Basilio and the well-known I Pastori. The latter, in particular, emphasises the romantic beauty of his style. In the Petrarchian sonnets this quality is less pronounced. It is present, but not paraded. This may make them less acceptable to some, but there is compensation in the texture. The aria from La Pisanella obviously belongs to a different order of ideas. The impression left by the programme as a whole is that Pizzetti is a somewhat isolated figure in modern music, a musician who is haunted by dreams, not all of which are completely realisable in the nervous atmosphere of to-day, but for that reason he contributes an element without which modern music would be appreciably the poorer.

JELLY D'ARANYI AND BAKTÓK

Of the sharp contrasts presented by the plan of Gerald Cooper's chamber concerts at Æolian Hall, none was more pronounced than that on November 30, which brought Béla Bartók into the centre of a scheme much occupied with gentle retrospection. Bartók stands for a mode of speech much less reticent. One of the greatest of his qualities is the absence of evasion. Musically, he calls a spade a spade without preparing his hearers for the truth or apologising for it afterwards. In his pianoforte writing and playing, he does not shirk the obvious truth that the pianoforte is an instrument of percussion. He accepts it, and plays and writes accordingly. Many of his most striking passages suggest a xylophone, except that in some curious, inexplicable, personal way he contrives to make percussive effects, sound lyrical in significance. In the Bagatelles, of which he played five, there are many such passages, and still more in his numerous arrangements of folk-songs. I confess that I prefer the pieces written in this manner to those in which he is lyrical by the use of lyrical means, as in the Dérzses.

Miss Jelly d'Aranyi was his associate in his own second Sonata, and in Beethoven's G major. The second of Bartók's two Sonatas is more concise than the first, but for that reason, also less self-explanatory and perhaps less accessible—unless we are prepared to meet the composer more than half way. In this the playing of Miss d'Aranyi is invaluable. In the last year or two she has developed not only a breadth of expression, but a depth of insight that rank her among the elect of interpretative artists. I have heard other readings of this Sonata which provided an excuse for those who are not receptive to it, but as played by her with the composer it triumphs over its own sparseness of conciliatory blandishments. But when it comes to Beethoven, give me some other pianist than Bartók! The programme concluded with Szymanowski's Notturmo and Tarantella—interesting show-pieces, though rather tawdry in some respects. E. E.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Madame Selma Kurz sang twice, the first time at Sir Thomas Beecham's concert, the second time at the Albert Hall, where her 'Mad Scene' from Lucia was applauded. Apparently there is a chance of a new vogue for music of this old, formal, artificial style. After all, it is a fair equivalent of the concertos of the instrumentalists. It is a sort of snobbishness that rules out feats of vocal gymnasts, while there is never any discouragement for the concertomongers. Of course, a piece like the 'Mad Scene' is in point of emotion entirely null, but I for one feel inclined to claim some merit for its decorative effect. Our heart-strings are not plucked—Donizetti certainly is not the composer for those who, as the saying goes, have hearts bigger than their bodies. But there are music-lovers not averse to giving their heart-strings a rest; and there must be some æsthetic grounds for the pleasure we feel in the faultless execution by such a singer. Madame Selma Kurz was not at her best at the Beecham concert—a concert which had far too many signs of hastiness in preparation. You may give an improvised performance of the music of the tumultuously emotional fellows like Wagner, Strauss, or Scriabin, and no one may notice the difference. But the older music which Madame Kurz sang (Handel and Mozart), makes quite precise demands, and there is no way of evading them by eleventh-hour raids of brilliance. At her Albert Hall concert, where the lady was monarch of all she surveyed, she proved herself to be, so far as we know, the best living exponent of the arts and graces of the high soprano.

Mr. Robert Maitland, whom we had not heard for years, gave a recital entirely of Schubert at Wigmore Hall. He possesses an altogether uncommon baritone voice, which at once strikes invigoratingly on the ear. It is a manly voice, and although very considerable in volume, it avoids being ponderous. Throughout a wide range, its quality gave us unharassed pleasure, and, more than that, Mr. Maitland was heart and soul in the music. The pity was that he did not believe that the rest of us felt Schubert's natural spell. From first to last on this evening, which might have been such a distinguished pleasure, Mr. Maitland insisted on furiously battering at the gates of our attention. It was quite unnecessary. We would have let him in with a single knock. Music of this order does not, after all, require so much conscious interpretation and dramatisation. Frankly, Mr. Maitland spoilt nearly every song by excess of stresses, of word-painting, of contrasts and explosions.

The excellence of Mr. Brabazon Lowther's diction in itself makes his singing worth hearing. At his recital at Wigmore Hall, this cultivated singer again showed us that proper speech is the beginning and pretty well the end, too, of the singer's art. We noted that here and there, where Mr. Lowther was inclined to sacrifice diction for the sake of dramatic effects, tone too departed and the sense of the song was largely lost. To correct the natural heaviness of his voice he has a telling way of floating his soft tones. Always when he did not strain for effects his quality was consistent and agreeable. The Wie bist du, meine Königin of Brahms was wholly beautiful. He did not sing the Am Meer of Schubert with all the fineness of legato style that was wanted, and there was not enough contrast of colour in the Erl King.

Madame Marya Freund, who came to London to offer us the peculiar treat of Schönberg's Pierrot Lunaire, also sang some Schumann songs at her concerts, and on the strength of this we wished she would stay here longer and sing more. We heartily admired both the beauty of her voice and the elegance of her technique. The Frühlingsnacht and the Du bist wie eine Blume were model singing. They were calculated to the last fineness of shade. Based on this solid vocal accomplishment, Madame Freund attacked the quasi-impossible Pierrot, and made of its exorbitant melody a musical thing, whereas any singer less securely grounded could have been only intolerable.

Mr. Cecil Sherwood, a tenor, sang at the Albert Hall one Sunday afternoon in precisely the music and the manner which we expect from tenors at the Albert Hall on Sundays. He has thoroughly acquired an Italian manner. It is not a great voice. It was sweetly lyric, and in some ways well managed. He preserved a good cantilena, and could 'spread' his tones without losing his breath control. But he has not yet got the knack of 'spinning' his voice, and his singing in English was not distinguished.

Miss Stella Murray, contralto, sang at Æolian Hall. She inspired her listeners with a sense of security. We felt assured after a couple of songs that she would not make a mistake either of technique or taste. There was an uncommon dignity in Miss Murray's singing, a natural dignity, not rigid or affected. Hugo Wolf's Come, Mary, take comfort, from the Spanish book, could hardly have been better sung, and generally in songs of a contemplative type she showed a delicate earnestness, and sang with a sympathetic vision quite different from the average contralto. Miss Murray did not exactly stir the pulses of her audience. Her art was rather honorably careful than vivid, but this sculptural style had its own beauty. She sang in English throughout—real English, a language we very much like to hear, though it is one of the most uncommon in our concert-rooms.

Mrs. Anne Thursfield gave a recital at Wigmore Hall of songs having reference to 'birds, beasts, and fishes.' She is a singer with technical merits to which we have often gladly paid homage. Yet in recent months her voice has not in all ways been giving us so much pleasure. We detect a new inclination—when the text calls for anything like intensity—for her tones to become harsh. At her best, Mrs. Thursfield commands a very beautiful fineness. It is a great mistake to condemn such singing as 'small.' It is easily ruined, without anything much taking its place, by a mistaken attempt to increase mere volume. We have heard too little lately of those exquisite soft notes, with which she can rival anyone. Singing some Pizzetti the other day, she was at times positively hard. Four pleasant songs by Gordon Bryan were on her programme, and the other English composers were Arthur Bliss, Herbert Howells, Graham Peel, and Armstrong Gibbs.

Miss Dorothy Moulton gave a concert at Wigmore Hall—with Mr. Anthony Bernard and the strings of the London Chamber Orchestra—which showed artistic intelligence in its making. Miss Moulton sang, among other sings, some arias of Rameau and a series of Lark Songs from the 17th to the 20th-century. Miss Moulton's ambition has for the moment out-run her power. Her voice gave indications of some brightness and charm, but she has not yet learned to use it with freedom or spontaneity. We felt too much the impression of a timid and ill-prepared candidate undergoing a severe examination. It was not that Miss Moulton was particularly nervous, but her lack of a flowing tone naturally made her ill at ease. It was difficult to catch a single word, no matter in what language she sang, and Mr. Bernard had to perform lightning tricks to fit in the accompaniment. Certain faults in the singer's intonation were like the rest of her execution, assuredly not to be attributed to any lack of musical feeling—for we, indeed, had the impression that Miss Moulton possessed uncommon keenness of intelligence which at some later date may render her a considerable acquisition to our concert-life. But she simply has as yet not conquered the means of its expression.

M. Ulysses Lappas, a tenor from Greece—of all places—sang at the Albert Hall in what we had always imagined to be a typically Italian manner. Perhaps it ought now to be called Mediterranean. This visitor from the Near East proved himself to have gifts which must seriously rival those of the Martinellis, the Giglis, and the like. He indicated, too, that he was profoundly aware of this fact. There is no need to enumerate the items of this Sunday afternoon concert. M. Lappas is purely a singer. He has a wonderful voice and an astonishingly glib way of using it. It is a little darker than that of the average lyric tenor, yet hardly verging on actual robustness. Of course, the typical tenor music of Mascagni and Puccini is made, as it were, for him. He began an English song with the words, 'Aw, laavly naight!' H. J. K.

CHORAL CONCERTS

Haydn's The Creation, which floated out of sight in old-fashioned simplicity, might almost sail in again on the reaction against new fashions and complications. Mr. Arthur Fagge and the London Choral Society are apparently willing that it should, for they performed it at Queen's Hall on November 28. Both the performance and the work were quite enjoyable, and one can confess now—at this safe distance—that the best part was the descriptive catalogue of birds, beasts, and fishes. It was so delightfully amusing.

Ealing Philharmonic Society again covered itself with credit on November 23, when Mr. E. Victor Williams conducted Elgar's The Black Knight and Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens. On the part of the South-West Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Arthur Saunders, there is a performance of Elijah to record in November. The Civil Service Choir, which Mr. Rutland Boughton conducts, showed a keen sense of expression in an Elgar programme on November 28; on the same evening the Civil Service Orchestra, under Mr. Patterson Parker, was playing Tchaikovsky's fifth Symphony at Queen's Hall. Westminster Choral Society has been brought to high capacity by Mr. Vincent Thomas, as was well proved throughout a performance of The Messiah at Central Hall on December 4. Alexandra Palace Choral Society and Mr. Allen Gill, still rejoicing to be back under their native roof (now a safe and effective covering), gave Edward German's Tom Jones and Hubert Bath's The Wedding of Shon Maclean on December 8. In our natural desire to encourage the practice of the gentle, allaying art of music among the employees of banks, we praise the singing of the National Provident and Union Bank Musical Society, under Mr. Herbert J. Baggs, on December 7, and of Barclay's Bank Musical Society, under Mr. Herbert Pierce, on December 12—both at Queen's Hall. Each of these Societies has an efficient amateur orchestra, that of Barclay's being conducted by Mr. H. J. Rouse.

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

The Novello Choir gave a concert of Bach and of old and new English music at Bishopsgate Institute on December 13, Mr. Harold Brooke conducting. The programme was such a delightful example of what can be done by a small choir, with a few good instrumentalists and three soloists, that it may be quoted in full:

Purcell, chorus, Soul of the World; Bach, Cantata No. 21, My spirit was in heaviness (soloists, Miss Maryan Elmar, Messrs. Roland Jackson and Joseph Farrington); Holst, Fugal Concerto for flute, oboe, and strings (soloists, Messrs. D. S. Wood and W. S. Hinchliff); Vaughan Williams, Walford Davies, R. Quilter, and J. Ireland, songs, sung by Mr. Farrington; part-songs, Elgar, After many a dusty mile; Vaughan Williams, Sound Sleep; Bax, The Boar's Head and Now is the Time of Christymas; Arthur Bliss, Rhapsody; choral songs, Weelkes, Gloria; Byrd, Cast off all doubtful care and This day Christ was born; Holst, Alleluia.

The Cantata is of course one of the more particularly famous. It contains the surprising dramatic duet between the Soul and the Saviour, and a very splendid chorus, 'Now again be thou joyful.' For all Bach's magnificence, the great Christmas Motet of Byrd did not appear diminished at all. It was the crown of the evening's music. The charming orchestral pieces of Holst and Bliss fitted into the scheme well. The choral singing, while not by any means faultless, fairly gave us the gist of the music. Miss Elmar's sweet and musically singing pleased. Mr. Farrington's voice is a bass of great resonance, admirably managed. C.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWITH—At the College concert, on November 24, Bach's Overture in D, Dvorák's Nigger Quartet, Bantock's vocal octet, Arranmore, and songs by Vaughan Thomas and Vaughan Williams were performed. Dr. de Lloyd conducted, and the orchestra played Handel's Largo in memory of W. J. Cross, ex-service student and member of the orchestra. —M. Louis Fleury, the well-known flautist, played at the College concert on November 29, his programme including Bach's Sonata in F, one of the six Sonatas for clavier and flute (with Sir Walford Davies), and he joined a College trio in Mozart's Quartet in A for flute and strings. The Choral Union sang Bach's Jesu, Joy of man's desiring, Byrd's Justorum Anima, and two old Carols, and Sir Walford and Mr. Clements played the Bach G minor Organ Fugue as a pianoforte duet. —On December 6, the first and second parts of the Christmas Oratorio were performed in St. Michael's Church by the College Choral and Orchestral Union, Dr. de Lloyd conducting in the absence through illness of Sir Walford Davies. —The oratorio was repeated on the following day at the College concert, when Mr. Léon Goossens played a Handel Sonata for oboe and pianoforte with Mr. Charles McLean.

BATH.—The Choral Society performed King Olaf on November 27, conducted by Mr. H. T. Sims. The soloists were Miss Fifiine de la Côte, Mr. Hardy Williamson, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

BIDEFORD.—The Choral Society performed Hiawatha on November 29, the principal singers being Madame Delines, Mr. Charles Keyword, and Mr. Henry Turnpenney.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—A novel feature of the City Orchestra Sunday concert on November 25 was the appearance of a trio of Elizabethan singers. The Misses Maisie Southall, Ruby Taylor, and Gwen Washbourne attained a delightful ensemble in madrigals by Weelkes, Wilbye, and Morley. At the same concert Hadyn's Surprise Symphony was given, and Mr. Leonard Dennis played Böellmann's Variations for violoncello with taste and care. —On the following Sunday, Mr. Appleby Matthews drew from the Orchestra a good performance of Beethoven's fourth Symphony. The Egmont Overture was magnificently played; in the Debussy Dances for harp and strings Miss Winifred Cockerill was the soloist. Arias from The Marriage of Figaro were sung by Miss Claire Davis, a singer with a voice of beautiful quality and admirable interpretative ability. —The Philharmonic Quartet — a Birmingham combination — gave a superb reading of Elgar's Quintet at a Mid-day concert on November 22. Miss Elsie Stell played the second violin part. —A song recital by Dr. Tom Goodey found the singer in rather poor voice, but no whit less fascinating than usual on the interpretative side of his art.—Madame Grace Digby and M. Cluytens (of Brussels) combined in a violin and pianoforte recital on November 22.—For her pianoforte recital on November 27, Miss Mary Abbott had a rather hackneyed programme. In Schumann's Symphonic Studies she had a difficult task for a young player, and her interpretation did not reveal the inner power of the work. Some Chopin Studies and a group of modern pieces were given with the deft technique and brilliance characteristic of the player. In the Four Serious Songs of Brahms, Mr. Karl Melene, a rapidly improving baritone, sang with great intelligence and fine management of voice.—Among 'celebrities' recently heard in the city are Backhaus, Rosina Buckman, and Maurice d'Oisy.—Dr. Adrian C. Boulton conducted a fine performance of Berlioz's Faust, with the Festival Choral Society and the City Orchestra. Miss Doris Vane and Messrs. Robert Parker and Webster Millar were in the solo parts.—Holst's Spring and Summer, with Byrd's Justorum Anima, were among the vocal works given by the Walsall Madrigal Society at a Walsall Civic Board concert on November 29.—The New Concerts Society's activities have included a pianoforte recital by Wilfred Ridgway, with Miss Florence Hale as vocalist, and a programme by the English Trio, which included works by Ravel and Schumann.—A first Birmingham performance of Delius's 'Cello Sonata was given by Mr. Frederick Bye and Mr. Ridgway.—Dr. Boulton conducted the City Orchestra's third symphony concert, giving finely prepared performances of Stanford's D minor Symphony and Parry's Symphonic Variations. Mr. Zacharewitsch was a temperamental, rather than a technically ideal, soloist in the Elgar Violin Concerto.

BOGNOR.—The programme announced by the Bognor Philharmonic Society for its concert on January 24, under the direction of Mr. A. G. Whitehead, consists of Coleridge-Taylor's A Tale of Old Japan and Bridge's The Flag of England.

BOURNEMOUTH.—There was nothing tentative in the first concert of the Bournemouth Municipal Choir on November 28. The work was no less than Berlioz's Faust, and the performance was in every way to be admired. For soloists there were Miss Doris Vane, Mr. Richard Ripley, Mr. Charles Tree, and Mr. Richard Attridge. The choir—which of course Sir Dan Godfrey conducts—is about two hundred and fifty strong.

BRISTOL.—Pagliacci and Max Bruch's setting of Schiller's The Lay of the Bell were given by the Choral Society on November 17, with Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss May Keene, Mr. Arthur Jordan, and Mr. Robert Parker as principals, and Mr. George Riseley conducting.—At the eighty-eighth annual Ladies' Night concert on November 27, the Madrigal Society included in its programme two Fantasias for string sextet by Byrd, the instrumentalists also accompanying the madrigals Who made thee, Hob, forsake the plough, and My little sweet darling, both by Byrd. Several other pieces by Weelkes, Byrd, Pearsall, Parry, Wood, and Savile were sung. Mr. Herbert W. Hunt conducted.—On December 1, the Cecilian Choral Society sang the choral march from Berlioz's Faust and a choral fantasia from La Reine de Saba. The choir, under Mr. Charles Read, numbered about two hundred.

CARDIFF.—Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Ware have organized a series of concert-lectures, at which Beethoven's nine Symphonies will be presented. The first Symphony was played by Mr. Ware's Orchestra of fifty performers on November 24; Sir Walford Davies gave textual notes.—On the same day Sir Walford lectured before school teachers on 'Music in Elementary Schools.'—On December 1, Backhaus played pianoforte music by Palmgren (Bird Song) and Scriabin (Study in D flat).—Mr. Lionel Falkman's Symphony Orchestra played Beethoven's fifth Symphony and Glinka's Polacca from Life for the Czar, on December 2.

CHATHAM.—On November 20, at the concert given by the R.E. Orchestra, Lieut. Neville Flux conducting, the programme included Schubert's first Symphony, Borodin's On the Steppes of Central Asia, and Raff's Die Fischerinnen von Procula.—Smetana's Vltava and Raff's Im Walde

Symphony were played by the R.E. Orchestra on December 4. Lieut. Neville Flux conducted the above, and also his own Festival March.—On November 28, the Rochester, Strood, Chatham, and Gillingham Choral Society, which has removed from Rochester to Chatham, was associated with the London Symphony Orchestra in the performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio. Mr. Hylton Stewart conducted, and the soloists were Miss Flora Mann, Miss Sybil Cropper, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Stuart Robertson.

EDINBURGH.—M. Kussewitzky was the conductor at the Paterson orchestral concert on November 26, and the programme included a Concerto by Vivaldi, orchestrated by Siliti, with Mr. Herbert Walton at the organ, Tchaikovsky's Francesca da Rimini, Liadov's Five Russian Folk-songs for Orchestra, and Rimsky-Korsakov's Dobruinushka and Flight of the Bumble-bee.—A new departure in the development of a taste for music among school-children was inaugurated by Messrs. Paterson on November 30, when an orchestra of twenty-six performers, conducted by Mr. Herbert Wiseman, Director of Music to the City Education Authority, played orchestral music to an audience of school children.—At the Reid orchestral concert on December 2, Mr. Ernst von Dohnányi was the pianist in Beethoven's Emperor Concerto, and the orchestra also played Mozart's Impresario Overture and the Scherzo from Mendelssohn's Octet for strings.—At the Paterson orchestral concert on December 3, conducted by M. Kussewitzky, the Scottish Orchestra played a Haydn Symphony and music by Scriabin, Debussy, and Wagner.—At the annual Highland and Scottish concert in Usher Hall, on December 5, the Gaelic Choir, conducted by Mr. Neil Orr, sang A Raasay Lament (arranged by Granville Bantock) and Hebrides and other Gaelic melodies. The Gaelic Choir Quartet sang Och nan Och (a lament).

EXETER.—At the November formal concert of the Chamber Music Society, the principal numbers were a Suite in A minor for string quartet, by Martin Shaw, Three Pastoral Songs by Quilter with pianoforte, violin, and cello accompaniment, and part-songs by Charles Wood (To music bent) and Stanford (Shadow Dancers and Allen-a-Dale), with string accompaniment.—On November 18, the Male-Voice Choir was conducted by Mr. W. J. Cotton in a programme including How merrily we live (Este), Spring's Delights (Muller), and Mendelssohn's The Hunter's Farewell.—The Oratorio Society, having been re-formed to great advantage under the sole conductorship of Mr. Allan Allen, performed Hiawatha on November 28, with orchestra. The choral work reached a high level, and the principal singers were Miss Olive Jenkins, Mr. Walter Widdop, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.—Incidental music was composed by Mr. E. R. Holligan, for performances of Richard II., at St. Luke's College, on December 4 and 5. It was scored for pianoforte and strings, Mr. Holligan being at the pianoforte, and the College orchestra being assisted by friends. Mr. W. Bird conducted.

EXMOUTH.—The head-mistress of Southlands School has arranged a series of concerts to be given by visiting artists and open to the public. At the first of these, on December 3, Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay, assisted by Mr. Kenneth Mackinlay at the pianoforte, gave a folk-song recital.

GLASGOW.—A very large audience attended the first concert of the season of the Orchestral Society, on November 17. M. Kussewitzky conducted, and will also conduct the succeeding three concerts. The programme comprised Mozart's Kleine Nachtmusik, the Pathetic Symphony, and Till Eulenspiegel.—On December 1, M. Kussewitzky conducted the Scottish Orchestra in Le Poème de l'Extase of Scriabin, Haydn's Symphony in G, Debussy's L'après-midi d'un faune, and some Wagner music.—The Choral Union joined the Orchestral Union on December 4 for a performance of Berlioz's Faust, conducted by Mr. Wilfrid Senior.

GUILDFORD.—The special programme of the Symphony Orchestra's concert, on the afternoon of November 28, was put to the service of Mr. J. B. McEwen, who conducted his Solway Symphony and Overture to a Comedy, and Mr. Roger Quilter, who conducted his Children's Overture and accompanied some of his songs. Mr. Claud Powell, the regular conductor of the Orchestra, took charge of the Casse-Noisette Suite.—In the evening Mr. Powell and the Orchestra gave a 'promenade' concert.

KEIGHLEY.—Sullivan's In Memoriam Overture was played by the Keighley and District Orchestral Society, under Mr. Arthur Lloyd, in memory of the late J. Summerscales, who was honorary conductor of the Society from 1898 to 1923. Songs were given by Miss Florence Austral and Mr. Robert Radford.

LEEDS.—The first movement of Asger Hamerik's Symphonie Spirituelle, Op. 38, was played on November 30 by Mr. Edward Maude's String Orchestra. Other items in an exceptionally good programme were a Serenade by Wolf-Ferrari, Percy Grainger's Molly on the Shore, a six-part Fantasia by Byrd, and a piece from Dunhill's Chiddingfold Suite. Miss Etty Ferguson chose her songs well.—Two-pianoforte music was played by Miss Lucy Pierce and Mr. Charles Kelly, at the University on December 4. The items included a Bach Concerto, Arnold Bax's Moy Mell, and Arensky's Silhouettes.—Mr. Arthur J. Dobson lectured on 'Brahms and his Requiem' at the Y.M.C.A. on December 8.

LEICESTER.—Nearly three thousand people listened to the concert of the Leicester Symphony Orchestra last month. The programme, conducted by Dr. Malcolm Sargent, contained Herbert Howells's Procession, Schubert's C major Symphony, Chabrier's España, Elgar's Bavarian Dances, and, with Madame Suggia as soloist, Haydn's D major 'Cello Concerto.

LINCOLN.—The annual concert of the Lincoln Musical Society, conducted by Dr. J. G. Bennett, was notable for a fine performance of The Mystic Trumpeter. The choir also gave Balfour Gardiner's News from Whydah, and joined Mr. Harold Williams in Stanford's Songs of the Fleet. Brahms's Violin Concerto was played by Miss Isolde Menges.

LIVERPOOL.—The Bon Marché concerts, directed by Dr. J. E. Wallace, have become very popular. On November 21, a programme of Borodin, Mozart, and Ravel was played by the Philharmonic Quartet in commemoration of the Weekes Tercentenary.—Miss E. Levin lectured on November 26, before members of the Literary and Philosophical Society, on Elizabethan music. Illustrations sung included madrigals and ballets by Weekes and Morley, and pieces by Byrd, Gibbons, and Wilbye.—At Crane Hall, on November 28, Mr. Anderson Tyrer gave a pianoforte recital, playing a Sonata Op. 10 (MS.), by Allsebrooke Hinds, and music by Scriabin and Albeniz. Mr. J. E. Matthews played a Violin Sonata in E minor by Veracini.—At the second concert of the classical series, on December 1, a pianoforte recital was given by d'Albert.—Mr. Albert Sammons gave a recital at Crane Hall on December 4, and Miss Doreen Kendal sang.—Mr. Josef Holbrooke gave an address at the second of Mr. John Tobin's informal chamber concerts on December 4. Several of his compositions were performed, including a Horn Trio, a Ballade for horn and pianoforte, a group of songs, and a Violin Sonata.—The Tobin Trio, at Crane Hall on December 5, repeated the Delius Triple Concerto which they played last year, and also performed Casella's Sciliana and Burlesca and John Ireland's second Trio.—At the Bon Marché recital, on December 6, Miss Dorothy Silk sang Old English songs, with Dr. Wallace at the pianoforte.—The meeting of the British Music Society on December 6 was occupied by chamber music played by the McCullagh String Quartet. Armstrong Gibbs's third Quartet in E minor and two pieces by Alfano and Casella were included.

MANCHESTER.—The two finest orchestral programmes in the closing weeks of the year were well-nigh ruined—i.e., by fog in the case of Weingartner's first appearance here on November 24, at the Brand Lane series; and by a combination of fog and election excitement on the night of December 6, when Casals appeared at Hallé's and played in Strauss's Don Quixote. My personal concern that day was with the fate of Free Trade rather than with Don Quixote's absorption in chivalrous romance, and I can give only second-hand impressions. No such artist has been identified with this work since Becker, of Frankfort, used to play it in the late 'nineties. A few more opportunities for joint preparation between Hamilton Harty, Casals, and the Hallé band would make this work one of the most memorable things in contemporary executive art. There is an immeasurable gulf fixed between this Strauss poem and the puerilities of the Alpine Symphony, done also under Mr. Hamilton Harty on November 22. There was no inordinately swollen orchestra, and there is nothing 'Uebermensch-ian' in the work. I chanced to hear it twice in one day, but was hardly prepared to find its superficialities wear quite so thin as they did by the time of the second hearing. For sheer grandeur of conception the few opening bars in Zarathustra, suggestive of the Evocation of Sunrise, are worth more than all this Alpine score. The place for such music is in a gargantuan D. W. Griffiths cinema production, where the card-index method of thematic indication might have some appropriateness. No work at Manchester in recent years has had so much time spent on its preparation, and Mr. Hamilton Harty and his men have rarely toiled so unweariedly for such meagre æsthetic reward.—The Weingartner concert was abundantly worth while for the joy of hearing the Eroica done with such calm and effortless ease—the structure rose before your gaze, mass upon mass, in all the grandeur and simplicity of its symmetry, like some glorified St. George's Hall of Liverpool. Nothing quite so impressive in this kind has been heard here since Richter laid down his baton. I know some who travelled many miles to hear the concert, and found in Walter Rummel's playing of two Bach Chorale Preludes more than ample compensation for their pains.—The Brahms Requiem at Hallé's, on November 29, caught the choir on an 'off night'—those closing days of November played sad havoc with choral singing all through the North. Miss Suddaby and Mr. Harold Williams were the soloists. Luckily the Hymn of Jesus, originally intended as a complementary work in this programme, had been postponed to a later date.—Berlioz's Symphonie Funèbre et Triomphale is Hamilton Harty's latest idea in his course of Berlioz propaganda. The Hallé band was reinforced by a full military band. The string players are not utilized until the closing 'Deification' movement, and then are inaudible in the surge of brass and wood-wind tone. Berlioz's orchestration of the Rákoczy March has given us the musical symbol of La Gloire, but the Triomphale section of the Symphony falls immeasurably short of the inspiration to be found in the Hungarian March. In much perplexity one attempts, however unsuccessfully, to put himself at the point of view of those who took part in this tenth anniversary of the 1830 Revolution, and wonder whether this music meant as much to them as Elgar's Carillon does to-day to us, and whether eighty years hence the Carillon or Polonia, which move as so intensely, will then carry as little meaning as does this Berlioz Symphony.—The Hallé performances of The Messiah, on December 20 and 21, were the ninety-ninth and hundredth renderings under the Hallé auspices. On December 21 four singers from twenty choral societies in the Manchester sphere of influence were invited to take part—two quartets came from Liverpool, one from Leeds, one from Bradford, and one from the Potteries. The Centenary solo quartet was Agnes Nicholls, Isobel Maclaren, Arthur Jordan, and Norman Allin.—The Co-operative Wholesale Society Male-Voice Choir at its December concert engaged a small section of Hallé players who accompanied them in Schubert's Song of the Spirits, Mendelssohn's To the Sons of Art, and a chorus from Elgar's Coronation Ode, and, under Mr. Harry Mortimer's direction, played half-a-dozen miscellaneous orchestral miniatures. This is the first time in the history of this Society that orchestral work or accompaniment has been employed. It is a promising start, and capable of considerable extension.—The outstanding features in chamber music have been the Catterall Quartet readings of the Ravel in F (November 21) and the César Franck Quartet (December 4), in which Mr. R. J. Forbes participated. These are two works in which the Catterall group excel.—The third Hamilton Harty chamber concert (December 3) brought Esposito's A major Sonata, played for the first time here by Miss Isolde Menges and Mr. Harty; this was followed by a strongly romantic reading of the Kreutzer Sonata.—Among the noteworthy recitals must be named that of Mr. Robert Gregory, on December 4, in connection with the Tuesday Noon-tide Beethoven Sonata series, and Mr. Charles Neville's recital, on November 30, of about a score of songs (mostly in MS.) by Mr. George Whittaker, of Rochdale.

H. C.

MONKSEATON.—The Monkseaton Musical Society gave a concert at Whitley Bay on December 11. The choir, conducted by Mr. A. J. Milner, sang madrigals and part-songs by Marenzio, Byrd, Vaughan Williams, Rutland Boughton, and others.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—Aberpennar Orchestral Society played the Unfinished Symphony, Tchaikovsky's Ballet Egyptian, and Quilter's Children's Overture, on November 25, Sir Walford Davies conducting.

NEWCASTLE.—The Philharmonic Orchestra played Holst's St. Paul's Suite, Schumann's Piano-forte Concerto (with Miss Olive Tomlinson as soloist), and Elgar's Enigma Variations on November 17. Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted.—Newcastle and Gateshead Choral Union opened its new season on November 21, performing Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony and Elgar's Bavarian Highlands, with Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Stuart Robinson as soloists. The Orchestra played the Overture to Die Meistersinger, and Mr. Edgar L. Bainton conducted.—At his recital on November 21, M. Cortôt played Vivaldi's Concert da Camera, all the Chopin Preludes, and Schumann's Etudes Symphoniques.

NEWPORT.—The Chamber Music Orchestra from the University of Wales, at Aberystwith, illustrated a lecture given by Sir Walford Davies on November 20, and played the lecturer's Peter Pan Suite, a Quartet by Kenneth Harding, Schumann's Piano-forte Quintet, Op. 44, and Dvorák's Op. 96.

OXFORD.—The Léner Quartet played Ravel's Quartet in F, Brahms's in A minor, and Haydn's in D, on November 17.—On November 18, the Countess Helena Morsztyn gave a piano-forte recital, assisted by Mr. Loris Blofield (violin).—At a song recital on November 22, Miss Una Bates sang a Christmas Carol by Arnold Bax, and some of Parry's English Lyrics.—On November 25, the Swindon Male Choir gave a concert at this town, under the direction of Mr. A. Wilson.—On November 27, Casals and Miss Fanny Davies played Sonatas by Sammartini (G major) and Brahms (Op. 99). Madame Susan Metcalfe-Casals sang, with her husband at the piano-forte, several French 15th-century songs. The occasion was one of the subscription concerts.—At the City Police concert, on November 28, the Oxford Gleemen sang part-songs, under Mr. H. L. Wilsdon.—On November 30, at a chamber concert in the Assembly Room, Miss Marjorie McTavish played 18th-century piano-forte music, and other pieces by Balfour Gardiner and Dohnányi (Rhapsody).—At his recital on December 1, in the Town Hall, Cortôt played the Schumann Etudes Symphoniques, including the five posthumous variations, Debussy's Children's Corner, and a Liszt group.

PLYMOUTH.—On November 28, at the first of two concerts to be given that evening, the Orchestral Society played Glazounov's sixth Symphony and Tchaikovsky's Suite, The Sleeping Beauty, under Mr. Walter Weekes. Mr. Robert Chignell sang a song of his own, An Old Warrior.

PORTSMOUTH.—Emsworth Musical Society performed The Erl-King's Daughter on December 5, conducted by Mr. Alfred Agate. Sundry pieces followed, including a part-song with orchestra, In Cawsand Bay, by Mr. Robert Chignell, who was the baritone soloist of the concert and who conducted his own work.

SCARBOROUGH.—The Musical Society opened its winter session on November 21 with a performance of Carmen, the choir, numbering two hundred, being augmented by members of the Scalby Choral Society. Mr. A. C. Keeton conducted.—With the assistance of the Hallé Orchestra the Philharmonic Society performed Gounod's Faust on November 27.

SHEFFIELD.—The Five o'clock concert on November 28 was a recital by Mr. Stanley Kaye (piano-forte), with Miss Mabel Baker and Mr. Max Lewis (vocalists).—The subscription concert brought Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Jelly d'Aranyi, and Mr. York Bowen on November 29. Miss Silk sang operatic airs from Handel, and modern English songs.—The Amateur Musical Society gave Dvorák's The Spectre's Bride and the Finale of the New World Symphony, under Dr. Staton, on December 5.

SIDMOUTH.—On December 7, Misses Jelly d'Aranyi and Adila d'Aranyi gave a two-violin recital, assisted at the piano-forte by Mr. Bertram Harrison. The programme included Bach's Double Concerto, a Duo by Spohr, and Brahms's Sonata in G.

SWANSEA.—An excellent series of 'Swansea Chamber Music Concerts' is in progress. The November concert brought the Philharmonic String Quartet in Mozart, Schubert, and Debussy.—On December 13, the programme was in the hands of Mr. John Buckley (vocalist), Mr. Reginald Paul (piano-forte), and Mr. Morgan Lloyd (violin).

WAKEFIELD.—At the 'Wakefield Musical Evening' on December 7, Mr. Anderson Tyrer played a new Piano-forte Sonata by Mr. Ailsebrook Hinds, a student at the Royal College of Music.

MUSIC IN IRELAND

The Belfast Philharmonic Society gave its second concert for the season on November 16, to which Miss Elsie Suddaby and Madame Fachiri notably contributed. Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens and other items were adequately interpreted by choir and orchestra, under Mr. E. Godfrey Brown.

Belfast audiences enjoyed a three weeks' season of opera by the Carl Rosa Company, commencing on November 19. The première of Bubbles, by Hubert Bath, on November 26, was well received. The composer conducted.

The Royal Dublin Society's piano-forte and strings (Esposito, Bridge, and Twelvvetres) recital on November 19, drew a large audience. Nothing could have been better than the playing of the Brahms Trio. On December 3, under the same auspices, Solomon gave a piano-forte recital. It proved to be interesting, but not convincing.

German musicians are re-appearing in Ireland. The latest importations are Herr Reuter, organist of St. Mel's R.C. Cathedral, Langford, and Herr Franz Born, organist of Carlow R.C. Cathedral.

Cortôt's piano-forte recitals at Ulster Hall, Belfast, (November 23), and at the Theatre Royal, Dublin (November 24), attracted large and appreciative audiences.

Mr. Tudor Davies, at La Scala Theatre, Dublin, on November 25, delighted a large audience, and Mr. Harry Dearth drew large houses on December 2.

On November 26 the Philharmonic Quartet gave a chamber recital at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society. Much interest centred in the Bax Quartet, especially the charming treatment of an Irish air in the last movement.

The Civic Guard Band (Dublin) is offering a generous scale of pay to bandsmen, viz., £3 10s. a week, increasing by annual increments to £4 10s.

Gilbert and Sullivan operas (The Mikado, Patience, The Yeomen of the Guard, and The Gondoliers) were capably given at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, during the fortnight December 3-15, by the Rathmines and Rathgar Musical Society, under the baton of Mr. Thomas H. Weaving.

Among those Corporations which have contributed to the Free State Loan is the Royal Irish Academy of Music.

The Free State Army School of Music, with a total personnel of two hundred and ninety-four, is now established at Beggar's Bush Barracks, Dublin, with Mr. J. Coughlan as Commandant.

At the second symphony concert in Wellington Hall, Belfast, on December 2, Miss Carrie Tubb was the vocalist, and was rapturously applauded. The orchestra, under Mr. Godfrey Brown, played a selection including Elgar's Dream Children and Foulds's Keltic Suite.

On December 8, Backhaus, Rosina Buckman, and Maurice d'Oisy gave a 'celebrity' concert at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, repeating their programme of the previous evening at Ulster Hall, Belfast. Mr. Percy Kahn was a good accompanist.

Dublin University Choral Society, now in its eighty-seventh year, gave a really fine performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah, in the Examination Hall, on December 7, under the baton of the Rev. George H. P. Hewson.

A Polish pianist, M. Adolphe Borschke, gave a récital at La Scala, Dublin, on December 9, and made a favourable impression, especially in Debussy's Claire de Lune. At the Theatre Royal, on December 10, M. Maaskoff and Mr. R. J. Forbes gave a pianoforte and violin recital under the auspices of the R.D.S. Altogether it proved a tame performance.

The death of Mr. Edward Martyn removes a great patron of music and the drama. He gave £10,000 to endow the Palestrina Choir in the R.C. pro-Cathedral, Dublin, and subsidised orchestral and classical concerts.

Messiah performances have been given at Belfast, Lisburn, Waterford, and other Irish towns with considerable success, during the week December 10-14.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

A SOLEMN PERFORMANCE OF BEETHOVEN'S

'MISSA SOLEMNIS'

A performance of Beethoven's Mass in D just now means more than a simple concert. It is a solemnity. This was what everybody felt when this gigantic work, after some years' interval, was given by Siegfried Ochs with the Academy Choir. Probably no other work of Beethoven's reveals the same measure of spiritual struggle against depressing forces. All technical difficulties, so much the greater the more the composer lived in isolation from the external world, are here victoriously overcome. Beethoven's work typifies the national situation to-day, in which may be discerned a latent development defying all the difficulties of the present economic crisis, and along with this we may sense the real devotion of the greater part of the German people to all that is great and true in music.

It is worthy of mention here that the ultimate, lonely Beethoven, the composer of the Mass and the Ninth Symphony, has been made clearer by the recent publication, by Walter Nohl, of the hundred and thirty-seven Conversation Books, once sold by Anton Schindler, the strange friend of the composer, to the Berlin State Library. Though the value of these 'conversations' is not great, yet the personality standing behind them gives them higher importance. Persons and things represented in these books are, indeed, on the whole, little interesting. Schindler gives an arresting description of Beethoven's deafness which, after 1818, forced him to resort to the written word in communicating with visitors. We may guess what hard struggles were fought between ear and imagination, when we read that Beethoven, having lost all connection with real sound could, at the pianoforte, no longer distinguish between true and false accord, and so on. In these pages we may learn somewhat of an artistic tragedy that is among the greatest that can befall a man.

'CARMEN' EXPERIMENTS

A Carmen infection has broken out at Berlin, where every Kapellmeister seems impelled to give a new interpretation of an opera which hitherto has seemed so very clear. Three opera houses have discovered Carmen as a novelty, and Berlin alone counts three entirely different styles of performance. The best of these representations is that of Leo Blech, at the Deutsches Opernhaus, because, relatively, it is the most simple, although it is vividly given.

ADOLF WEISSMANN.

NEW YORK

Undoubtedly the finest production during the opening weeks of the Metropolitan Opera House was that of Die Meistersinger, not heard in this theatre since the spring of 1917. Hans Sachs was fully portrayed by Clarence Whitehill. No German singer who has appeared at New York during my musical life of over fifty years has ever approached Mr. Whitehill in his conception of the rôle. Moreover it was an exceptionally fine performance throughout, the new Walthers, Rudolf Laubenthal, from Berlin, proving himself vastly superior to any of the Walthers we have had from Germany for many years. Already we have had two Evas, Florence Easton singing at the opening performance and Elizabeth Rethberg at the second. Both are remarkably fine artists, but on the whole we prefer Miss Easton, and the question continually rises in our mind—Why is it that Anglo-Saxons so frequently portray German characters so much better than do performers of Teutonic birth?

The new German tenor has also appeared as Tannhäuser and as Parsifal. Though he is not an ideal Tannhäuser, he is, again, greatly the superior of his recent predecessors, and as Parsifal he scored a distinct success. He looks the part, with his boyish, slim figure, and he both acts and sings it well. Mr. Whitehill's inimitable Amfortas, Mr. Bender's gentle Gurnemanz, and Madame Matzenauer's Kundry are well known.

Other important operas produced in the opening weeks of the season were Die Rosenkavalier and Boris Godounov. The former, with its charming music and its wealth of first-class artists to sing it, is a never-failing source of delight. No less than fourteen of the foremost members of the Company appear in this enchanting comedy, and not one is mis-cast.

Chaliapin in Boris has become an institution. The house is always sold out, and so packed with standees that breathing is difficult. And yet the performances may not be compared with those given under the direction of Toscanini ten years ago. It is merely a question of Chaliapin's overpowering personality, which attracts the crowds and makes them oblivious to shortcomings which the great Italian conductor would never have permitted.

The first concert of the regular series of the Society of the Friends of Music was devoted entirely to Bach. As usual, orchestra, choir and soloists all came from the Metropolitan Opera House. A Cantata No. 52, for soprano and chorus, was the opening number, Elizabeth Rethberg appearing as soloist. This was followed by the fifth Brandenburg Concerto, in D major. These Bach Concertos were really the precursors of the symphony, and the last-named was also a precursor of the modern pianoforte concerto, a most important part of it having been written for the clavier. The last number on the programme was Cantata No. 184, for orchestra, chorus, and four soloists, among whom George Meade conspicuously distinguished himself. These Bach programmes that Bodansky presents in the Friends of Music series cannot be too highly praised, for they always introduce works of the great composers that are comparatively unknown. This is really the function of the Society—the presentation of unfamiliar music. The second concert opened with an Overture, Hans Heiling, by Heinrich August Marschner, who has been called a 'stepping-stone' between Weber and Wagner.

Though this music may have historical value, it seemed trivial to the modern listener, and to lack even the merits of Weber. Quite as unknown was a Concertina (after the third Sonata) by Attilio Ariosti, an Italian composer of the 17th century. This was originally written for the viola d'amore, but as the Metropolitan does not possess such an instrument, it was performed on the violoncello by Henrich Warnke, first violoncellist at the Opera House. It proved a tuneful composition—again rather tiresome to modern ears—by the most famous operatic composer of his day. Carl Friedberg appeared as soloist at this concert, and it seemed rather a pity to waste the talents of this remarkable pianist on the Mendelssohn Concerto in G minor, Op. 25. The Concerto is another example that has become uninteresting to modern ears, and as this was Mr. Friedberg's first appearance at New York in seven years, it could have been wished that he had been allowed to lighten the deadliness of Marschner and Ariosti. Perhaps Bodanzky felt that the period music for this concert would not do for a complete programme, for suddenly he jumped to Korngold for a closing number! And yet this tuneful Suite from the music to Much Ado about Nothing is not the Korngold we know. It is entertaining and melodious, but on the whole we prefer Die Tote Stadt. Moderns do themselves better justice when they stick to their lasts than when they try to imitate the old classics.

The Flonzaleys are an established institution, and opened their series of three concerts with their usual programme of three Quartets. Choosing Mozart in A and Beethoven in C (Op. 50, No. 3), to please their conservative listeners, they sandwiched between these items Vaughan Williams's Quartet in G minor, to please those who are always longing for something new. The modern music was played for the first time in America, though it is one of Dr. Williams's earlier compositions. It was mildly interesting, tremendously difficult, and perfectly played. Indeed, music must be very bad to be entirely uninteresting when performed by this wonderful group of artists. We have also had fine concerts of chamber music by another wonderful group, the London String Quartet, and the work of the Letz Quartet and of the Lenox Quartet also deserves commendation.

To the list of pianoforte recitals must be added those of Rachmaninov, Levitzki, old and established favourites, and Borovsky—a newcomer—who proved an uneven player, playing a part of his programme very artistically and the remainder very roughly.

Frieda Hempel has given a recital, delighting her hearers with her interpretations of old and new songs; and Sigrid Onegin has given another, pouring out the wealth of her magnificent contralto in such a torrent of song that it mattered little what were the numbers on the programme.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

The end of November saw the inauguration of the musical season by the first concert of the Roman Royal Philharmonic Society, which this year holds almost undisputed sway in the concert field, the Augusteum and the Academy of St. Cecilia being the only other serious rivals. The inaugural concert was devoted to pianoforte music, and was given by Francesco Baiardi, who is a professor of St. Cecilia, where he has succeeded in creating a 'school'—one, by the way, by no means impervious to criticism. Following on this concert came three distinguished visitors from Florence, comprising the Trio Fiorentino. The principal item of their programme was a new composition by Guido Guerrini. It would perhaps be premature to put this composer's name in the list of the modern Italian school, although he has already produced an opera, two Concerti, and a Quartet, besides various songs. He is regarded as a rising light in the Rossini liceo, at Bologna, where he is professor. His new work met with a cordial reception at Rome. The Elegiac Trio of Rachmaninov, and Beethoven's C minor Trio, completed the Florentine programme.

Closely upon the opening of the Philharmonic came the inaugural concert of the Augusteum, for which occasion three choral works were produced—the Song of Songs of Mgr. Bossi, and Verdi's Te Deum and Stabat Mater. The second concert at the Augusteum was given by Eric Korngold, whose name and fame had preceded him, and had roused considerable interest at Rome. The programme was entirely devoted to Korngold's own works, ranging from his Sinfonietta, written in 1912 at the age of fifteen, to his latest composition, the Dance of Marietta. It can scarcely ever be wise to devote an entire concert to one man's works, and particularly so if he is still living. Even if Korngold merits the title 'a new Mozart' (except for his precocious production, history will yet have to judge on that point), the public is always desirous of hearing the new genius interpret those who have preceded him. As a matter of interest, however, we give the programme, with the dates of the compositions: Prelude and Carnevale from Violante (1915); Sinfonietta in B major, for orchestra (1912); Symphonic Overture, Sursum Corda (1915); Much Ado about Nothing, Suite for small orchestra (1918); The Dance of Marietta, and Epilogue from the opera, The Dead City (1920).

The well-deserving Amici della Musica Society, which wisely limits itself to a monthly concert, gave its inaugural concert at the beginning of December. It is to be regretted that this Society, which specialises in chamber music of the classical epochs, has been turned out of its home in the Collegio Nazareno, where for some years past it had given its concerts in what is probably the most characteristic 17th-century hall at Rome, an ambiente ideally adapted for music of this kind. The Society has found a resting-place in the halls of the Philharmonic Society, and for its inaugural concert produced Mozart's Quartet in A major, a Sonata for violin, viola da gamba, and cembalo of Buxtehude, and a Quintet for two violins, viola, violoncello, and guitar, written by Boccherini, about 1770, when he was still at Madrid.

By the appointment of Maestro Respighi to be director of St. Cecilia, the Academy gains one of its most noted members as head, and it may safely be predicted that under his guidance the historic institution will take on new life and gain new honours.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

For number and quality, concerts here this month have created a record. Two choirs, of excellent contrast in style, have visited us—that of the Sistine Chapel (under the direction of Monsignor Antonio Nella), and the Ukrainian National. One cannot refrain from admiring the intense atmosphere of reverence which characterises the singing of the former. Tonal quality, however, seems lacking in the purity and resonance to which we Anglo-Saxons are accustomed. Perosi, Palestrina, and Vittoria were well represented in the programme, which would have been more satisfying in a sacred environment than it was in the concert-hall. For actual choral technique, vitality of interpretation, and clear-cut diction, the forty-five Ukrainians under M. Alexander Koshetz are unrivalled within our knowledge. They make a special feature of very firm humming tone, and their bass section is superb. National folk-songs and a few negro part-songs comprised an unusually satisfying performance.

The Chamber Music Society brought the London String Quartet again in a splendid evening of Beethoven (Op. 59, D major, No. 1), Haydn (Op. 64, D major, No. 5), and Walford Davies (Peter Pan Suite). Introduced by the Women's Musical Club came the Elshuco Trio, who proved most polished artists in the Brahms B major, Op. 8, the Schubert B flat, and a Litanie by Paul Juon, Op. 70. Madame Ninon Romaine, a pianist of European fame, was engaged at a later date, and showed an intimate liking for Schumann, Chopin, and Saint-Saëns.

Orchestrally we have been treated to well-chosen programmes by the Boston and New York organizations, the former featuring Vaughan Williams's London Symphony, the latter the César Franck, and also the Suite from Pierné's Ballet Cyndalise. Our own New Symphony showed excellent discrimination in selecting Mr. Claude Biggs as soloist for the fourth Twilight Concert. His playing of the Grieg Concerto was one of the most finished performances heard here for many years. Mozart's Overture to Figaro and the Mendelssohn Scotch Symphony received spirited treatment.

Miss Mary Garden, in recital, proved more conclusively than ever that the operatic stage is a vastly different environment for song interpretation from the concert-platform. Mr. Campbell McInnes, in his second Nine o'Clock recital, was associated with Mr. Alfred Heather, Dr. Healey Willan, Dr. Ernest MacMillan, Mr. Leo Smith, Mrs. Mabel Doherty-Curtiss, and Mr. Arthur Semple, in an evening featuring two Bach Cantatas, My trust is in Thee and We have a fine new Master. The Conservatory Trio, under the auspices of the T.C.M.S., played the Smetana G minor, Mozart G minor, and the Waldo Warner A minor Trios.

Recitals have been given by Mr. Claud Biggs (Canadian Academy), Mr. Geza de Kresz (Hambourg Conservatory), and Mr. Reginald Stewart. Songs by Messrs. Maurice Besly and Horace Lapp were given an initial hearing by Miss Nelly Gill and Miss Mary Bothwell. Mr. Lapp is a young Canadian composer who is coming rapidly to the fore. He proposes to study in London in the near future. H. C. F.

Obituary

We regret to record the following deaths :

NICHOLAS KILBURN, Mus. Doc., of Bishop Auckland, at the age of eighty. His long-sustained work as honorary conductor of the principal choral societies of Sunderland, Middlesbrough, and Bishop Auckland had a strong influence upon music in the North of England. It brought him many friends among the most prominent musicians of the day, and he was well-known throughout the country as one of the leaders of choral music. His was the first public performance of Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast; he was early an enthusiast for the larger choral works of Elgar, and it was to him that the composer dedicated The Music-Makers. He was a man of business, being the head of a firm of engineers. He took the degree of Mus. Bac. at Cambridge, and was granted his Doctorate by Durham University. We reproduce the portrait of Dr. Kilburn that was given in our issue for January, 1901.

(From a Photograph by Mr. A. M. Cromack, Newborough Street, Scarborough.)

HENRY BEWERUNGE, Professor of Ecclesiastical Music in St. Patrick's College, Maynooth, for thirty-five years. Born at Leitmathe, in Westphalia, December 7, 1862, he was educated at Düsseldorf, and at the University of Würzburg, studying music under Haberl and other masters of the Cecilian school. Ordained a priest at Eichstadt in 1885, he was appointed chanter in Cologne Cathedral. In 1888 the Trustees of the Maynooth College selected him as Professor of Sacred Music, and he laboured there until the summer of 1914, when he went on a holiday to Düsseldorf. Not long afterwards war broke out, and he remained at Cologne till August, 1920, when he returned to Maynooth to resume his old position. The hardships he endured had, however, enfeebled his constitution. He broke down a few months ago, and died on December 2. He published many 'arrangements' of Palestrina's Masses and Motets, and was editor of the Lyra Ecclesiastica and the Irish Musical Monthly—both long since dead. He also organized a tercentenary celebration in honour of Palestrina, in May, 1894. A fine organist and choir-trainer, he had numerous friends among the Irish priesthood.

Miscellaneous

TUDOR MUSIC AT CHICHESTER

As everybody knows now, Weelkes was organist at Chichester Cathedral from 1602 until his death in 1623. The fact was duly commemorated on November 30, the tercentenary of his death, when a memorial tablet was unveiled in the north transept of the Cathedral. Sir Hugh Allen and Dr. E. H. Fellowes delivered addresses, the former also laying beneath the tablet a laurel wreath 'From the Faculty of Music at the University of Oxford.' Appropriate organ music was played by Mr. F. J. W. Crowe, and Dr. F. J. Read accompanied Evensong, at which the choir sang beautifully Weelkes in G and the anthems All people clap your hands and Hosanna in the highest. This unveiling was Chichester's third event during the year in honour of Tudor composers. In May the Musical Society gave two concerts at which all the choral items were by Byrd and Weelkes; and in July, at the Festival of the Three Cathedral Choirs of Chichester, Salisbury, and Winchester, the music included a service and one anthem by Byrd, and two anthems by Weelkes. Further local interest in Weelkes arises from the fact of his having been organist of Winchester College in 1598.

The Grafton Philharmonic Society gave its first concert in Clapham Congregational Church on December 12, the programme including Holst's Two Psalms, Elgar's With proud thanksgiving, Vaughan Williams's Toward the unknown region, Parry's Blest Pair of Sirens, and Holst's Four Songs for voice and violin. The soloists were Master Harold Ware and Mr. Percy Lawton. Mr. Sydney V. Sherwood was at the organ, and Mr. Henry F. Hall conducted.

The thirty-fourth Annual Conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians will be held at Cambridge on January 1, 2, 3, and 4. Among the readers of papers will be Sir Hugh Allen, Sir Walford Davies, Sir Dan Godfrey, &c. The musical events will include an organ recital by M. Louis Vierne at Trinity College Chapel.

At the Guildhall School of Music two vacancies will shortly occur in the Carnegie and Ernest Palmer Scholarships of the Musicians' Company. Entrants must be under eighteen years of age. Particulars may be had of the Secretary of the School, John Carpenter Street, E.C.4 (stamp).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ... ..	0	3	0
Three Lines ... ..	0	3	4
For every additional Line ... ..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ... ..	0	10	0
Half a Column ... ..	2	0	0
A Column ... ..	4	0	0
A Page ... ..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than TUESDAY, JANUARY 22 (FIRST POST).

CONTENTS.

	Page.
The Conductor and his Fore-runners. V.—The Means. By William Wallace. ...	17
Programme Music and Programme Notes. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ...	20
On Knowing Things. By Alexander Brent-Smith ...	22
Pearsall's Letters. By W. Barclay Squire ...	24
The Conductor: His Uses and Abuses. By Arthur L. Salmon ...	29
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ...	30
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace ...	34
New Light on Early Tudor Composers. XXIX.—William Pasche. By W. H. Grattan Flood ...	39
The Cembal d'Amour. By E. van der Straeten (illustrated) ...	40
The 17th Century on Quarter-Tones. By Gerald Hayes ...	42
The Fastman School of Music. By A. J. Warner ...	43
The Musician's Bookshelf ...	44
New Music ...	54
Occasional Notes ...	56
Competition Festival Record ...	57
An Australian Choral Competition. By W. G. Whittaker ...	57
The Adolescent Singer ...	58
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ...	60
Church and Organ Music ...	61
Royal College of Organists ...	61
The Amateurs' Exchange ...	63
Letters to the Editor ...	64
Sixty Years Ago ...	65
Sharps and Flats ...	65
Welsh Music. First Welsh Orchestral Festival ...	66
The Balance of Expression and Design in Music ...	67
Presentation to Mr. Arthur Collingwood ...	67
Royal Academy of Music ...	68
Royal College of Music ...	68
Trinity College of Music ...	68
Music in Public Schools ...	68
Purcell's Dioclesian at the Royal Holloway College ...	69
London Concerts ...	69
Music in the Provinces ...	72
Music in Ireland ...	75
Musical Notes from Abroad ...	76
Obituary ...	78
Miscellaneous ...	78

MUSIC.

'O come, every one that thirsteth.' Anthem for general use. By HUGH BLAIR ... 45

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number :
'The Song of the Gale.' Part-Song. By Myles B. Foster.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

BLAIR, HUGH.—"Lord, Thou hast been our refuge." Anthem for Advent or General Use. (No. 1128, Novello's Octavo Anthems.) 4d.

—"O come, every one that thirsteth." Anthem for general use. (No. 971, The Musical Times.) 2d.

BOUGHTON, RUTLAND.—"Piper's Song." Arranged as a Trio for s.s.c. (No. 486, Novello's Octavo Edition of Trios, &c.) 3d.

BURTON, C. N. CROYDEN.—"Joyfully we sing." Carol. 2d.

BYRD, WILLIAM.—"I joy not in no earthly bliss." Madrigal. Edited by H. Elliot Button. (No. 103, 'The Oriana.') 4d.

EDEN, RODNEY.—Three Humoresques. For Pianoforte Solo. 2s.

GIBBONS, ORLANDO.—"Light of gladness, Beam divine." Evening Hymn. Arranged for Three Voices, A.T.B., by NOEL PONSONBY. 3d.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.—continued.

HANHAM, SOPHIE.—Hymns and Tunes. 1s.

H AVERGAL, CECILIA.—"Christ's Christmas Dawn." Carol. 2d.

H AZLEHURST, CECIL.—"Love's Philosophy." Song. For Soprano or Tenor. 2s.

I VIMEY, JOHN (arranged by).—"Congaudeat Turba Fidelium." 11th Century Carol. 4d.

K EELER, BRADLEY.—Five Songs :

1. "The Daughter of the King."

2. "The Heart and the Soul."

3. "Nightfall."

4. "Swing High."

5. "Thine Image."

English and French Words. 2s. each.

M OUNTFORD, FRANKLYN.—"As in her robe of glistering snow." Carol. 3d.

R EED, W. H.—"My lady fell a-sighing." Four-part Song. (No. 1415, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 4d.

R OBSON, R. WALKER.—"Hark! the song of Jubilee." Unaccompanied Anthem, for S.A.T.B. 4d.

R OWLEY, ALEC.—"The Nightingale." Part-Song for T.T.B.B. (No. 593, 'The Orpheus.') 3d.

S HAW, GEOFFREY.—"Worship." 1st Violin, 4d.; 2nd Violin, 4d.; Viola, 4d.; Violoncello, 8d.; Bass, 4d.

S CHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 379, contains the following music in both notations.—"A Tiny Calendar." Unison Song. By GEOFFREY SHAW. "My Master." Unison Song. By ALEC ROWLEY.

S CHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1367. "A Song of bold Robin Hood." Unison Song.

ALEC ROWLEY 3d. —

No. 1369. "The Star Elf." Unison Song.

ALEC ROWLEY 3d. —

No. 1370. "The Tortoise." Unison Song.

ETHEL BOYCE 3d. —

No. 1371. "Daffies and Tulips." Unison Song.

ETHEL BOYCE 3d. —

No. 1372. "Windlass song." Unison Song.

ALEC ROWLEY 3d. —

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES :

No. 2439. "And we beheld His glory." Anthem.

GEORGE RATHBONE 3d.

No. 2440. "Legend." Mixed Voices.

P. TCHAIKOVSKY 1½d.

No. 2441. "Ave Maria." S.S.A.A. Latin Words.

J. BRAHMS 2d.

W RIGGLESWORTH, W. J.—"I think of Thee." Song. For Contralto or Baritone. 2s.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

BANKS, C. C.—Chansonette. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

H ALL, W. H.—"A Light of light uprises." For S.A.T.B. 15 cents (8d.).

L EMARE, E. H.—Seven Descriptive Pieces. For Organ. $1.50 (6s.).

N ORDEN, N. L.—"How lovely is Thy dwelling-place." Song. 60 cents (2s. 6d.); Violin and Harp Parts, $1 (4s.).

—"Charity." Cantata for Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Organ. 50 cents (2s.); Harp and Violin Parts, $1 (4s.).

GLYN EASTMAN

BASS.

TAUNTON CHORAL SOCIETY.—Misc. and "The Pied Piper" (Parry).

"Mr. Glyn Eastman was making a welcome first visit to Taunton. A cultured vocalist, he sings with charming expression and purity of tone, and one would have liked to have heard more than the single group of songs he rendered in the first part of the programme. 'The Bells of San Marie' (Ireland) was sung with a beauty of vocal quality and spontaneous feeling that marked him down as a sympathetic singer. Next he rendered 'When I heard the learned Astronomer' (Bairstow) and 'The Jolly Miller' (arr. Quilter), with remarkable ease and freshness. An encore was demanded, and Mr. Eastman obliged with another delightful number, 'Oh! could I express,' (Malashkin). . . . Warm appreciation must be expressed of the singing of Mr. Eastman in the part of the Mayor. These passages are important as dramatic links in the story, and their effective rendering gives point and emphasis to the musical narrative."—Somerset County Gazette, 15/12/23.

BRISTOL PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—"Bethlehem" (Boughton).
"Mr. Glyn Eastman made the most of his well-produced bass-voice in the part of Joseph."—Bristol Evening News, 10/12/23.

"Made an appealing Joseph."—Times and Echo, 10/12/23.

"An effective exposition of the part of Joseph."—Bristol Times and Mirror, 10/12/23.

WELLS.—". . . Mr. Glyn Eastman has earned a deservedly high place in the concert world, and those who were his privileged auditors on Monday could well understand his striking success. Endowed with a voice of tonal richness and wide compass Mr. Eastman invested his songs with wonderful expressiveness, and in the second part of the programme had to respond to a double encore."—Wells Journal, 2/1/23.

BRISTOL CHORAL SOCIETY.—"The Messiah."

"A voice of great range and truthness of intonation, flexible and smooth. He was natural in manner and sympathetic in his treatment. He took the vigorous passages very successfully, with fluency of the runs, every note in its right place and with correct emphasis."—Western Daily Press, 18/12/22.

NEWPORT CHORAL SOCIETY.—"Elijah."

"The outstanding feature was the Elijah of Mr. Glyn Eastman. Mr. Eastman, whose technique is surer than ever, sang with impeccable diction. He gave a charming reading, and rightly took the honours of the evening."—Western Mail, 19/1/23.

BIDEFORD MUSICAL FESTIVAL.—"Creation."

"Mr. Glyn Eastman took the bass parts in magnificent voice, and sang all through with appropriate dramatic power and remarkably clear enunciation."—Bideford Gazette, 21/1/22.

PLYMOUTH.

"Mr. Glyn Eastman, whose splendidly trained baritone was greatly admired, won golden opinions."—Western Independent, 22/10/22.

HEREFORD.

"Has a voice of considerable power, and sings with real expression."—Hereford Journal, 7/10/22.

"THE LAST JUDGMENT."—Mr. Glyn Eastman sang for the Society last year in "Messiah," and his rendition on Wednesday will only tend to enhance a reputation already great. He is the perfect artist. One scarcely knows whether to call him bass or baritone—he is both. His lower register has the true bass timbre, and his higher register is real baritone quality. He also sang a solo from "Creation," "Rolling in foaming billows," and needless to say all his work was of the best."—Wiltshire Telegraph, 7/4/23.

WESTON-SUPER-MARE.

"Mr. Glyn Eastman not only possesses a finely resonant baritone, but uses it with a cultured control which never sacrifices virility of sentiment, and, moreover, reveals a wide scope in the matter of versatility. He metaphorically held the house in the hollow of his hand, when he followed the 'Astronomer,' of Bairstow, with the stirring 'Border Ballad.'"—Weston-super-Mare Mercury, 13/1/23.

SWINDON.

"Mr. Glyn Eastman charmed us with his rendering of 'Night' and 'Varlaam's Song.' He has a voice of good resonant quality, and was loudly applauded for his fine rendering of these two songs."—Borough Press, 7/10/22.

Engagements include:—

- "B minor Mass." Newport Choral Society.
- "Judas Macabæus." Bridgwater Choral Society.
- "Hiawatha." Swindon Choral and Orchestral Union.
- Bristol Choral Society.
- Bristol Royal Orpheus Society, &c.

Vacant dates &c, apply,

24, ST. ANDREW'S ROAD, BRISTOL.

ST. MICHAEL'S, CHESTER SQUARE, W.

An ORGAN RECITAL will be given in the above Church by Mr. REGINALD GOSS-CUSTARD every Saturday afternoon, at 5.30 p.m., commencing January 19th

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

- 816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
  - 817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
  - 818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
  - 819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
  - 820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
  - 821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.
- Price Fourpence each

- 822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
- Price Sixpence.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

MAGNIFICAT & NUNC DIMITTIS

NEWLY SET, IN G,

FOR FULL CHOIR, SOPRANO SOLO, AND ORGAN.

By JOHN J. JONES.

Price Sixpence.

Well received.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY Limited.

WILLIAM WOLLER

SCHOOL OF VOICE CULTURE,

75, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, BARONS COURT, W.14.

Private and Class Tuition in the TRADITIONAL OLD ITALIAN System of Tone Production—the ruling principle of long preservation of the voice with full tone, flexibility, and wide compass.

Special Courses for Restoration of impaired voices.

Complete training for Concert and Opera.

Special arrangements for Colonial pupils.

"Quite a resourceful singer."—Mr. ARTHUR MEALE, Westminster.

WALTER L. GROVES

BARITONE

(Pupil of Profs. Bantock Pierpoint and Albert Fox, Guildhall School of Music), Member of Royal Choral Society, is open to accept engagements for Oratorio or Concert Work.

Terms on application.

For vacant dates, apply, 8, Dunbar Road, Wood Green, N.22.

A.R.C.O., Ear-Test; Harmonization of Melody, Score Reading:—A Special combined paper on these three subjects of vital importance. Enclose P.O. for 4s. 6d. to "Ear-Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., on "The Development of Chamber Music." New Series of Six Model Essays, with valuable hints. Important. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BASS-SOLOIST for St. Philip's, Kennington Road. £12. F. Eustace, 42, Dawnay Road, S.W.18.

BASS SOLOIST.—Good Reader REQUIRED immediately for Choir, at Christ Church, Warwick Gardens, Kensington. Two Sunday Services and Friday Rehearsal. Salary £25. Write, Toone, 21, St. Dunstan's Road, W.6.

ALTO.—(Lady), WANTED at once for Presbyterian Church, Bayswater. Good reader absolutely essential. Two Sunday Services. Weekly rehearsal and occasional services as required. Salary, £15 per annum. Apply by letter only, stating experience, to Charles R. Willis, 9, Milman Road, N.W.6.

GENUINE OLD ITALIAN VIOLIN for SALE. —Beautiful quality tone. Apply, "S. H.," c/o. Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED.—All kinds (transposition and from rough MSS.), accurately and neatly. W. F. Whittingham, 17, Stanley Road, South Woodford, E.8.

SUITABLE FOR SCHOOLS.

Recently performed at Bedford School and Haileybury College.

KING ESTMERE

(OLD ENGLISH BALLAD)

FOR

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA.

COMPOSED BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

The work is scored for ordinary full orchestra, but it is so arranged that it can be played by an orchestra consisting of two Flutes, Oboe, two Clarinets, two Bassoons, two Horns, two Trumpets, Trombone, Strings, and Harp (or Pianoforte).

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

CRYSTAL PALACE
EMPIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24, 1924.

Advisory Musical Director: MR. CYRIL JENKINS.

Musical Director: MR. WALTER W. HEDGCOCK.

CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR MIXED VOICES.

(Number of voices not less than 125 and not more than 250).

PRIZE: THE CRYSTAL PALACE FIVE HUNDRED GUINEA
CHALLENGE TROPHY and £100 in CASH.(A) "Go, song of mine." Unaccompanied ... Edward Elgar.
(Novello & Co.)(B) "Ode to the West wind." Accompanied ... Cyril Jenkins.
(Curwen & Sons.)

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR MALE VOICES.

(Number of voices not to be less than 75 and not more than 100.)

PRIZE: GOLD CUP and £50 in CASH.

(A) "Down among the dead men" arr. by R. Vaughan Williams.
(Joseph Williams & Co.)(B) "Feasting I watch." (Novello & Co.) ... Edward Elgar.(C) "Sea Fever." (Curwen & Sons) ... Cyril Jenkins.

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR FEMALE VOICES.

(Number of voices not less than 40 and not more than 80.)

PRIZE: SILVER HARP and £25 in CASH.

(A) "Gentle Moon" ... Julius Harrison.(B) "Grecian Landscape." (J. Curwen & Sons) ... Cyril Jenkins.

There will be other CHORAL COMPETITIONS and CHAMPIONSHIP CONTESTS for SOLO VOCALISTS and INSTRUMENTALISTS.

The FULL SYLLABUS will be ready early in January, 1924.

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paperboards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON

(CHRIST LAG IN TODESBANDEN)

CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

ENGLISH WORDS BY PAUL ENGLAND.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

THE ATONEMENT

(Op. 53.)

A SACRED CANTATA FOR S.M.-S.A.T.B. SOLI

WORDS BY

ALICE PARSONS

THE MUSIC BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS.

Vocal Score:

Paper cover, 5s. 6d.; Paper boards, 6s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.
Vocal parts, 2s. 6d. each. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. per 100.
String parts, 28s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN
BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal Parts, 1s. each.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES

OR FOR GENERAL USE

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS,
WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.

ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION.THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS

SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESÌ.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 13d

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY

JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY

VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY

JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

*THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By JULIUS BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 4s.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price, 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 2d.

*Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ...	4d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison) ... ..	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
BLAIR, H. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES ...	2d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. E. (in D) ... ..	2d.
BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
COBB, C. F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) ... ..	2d.
EYRE, A. J. (in E flat) ... ..	3d.
EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F) ... ..	2d.
FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	6d.
FROST, P. H. (in D) ... ..	3d.
GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison) ... ..	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C) ... ..	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) ... ..	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants) ... ..	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D) ... ..	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat) ... ..	4d.
LOYD, C. H. (in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	4d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting) ... ..	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) ... ..	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) ...	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) ... ..	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat) ... ..	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, B. (in A flat) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.T.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B.	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER ... ..	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS ... ..	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STEWART, C. H. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ...	4d.
BARNBY, J. ... ..	1½d.
FOSTER, J. ... ..	1½d.
SMITH, M. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
TURLE, J. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
TOZER, F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple ... ..	3d.
WEST, J. E. (in G) ... ..	6d.
WEST, J. E. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D) ... ..	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) ... ..	2d.

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, J. B. ... ..	4d.
GOUNOD, CH. ... ..	3d.
HOYTE, W. S. ... ..	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies)
(Edited by W. S. Vale) ... ..	6d.
SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) ... ..	4d.

BUNNETT, ED. ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT ... ..	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
STAINER, JOHN (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.

Words only, 2s. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

ANTHEMS FOR LENT.

All ye who seek for sure relief .. .. .	H. M. Higgs	4d.	Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake	*R. Farrant, G. R. Vicars, ea.	2d.
*All ye who weep .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.	Lord, how are they increased .. .. .	Kent	3d.
And Jesus entered into the Temple .. .. .	H. W. Davies	6d.	Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.
Art thou weary .. .. .	C. H. Lloyd	8d.	Lord, I call upon Thee .. .. .	Ouseley, West, and Culley, each	2d.
At the Cross her station keeping (s.s.) .. .. .	A. E. Baker	3d.	Lord, on our offences .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.
At Thy feet in adoration .. .. .	A. Dvorák	4d.	Lord, teach us to number our days (A.A.T.T.B.B.)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
Be merciful unto me .. .. .	E. A. Sydenham	4d.	Lord, Thou hast searched .. .. .	A. Whiting	4d.
Be not Thou far from me, O God .. .. .	F. W. Hird	2d.	Lord, what is man .. .. .	W. Boyce	4d.
Behold, I come quickly .. .. .	I. Atkins	3d.	Make me a clean heart .. .. .	J. Barnby and A. W. Bateson, each	4d.
Behold, two blind men .. .. .	J. Stainer	4d.	May my heart with ardour burn .. .. .	A. Dvorák	4d.
Blessed are they that mourn .. .. .	A. W. Bateson	4d.	Mine eyes look unto Thee, O Lord God .. .. .	H. Baker	4d.
*Blessed Jesu .. .. .	Dvorák	3d.	My God, I love Thee .. .. .	G. J. Bennett	4d.
Bow down Thine ear .. .. .	*Attwood, Beale, and Brewer, each	4d.	My God, look upon me .. .. .	J. L. Hopkins	4d.
Bow Thine ear, O Lord .. .. .	W. Byrd	4d.	*My God, look upon me .. .. .	J. Reynolds	2d.
*By Babylon's wave .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	6d.	My soul is weary .. .. .	J. C. Beckwith	6d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Boyce and H. Clarke, each	6d.	O all ye that pass by .. .. .	Victoria	4d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Goetz and Palestrina, each	4d.	*O bountiful Jesu .. .. .	J. Stainer	4d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Higgs and *Coleridge-Taylor, each	4d.	O Fount of love .. .. .	J. Wilson	2d.
By Thy glorious Death .. .. .	A. Dvorák	6d.	O God, Thou hast cast us out .. .. .	H. Purcell	6d.
*Call to remembrance .. .. .	R. Farrant	2d.	O God, Whose nature .. .. .	*S. S. Wesley, each	2d.
Cast me not away .. .. .	C. Lee Williams	3d.	O have mercy .. .. .	H. Leslie	2d.
Cast me not away .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	4d.	O hearken Thou .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.
*Cast thy burden upon the Lord .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.	*O hearken Thou .. .. .	A. Sullivan	2d.
Come, and let us return .. .. .	G. M. Garrett	2d.	*O Jesu! Victim blest .. .. .	J. B. Powell	4d.
*Come, and let us return (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	*O Lamb of God .. .. .	J. Barnby	4d.
*Come, and let us return .. .. .	J. Goss and W. Jackson, each	4d.	*O Lamb of God .. .. .	G. E. Lake	2d.
Come, let us worship .. .. .	Palestrina	2d.	*O Lord, correct me .. .. .	J. Coward	2d.
*Come now, and let us reason together .. .. .	R. Briant	2d.	O Lord, give ear .. .. .	W. H. Cummings	3d.
Come now, let us reason together .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	6d.	O Lord God, Thou strength .. .. .	J. Goss	2d.
*Come unto Him .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	3d.	O Lord, look down .. .. .	J. Battisill	4d.
*Come unto Him .. .. .	H. Leslie	4d.	*O Lord, my God .. .. .	C. Malan and S. S. Wesley, each	2d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	Bach, Couldrey, and *Elvey, each	4d.	O Lord, my God .. .. .	H. R. Couldrey and C. Lee Williams, each	3d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	H. Hiles	3d.	O Lord, rebuke me not .. .. .	C. Simpson and H. Lahee, ea.	2d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	M. Kingston and J. S. Smith, each	2d.	O most merciful .. .. .	J. F. Bridge	4d.
*Come, ye sin-defiled and weary .. .. .	J. Stainer	3d.	O most merciful .. .. .	*E. Bullock and J. W. Elliott, ea.	2d.
*Comfort, O Lord .. .. .	W. Croft	3d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	W. A. C. Cruickshank and Rossini, each	4d.
Comfort the soul of Thy servant (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	John E. West	6d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	J. L. Bennett, 4d.; *Ch. Gounod	6d.
Create in me a clean heart .. .. .	P. J. Fry	6d.	*O saving Victim .. .. .	J. Stainer	4d.
*Enter not into judgment .. .. .	T. Attwood	2d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	Tours, *Koenig, *Westbury, and Wilson, ea.	2d.
Flee from evil .. .. .	W. J. Clarke	4d.	*O Saviour of the world .. .. .	J. Goss	2d.
For a small moment .. .. .	J. Stainer, 3d.; J. V. Roberts	2d.	*O Saviour of the world .. .. .	H. Moore	4d.
For our offences .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.	*O Saviour of the world (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	3d.
Forsake me not, O Lord, my God .. .. .	Goss	6d.	*O Thou that hearest prayer .. .. .	H. W. Davies	4d.
Give ear, O Lord .. .. .	*T. M. Pattison, 3d.; C. Oberthür	4d.	*O Thou that hearest prayer .. .. .	R. W. Robson	4d.
Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel .. .. .	A. Whiting	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	J. W. Elliott and *S. Coleridge-Taylor, ea.	2d.
*Give ear unto my prayer .. .. .	J. Arcadelt	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	F. A. W. Docker and G. J. Elvey, each	6d.
Give sentence with me, O God .. .. .	F. R. Thomas	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	4d.
*God so loved the world .. .. .	Goss, Kingston, and Stainer, each	2d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	F. E. Gladstone and G. C. Martin, each	4d.
*God so loved the world .. .. .	Harold Moore and J. V. Roberts, ea.	4d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	H. Clarke, 4d.; Mozart	2d.
God so loved the world (from "The Passion") .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	3d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett	1s.
Grant, we beseech Thee .. .. .	M. Elvey, 3d.; J. Booth	2d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	H. W. Davies and J. Naylor, each	6d.
Grant, we beseech Thee .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	Ponder my words, O Lord .. .. .	N. Hatfield, 4d.; A. D. Culley	2d.
Hail, true Body .. .. .	H. Willan	3d.	Put me not to rebuke, O Lord .. .. .	W. Croft	6d.
Have mercy upon me, O God .. .. .	J. Barnby, 3d.; J. Goss	6d.	Remember not, Lord .. .. .	J. M. Bentley, 4d.; *H. Purcell	2d.
Have mercy upon me .. .. .	Barnby, Minshall, Pye, and Shaw, each	4d.	*Remember now thy Creator .. .. .	C. Steggall	6d.
Have mercy upon me .. .. .	J. White	2d.	Remember, O Lord .. .. .	T. A. Walmisley	6d.
Hear me, O Lord .. .. .	W. H. Dixon	4d.	Rend your heart .. .. .	W. H. Dixon and *J. B. Calkin, ea.	2d.
*Hear me when I call .. .. .	A. W. Marchant, 4d.; King Hall	3d.	Rend your heart .. .. .	J. Clippindale	4d.
Hear me when I call (Male) .. .. .	John E. West and T. Distin, each	3d.	Rend your heart (Turn ye even to Me) .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	4d.
Hear my prayer .. .. .	Winter, 2d.; *J. Kent	4d.	Save me, O God .. .. .	C. S. Jekyll	2d.
Hear my prayer .. .. .	*Mendelssohn and C. Stroud, each	6d.	*Seek ye the Lord .. .. .	J. F. Bridge, 4d.; C. Bradley	2d.
Hear, O Lord .. .. .	*M. Watson, 4d.; J. Goss	3d.	Seek ye the Lord .. .. .	H. Kinsey and *J. V. Roberts, ea.	4d.
Hear, O Thou Shepherd .. .. .	J. Clarke-Whitfield and T. A. Walmisley, ea.	6d.	Show me Thy ways .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	4d.
*Hear the voice and prayer .. .. .	J. L. Hopkins	2d.	Spare us, Lord, most holy .. .. .	E. A. Sydenham	2d.
*Hear us, O Saviour .. .. .	M. Hauptmann	2d.	*Sweet the moments, rich in blessing .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	2d.
He in tears that soweth .. .. .	F. Hiller	3d.	*Teach me, O Lord .. .. .	T. Attwood and B. Rogers, each	2d.
Hide not Thy Face .. .. .	K. J. Pye	3d.	Teach me Thy way .. .. .	Spohr and W. H. Gladstone, each	2d.
How long wilt Thou .. .. .	O. King	3d.	*The Heavenly Word .. .. .	Williams	2d.
*I came not to call the righteous .. .. .	C. Vincent	4d.	The Lord is full of compassion .. .. .	F. E. Gladstone	4d.
I will arise .. .. .	C. Wood	2d.	*The Lord is high .. .. .	W. H. Cummings	2d.
I will cry unto God .. .. .	H. J. King and C. Steggall, each	4d.	*The path of the just .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.
*I will look unto the Lord (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	The sacrifice of God .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	2d.
*I wrestle and pray .. .. .	J. C. Bach	6d.	The sacrifices of God .. .. .	H. Blair	2d.
If any man sin .. .. .	H. Hiles	4d.	*The secret of the Lord .. .. .	John E. West	4d.
In Thee, O Lord .. .. .	*Coleridge-Taylor, Weldon, and *Tours, each	4d.	*The Story of the Cross .. .. .	Stainer, Somervell, Foster, & Roberts, ea.	4d.
*Incline Thine ear .. .. .	Himmel	2d.	The Story of the Cross .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett and H. E. Button, each	3d.
*Is it nothing to you? (S.A.T.B.) (also for S.A.) .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	*There is a green hill (Ed. by Bentley) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	6d.
*Is it nothing to you? (S.A.T.B.) (also for S.A.) .. .. .	M. B. Foster, each	4d.	There is a green hill (Ed. by West) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.
Jesu, Blessed Word of God .. .. .	G. Byrd	6d.	*There is a green hill .. .. .	F. H. Burstall, 3d.; H. Somerset	2d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.	Think not that they are blest alone .. .. .	F. Brandeis	3d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.	Thou didst turn Thy face .. .. .	T. Attwood	2d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory (S.S.A.) .. .. .	C. Macpherson	3d.	*Through peace to light .. .. .	J. H. Roberts	4d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory .. .. .	G. A. Naumann	4d.	Thus saith the Lord .. .. .	G. M. Garrett	8d.
*Jesu, meek and lowly .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.	Try me, O God (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	A. D. Culley	3d.
Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine .. .. .	B. Steane	2d.	Try me, O God .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	4d.
Jesu, Word of God Adiam, Gounod, Hoyte, Mozart, & White, each	E. Elgar	3d.	Try me, O God .. .. .	C. Wood	2d.
*Jesu, Word of God Incarnate .. .. .	E. Elgar	3d.	Turbanum voces (Jesu of Nazareth) .. .. .	W. Byrd	6d.
Judge me, O God .. .. .	Ouseley and *Mendelssohn, each	2d.	Turn Thee, O Lord .. .. .	N. Hatfield, 4d.; T. Attwood	2d.
Just as I am .. .. .	F. Tozer	4d.	*Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	T. Attwood and A. Sullivan, each	2d.
Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	B. Smith and R. Dunstan, each	4d.	Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	C. Harris, 4d.; C. Steggall	6d.
Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	C. L. Naylor and *J. Stainer, each	6d.	Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	C. Lee Williams	3d.
*Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	Pughe-Evans	4d.	Turn ye even to Me (Rend your heart) .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	4d.
Lead me in Thy truth .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett	2d.	Unto Thee have I cried .. .. .	G. J. Elvey	4d.
Lead me, Lord .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	2d.	*Wash me thoroughly .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	4d.
Let my complaint .. .. .	A. Batten	3d.	Watch ye and pray .. .. .	G. R. Vicars	3d.
Let my complaint (A.A.T.T.B.B.) .. .. .	E. H. Thorne	4d.	*Weary of earth .. .. .	F. Tozer	2d.
*Let my prayer come up .. .. .	H. Purcell	2d.	*Weary of earth .. .. .	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*Let the wicked forsake his way .. .. .	J. Goss	2d.	Whom the Lord loveth .. .. .	C. Macpherson	4d.
Let the words of my mouth .. .. .	H. Blair and J. Barnby, each	2d.	Whoever shall do the will .. .. .	Roberts	2d.
Let the words of my mouth .. .. .	A. D. Culley	4d.	*Why art thou so heavy, O my soul .. .. .	O. Gibbons	2d.
Let us come boldly .. .. .	C. H. Lloyd	2d.	Why art Thou so vexed .. .. .	C. Macpherson	3d.
Let us go forth .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	Word of God Incarnate .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.
Like as the hart .. .. .	T. Adams, J. H. Clarke, and W. S. Hoyte, ea.	4d.	Ye who from His ways have turned .. .. .	Mendelssohn	4d.
Like as the hart .. .. .	C. Locknane, 4d.; *V. Novello	2d.

Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st, 2d., and 3d. each.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."
Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."
Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."
Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.I.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC SERIES.

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

- VOL. I. THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.
" 2. GREAT MODERN COMPOSERS.
" 3. SHORT STUDIES OF GREAT MASTERPIECES.
" 4. MUSIC AS A HUMANITY.
" 5. A GUIDE TO MUSIC.

Cloth, Six Shillings per Volume.

THE PRINCIPALS OF PIANO PRACTICE.

BY

JAMES FRISKIN.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO. (ILLUSTRATED).

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

NEW PART-SONGS FOR Male Voices, Women's Choirs, and Mixed BY CECIL FORSYTH.

MALE VOICES.

Tell me not of a lovely lass (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
The Lord of Heaven (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	8d.
To America (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	8d.
At the Play (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Highland Love (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Queen and Huntress (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
When thou must home (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Roses of Sixteen (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Rose Aylmer (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Twenty Years Hence (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
When Lovely Women (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
You and Me (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Late Leaves (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Remain (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
With Leaden Foot (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Silver Key (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
The Cave-Men (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.

WOMEN'S VOICES.

London Bridge is Broken (S.S.A.)	...	...	8d.
I know they'll shine again (S.S.)	...	...	4d.
Highland Love (S.S.A.)	...	...	4d.

MIXED VOICES.

To America (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.
Tell me not of a lovely lass (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
Highland Love (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
The New Dawn (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	6d.
I know they'll shine again (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
O let my lamp (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.
Mirth (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.

CANTATAS

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

Cat and Gold Fish, The (S.S.A.A.)	...	...	s. d.
Last Supper, The	...	...	1 0
Luck of Eden Hall, The (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	2 0
Tinker Tailor (S.S.A.A.)	...	...	2 0
Tinker Tailor (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	2 0

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., 159, EAST 48TH STREET.
London Agents: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., 159 EAST 48TH STREET.
London Agents: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In eight Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
- Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
- Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
- Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
- Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

- Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
- Air { MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
- Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
- Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

- Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { WHY HAST THOU THEN, O GOD ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air { FAST MY BITTER TEARS ARE FLOWING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Recit. { THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD LONG IS HIDING ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL, SO FEARFUL ("When will God recall").

BASS.

- Recit. { HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
- Air { 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
- Recit. { IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
- Air { ON MY BEHALF " " "
- Recit. { YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
- Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
- Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

- Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
- Recit. { INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air { THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

- Recit. { THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
- Aria { COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
- Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
- Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

- Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
- Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
- Recit. { AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
- Air { BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").

COMPOSITIONS BY EDWARD ELGAR.

VOCAL.

ORATORIOS

THE APOSTLES. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 49.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus and Words of Solos only, 4s.) .. 7 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)
Full Score, £5 5s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 75s. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 41s. 8d. net per 100. An Interpretation of the Libretto by C. V. GORTON, M.A., 1s. 6d. Vocal Score, with German words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 12s. Chorstimmen, 3s. each. Textbuch, 8d. Erläuterung von Max Hehemann, 1s. 4d. String Parts, 34s.; Wind Parts on hire only.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS. For Mezzo-Soprano, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 38.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus only, 2s. 6d.) .. 5 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)

Full Score, £3 3s. Miniature Full Score, paper, 11s. 6d.; cloth, 16s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 66s. 8d. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. Vocal Score, with German and English words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 9s. Chorstimmen, each, 3s. Textbuch, 33s. 4d. per 100. Vocal score, with French words (Traduction française de J. d'Offoël), 9s. Parties de Chœur, 3s. each. Livret, 33s. 4d. per 100. String Parts, 29s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.
Sanctus Fortis. Tenor Solo from above. Transposed to A flat, 6d. Full score, 5s. 6d. String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.

THE KINGDOM. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 51.) (Tonic Sol-fa, Chorus and Words of Solos only, 4s.) .. 7 6
(Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)

Full Score, £5 5s. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 75s. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 41s. 8d. net per 100. An Interpretation of the Libretto by C. V. GORTON, M.A., 1s. 6d. Vocal Score, with German words (Deutsche Übersetzung von JULIUS BUTHS), 7s. 6d. Chorstimmen, 3s. each. Textbuch, 8d. each. String Parts, 37s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only.

THE LIGHT OF LIFE ("Lux Christi"). A Short Oratorio. For Soprano, Contralto, Tenor, and Baritone Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 29) .. 4 0 Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Full Score, £2 2s.; Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 20s.; Wind Parts on hire only.

CANTATAS.

BANNER OF ST. GEORGE, THE. For Chorus (Soprano Solo ad lib.) and Orchestra. (Op. 33) .. 2 6
Full Score, 25s. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 12s. 6d.; Wind Parts, 28s. 11d.

BLACK KNIGHT, THE. For Chorus and Orchestra. (Op. 25) .. 3 0
Full Score, 31s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 13s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only. (Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each.)

CARACTACUS. For Soprano, Tenor, Baritone, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 35) .. 5 6
Full Score, £3 3s. Tonic Sol-fa (Chorus and Words of Solos only), 2s. 6d. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d., or 66s. 8d. net per 100; Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. String Parts, 36s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only. (Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)

KING OLAF. For Soprano, Tenor, and Bass Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. (Op. 30) .. 4 6
Full Score, £3 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa (Chorus only), 2s. 6d. Book of Words, with Analysis, 1s. 4d. or 66s. 8d. net per 100. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. net per 100. String Parts, 34s. 6d.; Wind Parts on hire only. (Vocal Parts, 2s. 6d. each.)

MUSIC-MAKERS, THE (Op. 69). Ode by Arthur O'Shaughnessy. For Contralto Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra. .. 4 0
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d.; Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each; Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String Parts, 13s. 6d. Wind Parts on hire only.

SPIRIT OF ENGLAND, THE (Op. 80). A poem by Laurence Binyon. Set for Tenor or Soprano Solo, Chorus, and Orchestra .. 4 0 Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Full score, complete, 25s. Complete String Parts, 10s.; Wind Parts on hire only. Vocal Parts on hire only. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
Or, Singly—

1. THE FOURTH OF AUGUST .. 1 6
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Full Score, 13s.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.

2. TO WOMEN .. 1 0
Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.; Full Score, 7s. 6d.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only.

3. FOR THE FALLEN .. 1 6
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.; Full Score, 16s.; String Parts, 3s. 4d.; Wind Parts on hire only. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

ANTHEMS, SERVICES, &c.

SCORONATION OFFERTORIUM (Op. 64) .. 0 3
DOUBT NOT THY FATHER'S CARE ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). Duet, s. and c. (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3

FEAR NOT, O LAND (Harvest) .. 0 4
(Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.)

§GIVE UNTO THE LORD (Psalm xxix.) (Op. 74) .. 1 0

§GREAT IS THE LORD (Psalm xlviii.) (Op. 67) (Tonic Sol-fa, 8d.) .. 1 0

JESU, LORD OF LIFE AND GLORY. Anthem. Adapted from Op. 2, No. 2 (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4

JESU, MEEK AND LOWLY. Anthem. Adapted from Op. 2, No. 3 (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4

JESU, WORD OF GOD INCARNATE (Ave Verum) (Op. 2, No. 1). Motet. English and Latin Words (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3

DITTO. English Words only (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3

§LIGHT OF THE WORLD ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). S.A.T.B. (Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.) .. 0 4

LO! CHRIST THE LORD IS BORN. Carol .. 0 1½

O HEARKEN THOU (Arranged from the Coronation Offertorium) (Op. 64) .. 0 4

O MIGHTIEST OF THE MIGHTY (Coronation Hymn) .. 0 1½

SEEK HIM THAT MAKETH THE SEVEN STARS ("The Light of Life") (Op. 29). Tenor Solo and Chorus for T.T.B.B. .. 0 3

§TE DEUM AND BENEDICTUS IN F. For Chorus (S.A.T.B.), Orchestra, and Organ. (Op. 34) .. 1 6

THEY ARE AT REST. Elegy (Tonic Sol-fa, 2d.) .. 0 4

MOTETS (LATIN WORDS).

AVE VERUM (Op. 2, No. 1) (Tonic Sol-fa, 1½d.) .. 0 3

AVE MARIA (Op. 2, No. 2) .. 0 4

AVE MARIS STELLA (Op. 2, No. 3) .. 0 4

§INTENDE VOCI ORATIONIS MEÆ (Coronation Offertorium) (Op. 64) .. 0 3

SONGS

§ANGEL'S SONG, THE: "My work is done" ("Gerontius") (Op. 38). For Mezzo-Soprano .. 1 6

CHILD ASLEEP, A (Contralto) .. 2 0

§FOLLOW THE COLOURS (Marching Song) .. 2 0

IN MOONLIGHT (arranged from the Canto popolare in the Concert-Overture "In the South," Op. 50). (In G, F, and E flat) .. 2 0

OH, SOFT WAS THE SONG (Op. 59, No. 3). In D and E (Orchestral Parts in E only) .. 2 0

PLEADING (Op. 48, No. 1). In A flat, G, and F (Orchestral Parts in G only) .. 2 0

RIVER, THE (Op. 60, No. 2). In G minor, A minor, and B minor (original). (Orchestral Parts in A minor only) .. 2 0

SWORD SONG, THE ("Caractacus," Op. 35). In E flat and F (Orchestral Parts in F only) .. 2 0

§THERE ARE SEVEN THAT PULL THE THREAD ("Grania and Diarmid") (Op. 42). Mezzo-Soprano or Baritone .. 2 0

TORCH, THE (Op. 60, No. 1). In F, G, and A (Orchestral Parts in G only) .. 2 0

§TWILIGHT (Op. 59, No. 6). Contralto .. 2 0

§WAS IT SOME GOLDEN STAR (Op. 59, No. 5). Contralto .. 2 0

§ Orchestral Parts may be had.

A NEW SERIES OF SACRED SONGS

EDITED, WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING, BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

The two sets of Songs for each voice are also published in four volumes.

CLOTH, NINE SHILLINGS EACH.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

1. My heart ever faithful ... .. J. S. Bach
2. I will sing of Thy great mercies ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Jerusalem ("Gallia") ... .. Ch. Gounod
4. With verdure clad ("Creation") ... .. J. Haydn
5. I will extol Thee, O Lord ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
6. I mourn as a dove ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict

TENOR.

1. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... .. A. Stradella
2. In native worth ("Creation") ... .. J. Haydn
3. Be thou faithful unto death ("St. Paul")...
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Cujus animam ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
5. The Lord is very pitiful ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict
6. The soft southern breeze ("Rebekah") ... .. J. Barnby

CONTRALTO.

1. Slumber Song ("Christmas Oratorio") ... .. J. S. Bach
2. But the Lord is mindful ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. What tho' I trace ("Solomon") ... .. Handel
4. Evening Prayer ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
5. There is a green hill... .. Ch. Gounod
6. O Thou afflicted ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict

BASS.

1. Dost thou despise ... .. J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Now heaven in fullest glory shone ("Creation") J. Haydn
4. Pro peccatis ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
5. How great, O Lord ("St. Peter")... .. J. Benedict
6. If Thou should'st mark iniquities ("Eli")... .. M. Costa

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

1. Thou, O Lord, art my Protector (Psalm xix.)
C. Saint-Saëns
2. Lo! the heaven-descended Prophet
("The Passion") ... .. C. H. Graun
3. Jerusalem ("St. Paul") ... .. F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Great is Jehovah ... .. F. Schubert
5. Turn Thee unto me ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
6. Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson") ... .. Handel

TENOR.

1. Only be still, wait thou His leisure
("If thou but sufferest") ... .. J. S. Bach
2. Daughters of Jerusalem ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict
3. Thus was the sun ("Samson") ... .. Handel
4. O come, let us worship (Psalm xcv.)
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
5. Twilight is gently falling (Ave Maria) ... .. J. Raff
6. Song of Penitence (Busslied) ... .. Beethoven

CONTRALTO.

1. To living waters ("The Lord is my Shepherd")
J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... .. A. Stradella
3. All my heart inflamed and burning
("Stabat Mater") ... .. A. Dvorrák
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn)
Beethoven
5. Fac ut portem ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
6. Morning Prayer ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa

BASS.

1. Mighty Lord and King all glorious
("Christmas Oratorio") ... .. J. S. Bach
2. Rolling in foaming billows ("Creation") ... .. J. Haydn
3. Litany for All Souls' Day ... .. F. Schubert
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn)
Beethoven
5. Consume them all ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
6. Nazareth ... .. Ch. Gounod

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1. FIVE-FINGER STUDIES ... .. Part I	31. DOUBLE NOTES ... .. Part I
2.* " " ... .. " 2	32. " " ... .. " 2
3. SCALES ... .. Part I	33. " " ... .. " 3
4. " ... .. " 2	34. " " ... .. " 4
5. BROKEN CHORDS ... .. Part I	35. OCTAVES ... .. Part I
6. " " ... .. " 2	36.* " " ... .. " 2
7. " " ... .. " 3	37. CHORDS ... .. Part I
8. " " ... .. " 4	38. " " ... .. " 2
9. " " ... .. " 5	39.* STACCATO ... ..
10. LEFT HAND ... .. Part I	40. REPETITION ... .. Part I
11. " " ... .. " 2	41.* REPETITION AND TREMOLO ... .. " 2
12. " " ... .. " 3	42. " " ... .. " 3
13. " " ... .. " 4	43.* PART-PLAYING ... .. Part I
14.* ARPEGGIO ... .. Part I	44. " " ... .. " 2
15. " ... .. " 2	45.* ORNAMENTS ... .. Part I
16. " ... .. " 3	46. " ... .. " 2
17. VELOCITY ... .. Part I	47. ACCOMPANIED MELODY ... .. Part I
18. " ... .. " 2	48. " " ... .. " 2
19. " ... .. " 3	49. EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS ... .. Part I
20. " ... .. " 4	50.* " " ... .. " 2
21. " ... .. " 5	51. RHYTHM ... .. Part I
22. " ... .. " 6	52.* " " ... .. " 2
23. " ... .. " 7	53. EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS. By J. A. O'NEILL.
24. FIGURES IN SEQUENCE ... .. Part I	54. WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenkstübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.
25.* " " ... .. " 2	55. EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDE- PENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.
26. BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES ... .. Part I	56. PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vortübungen für das polyphone Spiel. By ARNOLD KRUG.
27. BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES ... .. " 2
28. SHAKES ... .. Part I
29. " ... .. " 2
30. " ... .. " 3

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE :

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THE present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS), PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S PIANOFORTE ALBUMS.

In Numbers, each 1/6, except Nos. 26, 27, and 28, or, Cloth Volumes, each 6/-.

VOLUME I.

- No. 1.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Petits Préludes, Suites Anglaises. Partita Nos. 1 to 3, &c.
No. 2.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Suites Anglaises, Suites Françaises. Partita Nos. 4 and 5, &c.
No. 3.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Petits Préludes, Concertos, Suites Anglaises, &c.

VOLUME II.

- No. 4.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 1 to 7, Sonatas, "Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.
No. 5.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 8 to 12, Gavottes, &c.
No. 6.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 13 to 16, Water Music, &c.

VOLUME III.

- No. 7.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Hero's March, Rakoczy March, Bridal March "Lohengrin," &c.
No. 8.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Meyerbeer's Coronation March, Cornelius March, Pilgrim's March, &c.
No. 9.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Wedding March, March "Tannhäuser," &c.

VOLUME IV.

- No. 10.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Rameau's Gavotte, Zimmermann's Gavotte, Calkin's Minuet, Silas's Bourrée, &c.
No. 11.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Gluck's Gavotte, W. Macfarren's Bourrée, Bach's Bourrée, &c.
No. 12.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including W. Macfarren's 2nd Gavotte, Benedict's Gavotte, Mozart's Minuet, &c.

VOLUME V.

- No. 13.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including Marche Hongroise, Scherzo Brillant, &c.
No. 14.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "La Gazelle," "Mazepa Galop," &c.
No. 15.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "Les Clochettes," "Feu Follet," &c.
No. 16.—SCHWEIZER, OTTO. Eight Scottish Airs (arranged for four hands).

VOLUME VI.

- No. 17.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "Murmuring Rivulet," The Pilgrims' Chorus ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 18.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "L'Oisillon," "Le Carillon," "The Evening Star" ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 19.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Ten Pieces, including "Jeu des Ondes," Valse Mélodieuse, Spinning Song ("Flying Dutchman"), &c.

VOLUME VII.

- No. 20.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Five Compositions.
No. 21.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Four Compositions.
No. 22.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Six Compositions.

VOLUME VIII.

- No. 23.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 24.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Eleven Compositions.
No. 25.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 26.—TOURS, BERTHOLD. Juvenile Album. Eight Characteristic Pieces (Duets), 3s.

VOLUME IX.

- Nos. 27 and 28.—MOSCHELES, I. "Domestic Life." Twelve Characteristic Duets, Two Books, each, 3s.

VOLUME X.

- No. 29.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Nine Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 3; Op. 12, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 30.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Ten Pieces. Op. 24, Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 27, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 28, Nos. 1 to 4.
No. 31.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Op. 28, Nos. 5 and 6; Op. 29; and Twenty Songs arranged.

VOLUME XI.

- Nos. 32, 33, and 34. The National Dance Music of Scotland. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Alexander Mackenzie; with additions by his son, A. C. Mackenzie.

VOLUME XII.

- No. 35.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Eight Pieces. Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 5; Op. 15, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 36.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Nine Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 6; Op. 23, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 37.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Six Songs. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Giuseppe Buonamici.

- No. 38.—ALTSCHUL, RUDOLF. Fifty Hungarian National Songs.

VOLUME XIII.

- No. 41.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Twenty-one Pieces. Op. 2, Nos. 1 to 14; Op. 3, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6; Op. 6; Op. 15, Nos. 1 and 2.
No. 42.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Seven Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 7, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 11.
No. 43.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Ten Pieces. Op. 8; Op. 9, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 10, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 4.

VOLUME XIV.

- No. 44.—CUI, CÉSAR. Thirteen Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 12; Op. 21, No. 3.
No. 45.—CUI, CÉSAR. Eleven Pieces. Op. 21, No. 4; Op. 22, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 31, No. 2; Op. 39, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 46.—CUI, CÉSAR. Seven Pieces. Op. 22, No. 4; Op. 29, No. 1; Op. 30, No. 1; Op. 35, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 40, Nos. 2 and 4.

VOLUME XV.

- No. 47.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 90.
No. 48.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 142.
No. 49.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Moments Musicaux (Op. 94), and Adagio and Rondo (Op. 145).

VOLUME XVI.

- No. 50.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Three Sets of Variations, Andante, and Klavierstück.
No. 51.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Adagio, Allegretto, and March in E major, &c.
No. 52.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Five Klavierstücke and Two Scherzi.

VOLUME XVII.

- No. 53.—HOFMANN, H. "The Trumpeter of Säckingen" (Op. 52) and Two Valses Caprices (Op. 2).
No. 54.—HOFMANN, H. "Italian Love Tale" (Op. 19) and Five other Pieces.
No. 55.—HOFMANN, H. Fourteen Pieces.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. complete	4	6	Full Score (Full Orchestra) ... ..	11	6
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ... ..	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra ... ..	10	5	Strings, each Number ... ..	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra ... ..	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement ... ..	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s.	d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3	6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1	6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
80.	DÉSÉPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1	6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2	3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
83.	" " " " No. 2 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
84.	" " " " No. 3 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. C. Palmer	1	6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH ... .. R. G. Hailing	1	6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... .. C. F. Waters	1	6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... .. Alfred Hollins	3	0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... .. S. Karg-Elert	3	6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2	3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5	6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SIX Traditional Melodies

ARRANGED FOR

PIANOFORTE DUET

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

No.

1. FELTON'S GAVOTTE.
2. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"How delightful to see."
3. IRISH MELODY—"Silent, O Moyle."
4. SCOTCH MELODY—"Wi' a hundred pipers."
5. WELSH MELODY—"Loudly proclaim" ("Ymadawia y Brenin").
6. ENGLISH FOLK-SONG—"The Keys of Canterbury."

N.B.—These duets are so arranged that in Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 6 the Primo part, and in Nos. 4 and 5 the Secondo part, may easily be played by a boy or girl not very advanced in technique.

Price Three Shillings.

London: NOVELLO &amp; COMPANY, Limited.

THESE 4 BOOKS PRESENTED FREE TO BONA-FIDE TEACHERS

Have you received your copies yet?

In order to extend the usefulness of their "Theory of Music Copybooks" and "Students' Practice Register," Messrs. PAXTON & Co. will present free of charge or obligation a complete set of three copybooks and a copy of the register (sufficient to last three terms) to any teacher who sends his (or her) professional card. The Theory books are based on the idea of "learning by doing," and thus make an indelible impression on the minds of young students.

THEORY AND SIMPLE HARMONY.

NEWTON'S THEORY OF MUSIC COPY BOOKS. IN THREE BOOKS.

These books are invaluable for impressing the rudiments of music and harmony on the pupil's mind. The books are progressively arranged, each book providing in permanent form the instructions which the teacher gives verbally at lesson-time. All explanations are accompanied by actual examples with blank staves for the student's own use. Thus the writing and copying of the music exercises help to fix the symbols and principles in the pupil's memory. Blank pages of MSS. are provided so that the teacher may extend the exercises if desired.

A feature of these books is the set of model exercises and examination papers given.

BOOK I., No. 15,139. MUSICAL ELEMENTS. Contains: The Staves, Value of Notes and Rests, Time, Leger Lines, Accidentals, and Miscellaneous Questions.

BOOK II., No. 15,140. SCALES AND INTERVALS. Contains: Major and Minor Scales, Intervals, Inversion of Intervals, and Miscellaneous Questions.

BOOK III., No. 15,158. ELEMENTARY HARMONY. Contains: Triads and their Inversions, Four-part Harmony, Dominant Sevenths and Inversions, Arpeggios, Abbreviations, Transposition, Modulation, and Miscellaneous Questions.

PRICE EACH BOOK, 1s. 6d.

THE MUSIC STUDENTS' PRACTICE REGISTER AND RECORD.

Arranged for One or Three Terms by H. J. TAYLOR, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L.

Teachers will find much use for these pocket Records. A definite system is half the battle in teaching, and these little books ensure that any slipshod methods are avoided. Each page contains columns for the time given to practising during the week to be added, as well as a space for the teacher's remarks. It is systematically laid out, and enables the teacher to review his pupil's progress at a glance. It would be found most useful in schools, where it is impossible for a teacher to remember the many details connected with each pupil from week to week. Besides the register, the book is prefaced with some extracts from Schumann's advice to young musicians, and contains also blank manuscript pages—these latter will be found invaluable at the music lesson.

ONE TERM. No. 15,175. PRICE 4d.

THREE TERMS. No. 15,153. PRICE 1s.

PAXTON'S 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET,
LONDON, W.C.1.

SEND THIS FORM, YOUR PROFESSIONAL CARD, AND 4d. IN STAMPS TO COVER POSTAGE.

To PAXTON'S, 22, High Street, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a free copy of the three "Theory of Music" books, and also a "Students' Register" to last three terms. I enclose my professional card and 4d. to cover postage.

Name.....

Address.....

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A PROGRAMME NOVELTY.
GROUP OF NEW COMPOSITIONS
BY BRITISH BLIND COMPOSERS.

BOHEMESQUE. (Written in 15-8 time)...	...	William Wolstenholme	s. d. 2 6
(Performed by Mr. Arthur Hollins at the Opening of the Grand Organ, Johannesburg Town Hall, South Africa.)
RONDINO (D flat)...	...	William Wolstenholme	2 0
MINUET ANTIQUE (D flat) ...	...	Horace F. Watling	2 0
MARCHE HÉROÏQUE (E flat) ...	...	Horace F. Watling	2 6
(Guildhall School of Music, Organ Examination, 1924. Local Centre.)
TOCCATA in D minor ...	...	T. G. Osborne	2 6
(Guildhall School of Music, Organ Examination, 1923-1924. Local Centre.)
FANTASIA in E ...	...	T. G. Osborne	2 6

Many of the greatest Organ Recitalists of the day—e.g., Mr. HERBERT WALTON, Mr. H. L. BALFOUR, Mr. CLARENCE EDDY, Mr. ARTHUR MEALE, and Mr. H. F. ELLINGFORD—are including the above Organ Works very frequently in their programmes.

ROLAND DIGGLE, Mus. Doc., Los Angeles, California, writes:

"I am sure you will be pleased to know that the Six Organ Pieces that you publish for the National Institute have proved the most popular pieces that I have played during the past season, in fact I am continually getting requests to include some of them in my programmes."

RYALLS & JONES, Ltd., Music Publishers, 107-109, Grange Rd., BIRKENHEAD

London Agents: EVANS & CO. (WELLS CASTLE), LTD., 72, WELLS STREET, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.1.

NOVELLO'S HYMNS AND TUNES

FOR

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

	Words by	Music by
1. COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD ...	... F. BEVAN ...	... G. C. MARTIN
2. FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING (Flower Service)	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE...	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
3. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ...	... EMILY H. MILLER ...	... F. CLAY
4. COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS ...	... G. WITHER ...	... J. STAINER
5. { THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE... NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY ...	... MARY F. MAUDE ... ... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... W. C. HARVEY ... J. ADCOCK
6. JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE ...	... J. F. WHEELER ...	... H. E. BUTTON
7. SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR ... (Flower Service)	... F. A. CHALLINOR ...	... F. A. CHALLINOR
8. WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE ...	... H. R. PALMER ...	... C. J. MAY
9. ON OUR WAY REJOICING ...	... J. S. B. MONSELL ...	... W. B. GILBERT
10. AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS...	... J. ELLERTON ...	... J. STAINER
11. THE ANGEL'S SONG ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
12. FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN ...	... HELEN W. SELBY ...	... A. MOFFAT
13. THE GOLDEN SHORE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
14. SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR ...	... G. THRING ...	... JOHN E. WEST
15. ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING ...	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... F. H. COWEN
16. MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	... W. H. DRAPER ...	... J. V. ROBERTS
17. STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	... J. BOGUE ...	... J. STAINER
18. THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER ...	... J. M. NEALE ...	... J. BARNBY
19. WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY ...	... G. MOULTRIE...	... J. BARNBY
20. HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	... G. THRING ...	... G. J. BENNETT
21. O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO...	... G. W. HINSDALE ...	... H. E. BUTTON
22. THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN...	... C. F. ALEXANDER ...	... A. SULLIVAN
23. LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP (THE BEAUTIFUL LAND ...)	... W. W. HOW ... ... E. OXENFORD ...	... A. S. COOPER ... J. STAINER
24. { JESUS, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME...	... M. L. DUNCAN ...	... H. PARKER
25. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND ...	... J. COMPTON ...	... J. STAINER
26. THE CITY OF LIGHT ...	... F. ADLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
27. { GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR ... GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD...	... A. GILBERT ... ... C. WESLEY ...	... H. E. BUTTON ... J. STAINER
28. HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES (Flower Service)	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
29. THE CROWN IS WAITING ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
30. RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS ...	... G. SPILLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
31. FLOWERS (Flower Service) ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
32. THE GOOD SHEPHERD...	... E. OXENFORD...	... J. STAINER
33. ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY ...	... M. BOURDILLON ...	... H. E. CRIMP
34. WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR ...	... L. WHITEHEAD ...	... E. J. TROUP
35. COME SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS ...	... J. J. DANIELL ...	... G. W. TORRANCE
36. WE WILL PRAISE THEE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
37. WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS (Flower Service)...	... A. C. BENSON ...	... A. M. GOODHART
38. COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	... W. W. HOW ...	... H. A. CHAMBERS
39. NOW THE DAY IS OVER ...	... S. BARING-GOULD ...	... F. W. BLUNT
40. WE THANK THEE LORD FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	... G. E. L. COTTON ...	... W. C. HARVEY
41. THE LESSON OF LOVE ...	...	... J. BARNBY
42. COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING	...	... E. J. TROUP
43. CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD ...	... MARY BRADFORD WHITING...	... J. H. MAUNDER
44. O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE (Flower Service)	... J. GIBSON ...	... Tune—"ELLACOMBE"

(To be continued.)

Price Three-halfpence each number.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE FIRST SET OF TWELVE MINIATURE ESSAYS

has now been completed with an essay on

JOHN IRELAND

the Remainder of the Collection containing

GRANVILLE BANTOCK. ARNOLD BAX. LORD BERNERS.
ALFREDO CASELLA. MANUEL DE FALLA. EUGÈNE GOOSSENS.
JOSEPH JONGEN. G. FRANCESCO MALIPIERO. SELIM PALMGREN.
FRANCIS POULENC. IGOR STRAWINSKY.

The enormous success of these "Miniature Essays" on some of the foremost living Composers has decided the Publishers to extend the series beyond the first dozen which is now ready, and they have in preparation Essays on

GUSTAV HOLST, SIBELIUS, AND POLDOWSKI, which will be issued shortly, uniform with the series already brought out.

Each "Miniature Essay" contains a short biographical sketch and an appreciation of the Composer in English and French, a carefully reproduced camera portrait, a facsimile of a MS. page from one of the composer's works, and a list of his compositions.

PRICE EACH SIXPENCE NET.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- No. 614 Absence ... H. Goetz 3d.
 217 * Do. (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 3d.
 181 * Do. ... 2d.
 67 Adieu love, adieu G. A. Macfarren 4d.
 312 Adieu, my native shore Pearsall 3d.
 943 Adieu, sweet Amaryllys J. W. G. Hathaway 3d.
 1227 Do. ... C. Macpherson 4d.
 390 Adieu to the woods Egerton 4d.
 658 Advice to lovers ... P. W. Pilcher 3d.
 1398 *After many a dusty mile E. Elgar 4d.
 913 After the battle arr. T. R. G. Jozé 3d.
 674 Ah, my dear Son (Carol, 3 V.) ... 4d.
 1375 Ah! what is love ... W. McNaught 4d.
 515 Ah! woe is me (6 V.) H. Lahee 6d.
 648 Airley Beacon C. V. Stanford 3d.
 568 Airs of Summer ... J. L. Roeckel 3d.
 17 All among the barley E. Stirling 3d.
 971 *All for my true love H. D. Wetton 4d.
 81 All is not gold that shineth bright in snow (5 V.) W. J. Westbrook 4d.
 394 *All is still ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 802 All Souls' Day J. Rheinberger 4d.
 59 All ye woods and trees and bow'rs J. L. Hatton 2d.
 83 * Do. (5 V.) H. Lahee 2d.
 940 Do. ... H. W. Wareing 4d.
 1037 *Allan Water arr. H. E. Button 3d.
 478 *Allen-a-Dale ... C. H. Lloyd 6d.
 1020 * Do. ... J. B. McEwen 4d.
 334 Already snow has fallen R. Franz 2d.
 113 Alton Locke's Song G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 1011 *Amaryllys I did woo J. E. West 3d.
 1322 *American National Songs (Three) 2d.
 972 Amintor's well-a-day J. E. West 4d.
 1364 An address to the nightingale W. W. Pearson 4d.
 175 An Autumn song ... C. Pinsuti 3d.
 20 An emigrant's song W. Macfarren 3d.
 1074 *An Empire song A. C. Mackenzie 4d.
 1053 An end will I bring Schubert 4d.
 1387 *An old Song resung H. B. Gardiner 6d.
 485 And then no more ... R. Raff 3d.
 1103 *Angelic hunter, The arr. J. Brahms 4d.
 1091 Angel's call, The I. I. Viotta 2d.
 960 Angel's greeting, The J. Brahms 4d.
 1167 *Angelus (Tuscany) E. Elgar 6d.
 1340 *Anglers, The W. W. Pearson 3d.
 30 Angler's Trysting-tree, The C. W. Corfe 4d.
 1039 *Annie Laurie arr. H. E. Button 3d.
 1008 Annie Lee ... J. J. Barnby 3d.
 182 April showers ... J. L. Hatton 2d.
 218 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 2d.
 1318 Arethusa, The ... W. Shield 4d.
 137 Arise, sweet love ... H. Leslie 4d.
 97 Arise, the sunbeams hail F. Berger 4d.
 520 Around the maypole tripping J. L. Hatton 2d.
 859 *Arranmore Boat Song arr. T. R. G. Jozé 6d.
 457 *Arrow and the song, The W. Hay 4d.
 973 As Amoret with Phillis sat John E. West 3d.
 1054 As dewdrops at morn Schubert 4d.
 525 As I saw fair Clara F. Corder 4d.
 146 As it fell upon a day ... S. Reay 4d.
 619 As the ripples flow E. A. Sydenham 3d.
 1052 As the watcher longs Schubert 4d.
 900 As through the land J. Pullen 3d.
 796 *As torrents in summer E. Elgar 3d.
 1180 As when the sun renews his strength (Madriral) C. E. Miller 4d.
 1257 *Ash Grove, The arr. Dunhill 4d.
 1105 At Andernach in Rhineland Abt 4d.
 393 At first the mountain rill G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 981 At her fair hands ... J. Elliott 3d.
 788 Do. ... C. H. H. Parry 3d.
 335 At parting ... R. Franz 2d.
 358 *At the coming of the Spring J. L. Hatton 4d.
 195 Auburn ... arr. E. Land 2d.
 582 *Auld Lang Syne ... C. A. Macfarren 2d.
 71 Antolycus' Song C. A. Macfarren 2d.
 1006 * Do. ... C. Lee Williams 4d.
 158 Autumn ... W. Macfarren 4d.
 274 Do. (T.T.B.B.) ... 4d.
 353 Do. ... A. C. Mackenzie 2d.
 1162 Autumn fields, The N. W. Gade 4d.
 464 Autumn is come again (5 V.) F. Corder 4d.
- No. 403 Autumn song ... S. Reay 4d.
 683 Do. ... J. Rheinberger 3d.
 484 Ave Maria ... J. Raff 4d.
 241 * Do. ... H. Smart 2d.
 968 *Awake, awake ... G. Bantock 4d.
 76 *Awake, awake, the flow'rs unfold H. Leslie 2d.
 25 Awake the starry midnight hour Mendelssohn 3d.
 923 *Away to the woodlands H. W. Warner 4d.
 978 *Baby's feet, like sea shells pink, A C. H. Lloyd 4d.
 225 Bacchanalian Song (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 4d.
 193 Bait, The (Come live with me) J. L. Hatton 2d.
 996 *Ballad, A (8 V.) ... T. Wendt 4d.
 1016 Ballade of Midsummer ... 4d.
 1017 Ballade of Spring ... 6d.
 1044 *Battle of the Baltic, The C. H. Lloyd 6d.
 861 *Battle song, A arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.
 578 Do. ... E. A. Sydenham 4d.
 1331 *Beacon, The ... A. Carse 4d.
 689 Beauty, arise ... K. J. Pye 4d.
 841 Before me careless lying (5 V.) C. H. Lloyd 6d.
 1238 *Beleaguered, The A. S. Sullivan 3d.
 56 *Belfry Tower, The J. L. Hatton 2d.
 1311 *Belgian National song F. Campenhout 2d.
 572 Bells across the snow Ch. Gounod 4d.
 432 *Bells of St. Michael's Tower, The W. Knyvett (5 V.), arr. R. P. Stewart 6d.
 1271 *Ben Bowlegs (humorous) W. W. Pearson 4d.
 984 Bendemeer's Stream J. Pointer 4d.
 1216 Beside the river ... A. Jensen 3d.
 793 Better music ne'er was known C. H. H. Parry 4d.
 184 *Beware ... J. L. Hatton 2d.
 220 Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 2d.
 111 *Bird of the Wilderness J. Barnby 2d.
 196 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
 1157 Birds are singing, The Hans Sitt 3d.
 798 Birthday serenade, A G. J. Elvey 4d.
 1308 Birthday, The ... E. Elgar 4d.
 300 *Bishop of Mentz, The Pearsall 2d.
 1107 *Black Monk, The (Welsh folk-song) arr. R. Boughton 4d.
 55 *Blow, blow thou winter wind G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 1254 Blow, breeze, from the North G. Elvey 4d.
 1369 Blow, western wind Pearson 4d.
 661 *Blue-bottle's fate, The (humorous) A. H. Ashworth 4d.
 514 Blue-eyed lassie, The F. Brandeis 3d.
 933 *Blwyddyn Bywyd D. Protheroe 4d.
 187 Blythe is the bird J. L. Hatton 3d.
 399 *Boat Song ... H. Leslie 2d.
 357 Do. ... E. Prout 6d.
 1088 Do. ... F. Schubert 3d.
 385 Boat, The ... R. Schumann 4d.
 3 Boating Song ... E. G. Monk 3d.
 521 *Boatman's Good-night, The F. Schira 2d.
 545 *Bonnie Bell A. C. Mackenzie 3d.
 1310 *Boy, The (humorous) Brewer 4d.
 63 *Break, break on thy cold grey stones, O sea G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 99 Breathe soft, ye winds J. B. Calkin 2d.
 1307 * Do. ... W. Paxton 2d.
 878 Bridal Song ... H. Leslie 6d.
 639 Bright be thy dreams Oliver King 3d.
 402 *Bright-hair'd morn, The S. Reay 4d.
 584 Bright Moon ... John E. West 3d.
 1222 *Bring me a golden pen F. H. Cowen 4d.
 601 Broken Flower, The Oliver King 3d.
 447 Brook, The C. G. Reissiger 4d.
 1015 *Brownies, The - Moellendorff 1d.
 223 Busy, curious, thirsty fy (A.T.T.B.) J. L. Hatton 3d.
 743 *Butterfly, The J. Blumenthal 6d.
 1095 *By a gentle river laid John E. West 4d.
 1002 *By the waters of Babylon P. Cornelius 3d.
 1141 By woodland and wayside E. Franz 3d.
- No. 359 Calm night ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
 380 Calm of the sea, The H. Hiles 6d.
 911 *Capture of Cremona, The arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.
 314 Caput apri defero ... Pearsall 4d.
 178 *Caravan, The ... C. Pinsuti 2d.
 1251 *Cargoes ... H. B. Gardiner 4d.
 1273 Carrion Crow, The (humorous) W. W. Pearson 4d.
 607 Cavalier, The ... C. Goodall 4d.
 529 Cavalry song C. A. Macfarren 4d.
 635 Cephalus and Procris A. W. Batson 4d.
 482 Chafer's Wedding, A (humorous) Lewandowski 8d.
 1087 Chapel, The ... C. Kreutzer 4d.
 427 *Charge of the Light Brigade, The E. Hecht 6d.
 85 *Charm me asleep (6 V.) H. Leslie 4d.
 906 Do. ... J. B. McEwen 4d.
 847 *Chase, The ... E. German 4d.
 757 Cherry ripe ... A. H. Brewer 3d.
 583 Do. ... arr. E. Land 2d.
 1255 * Do. ... W. G. Ross 3d.
 731 Do. (6 V.) S. P. Waddington 4d.
 1212 Cheshire cheese, The arr. J. C. Bridge 4d.
 734 Chi la Gagliarda ... B. Donato 4d.
 375 Chieftain to the Highland bound, A Pearsall 3d.
 466 * Do. ... O. Prescott 6d.
 94 Childhood's melody F. Berger 2d.
 101 Chivalry of Labour, The (5 V.) J. B. Calkin 6d.
 1145 Chloe, that dear bewitching prude H. Willan 3d.
 1147 *Chorus of Empire C. A. E. Harris 4d.
 66 *Christmas... G. A. Macfarren 2d.
 1199 *Christmas greetings, A E. Elgar 8d.
 314 Christmas song, A ... Pearsall 4d.
 967 Do. ... M. Praetorius 3d.
 845 Close to my heart... W. Davies 4d.
 677 *Clouds, The J. Rheinberger 4d.
 823 Come again, sweet days J. Dowland 3d.
 726 *Come away ... E. German 4d.
 873 * Do. ... H. Parker 6d.
 1169 Come away, come away, death arr. Arne 3d.
 36 Do. (5 V.) G. A. Macfarren 1d.
 51 Do. (5 V.) ... 1d.
 58 Come celebrate the May " Hatton 2d.
 668 Come, fairies, trip it ... F. Liffie 4d.
 102 Come fill, my boys (A.T.T.B.) J. B. Calkin 4d.
 118 *Come follow me A. Zimmermann 3d.
 1143 Come forth, the summer's murmur hear ... E. Franz 3d.
 14 Come, heavy sleep J. Dowland 3d.
 745 Come if you dare... Purcell 6d.
 1210 Come, lasses and lads arr. J. C. Bridge 4d.
 899 Come let me take thee J. Pullen 3d.
 317 Come let us be merry Pearsall 2d.
 507 *Come live with me W. S. Bennett 2d.
 360 Do. ... J. L. Hatton 4d.
 193 Do. (The Bait) ... 2d.
 497 Come, May, with all thy flowers J. L. Gregory 3d.
 1052 Come, O come, dearest, come Schubert 4d.
 671 Come o'er the burn, Bessie (3 V.) 3d.
 1214 Come out across the heather A. Jensen 4d.
 791 *Come, pretty wag, and sing C. H. H. Parry 3d.
 38 Come sleep... J. Benedict 4d.
 1060 Do. ... J. W. G. Hathaway 3d.
 1110 * Do. ... R. H. Walthew 2d.
 945 Do. ... A. G. Wathall 4d.
 1007 *Come to me, gentle sleep Cowen 4d.
 701 Do. ... H. W. Schartau 4d.
 713 Come, tuneless friends (humorous) C. H. Lloyd 4d.
 1032 Come with me, fairest J. Brahms 4d.
 615 Comfort ... H. Goetz 3d.
 999 *Comfort in tears... P. Cornelius 6d.
 1182 *Comrades' song of hope, The arr. A. Adam 3d.
 383 Confidence (8 V.) ... R. Schumann 4d.

THE SONG OF THE GALE

PART SONG

WORDS BY SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

MUSIC BY

MYLES B. FOSTER

ARRANGED FOR MIXED VOICES WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR PIANOFORTE OR ORCHESTRA

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Con moto agitato.

PIANO.

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

f con forza

I wa - ken the slum-b'ring o - cean, He

f con forza

I wa - ken the o - cean, He

f con forza

I wa - ken the o - cean, He

f con forza

I wa - ken the o - cean, He

Copyright, 1922, by Novello and Company, Limited

Originally published as a Two-part Song in NOVELLO'S SCHOOL SONGS, No. 427, and in NOVELLO'S TWO-PART SONGS FOR FEMALE VOICES, No. 65.

THE SONG OF THE GALE

poco dim.

ri - ses in rage and might, But I laugh at his foam - ing fu - ry, I

poco dim.

ri - ses in rage and might, But I laugh, . . laugh at his fu - ry, laugh

poco dim.

ri - ses in rage and might, But I laugh at his foam - ing fu - ry, I . .

poco dim.

ri - ses in rage and might, But I laugh, . . laugh at his fu - ry, laugh at his

f' cres.

laugh at his foam - ing fu - ry, And

f' cres.

at his foam - ing fu - ry, And

mf. cres.

laugh at his foam - ing fu - ry, And sport with the bil - lows,

mf. cres.

fu - ry, his foam - ing fu - ry, And sport with the bil - lows white, And cres. f' cres.

più f sf sport with the bil - lows white, They rear and dash, with a thun - der crash, As I

più f sf sport with the bil - lows white, They rear and dash, with a thun - der crash, As I

più f sf sport with the bil - lows white, They rear, dash, with a thun - der crash, As I

più f sf

sport with the bil - lows white, They rear, dash, with a thun - der crash, As I

THE SONG OF THE GALE

rit. a tempo

speed on my long, wild flight. . .

rit. a tempo

speed on my long, wild flight. . .

rit. a tempo

speed on my long, wild flight. . .

rit. a tempo

speed on my long, wild flight. . .

rit. a tempo

speed on my long, wild flight. . .

shout in the gloom - y for - est! The trees in my grasp I shake, . . The shout in the gloom - y for - est! The trees I shake, . . The shout in the gloom - y for - est! The trees I shake, The shout in the gloom - y for - est! The trees I shake, The

f

poco dim.

yel-low leaves dance be - fore me, the yel-low leaves dance be - fore me,

poco dim.

yel-low leaves dance be - fore me, the leaves dance be - fore me,

poco dim.

leaves dance be - fore me, the leaves dance be - fore me,

poco dim. mf

leaves dance be - fore me, the leaves dance be - fore me, The leggiere leggiere

THE SONG OF THE GALE

f The green from their boughs I break;
f I break, break, break; My mf-cres. The green from their boughs I break, break, break; My cres. green from their boughs I break, I break, break, break;
f ff

mf in the deeps pro-found, As my way thro' the woods I take.
mf clar-ions sound in the deeps pro-found, As my way thro' the woods I take.
mf clar-ions sound in the deeps pro-found, As my way . . I take.
mf in the deeps pro-found, As my way thro' the woods I take.
sf mf cres. molto

Rather slower
p Thro' the bound-less hea-vens, The white-wing'd clouds I p A-far thro' the hea-vens, The clouds I p A-far thro' the hea-vens, The white-wing'd clouds I p Thro' the bound-less hea-vens, The white-wing'd clouds I

Rather slower
ff

THE SONG OF THE GALE

Tempo 1mo.

chase, And I laugh! I . . laugh! As I see them fly - ing, I chase, And I laugh! I . . laugh! As I see them fly - ing, I chase, And I laugh! I . . laugh! As I see them fly - ing, I chase, And I laugh! I . . laugh! As I see them fly - ing, I accel. al Tempo 1mo.

f

fly - - ing A - cross the old moon's white face, In see . . them fly - ing A - cross the old moon's white face, In see them fly - ing A - cross the old moon's white face, In see them fly - ing A - cross the old moon's white face, In

f

THE SONG OF THE GALE

Lento

wild de-light I mock at their fright, And I cry—"O ye clouds, give wild de-light I mock at their fright, And I cry—"O ye clouds, give wild de-light I mock at their fright, And I cry—"O ye clouds, give wild de-light I mock at their fright, And I cry—"O ye clouds, give

Lento

Allegro subito

place!"

place!"

place!"

place!"

Allegro subito

place!"

NOVELLO'S PART-SONG BOOK.

A COLLECTION OF PART-SONGS, GLEES, AND MADRIGALS.

For S.A.T.B. unless otherwise stated.

Those marked thus * may be had in Tonic Sol-fa Notation.

- |      |   |      |   |      |   |
|------|---|------|---|------|---|
| No.  |   | No.  |   | No.  |   |
| 43   | Consolation ... H. Smart 2d.                              | 1392 | *Dream-love ... P. E. Fletcher 4d.                              | 368  | Fishing boat, The J. L. Hatton 2d.                            |
| 591  | Contentment ... F. R. Müller 4d.                          | 892  | Dream of calm, A ... H. Leslie 6d.                              | 896  | Flight of Summer, The F. Tozer 8d.                            |
| 1366 | Coral Grove, The W. W. Pearson 4d.                        | 1348 | Dream of home, The Pearson 3d.                                  | 838  | *Flora's Queen (6 V.) J. Stainer 8d.                          |
| 531  | Corin for Cleora dying W. V. Wallace 4d.                  | 384  | Dream, The ... R. Schumann 2d.                                  | 870  | Flower that smiles to-day, The H. E. Button 3d.               |
| 1288 | *Cornelius March F. Mendelssohn 4d.                       | 31   | Do. ... R. P. Stewart 3d.                                       | 121  | Flowers ... A. Zimmermann 4d.                                 |
| 167  | Cornfield, The ... J. Lemmens 4d.                         | 1040 | *Drink to me only with thine eyes arr. H. E. Button 3d.         | 554  | Flowers' review, The F. Abt 4d.                               |
| 907  | *Coronach ... G. A. Macfarren 3d.                         | 41   | Drinking song, A (T.T.B.B.) J. Benedict 4d.                     | 912  | *Fly not yet arr. T. R. G. Jozé 4d.                           |
| 1220 | *Coronation Day ... P. E. Fletcher 3d.                    | 162  | *Drops of rain ... J. Lemmens 2d.                               | 1150 | *Fly, singing bird ... E. Elgar 4d.                           |
| 764  | *Coronation Song ... E. Fanning 6d.                       | 1024 | *Dry those fair, those crystal eyes John E. West 3d.            | 536  | Fly to my mistress C. C. Moseley 4d.                          |
| 651  | *Corydon, arise C. V. Stanford 4d.                        | 1250 | Duncan Gray arr. C. Macpherson 4d.                              | 771  | *Follow your saint C. H. H. Parry 3d.                         |
| 893  | Cottager to her infant, The R. F. M. Akerman 3d.          | 827  | Each season bringeth pleasure T. Palmer 4d.                     | 1391 | *Folly's Song P. E. Fletcher 4d.                              |
| 1036 | Counsel, The ... H. F. Simson 4d.                         | 533  | Earth with its troubled voices M. Costa 4d.                     | 34   | Football song, A E. G. Monk 4d.                               |
| 800  | Countryman, The ... C. Wood 4d.                           | 457  | East Indian, The J. L. Gregory 3d.                              | 1362 | Footsteps of angels, The A.R. Gaul 4d.                        |
| 8    | Countryman's song, The E. F. Rimbault 4d.                 | 103  | Echoes ... J. B. Calkin 2d.                                     | 989  | *Do. ... J. Holbrooke 4d.                                     |
| 267  | *Cradle song ... W. Macfarren 4d.                         | 638  | Do. ... Oliver King 3d.   | 72   | Do. ... C. A. Macirone 4d.                                    |
| 245  | *Do. ... H. Smart 2d.                                     | 64   | *Do. ... G. A. Macfarren 2d.                                    | 1189 | *For Empire and for King P. E. Fletcher 8d.                   |
| 936  | *Do. ... A. Stenz 3d.                                     | 155  | *Do. ... A. Sullivan 2d.  | 1187 | *Forest bride, The R. Schumann 4d.                            |
| 832  | *Creation's Hymn Beethoven 3d.                            | 361  | Echo's last word ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                           | 1121 | *Forest scene, A ... H. Goetz 4d.                             |
| 2    | *Cricketeer's song (T.T.B.) G. A. Macfarren 3d.           | 1178 | *Emer's lament for Cuchulain (Irish Melody) arr. G. Bantock 4d. | 204  | *Forget-me-not, The J. L. Hatton 2d.                          |
| 252  | *Crocuses and Snowdrops H. Smart 2d.                      | 1177 | *Empire and Motherland C. Harris 4d.                            | 816  | Fortunate island, A (8 V.) B. Johnson 6d.                     |
| 1205 | Crossing the Bar C. Lee Williams 2d.                      | 1146 | *Empire of the Sea C.A.E. Harriss 6d.                           | 755  | *Fortune-teller's song, The E. Fanning 4d.                    |
| 1320 | *Crown of Empire E. Fanning 4d.                           | 672  | Enforce yourself as God's own knight (3 V.) ... E. Turges 4d.   | 1298 | *Fountain, The ... E. Elgar 8d.                               |
| 1186 | *Cruiskeen Lawn, The arr. G. Bantock 4d.                  | 57   | *England ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                                   | 678  | *Do. ... J. Rheinberger 4d.                                   |
| 433  | *Do. (5 V.) arr. R. P. Stewart 4d.                        | 891  | English girl, The ... B. Steane 4d.                             | 506  | *Do. ... F. Schira 4d.  |
| 177  | *Crusaders, The ... C. Pinsuti 2d.                        | 1359 | Erli-King, The ... A. R. Gaul 4d.                               | 571  | *Four jolly smiths, The Leslie 2d.                            |
| 1346 | Cryes of London, The (humorous) R. Deering 8d.            | 93   | Essay, my heart ... F. Berger 4d.                               | 1262 | *Franklyn's dogge leped over a style (humorous) Mackenzie 6d. |
| 1345 | Do. ... O. Gibbons 8d.                                    | 1236 | Evenen in the village Gardiner 4d.                              | 1389 | Freeman's Song and Chorus T. Ravenscroft 4d.                  |
| 1343 | Do. ... T. Weekes 6d.                                     | 1082 | Evening ... L. de Call 3d.                                      | 1323 | *Frog, The (humorous) E. Newton 4d.                           |
| 1274 | Cuckoo Clock, The (humorous) W. W. Pearson 4d.            | 88   | Do. ... H. Hiles 2d.  | 967  | From Jesse's stock upspringing M. Prætorius 3d.               |
| 707  | *Cupid and Rosalind C. V. Stanford 4d.                    | 397  | *Do. ... H. Leslie 2d.  | 1291 | From piercing steel M. Greene 3d.                             |
| 667  | Cupid is a wayward boy (6 V.) C. H. Lloyd 6d.             | 493  | *Do. ... G. C. Martin 3d.                                       | 1377 | From the lone shieling M. Maclean 4d.                         |
| 606  | Cupid's lottery ... S. Jacoby 4d.                         | 1356 | *Do. ... W. W. Pearson 3d.                                      | 642  | From White's and Willis' J. D. Davis 3d.                      |
| 262  | *Curfew Bell, The W. Macfarren 4d.                        | 693  | *Do. ... L. Spohr 3d.   | 604  | *Full fathom five ... C. Wood 3d.                             |
| 1078 | Curfew, The (5 V.) J. W. Elliott 4d.                      | 152  | *Do. ... A. S. Sullivan 2d.                                     | 1154 | Gallant Swabian captain, A F. Hegar 4d.                       |
| 470  | Do. (6 V.) ... Oliver King 3d.                            | 749  | Evening breezes ... G. R. Vicars 4d.                            | 1317 | Garibaldi's hymn ... J. Blumenthal 4d.                        |
| 142  | *Do. ... H. Smart 2d.                                     | 345  | Evening glow on the woods F. Abt 4d.                            | 519  | Garland for our fairest, A Hatton 4d.                         |
| 1329 | Cyclists, The W. W. Pearson 6d.                           | 969  | *Evening hast lost her throne G. Bantock 3d.                    | 201  | Garland for the hero's crest, A J. L. Hatton 4d.              |
| 576  | Cynthia ... W. A. Barrett 4d.                             | 740  | Evening Hymn ... J. Blumenthal 3d.                              | 741  | *Gather ye rosebuds J. Blumenthal 6d.                         |
| 1233 | *Dafydd y garreg wen arr. H. Evans 3d.                    | 679  | Evening rest J. Rheinberger 3d.                                 | 1302 | *Do. ... (5 V.) John Pointer 4d.                              |
| 413  | Dainty, fine, sweet nymph (5 V.) T. Morley 4d.            | 1000 | *Evening scene ... E. Elgar 6d.                                 | 831  | *Do. ... G. Rathbone 4d.                                      |
| 161  | *Dainty love ... W. Macfarren 2d.                         | 553  | Evening song ... F. Abt 3d.                                     | 1193 | Gay Madcap ... R. Schumann 4d.                                |
| 783  | Daisy, The ... H. Clarke 3d.                              | 425  | Do. ... E. M. Hill 3d.  | 701  | Gentle sleep H. W. Schartau 4d.                               |
| 654  | Damon's passion C. V. Stanford 4d.                        | 514  | Do. ... R. Schumann 3d.   | 469  | Gentle winds around her hover J. T. Musgrave 3d.              |
| 1233 | *David of the White Rock arr. H. Evans 3d.                | 1376 | *Evening star, The G. Tootell 4d.                               | 407  | *Gently falls the evening shade L. Marenzio 4d.               |
| 379  | *Dawn of day, The ... S. Reay 6d.                         | 687  | Evening wind, The F. J. Harper 4d.                              | 851  | *Girls and boys come out to play G. A. Macfarren 4d.          |
| 868  | *Dawn of song, The E.C. Bairstow 6d.                      | 1241 | *Evansong ... M. F. Phillips 3d.                                | 643  | Give place, you ladies Stephens 3d.                           |
| 443  | *Day dies slowly, The H. Leslie 6d.                       | 341  | Eventide ... F. Abt 2d.   | 645  | Go, happy rose ... F. Iliffe 4d.                              |
| 355  | Day of Love, The A.C. Mackenzie 6d.                       | 1125 | Every rustling tree ... Kuhlau 2d.                              | 715  | Go, lovely rose ... A. Berridge 4d.                           |
| 625  | Day that saw thy beauty rise W. Jackson and F. Corder 4d. | 777  | *Every sweet with sour is tempered ... A. Berridge 4d.          | 269  | Go, pretty birds ... W. Macfarren 4d.                         |
| 1235 | *Daybreak ... H. Brian 4d.                                | 992  | *Excelsior ... M. W. Balfe 6d.                                  | 1164 | *Go, song of mine (6 V.) E. Elgar 8d.                         |
| 866  | *Do. ... E. Fanning 8d.                                   | 1030 | *Fain would I change that note R. V. Williams 3d.               | 1335 | *God bless the Prince of Wales arr. B. Richards 2d.           |
| 1139 | Day-dreams M. Meyer-Obersleben 4d.                        | 1409 | Fair are those eyes M. Cavendish 3d.                            | 954  | *God in the thunderstorm F. Schubert 6d.                      |
| 134  | *Daylight is fading H. Leslie 2d.                         | 994  | *Fair Daffodils H. E. Darke 3d.                                 | 753  | *God prosper him—our King J. Barnby 4d.                       |
| 535  | Days of long ago, The B. Tours 4d.                        | 90   | Do. ... H. Hiles 3d.  | 1098 | God rules alone ... J. Raff 3d.                               |
| 953  | Dear in death ... C. H. Lloyd 3d.                         | 1075 | Do. ... H. J. King 4d.  | 778  | *God save the King arr. J. F. Bridge 3d.                      |
| 1127 | Dear little Shamrock (Irish Air) arr. H. E. Button 3d.    | 122  | Do. ... A. Zimmermann 2d.                                       | 836  | *Do. ... arr. M. Costa 4d.                                    |
| 1299 | *Death on the hills ... E. Elgar 8d.                      | 26   | Fair flower of Northumberland, The ... E. F. Rimbault 3d.       | 885  | *Do. ... arr. E. Elgar 4d.                                    |
| 1102 | Death, the reaper arr. J. Brahms 4d.                      | 517  | *Fair land, we greet thee C. Pinsuti 6d.                        | 1147 | *Do. ... C. A. E. Harriss 4d.                                 |
| 1057 | *Deep in my soul ... E. Elgar 6d.                         | 1386 | *Fair, sweet, cruel J. G. Williams 4d.                          | 835  | *Do. ... arr. H. Hiles 2d.                                    |
| 1337 | *Deil 's awa' wi' the exciseman arr. E. T. Sweeting 4d.   | 336  | Fairest time, The ... R. Franz 3d.                              | 834  | Do. ... arr. V. Novello 4d.                                   |
| 1341 | *Departed joys W. W. Pearson 3d.                          | 23   | *Fairies' song, The H. R. Bishop 8d.                            | 32   | God speed the plough E. Richter 3d.                           |
| 1081 | Departure ... Franz Abt 3d.                               | 266  | *Fairies, The ... W. Macfarren 2d.                              | 211  | Going a-maying ... J. L. Hatton 4d.                           |
| 633  | Despairing lover, The A. W. Batson 3d.                    | 1347 | *Fairies were tripping, The Taylor 4d.                          | 1137 | Golden year, The H. Leslie 8d.                                |
| 652  | *Diaphenia ... C. V. Stanford 3d.                         | 630  | Fairy lover, The A. W. Batson 3d.                               | 120  | Gone for ever A. Zimmermann 4d.                               |
| 1120 | Dim and grey appear the mountains ... F. Abt 4d.          | 163  | Fairy ring, The J. Lemmens 4d.                                  | 611  | Good advice ... H. Goetz 4d.                                  |
| 29   | Dirge (The glories of our birth) S. Wesley 3d.            | 118  | *Fairy song A. Zimmermann 2d.                                   | 681  | *Do. ... J. Rheinberger 4d.                                   |
| 40   | Dirge for the faithful lover J. Benedict 2d.              | 1138 | Fairy spring M. Meyer-Obersleben 4d.                            | 123  | Good-morrow A. Zimmermann 4d.                                 |
| 521  | *Dirge of Darthula, The (6 V.) J. Brahms 6d.              | 613  | Faithfulness ... H. Goetz 4d.                                   | 5    | Good-morrow, fair ladies T. Morley 1d.                        |
| 346  | Dost thou hear the trees F. Hensel 2d.                    | 848  | Faithless Nelly Gray (humorous) C. L. Williams 6d.              | 186  | Good-night ... J. L. Hatton 2d.                               |
| 169  | Dost thou idly ask ... H. Smart 2d.                       | 857  | *Far away ... arr. T. R. G. Jozé 6d.                            | 224  | *Do. (A.T.T.B.) ... 3d.                                       |
| 140  | Dost not my lady come ... 2d.                             | 1246 | *Far o'er the bay ... C. Franck 4d.                             | 744  | Do. ... R. O. Morgan 1d.                                      |
| 564  | Douglas raid, The O. Prescott 2d.                         | 1410 | Farewell, despair M. Cavendish 4d.                              | 119  | Do. ... A. Zimmermann 4d.                                     |
| 135  | Down in a pretty valley H. Leslie 4d.                     | 1119 | Farewell meeting Mendelssohn 4d.                                | 492  | Good-night, from the Rhine J. Raff 1d.                        |
| 311  | Down in my garden fair Pearsall 4d.                       | 1086 | Farewell, thou lovely forest glade H. Esser, arr. F. Abt 2d.    | 265  | Good-night, good rest W. Macfarren 4d.                        |
| 447  | *Dream, baby, dream H. Smart 2d.                          | 54   | Fear no more the heat o' the sun G. A. Macfarren 4d.            |      |   |

(July, 1923.)

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 972.—Vol. 65
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

FEBRUARY 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2, AT 2.30 P.M.

FAUST - - - - - BERLIOZ

MADAME MIRIAM LICETTE.
MR. FRANK MULLINGS.
MR. EDWARD HALLAND.
MR. CHARLES KNOWLES.

Conductor - MR. HAMILTON HARTY.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1, AT 2.30 P.M.

THE DREAM OF GERONTIUS - ELGAR
THE HYMN OF JESUS - - - - - HOLST

MISS MARGARET BALFOUR.
MR. ARTHUR JORDAN.
MR. HORACE STEVENS.

Conductor - - SIR LANDON RONALD.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.
At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, ros. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery—Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, February 2 and 16,
at 3.

ORGAN RECITAL, Monday, February 4, at 3.

LECTURES will be given by Dr. H. W. RICHARDS, on "Bach," with special reference to his Forty-Eight Preludes and Fugues, on Wednesdays, February 6 and 13, at 3.15.

L.R.A.M. Easter Examination. Entries will be accepted up to February 15, on payment of a late fee of 5s.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

ROYAL MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

A BALLET CLASS under the Direction of Lady George Cholmondeley is held at the College.

The OPERATIC CLASS has the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAM-INATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in E minor ("Wedge"), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 98; Augener, p. 227; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 9.)

Canon in B minor, Schumann. Op. 56. (Any edition.)

Andante in F, from the 6th Quartet, Mozart. Best's Arrangements,
No. 2, p. 12 (Novello). This arrangement only.

The selected pieces and the books set for the Essay for the July, 1924,
A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1924.

Regulations may be had on application.

List of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Specimen Tests of the July, 1924, Examination now ready.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, to be set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examination, may now be obtained at the College.

Associateship and Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects and STAGE
TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s.
Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459.

H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &amp;c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, Mrs. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &amp;c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &amp;c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.

C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1923-24.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 10 to December 1, December 3 to March 8, and March 10 to June 6.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,

ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

CORRESPONDENCE or ORAL COURSES

In preparation of all PAPER WORK required for Mus. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L. Examinations.

Also Courses of preparation for the AURAL TESTS of the above-named Examinations.

GEO. H. SKAER, Mus. B., DUNELM.,

50, Park Road, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

DEGREES IN MUSIC.

Oxford Preliminary Arts and Durham Matriculation.

Also B.A. and B.Sc.

EXPERT TUITION BY CORRESPONDENCE.

For terms, testimonials, &amp;c., address

Mr. J. CHARLESTON, B.A.,

14, ELSHAM ROAD, KENSINGTON, W.14.

How to play difficult music with ease - -

PIANISTS who wish to play the music which affords the greatest enjoyment and relaxation—the compositions of the world's greatest musicians—and who are averse to the drudgery of wearisome keyboard practising in order to obtain the necessary technical proficiency, will find the "Brain to Keyboard" method of the greatest possible help.

Practice on this system, much of it away from the keyboard, is never wearisome, and after some weeks of it, spending quite a short time every day, a degree of technical proficiency is obtained which would be otherwise impossible, even after years of keyboard practising for several hours daily.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., has strongly recommended my System (the Original Postal System), the advantages of which, he stated, he could cordially endorse from his own personal experience. More than 17,000 successful students add their testimony.

"From Brain to Keyboard"
Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

SPECIAL LANTERN LECTURE

Entitled "From Brain to Keyboard," at Steinwa Hall,

By MACDONALD SMITH,

On THURSDAY EVENING, 28th FEB., at 8 p.m. Tickets 2s. 4d.

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will be gladly sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQ., LONDON, W.C.1.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—The Wigmore Hall and Piano Galleries, Ltd., have now forty-two Music Studios; Grand Piano in every room. Every comfort and convenience. Inclusive rates. Apply, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

A DEMONSTRATION LECTURE

WILL BE GIVEN AT THE

DUKE'S HALL, ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC,

On SATURDAY, MARCH 1st, 1924, at 11 o'clock,

BY

MR. JAMES BATES

(Lecturer on Voice Culture, Phonetics and Class-Singing at the Royal Academy of Music. Teacher of Class-Singing at the Francis Holland School, Graham Street, S.W.; The High School, Edgbaston, Birmingham; The High School, High Wycombe; The Roedean School, Brighton; St. Mary's College, Lancaster Gate, Paddington; The Watford Grammar School (Boys'), and Wycombe Abbey, Bucks.)

Synopsis of Lecture:

"Teaching Enunciation in the School Singing Class."

Chairman: DR. JOHN E. BORLAND

(Musical Adviser, London Education Committee).

Choirs of Boys and Girls will sing a selection of school music, including unaccompanied madrigals by Weelkes, Morley, Edwards, Gibbons, Dowland; and Shield; also accompanied items by Bantock, Buck, Elgar, Mackenzie, Parry, Geoffrey Shaw, Somervell, Watts, &c.

Organist: DR. STANLEY R. MARCHANT, F.R.C.O.

Accompanist: Miss KATHLEEN MURPHY, L.R.A.M.

Tickets issued free to Singing-class Teachers, Choir Trainers, and Educationists specially interested in the teaching of pure enunciation in speech and song: can be had upon application, enclosing stamped addressed envelope, on or before February 16, to—

MR. JAMES BATES,

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC, MARYLEBONE ROAD, N.W.1.

"VOICE CULTURE," by JAMES BATES, 5s. 6d., published by Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

"YOUNG SINGERS," by JAMES BATES, 1s. 6d., just published by Morton, Burt & Sons, Ltd., 56-58, Porchester Road, W.2. Recommended by Dr. W. G. Alcock, M.V.O., Salisbury Cathedral; Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., late Westminster Abbey; E. T. Cook, Esq., Southwark Cathedral; Dr. Stanley R. Marchant, Sub-Organist St. Paul's Cathedral; Dr. H. W. Richards, Teachers' Registration Council; E. S. Roper, Esq., H.M.'s Chapels Royal; Sir Richard Terry, Mus. Doc., Westminster Cathedral.

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE will deliver the GRESHAM MUSIC LECTURES on February 12, 13, 14, 15. Subjects: "Selections from Playford's Musical Companion" (consisting of Rounds, Catches, Dialogues, &c.); "Handel and the Duke of Chandos" (Illustrations from "Esther," Chandos Anthems); and Suite for Harpsichord, including "The Harmonious Blacksmith"; Attwood's Studies with Mozart; Selection for Strings from the Mozart MSS. in possession of the Lecturer. Admission from 6 p.m.

PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL.

MAY 15th, 16th, 17th, 1924.

Adjudicators: { Prof. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
Mr. FELIX SWINSTEAD, F.R.A.M.

ALL CLASSES OPEN.

Copy of SYLLABUS (postage, 1d.), may be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, 7, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

FOURTEENTH GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

26th APRIL to 10th MAY, 1924.

COMPETITIONS IN 129 CLASSES.

Syllabus now ready. Price 9d. (post free).

From the Festival Office, 168, Hope Street, Glasgow.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL

(CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL),

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.
(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;
L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124.

Apply, Secretary.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an ORGAN RECITAL (1.796th), on February 5th, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m., at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, E.C.

YOU MUST MEMORISE.

PERFECT MEMORY FOR PIANISTS

IN SIX CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS FOR £3 3s.

SATISFACTION ASSURED after first lesson or return of fee guaranteed.

Write for free booklet with details and testimonials,

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON.

1, PAULTONS SQUARE, CHELSEA, S.W.3.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Manchester Guardian, Dec. 12, 1923.—"If we are to accept either Mr. Tree's or Schönberg's definition of speech as being so near to the verge of music, there seems indeed little reason why speech should not come to be accepted as a true element of music itself."

Luton.—The Secretary, Dec. 11, 1923.—"I must thank you on behalf of the Society for the very fine lecture. It will be long remembered."

Above is the 7th Lecture at Manchester, and the 3rd at Luton.

"How to ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 post free.

(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Concerts, &c., address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac.,
Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

L.R.A.M. AND L.T.C.L. POSTAL COURSES.

MR. GILBERT M. THOMAS,

M.A. (Cantab.), L.R.A.M., A.Mus. T.C.L.

Private Pupil of

STEWART MACPHERSON

BACKHAUS,

OSCAR BERINGER.

These Courses are the outcome of many years devoted almost entirely to this individualised correspondence coaching, and embody the teachings of the leading Masters of the day, ensuring the gaining of the Diploma in the shortest possible time.

LATEST L.R.A.M. RESULTS:

ENTRIES - 13. FAILURES - 0.

Terms, Testimonials, Appreciations, on application:

BROADWOOD HALL STUDIOS, CONDUIT STREET, W.1.

IF YOU HAVE A SMALL HAND:

IF YOU HAVE A STIFF HAND:

IF YOU HAVE LITTLE TIME FOR PRACTICE:

USE THE TECHNIQUER.

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

It will not enable you to play without practising, nothing will do that, but it will make practice more valuable and save years of labour. The high commendation of Lamond, Pouishnoff, and dozens of eminent teachers of all instruments speaks for itself.

Send for full particulars free.

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

The Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.O., &c., 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

Maida Vale 1715.

THE REAL USE OF RELAXATION.

THE REAL use of Relaxation and Arm Weight is seldom fully understood in Pianoforte playing. Relaxation is taught but rarely practised to the full extent. One has only to hear a Gillett pupil play to realise the BEAUTY OF TONE that can be produced by this system. The difference in the playing of, say Beethoven's 'Moonlight' Sonata, by the ordinary method and by the use of the Gillett method is remarkable, and every master or pupil who wishes to apply these principles effectively should investigate this system.

Mr. Gillett has a course of 12 CORRESPONDENCE lessons for ALL PIANISTS who are anxious to improve their playing and teaching. This course covers, besides RELAXATION and ARM WEIGHT, Sight Reading, Memorising, Pedalling, Fingering, Rhythm, Phrasing, Interpretation, and the "Whole Art of Piano Playing." The close personal attention of Mr. Gillett is guaranteed to each pupil. Courses for Beginners can also be arranged. A student writes: "THERE IS NO OTHER METHOD WHICH MAKES THE APPLICATION OF RELAXATION, ARM BALANCE, and WEIGHT SO EFFECTIVE AND SIMPLE." Write, giving the names of one or two pieces you play. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons by all means do so.

PRIVATE LESSONS DAY AND EVENING.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School

(Studio M.T.), 11, SOUTH MOLTON ST., LONDON, W.1.

MENTAL-HEARING

How to acquire it.

By WALTER H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.

THE ability to HEAR MENTALLY seems to be possessed by few students, as the following from a well-known Musical Paper proves:

"Harmony on paper is a dead thing except to those who can hear what they see—the possession of about one student in a thousand."

Mental-hearing will enable the student to hear in his mind the sounds of the notes he is writing on the paper; they will not be mere soundless signs, but each will convey a definite sound to him, and until they do so all written harmony is a waste of time.

The acquisition of Mental-hearing will materially assist the practical work of the pianoforte and organ student, for if the student can hear mentally he will be encouraged to study mentally. Mental-hearing is the key to mental study, and Mental study is the key to more rapid progress. The mastery of this subject will also improve the student's sight-reading and memorising.

Mental-hearing is a necessity for candidates for Diplomas such as L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., &c., and this work will also be of the greatest help to pupils preparing aural tests for the Associated Board Examinations.

Particulars of Correspondence Course of seven Lessons from

W. H. WATSON, GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

MR. W. H. BREARE

VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Era.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,

59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.

(Hampstead 4597.)

THE IMPORTANT THING

IS TO

TRAIN THE ACTUAL MUSCLES USED IN SINGING.

SAXBY'S CALISTHENICS

FOR THE VOCAL MUSCLES

— BY CORRESPONDENCE. —

THE COURSE, £2 2s.

T. CHURCH SAXBY, L. Mus. T.C.L.,
LEWES.

MR. JACQUES HOPKINS

(1er Prix Paris National Conservatoire),

Musical Director, St. Paul's, Portman Square.

VOICE TRAINING—SINGING.

OPERA—ORATORIO—RECITALS—COACHING FOR L.R.A.M. AND
L.R.C.M. EXAMS.

Auditions free.

Write for terms, appointments, &c.,

Studio, 16, Baker Street, W.1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

FINAL MUS.BAC. Sept., 1925

EX. ... Mar., 1925

1ST MUS. BAC. Sept., 1924

MATRIC. ... July, 1924

Mus. Bac.

MATRIC. Successes - 99

A.R.C.O.

SUCCESS at the 5th ATTEMPT.

A Student failed 4 times (under other tuition)

Joined the M.C.C. March, 1923.

PASSED July, 1923.

Successes, January, 1924

6

GUARANTEE COURSE.

EASY INSTALMENTS.

SEND FOR OUR GUIDE

(New regulations).

A. Mus. T.C.L. RECENT RESULT

ART OF TEACHING	...	...	85%
RUDIMENTS	...	...	89%
HARMONY	...	...	80%
COUNTERPOINT	...	...	94%
HISTORY	...	...	78%

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L. (PIANOFORTE TEACHING).

SEND FOR OUR FREE GUIDE.

SINGING.

L.R.A.M. A.R.C.M. A.T.C.L.

THREE COURSES.

ORDINARY.

* SELF-PREPARATION.

GUARANTEE.

* Half the Fee of the Ordinary Course.
Same Notes. No written work sent in.

FREE GUIDES.

MATRIC.

MUS.BAC.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

A.R.C.O., F.R.C.O. (New regulations).

1ST MUS. BAC. ... September 1923

SUCCESSES ... 4.

“ST. MORITZ,” 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

WESTMINSTER CATHEDRAL.

WEEKLY

ORGAN RECITALS

EVERY THURSDAY EVENING AT 6.30 P.M.

RECITALISTS FOR FEBRUARY.

- FEBRUARY 7th, 1924. EDWARD D'EVRY, F.R.C.O., F.T.C.L., Organist of the Brompton Oratory.
- „ 14th, „ E. C. BAIRSTOW, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., Organist of York Minster.
- „ 21st, „ HAROLD E. DARKE, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
A.R.C.M., Organist, St. Michael's Church, Cornhill.
- „ 28th, „ P. C. HULL, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., Organist of Hereford Cathedral.

An Entirely New Departure

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D.Mus. Lond., A.R.C.M.

Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—without written exercises.

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION
BY CORRESPONDENCE IN CHORDS
and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and
INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF A PIANIST'S
EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE
STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and ITS MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton Street, London, W.1.

MOLLENHAUER

FLUTES

AND

PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments.
Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.

Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office.
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

IF YOU COMPOSE MUSIC

and need help to ensure your compositions being written in correct form, the Editorial Dept. of PAXTON'S is at your service. Compositions criticised, revised, edited; melodies harmonised, accompaniments written; music transposed or copied; lyrics supplied or set. Lowest terms, Efficient service. Write for booklet, "Adventures of a Manuscript," to Paxton's, 22, High Street, New Oxford Street, W.C.1.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give ORGAN
RECITALS at St. Saviour's, Ealing, on Saturdays, February 16th and March 15th, at 5.45 p.m.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS WINIFRED HELLIS

(SOPRANO).

"MESSIAH," "HIAWATHA," "ELIJAH," "St. PAUL,"
"TOM JONES," ETC.

Address, 20, Portman Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

V. HAROLD BURRSTON

F.C.R.A., F.I.S.A.

(TENOR)

CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, ETC.

6, West Bank, Stamford Hill, N.16.

Telephone: Bishopsgate 1583.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, ETC.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

BRUCE GIBBON

TENOR.

"A remarkable soloist."—The Times.

Mr. Gibbon has sung before two Royal Courts.

Oratorios, Cantatas, Concert Work, &amp;c.

77, New Oxford Street, W.C.1. 1177 Museum.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.

Oratorio, Concerts, Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.

Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

"CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road, Grove Park, S.E.12. (Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

MISS FRED A EVANS

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., L.T.C.L.

(Late Pupil of Felix Swinstead).

Visits or receives Private Pupils for PIANOFORTE, HARMONY, ETC.

Prospectus on application to 26, Granard Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.12.

VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE

(Professor of Singing, Trinity College of Music)

has a few vacancies for pupils at his Studio,

99a, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.7.

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.)

Founder of "The Gresham Singers,"

Receives Pupils in Voice-Culture and Singing,

at 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.

Tele.: Streatham 2525.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &amp;c., apply to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and
The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

JOSEPH WHITESIDE

A.R.C.M.

(Professor and Examiner Metropolitan Academy of Music).

VOICE CULTURE AND SINGING.

Method acquired from the best London and Continental Teachers.

Pupils received at

MARYLEBONE MUSIC STUDIOS,

72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

Telephone: Mayfair 2596.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.

FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,

MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer

and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

** The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

MR. W. ADAMS, F.R.C.O., A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte),

prepares for Musical Diplomas, Pianoforte, and Paper Work
(personally or by post). Latest Success: A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), January, 1924. 16, Homefield Road, Chiswick, W.4.DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford,
Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities. Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and ninety. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-
Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations,
Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-23 ... 223 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-23 ... 58 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, MR. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by
L. ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc., Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm., F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 403 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS. FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Piano-forte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922, L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction (or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes. 5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O., SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING. Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1923—2 out of the 3 Mus. Doc. passes, and 4 out of the 6 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also several 1st Mus. Bac. and 2 Exercises, after prelim. course in composition. All in 1923. Over 150 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

MR. GORDON JACOB, A.R.C.M., gives lessons personally or by correspondence in Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, and all theoretical subjects. Special Course in Modern Orchestration. MUSIC SCORED for any combination of instruments required. Incidental Music, &c., written or arranged. 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc. Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations. Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges. Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working. Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing, R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Piano-forte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M. "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Piano-forte. Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c. 10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M., and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., Pre- pares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

MISS GEORGINA TANNER, Singing and Voice Production. For terms apply, 73, Hagley Road, Birmingham; or c/o Cramer & Co., New Bond Street, W.1.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

AN EMINENT MASTER, whose Pupils are artists of International repute, will train and "present" a promising voice on exceptional terms. Write, "Influential," 195, Oxford Street, W.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	8 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

F.R.C.O. AND A.R.C.O. PAPER WORK.

A SPECIAL COURSE OF CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS for the JULY, 1924, F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examinations IS NOW COMMENCING. The chief reason why this system of tuition is so successful is that pupils are taught how to work. Experience has proved that a large number of candidates fail because they do not reach a high enough standard in their work.

The examination tests so far as Harmony is concerned are certainly more difficult nowadays than formerly, and a higher degree of musicianship is essential. That this can be attained by means of these lessons has been proved beyond doubt, for pupils who have worked through this course have been successful at every F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. Examination since January, 1909.

Every pupil is instructed how to write Musical Counterpoint. Numerous examples are given which clearly show that it is quite possible to produce good music (from a harmonic and melodic point of view), even under the many restrictions and limitations imposed by the laws of Counterpoint.

In view of the sweeping changes in the Paper Work Examinations for F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., which are announced to take place in July, 1924, a Special Course of Lessons has been devised to meet these new requirements. These changes will certainly offer much scope for the display of musicianship, but practice on right lines will be necessary, especially in writing a piano-forte accompaniment to a given melody, as most students adopt a vocal style of writing instead of the various idioms of piano-forte writing.

All the new tests will be covered in these lessons, and complete musical illustrations will be sent to each candidate showing exactly what the examiners require.

The whole aim of this method is to teach the principles which underlie all highly artistic music, and also the application of these principles to examination work, so that a pupil who is thus equipped is enabled not only to pass the F.R.C.O. or A.R.C.O. examination, as the case may be, but also to develop to the utmost the musical ability with which he is endowed.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc., Oxon., F.R.C.O., "TRALEE," WARWICK ROAD, CLIFTONVILLE, MARGATE.

EASTBOURNE.

DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS. Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

HENRY M. BYRON, CONCERT DIRECTOR. Established 1890. Address: 175, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

SOUTHWELL MINSTER GRAMMAR SCHOOL.

There will be two vacancies after Easter, for Choral Scholars to sing in the Cathedral Choir. The value of the scholarship is £25 towards the School fees (£63).

Application should be made to The Rector, The Residence, Southwell, Notts., for trial of voices, and to the Headmaster for Prospectus.

DURHAM CATHEDRAL.

CHORISTERSHIPS.

Board, Lodging, Education, and Medical Attendance Free. Candidates must have a Good Voice and Correct Ear, and should be between 8 and 11 years of age. Education for the Public Schools. —Apply to the Rev. The Precentor, The College, Durham.

ALTO WANTED for St. Peter's, Bayswater. £20 per annum. Good reader. Address, Leonard Butler, 28, St. Stephen's Avenue, Ealing, W.13.

MALE ALTO (30) would sing in Choir in return for employment. Good reader and soloist. Highest experience. "R. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED.—Ladies and Gentlemen for Choir, W. C. District. Two Sunday Services; Friday practice. Also 2 Violins to help at Evening Service. Please write to Rector, Holy Trinity Rectory, 27, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

ELY CATHEDRAL.—TENOR Lay Clerkship vacant. Opportunity for young unmarried singer. Stipend £125 per annum. Duties part time only. Good voice and reading essential. Apply, The Precentor, Ely Cathedral, before February 14.

ST. JAMES', WESTMINSTER.—TENORS and BASSES with Choir experience REQUIRED. Expenses paid. Please write, Frederic Lacey, 21, Kingsmead Road, S.W.2.

TENOR WANTED.—Small Choir. Good reader absolutely essential. Very light duties. Communicant. £25. Organist, St. Mary's, Graham Street, Sloane Square, S.W.1.

TENOR VACANCY, Christ Church, Kensington. For particulars apply to Organist, 4, Kelso Place, Kensington, W.8.

ONE TENOR WANTED for voluntary East London Choir. Good music. Excellent experience. Bach's "St. John" Passion in practice. Apply by letter, Choirmaster, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

BASS WANTED. £15 to £18. Normal duties. Vicar, West Acton Vicarage, Creffield Road, Acton, W.3.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for important Parish Church. North London. Magnificent modern organ (Harrison & Harrison). Good choir-trainer and disciplinarian essential. Moderate churchman, communicant. Write, "S. S.," c/o Streets, 30, Cornhill, E.C.3.

ORGANIST REQUIRED at once for the Wesleyan Methodist Church, Winchmore Hill. Applications, giving full particulars and remuneration required, should be sent to H. S. W. Pettit, 62, Oakfield Road, Southgate, N.14.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Episcopal Church in Argyllshire. Catholic minded, Communicant. To train Choir in simple Plain-song, Masses, &c. (American organ at present.) Salary £80. Good opening for teaching. Apply to "Organist," 5, Portgower Place, Edinburgh.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED, Congregational. Hampstead. Two services Sunday, Choir Practice Friday. Fine organ, electric blower. Salary £30. Write, with particulars of qualifications and experience, to F. Jones, 11, Rothwell Street, N.W.1.

ORGANIST, fully qualified, for Bunyan Meeting Congregational Church, Bedford. For application form, apply, Palmer, 4, Rothsay Place, Bedford.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED immediately for Church near Wimbledon. "R.," 34, Maiden Lane, Strand.

SOUTHWELL CATHEDRAL.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST REQUIRED at once. Must be good with Boys' Voices. One able to sing Tenor in the Choir on occasions greatly preferred. Stipend £52 per annum, with help in preparation in Examinations if required. Apply to H. W. Tupper, Mus. B. (Oxon.), F.R.C.O., Vicars' Court, Southwell, Notts.

ORGANIST, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., would Deputise. Two, three, or four Sundays in August, in return for use of Furnished House. "H. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SUMMER HOLIDAYS.—London Organist, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., used to "Cathedral Service," is willing to deputise in August or September in exchange for house or fees. Write, "Deputy," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST (Lady) at liberty for temporary work until June. Services, Oratorios. Recitalist. London district. "S. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST requires regular practice. Easy distance Harringay. State terms. 17, Woollaston Rd., Harringay.

EXPERIENCED TEACHER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., wishes to buy TEACHING CONNECTION. London or within 50 miles preferred. Address, "Music," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street W.1.

YOUNG ORGANIST desires post as Articled Pupil to good teacher at either Cathedral or Church in England. Apply, "S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ACCOMPANIST (Lady), A.R.C.M. Pianoforte Accompaniment, open for Engagements, Singing or Instrumental, for At Homes, Concerts, Private Practice, &c. For terms, apply "T.," 38, Heathfield Road, Acton, W.3.

GOOD "HOME" offered in small musical family. Student or lover of music essential. Terms moderate. "A. B. C.," 43, Endymion Road, Brixton Hill, S.W.2.

LADY DIPLOMÉE, London and Paris, wishes to PURCHASE Pianoforte Teaching Connection. London or Suburbs preferred. Address, Robinson, Grainthorpe, Lincolnshire

TO PUBLISHERS.

A SONATA at A MOMENT'S NOTICE. I could Extemporize for you on the Violin. Any Song Melody, or Sonata. G. Dath, 1, Albany Terrace, Regent's Park, N.W.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Pipe ORGAN, Two-Manual, Pedals, 15 Stops, Oak Case. Bargain, £275. Must sell (terms arranged); or exchange good car. Hicks, 3, Henleaze Gardens, Bristol.

CHURCH ORGAN for SALE.—Two Manuals and Pedals, twenty stops. As New. Fully guaranteed for five years. Great bargain. Terms can be arranged. Conacher Sheffield, Ltd., Organ Builders, Harborne.

CHURCH ORGANS BUILT, Enlarged, Repaired, and Tuned. Attractive terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Rd., Wimbledon, London. Founded 1896

WANTED.—Good Second-hand PIPE ORGAN, for small Church. Send particulars, with lowest price, to J. Matthews, 134, Gordon Road, Harborne, Birmingham.

SALE.—Small Pipe ORGAN. Oak case, suitable for small Church, Chapel, Hall, &c. Excellent condition. Bargain price. "B.," 25, Forrest Avenue, Marsh, Huddersfield.

FOR SALE, at reduced price, new Electric Organ-blower, suitable for small Church organ, complete with 100-volt motor ready for installation. For full particulars apply, Nidd Estate Office, Ripley, Harrogate.

VOCALION ORGAN (Reed).—Two Manuals and Pedals. Builders, Hill & Sons, London. Suit Mission, Church, Cinema, or Home. Also ALEXANDRE HARMONIUM, two Manuals, Percussion Action. Both in excellent order. Great bargains. Terms can be arranged. Conacher Sheffield, Ltd., Organ Builders, Harborne.

BELOW HALF-PRICE.—Two-Manual Holt ORGAN. 25 Stops, R.C.O. Pedals, Fine condition. Write, "C.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

CHAMBER ORGAN.—7 Stops. Good condition. Handsome case. Stool, foot and hand blowers. Valued £100. Offers. Particulars on application, Cox, Caer-eim, Osbaston, Monmouth.

WANTED.—A Set of ORGAN PEDALS (Pneumatic), for attachment to piano. State price and particulars to "W. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

PNEUMATIC PEDAL ATTACHMENT, with Stool, by Norman & Beard, FOR SALE. Good condition. £8. Apply, "H.," 8, Elmgrove Avenue, Easton, Bristol.

FOR SALE.—Kirkman Grand PIANO; fine tone, handsome walnut case; solid build. Suitable for School or Hall. £65 or near offer. Write for appointment to view, Borland, 81, Bromley Road, S.E.6.

VIOLIN FOR SALE.—Old English, copy of Gagliano (about 1820), in good condition. Can be seen and tried by arrangement. £45. Apply, Miss Jephson, The Malthouse, Frensham, Surrey.

VIOLIN by J. B. Colin, about 1860. Fine instrument. Price £15. Expert's opinion and valuation. "G. L.," 53, Wroughton Road, Clapham Common, S.W.11.

'CELLO for SALE. Pre-war German. Bow and Case. £4 5s. Johnson, 49, Maldon Road, W.2.

GRAMOPHONE TIPS, 1924. 1s. Post Free. H. T. Barnett, 77, King's Road, Southsea.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new song, "LOVE FOR EVER LOST" (Oakley). Compass B to D (F optional). Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries
AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

*Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.*THE SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW,

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THE "DISCUS" ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the "Discus" is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a "Discus" equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The "Discus" blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each "Discus" equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

*Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.*

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

FAMOUS TEACHERS AND THEIR METHODS.

If you wish to know how the finest teachers of music would solve your problems send for a free specimen copy of

THE MUSIC TEACHER

PIANOFORTE.

MR. CUTHBERT WHITEMORE, F.R.A.M., describes in a clear and practical way how to overcome the difficulties that confront the pianoforte teacher, especially the young teacher.

He also gives suggestions on how to interpret the pianoforte works of the Great Masters.

MISS NANCY GILFORD, A.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., deals in detail with the problems of Teachers who are preparing pupils for the Pianoforte Examinations of the Associated Board.

SINGING.

MR. WALTER FORD, the eminent Professor at the Royal College of Music, discusses the vocal problems of individual teachers. Advice is given on voice-culture, interpretation, and the choice of suitable items for study and performance.

SCHOOL MUSIC.

MR. ROBERT McLEOD, Mus. BAC., and Mr. HERBERT WISEMAN, solve the problems of Choir-trainers and Teachers of School Music. Help is also given in the choice of suitable songs, anthems, &c., for various combinations of voices, for Singing Classes of various kinds and for various occasions.

VIOLIN.

MR. JAMES BROWN, Mus. BAC., gives guidance to Teachers who are entering their pupils for the Associated Board violin examinations, and to those who encounter awkward problems in the teaching of string music.

MR. SPENCER DYKE also deals with the problems of the Violin teacher.

FREE

To "THE MUSIC TEACHER," Montague House, Russell Square, London, W.C.1.

Please send me a Complimentary Copy of "THE MUSIC TEACHER" as mentioned in "The Musical Times."

Name (Mr., Mrs., or Miss).....

"The Musical Times," 2/1924.

Address.....

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessele.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to
THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

U.S.A.—FOR SALE.—The sole rights to manufacture, import, or sell in the United States.

The Pied Piper of Hamelin

BY

ROBERT BROWNING.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S VOICES

BY

GEORGE RATHBONE

Composer of "VOGELWIED," "SINGING LEAVES," "ORPHEUS," and other popular works for Children's Voices.)

Price, Staff Notation, Two Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 98.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

ELEMENTS

OF

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

BY

W. J. FOXELL,

M.A., Mus. Bac., Lond.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO & COMPANY, Limited.

FOR SALE.—Genuine "Peter Guarnerius" VIOLIN (certified). Perfect tone, and in excellent condition. £840, or near. "W." Lloyd's Bank, Vaughan Parade, Torquay.

SHAPED PIANO COVERS, stocked in twelve different materials. Plush Tops, Backings, Key Covers. Patterns and prices by return post. William Moore & Co., Lauderdale Buildings, Aldersgate, London, E.C.1. Telephone: Clerkenwell 2827.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 20, Waverley Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPIED.—12-stave page, 9d. (transposition extra). Neat work. M. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

MUSIC COPYING and Transposition Work WANTED. Neat and accurate. Terms moderate. "M.O.A." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W. 1.
TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... .. Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TWENTY SHORT AND EASY PIECES FOR THE ORGAN.

JUST PUBLISHED.

SET V.

No.
1.	Chorale Prelude—Erbarm' Dich mein, O Herre Gott ... ..	J. S. Bach
2.	Allegro Maestoso e Vivace ... ..	W. T. Best
3.	Meditation ... ..	Hugh Blair
4.	Cantilène Religieuse ... ..	Th. Dubois
5.	Intermezzo No. 2 ... ..	Alan Gray
6.	Then round about the Starry Throne ("Samson") ... ..	G. F. Handel
7.	Lieder Ohne Worte, No. 4 F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8.	Moderato ... ..	Gustav Merkel
9.	Ave Verum ... ..	Mozart

No.
10.	Prelude ... ..	J. Rheinberger
11.	Monologue No. 9 ... ..	J. Rheinberger
12.	Chanson Orientale ... ..	Schumann
13.	Four Sketches, No. 1... ..	Schumann
14.	Larghetto from Sonata in D ...	B. Luard-Selby
15.	Andante ... ..	E. Silas
16.	Six Short and Easy Pieces, No. 6 ...	Henry Smart
17.	Intermezzo founded on an Irish Air	C. V. Stanford
18.	Andante in G ... ..	S. S. Wesley
19.	Lament... ..	John E. West
20.	Canzona ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

PRICE, PAPER COVER, FOUR SHILLINGS. CLOTH, SIX SHILLINGS.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HYMNS AND TUNES

FOR SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

Five Sets, each containing Ten Hymns and Tunes, price 6*d.* each set; Words only, 6*s.* 6*d.* per 100

The following may be had separately, price 1½*d.* each.

	Words by	Music by
1. COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD ...	... F. BEVAN ...	... G. C. MARTIN
2. FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING (Flower Service)	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE...	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
3. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ...	... EMILY H. MILLER ...	... F. CLAY
4. COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS ...	... G. WITHER ...	... J. STAINER
5. { THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE... NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY ...	... MARY F. MAUDE ... ... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... W. C. HARVEY ... J. ADCOCK
6. JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE ...	... J. F. WHEELER ...	... H. E. BUTTON
7. SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR (Flower Service)	... F. A. CHALLINOR ...	... F. A. CHALLINOR
8. WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE ...	... H. R. PALMER ...	... C. J. MAY
9. ON OUR WAY REJOICING ...	... J. S. B. MONSELL ...	... W. B. GILBERT
10. AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS...	... J. ELLERTON ...	... J. STAINER
11. THE ANGEL'S SONG ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
12. FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN ...	... HELEN W. SELBY ...	... A. MOFFAT
13. THE GOLDEN SHORE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
14. SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR ...	... G. THRING ...	... JOHN E. WEST
15. ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING ...	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... F. H. COWEN
16. MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	... W. H. DRAPER ...	... J. V. ROBERTS
17. STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	... J. BOGUE ...	... J. STAINER
18. THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER ...	... J. M. NEALE ...	... J. BARNEY
19. WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY ...	... G. MOULTRIE...	... J. BARNEY
20. HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	... G. THRING ...	... G. J. BENNETT
21. O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO...	... G. W. HINSDALE ...	... H. E. BUTTON
22. THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN...	... C. F. ALEXANDER ...	... A. SULLIVAN
23. LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP	... W. W. HOW ...	... A. S. COOPER
24. { THE BEAUTIFUL LAND ... JESUS, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME...	... E. OXENFORD ... ... M. L. DUNCAN ...	... J. STAINER ... H. PARKER
25. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND ...	... J. COMPTON ...	... J. STAINER
26. THE CITY OF LIGHT ...	... F. ADLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
27. { GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR ... GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD...	... A. GILBERT ... ... C. WESLEY ...	... H. E. BUTTON ... J. STAINER
28. HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES (Flower Service)	W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
29. THE CROWN IS WAITING ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
30. RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS	... G. SPILLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
31. FLOWERS (Flower Service) ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
32. THE GOOD SHEPHERD...	... E. OXENFORD...	... J. STAINER
33. ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY ...	... M. BOURDILLON ...	... H. E. CRIMP
34. WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR ...	... L. WHITEHEAD ...	... E. J. TROUP
35. COME SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS ...	... J. J. DANIELL ...	... G. W. TORRANCE
36. WE WILL PRAISE THEE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
37. WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS (Flower Service)...	... A. C. BENSON ...	... A. M. GOODHART
38. COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	... W. W. HOW ...	... H. A. CHAMBERS
39. NOW THE DAY IS OVER ...	... S. BARING-GOULD ...	... F. W. BLUNT
40. WE THANK THEE LORD FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	G. E. L. COTTON	... W. C. HARVEY
41. THE LESSON OF LOVE ...	... ..	... J. BARNEY
42. COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING	... ..	... E. J. TROUP
43. CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD ...	... MARY BRADFORD WHITING ...	... J. H. MAUNDER
44. O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE (Flower Service)	J. GIBSON ...	... Tune—"ELLACOMBE"

(To be continued.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

A NEW SERIES OF SACRED SONGS

EDITED, WITH MARKS OF EXPRESSION AND PHRASING, BY

ALBERTO RANDEGGER.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS EACH BOOK.

The two sets of Songs for each voice are also published in four volumes.

CLOTH, NINE SHILLINGS EACH.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

1. My heart ever faithful " ... .. J. S. Bach
2. I will sing of Thy great mercies ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Jerusalem ("Gallia") ... .. Ch. Gounod
4. With verdure clad ("Creation") ... .. J. Haydn
5. I will extol Thee, O Lord ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
6. I mourn as a dove ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict

CONTRALTO.

1. Slumber Song ("Christmas Oratorio") ... J. S. Bach
2. But the Lord is mindful ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. What tho' I trace ("Solomon") ... .. Handel
4. Evening Prayer ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
5. There is a green hill... .. Ch. Gounod
6. O Thou afflicted ("St. Peter") ... .. J. Benedict

TENOR.

1. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... A. Stradella
2. In native worth ("Creation") ... .. J. Haydn
3. Be thou faithful unto death ("St. Paul")...
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Cujus animam ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
5. The Lord is very pitiful ("St. Peter") ... J. Benedict
6. The soft southern breeze ("Rebekah") ... J. Barnby

BASS.

1. Dost thou despise ... .. J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
3. Now heaven in fullest glory shone ("Creation") J. Haydn
4. Pro peccatis ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
5. How great, O Lord ("St. Peter")... .. J. Benedict
6. If Thou should'st mark iniquities ("Eli")... M. Costa

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

1. Thou, O Lord, art my Protector (Psalm xix.)
C. Saint-Saëns
2. Lo! the heaven-descended Prophet
("The Passion") ... .. C. H. Graun
3. Jerusalem ("St. Paul") ... .. F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
4. Great is Jehovah ... .. F. Schubert
5. Turn Thee unto me ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa
6. Let the bright Seraphim ("Samson") ... Handel

CONTRALTO.

1. To living waters ("The Lord is my Shepherd")
J. S. Bach
2. O God, have mercy (Pietà, Signore) ... A. Stradella
3. All my heart inflamed and burning
("Stabat Mater") ... .. A. Dvůřák
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn)
Beethoven
5. Fac ut portem ("Stabat Mater") ... .. G. Rossini
6. Morning Prayer ("Eli") ... .. M. Costa

TENOR.

1. Only be still, wait thou His leisure
("If thou but sufferest") ... .. J. S. Bach
2. Daughters of Jerusalem ("St. Peter") ... J. Benedict
3. Thus was the sun ("Samson") ... .. Handel
4. O come, let us worship (Psalm xc.)
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
5. Twilight is gently falling (Ave Maria) ... J. Raff
6. Song of Penitence (Busslied) ... .. Beethoven

BASS.

1. Mighty Lord and King all glorious
("Christmas Oratorio") ... .. J. S. Bach
2. Rolling in foaming billows ("Creation") ... J. Haydn
3. Litany for All Souls' Day ... .. F. Schubert
4. The glory of God in Nature (Creation's Hymn)
Beethoven
5. Consume them all ("St. Paul")
F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
6. Nazareth ... .. Ch. Gounod

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Chairman of Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

February 6th, at 3 p.m. }
" 20th, at 3 p.m. } STUDENTS' CONCERTS.
" 27th, at 3 p.m. }

February 13th, at 3 p.m. Pianoforte and Violin Recital by Miss EVELINE DAVY and Mr. ALAN E. FRASER.

March 8th. Last day of entry for the next open competitions for Scholarships.

March 12th. Last day of entry for the Diploma Examinations to be held in April next.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW ORGAN WORK

BY

S. KARG-ELERT.

CATHEDRAL WINDOWS

(VITRAUX POLYCHROMES D'ANCIENNES CATHEDRALES).

Six Pieces on Gregorian Tunes:

1. KYRIE ELEISON.
2. AVE MARIA.
3. RESONET IN LAUDIBUS.
4. ADESTE FIDELES.
5. SALUTO ANGELICO.
6. LAUDA SION.

Price complete, 5s. net.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

JUST PUBLISHED

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE TO ALL
TEACHERS AND PROFESSIONALS

HAND CULTURE

FINGER, HAND, AND ARM GYMNASTICS
AT THE PIANO

FOR

PIANISTS, VIOLINISTS, AND 'CELLISTS

GIVING

STRENGTH, FREEDOM, AND INDEPENDENCE,

BY

BLANCHE H. RENNIE

TEACHER OF PIANO AT THE BIRMINGHAM
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Price 5/- net.

A Press Review: "Study on modern lines, remembering that you can never play as your mind desires until your muscles are absolutely under control. To obtain this mastery, I know no book equal to that recently brought out by Bosworth & Co., Ltd."

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A FUGAL CONCERTO

For Flute and Oboe (or Two Solo Violins)

WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR STRING ORCHESTRA.

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

(Op. 40, No. 2.)

										s. d.
Score ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	7 6
String Parts ...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	3 4
Arrangement for Pianoforte and Solo Instruments	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	...	4 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FEBRUARY I 1924

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS

BY WILLIAM WALLACE

VI.—THE METHOD

(Continued from January number, page 20)

It would be interesting to recount the vagaries of some conductors of the 17th and 18th centuries in regard to their 'orchestras,' but this must be set aside for the present.

We now come to a composer who had much to do with the establishment of opera in France, and who led the way to our own Purcell. Unfortunately for France he was not of French birth, but a Florentine, and his name was Lulli (1632-87). It was not as a composer that he made his first appearance, but as a singer, actor, and dancer, under the name of Chiacchiarone, the Chatterer.

While he was still in his 'teens he was given a place in the Petits Violons of Louis XIV., a small band of about a dozen violins. Here he had the opportunity of studying the capacity of the instrument, and also of profiting by association with Cavalli, whose ballets were being performed at the French Court. What probably was the making of him was his collaboration with Molière; at any rate Molière provided the occasions for a great deal of music in his Comedies—indeed music occupies a very large part of them, said to be three-fourths. Lulli's first appearance in the Comedies was made in 1661, when the characters in the first Act of Les Facheux danced to his Courante. This was followed by a direct reference to him, 'Adieu: the beloved Baptiste [Lulli's Christian name] has not seen my Courante, and I am going to find him: we have great sympathy for melodies, and I should like him to write some.'

Thus began a partnership which lasted from 1664 to 1671, when Lulli turned against the friend who had given him his opportunity, and secured certain rights which, had they not been amended, would have prevented Molière from performing his own plays. But the concession, small as it was, did not temper the harshness of the terms, and two years later Molière was gone, collapsing on the stage after playing his last part, which by a touch of irony was that of Argan in Le Malade Imaginaire.

In the plays for the stage, as distinct from the Fêtes at Versailles, the music was played by violins, but there is a reference to a lute in one play. For the Fêtes there were trumpets and drums, flutes and oboes, tambourine and castagnettes. In one of the Molière Ballets two clavecins are mentioned. We are told that Lulli attached so little importance to his orchestral accompaniments that he left them to the strings to be played from the figured bass. This strains our credulity—a pretty muddle must have been the result. But we can well believe that the accompaniments had to be continuous, for had they ceased for a moment the singers would have dropped the pitch.

The latest researches raise the question, Was all the music attributed to Lulli actually written by him? It is asserted with confidence that he wrote the melody and figured bass, leaving the inner parts to be added by other hands, as the Italians of his day left the 'filling in' to the taste, initiative, and invention of the 'maestro al cembalo.* One of his great admirers, Lecerf de La Viéville, who published in 1705 his Comparaison de la Musique Italienne et de la Musique Française, says that he handed over the completion of his scores to his secretaries, Lalouette and Colasse. Combarieu is by no means reticent in speaking of Lulli as a buffoon and mountebank:

Il était d'une ambition insatiable, rusé jusqu'à la perfidie, intrigant jusqu'à la bassesse, dépourvu de scrupules sur les moyens de parvenir, prêt à acheter choses et hommes.

Harsh enough in all conscience, but the charge against the rusé Florentine is even more direct, for Combarieu, resenting, as well he might, Lulli's treatment of Molière, does not hesitate to speak of 'Emprunt direct, plagiat, marché secret, "collaboration" plus ou moins rétribuée.'†

As for Lulli's method of beating time, he must have used a heavy stick, probably a walking-stick, which he pounded on the floor. He died of gangrene of the leg, having accidentally struck his foot—the only composer who died of conducting.

Before leaving Molière, let us see what the accommodation was for the orchestra which plays so important a part in his comedies. Sometimes it was at the back of the stage, sometimes in the wings, at the extreme end of the house facing the stage, or below the footlights as we have it. At first the musicians did not like to appear in public, that is, on the stage, so they played or sang in a box, the front of which was covered by a grille or trellis-work. In 1671 they overcame this most unusual modesty, and went on the stage in appropriate costume. When the orchestra was not on or in front of the stage, the leader had to remember his cues, so as to obviate the necessity for the prompter having to shout at him, 'Jouez!' Since January, 1871, the orchestra at the Théâtre Français has played in the wings when a Molière play is put on.

We pass from Lulli (obit 1687) to Rameau (1683-1764). But between these two, and contemporaries of each, there are other composers who contributed to the development of the orchestra.

* J. Combarieu: Histoire de la Musique. Paris, 1913, vol. ii., pp. 88 et seq.

† According to Rolland (Musiciens d'Autrefois, Paris, 1908, p. 108), Lecerf was a fanatical admirer of Lulli, the plagiarist, as Combarieu calls him. But Lecerf in his turn was 'pillé effrontément' by writers who came after him, when dealing with the Lulli period. And so ad infinitum!

To discuss their merits would take us far afield, so we must be content to examine the means at their disposal. The strings had been established as the permanent basis of the orchestra. The viols and lutes were to disappear but gradually.

It is just possible that violinists who had acquired a certain facility of technique were unwilling to impart their knowledge to others, at all events it was said of one expert player on the viola da gamba that he studied and practised in secret lest any one should copy his method.

A curious example of scoring belongs to this period—curious, because the names of the instruments, but not their sounds, have a modern air. They are flutes, violins, oboes, trumpets, bassoons, drums, and—a harp. The subject of the music is the incident of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-Nego, the heroes of the fiery furnace in the Book of Daniel. The harp was used to convey—I imagine, for the poem, which was set to music, is out of reach—the idea of the flickerings of the flames, thus anticipating Wagner, in Die Walküre, by about a hundred and fifty years.

Yet another curiosity comes to light at this time. No score was considered orthodox unless it contained a peal of thunder, a storm, the murmurs of a stream, and the song of a nightingale. A century later, the Pastoral Symphony fulfilled this specification.

Let us go back and see what was being done in Germany. The most important composer of this period was Schütz (1585-1672), born a century before Bach and Handel, younger by a score of years than Monteverde, and at the height of his career when Lulli was born.

The vogue of Italian musicians, which had so great an influence in France, spread gradually to Germany, but was slow in becoming acclimatised. German composers relied more upon a rolling mass of choral music, and it may be said that their extensive use of counterpoint took the place of instrumentation. Schütz himself seems to have been conscious of the need for instrumental colour, for in one of his works he directs a vocal part to be taken instrumentaliter, a device which some composers of to-day are adopting. Sonority and breadth were aimed at rather than melody and delicacy, and we are prepared to find, in the rare work of Prætorius, various formulæ for the treatment of choral music with instruments.

German music of this period was so much rule-of-thumb that the large family of stringed instruments of diverse type were being employed long after they had been considered obsolete in France and Italy. A Motet for seven voices, by Jaques de Wert, may be quoted. He was a native of Antwerp, who spent his life in Italy and dedicated some compositions to the Duke of Ferrara, that enlightened amateur mentioned in the preceding Chapter. The Motet was scored for two theorbos, three lutes, two cytharas, four harpsichords (or their equivalent) and spinets, seven viols da gamba, and one bass viol.

We find the beginnings of an attempt to use instruments in groups, doubling the voice-parts in the same register; but as composers enlarged their knowledge of counterpoint and players developed their technique, additional parts were written as counter-subjects to the parts that were sung. This practice anticipated the method which ultimately reached its height in Bach's large choral works.

The 17th century was rich in Masses and Motets which German composers poured out in hundreds, but there were examples of experiments in instrumental directions. One of these, The Triumphal Chariot of Music, by Andreas Rauch (1648), was scored for voices, organ, clavecin, spinet, viol da gamba, theorbo, violins, violas, quartet of trumpets, quartet of trombones, cornets (wooden flutes), bassoons, and drums. They were not used tutti, but in combinations, of which one is interesting. When the brass was employed it was directed that on a given signal cannons and blunderbusses were to be fired thrice, as fitly as could be done. Reference to other examples of the artillery obligato may appropriately be made here. At what was not then Petrograd, in a Te Deum by Sarti, and performed about 1788, guns of different calibre were fired on the beat, and there were fireworks as well, but we are not told how many misfires there were. Lavoix gives other instances,* one of which will be noted below. Not quite a century ago a concert in Russia began with a salute of twenty guns, which gave the tempo at regular intervals. There were in addition trumpets and drums to the number of sixteen hundred. Rossini, in 1867, used guns in his Hymn to the French People, and this work was reconstructed, as we might say, in Boston, U.S.A. by Gilmore, who, if he was anything like his successor, Sousa, would be hardly the man to surrender his baton to a mere battery.

From Russia, also, came that strange band of hunting horns, each of which could play only one note. There were thirty-seven to begin with, tuned to play a chromatic scale of three octaves, and later one of five octaves. On one occasion, and doubtless on many others, a nobleman who had his private band of these horns excused himself to a visitor for not letting him hear them for the reason that B flat was in jail.

Two other examples of eccentricity may be mentioned. In a Symphony written about the Battle of Blenheim (1704), the oboe, representing Marlborough, and the second violin, representing the French General Tallard, had a musical duel. A century earlier, for the performance of a cantata on the subject of Judith and Holofernes, some unusual 'instruments' were introduced. On a cart drawn by eight mules was mounted a double-bass, twenty-five feet high. A ladder was thoughtfully provided for the player to get up to the neck. But this did not quite satisfy the composer, for he stretched four cables on the wings of a wind-mill, and these were scraped by four men armed with pieces of wood with serrated edges. There was the usual organ, but instead of drums there were bombs. After these trifling preparations the prima donna sang so much, and so well, and so long, that she died three days later. The leader of the violins played while holding his instrument behind his back. The psychological moment came last. There was a double fugue, representing a battle between Assyrians and Jews. The Jews were the local chorus, the Assyrians were outsiders. They fugued at one another so heartily that what with attack and counter-attack the end was a fight.

* H. Lavoix, fils. Histoire de l'Instrumentation Paris, 1878, p. 353.

After these diversions it is a relief to seek the placid surroundings of the Thomasschule of Leipsic. We have explicit accounts of Bach's conducting, passed on to us by his contemporaries.* In his commentary on a passage in the Institutiones of Quintilian, a work quoted in our second Chapter, Gesner (1691-1761), Rector of the Thomasschule and Bach's colleague, speaks of the Cantor ... presiding over thirty or forty performers all at once, recalling this one by a nod, another by a stamp of the foot, another with a warning finger, keeping time and tune; and while high tones are given out by some, deep tones by others, and notes between them by others, this one man, standing alone in the midst of the loud sounds, ... can discern at every moment if anyone goes astray, and can keep all the musicians in order.

Gesner's number of the musicians must be accepted, but it may have been exceptional, for Spitta says (p. 304):

In Bach's time even what we should call an orchestra of weak strength outnumbered the singers by more than a third. In the Neue Kirche under Gerlach [1744] there were only four singers to ten instrumentalists.

So small a body, constantly playing and singing together, would scarcely have needed a conductor, but it would appear that tempo was the problem, and Bach's son, Philipp Emanuel, is emphatic in the matter of using the harpsichord (clavier) for obtaining accurate time.†

At critical points the hand-beat came into play. The harpsichord, or an instrument of the keyboard type, had a long reign as the conductor's instrument. At the concerts of the Philharmonic Society it was not until 1820 that a baton was used, when, to the indignation of the Directors, Spohr produced his little stick from his pocket.

At the first Salomon Concert (March 11, 1791), Pohl‡ speaks of Haydn 'presiding' at the clavier, with Salomon as 'leader.' Later, when Haydn attended the Oxford Festival, Philip Hayes is described as 'Hauptdirigent' (Pohl, p. 146).

The desire for expression, and the methods by which nuances could be conveyed to a body of musicians, established the necessity for the conductor. It was realised that phrasing and interpretation, light and shade, could not be attained to any degree of uniformity without a guiding hand. We saw how, in the last years of the 17th century, expression marks were creeping in, and about this time and a little later there must have been priceless attempts at 'conducting,' if we are to believe all that was said. Contemporary treatises deal with the beat, which was literally a beat, expended on something more solid and resonant than thin air. Noisy it was, and noisome it remained, as we shall presently see, to such diverse types of long-bowmen—each in his own way—as Rousseau and Berlioz. As Schoenemann remarks (p. 111), a whole monograph (Broschüre—he is much too modest) might be compiled of the protests in the 17th century, and later, against the incompetent Kapellmeister. Thanks to the assiduity of Schoenemann, we are able to quote some gems from out-of-the-way books. 'There are conductors who in the height of their folly bang their batons into smithereens.' What outrage would they not have committed upon our slim knitting-needle sticks? 'The conductor is quite wrong who gives the beat only to one or two children who stand before him, and lets the others come in like the shepherd with his dogs at heel.' Another writer insists on the beat being distinct, and without unnecessary, foolish, or extravagant trickery. Yet another, to our surprise, suggests a diligent study of the music about to be performed. Again, 'No conductor should bang with a cudgel on the nearest desk, or some other solid body, so heavily that the thundering blow is heard rather than the chorus.' Sometimes the corpus solidum (of the preceding sentence) is the skull of an inattentive child. The semaphore system consisted of an upright furnished with a limb or point which moved up or down in obedience to the organist's foot on a treadle.

One of these writers was Bähr (1652-1700), whose mordant style was paraphrased and sterilized by Spitta (p. 325) thus:

One man conducts with the foot, another with the head, a third with the hand, some with both hands, some again take a roll of paper, and others a stick. Every ordinary director will know how to regulate his method according to place, time, and persons. Whoever would give rules for general acceptance deserves to be laughed at. Mind your own business, and let another man conduct as he likes, and do you conduct as you like: so there is no wrong done to any one.

This injunction would not have satisfied Rousseau, for in the article 'Battre la Mesure,' in his Dictionnaire, he complains of the disagreeable and continual noise made by the conductor at the Opéra, comparable with the sound of a man chopping wood, which covers and deadens the effect of the music. We do not get a commendable picture of music at the Paris Opéra, as represented in his article, 'Orchestre.' Berlioz made similar protests. As late as the year 1880, H. Zopfl, in his article 'Direction' in Mendel's Musikalisches - Lexikon, advises a piece of metal to be nailed to the upper edge of the conductor's desk, on which the conductor is to beat when he wishes to interrupt a tutti.

Despite the ridicule cast upon these old musicians, the best and kindest that can be said is * Philipp Spitta: Johann Sebastian Bach, English translation by Clara Bell and J. A. Fuller-Maitland. London, 1884, vol. ii., pp. 260 and 325.

† Quoted by Spitta, ii., pp. 328-9.

‡ C. F. Pohl: Mozart und Haydn in London, 2te Abtheilung. Vienna, 1867, p. 119.

that they were adventuring forth on uncharted seas; and the underpaid organist, the patient artist, the true lover of music, must have been put to the test over and over again to devise the means to control his rabble choir, and, as often as not, his unruly instrument.

In the chapter which follows we shall see what Dr. Burney thought of it all.

(To be concluded.)

ONE GENERATION COMETH

BY ALEXANDER BRENT SMITH

The other day I spent an hour or so in the company of some youthful athletes. While glorying in the magnificent athletic performances of to-day, they kept a reserve of admiration for the heroes of twenty years ago. Later in the day I spent a short time in the company of some youthful musicians. They too gloried in the magnificent productions of to-day, but unlike the young athletes, they let loose a torrent of scorn upon the works and workers of twenty years ago. According to them the harmony of A was old-fashioned, the orchestration of B was thoroughly respectable, and the form of C was hopelessly conventional; in fact it was the condemnation by To-day of the fashions of Yesterday. What they failed to realise was that in a work of art, it is not the externals which matter but the quality of the thought; that if the thoughts of a man are of no account his work will be tedious whether it be with the old-time dullness of respectability or with the modern dullness of pretension; and that if the thoughts of a man are beautiful, they will always be beautiful, whether they are dressed in fashions new or old. For Venus is always Venus, whether she shuffles in the furs and skins of Lapland, dances in the dazzling sunbeams of Alexandria, or hobbles in the gorgeous silks and satins of Ti-Foo-Ping.

Alas! how few of each generation develop their own personality and how many follow in the prevailing fashion of the day, like flocks of birds which travel V-shaped through the air, because the leader as he cleaves the wind in front makes easier the journey for those who fly behind. I have seen young men in many a University, dressed in similar clothes which they call unconventional, and asserting similar truths which they think new and strange. And why? Because to be unconventional where all hold similar opinions is easy, and less open to contempt than to act according to one's taste and inclinations. So that unconventionality may be abject servitude, whereas to be conventional may be the most daring originality. 'Tis well to seek new truth. But strange utterance is not of necessity the bearer of new truth, otherwise the monkey-house would be of more value than our Universities, which not even the most advanced philosophers would be prepared to assert. Strangeness by incessant repetition ceases to be strange, and there comes a time when brilliance no longer dazzles us. Harshness of harmony is invaluable for the presentation of certain moods and thoughts, but it defeats its own purpose if there is no contrasting suavity and concord. So too the brilliance of orchestration is invaluable, not that it may stupify our ears with sound but that it may reveal the melodic and harmonic beauties which lie beneath, just as the splendour of the sun is necessary, not that we may be blinded by its beams, but that by its brilliance we may be enabled to see the beauties of the world around us.

Too frequently do we despise some work because we say it is old-fashioned. In despising it we may do well, but not because it is old-fashioned, but because it is lacking in personality or spirit, or because it is disfigured by false sentiment, and we may be sure that it would be equally despicable whether it appeared a hundred years hence, or fifty thousand years ago, for false sentiment will betray itself through the thickest and most gorgeous trappings as certainly as it will through the most dingy and threadbare fustian.

Let each generation bear in mind that as it now pours scorn upon the Past, so the Future will pour scorn upon the Present. This attitude of generation towards generation is due to the habit of speaking (in error, I believe) of the progress of art as though art were a science whereof the discoveries of To-morrow destroy the knowledge of To-day. In science the theory of Newton destroyed the theory of Ptolemy, and the theory of Newton is in its turn destroyed by the withering truth of Einstein, but in music it is not so. The Hebrides Symphony of Granville Bantock, even though it should be the finest music ever penned, cannot destroy the power nor mitigate the beauty of the Hebrides Overture of Mendelssohn. The Mass in B minor of Sebastian Bach cannot lessen the value of the Mass of William Byrd, nor can the Mass in D of Beethoven render the work of his predecessors less beautiful or durable. Each work presents an aspect of truth, for each is a separate revelation, which though it differs from the other cannot destroy the other, and each possesses that immaterial spirit too hard or too fluid to be consumed by the grinding teeth of Time. Nor can I believe that the adverse opinion, frequently expressed, that a work is but an imitation of some other work, does of itself justify that work's condemnation. Bach imitated, borrowed from, and surpassed the work of his predecessors. Mozart, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, and Brahms have in turn imitated yet re-created the example of Haydn. Richard Strauss imitated the work of Franz Liszt, and achieved by genius what Liszt by talent was incapable of achieving.

During the past fifty years this country has produced a vast amount of music, much of which will never die, some because it has the germs of immortality, some (a greater part) because it has never lived. Of those works which still sound fresh and strong to-day, a few were rudely mocked at by the gaping crowd of novelty-mongers of the period. In fact, when Parry's Ode At a Solemn Music was produced, there must have been a whole army of young men exploiting the tricks of Wagner, Berlioz, and Liszt. Yet of those contemporary works, so much more daring and advanced than the Ode, where shall we find a single one that still endures? In every way the Ode was out of date—it was not morbid; it was undramatic; it was hopelessly orchestrated; in fact, any of those contemporary moderns could have knocked it into a cocked hat, and no doubt they did. But, somehow, when they had done it, they found that the cocked hat had settled upon their own heads, making them feel quite painfully conscious of their duncery.

The desire of Youth is always to do something that has never been done before, but it should be the care of Youth to make certain why those things have never been done before—whether it was because they were not thought of, or whether it was because they were considered not worth the doing. A man who has many pearls to sell will not content himself by selling dirty pebbles, and a man who has many beautiful ideas to communicate to the world will not waste time giving artistic expression to the psychology of dementia, the ravings of lust, the primitive rites of barbarism, or the necessary—but deplorable—noises of civilisation.

The object of our fathers was to avoid offence, paddling decorously in the smooth waters of respectability; our own object seems to be to avoid the commonplace, and so we splash ostentatiously in the waters of extravagance. To avoid the commonplace is admirable, but consciously to avoid the commonplace is an offence worse than that which we strive to avoid, for it means that we are putting restraint upon our spontaneity. Far better to take the risk, as all our predecessors have done, and to trust that the nobility of our inspiration will ultimately preponderate over our triviality.

And when at length the inevitable hour shall come when we shall be the generation that is gone, what will it be in our work that arouses the undying admiration of generations still to come? Will it be our boisterous use of screaming piccolos and throbbing drums, of sliding trombones and palpitating trumpets, of violins, violas, and 'cellos striving like aeroplanes for altitude records? Doubtless they will give such evidences of skill the measure of respect that they deserve, but what they will really search for in our work are just those qualities which we view with admiration in the works of Wagner and Beethoven—those elemental passages which by their simplicity defy analysis and hypnotise the mind; which, shorn of all the ingenuities which their composer revelled in, and reduced to the humblest form of presentation, still withhold from us the secret of their immortality. Oh, that the generations still to come might find in us, all and more than it has been our happiness to find in the works of the generations that are gone!

'BORIS GODUNOV': GENUINE AND OTHERWISE

BY M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

The publication (in America) of an English version of Rimsky-Korsakov's Memoirs of my Musical Life has again brought up the question of the rights and wrongs of his revision of Moussorgsky's Boris Godunov—a question which seems to have as many lives as a cat. Anyone might feel justified by now in thinking the topic as stale as the reviser's error is obvious. Yet every now and again something crops up to remind Moussorgsky's vindicators of the French saying: 'Il est des morts qu'il faut qu'on tue.'

For instance, a few months ago, in the Musical Quarterly, a writer pompously asked: 'What would have become of Boris Godunov had Rimsky-Korsakov's pen of revision failed to stop the leaks in Moussorgsky's structure?' It is that sentence, more than the new edition of the Memoirs (which contain nothing that Rimsky-Korsakov did not say in his Preface to his revision), that prompted me to write this article.

It is not easy to deal with the Boris Godunov question so as to make things clear once for all. Few copies of the genuine edition are available, and practically the whole of a Musical Times issue would be needed to demonstrate the extent of the emendations and their wantonness. Pending the time when the firm which has announced its intention to re-issue the genuine Boris Godunov (an easy matter so far as regards the vocal score, for no copyright stands in the way) will have published more than a few brief extracts of it, people who have no access to one of these few copies must either take other people's assertions on trust or leave the matter severely alone.

I often wish they would take the latter course. I do not know whether Mr. J. T. Howard, the American author to whose article I was referring, has devoted the requisite amount of care to his comparison of the two editions. If so, for the life of me I cannot understand how he has come to speak of 'leaks stopped in Moussorgsky's structure.' No more inappropriate definition of Rimsky-Korsakov's contribution could be imagined. Rimsky-Korsakov himself (who in this particular instance makes no attempt to hide his light under a bushel) puts forward no such claim. He merely speaks of having purified the diction, corrected clumsy harmonies, and faulty part-writing. 'Illogical modulations, or an intolerable deficiency of modulation, and ill-devised orchestral settings' are other things to which he devoted attention. With regard to the orchestral setting, little can be said, since Moussorgsky's original score is in the Petrograd Public Library, and even before the war few people had had access to it. I may mention, however, that a Russian composer and conductor who admired Rimsky-Korsakov's version almost unreservedly, once told me that 'the new setting was certainly more brilliant, but Moussorgsky's was often more appropriate.' With regard to the modulations or lack of modulation, one instance will perhaps suffice to show what Rimsky-Korsakov's point of view really was.

In the Revolt Scene, at the point when the Pretender has left and the Simpleton remains alone under the falling snow, Moussorgsky wrote :

Ex. 1.

and Rimsky-Korsakov substituted this :

Ex. 2.

To make an author say 'olfactory organ' where he had said 'nose' can hardly be described as 'stopping leaks in his structure.' Yet it is this kind of thing, and worse, that we encounter practically at every page. Mr. Robert Godet, in an article entitled 'Les Deux Boris' (Revue Musicale, April, 1922), gives more instances than I have room for here; and a few are mentioned in an article of mine, 'The Unknown Moussorgsky' (Music and Letters, July, 1922). I hope that those two articles and the present one may help to show that what Rimsky-Korsakov really did was to suppress or alter whatever was not to his liking or not in accordance with ruling conventions. The opinion that thereby he has improved Moussorgsky's masterpiece has long been current in Russia, but is now, I think, on the wane even there. Outside Russia it has been disseminated chiefly by writers who had not studied, and perhaps had never seen, the genuine version of the work.

But many critics who did compare the two versions have told a widely different tale. Thus Gaston Carraud—a critic as sober and as mindful of tradition as can be wished—wrote in 1913 :

It is only by comparing the two editions note by note that one is enabled to realise how far incomprehension and presumption may lead. Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations are the most incomprehensible, needless, and revolting thing ever done in a similar line. Like an insect pest, he has gnawed away every characteristic detail in the work, everything that struck him as irregular, simply because he was incapable of penetrating its logic.

I, for one, have never ceased to respect Rimsky-Korsakov's sincerity of purpose. It is obvious that he revised Boris Godunov in the same spirit as he revised his own early works, The Maid of Pskov and Sadko among others. He failed to see that the same course of procedure might be quite appropriate in his own case, and utterly inappropriate in that of Moussorgsky, the remodelling being no longer evolved from within but imposed from without. But at the time when his revision appeared, the genuine edition was easily procurable 'for all to study and abide by if they chose,' as he himself pointed out. He felt sure that he was doing his dead comrade no wrong. Therefore, as a matter of principle, I regret that criticism of his revision should often have been couched in the merciless terms of which I quote only one instance among the many available. But perhaps it is a case of great evils requiring great remedies—especially considering that from the time when the revised edition appeared, it became extremely difficult to obtain from Russia copies of the genuine edition.

In my Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism, I expressed a doubt whether anybody could determine Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations, even the most glaring, without actually comparing the genuine with the revised text. This remark deluded one reviewer into thinking that I was trying to 'hedge,' as he put it. Let me assure him that my one concern throughout the book was to express no opinion of my own except on points of method in criticism. The remark refers, not to Rimsky-Korsakov's infallibility, but to the fallibility of analysis and criticism. It comes after a reference to the attitude of certain critics towards a falsified edition of Rust's Sonatas (see, on this matter, my articles in the Musical Times, January-April, 1913), and is meant to illustrate how difficult it often is to interpret internal evidence when the help afforded by external evidence is lacking—the topic to which the whole chapter is devoted.

Possibly, however, a reader of the revised score, if sufficiently familiar with Moussorgsky's aims and methods, might guess that the facile, theatrical effect of cheers in the distance at the close of the love duet is a free present from the reviser's pen. But nothing could tell him that it replaces a genuinely dramatic effect in the original version: Rangoni, the Jesuit, sneering at the simplicity of his dupes Marina and Dimitri.

Again, familiarity with Rimsky-Korsakov's music may lead one to guess the authorship of the following bars:

which happen to be a favourite device of his. What Moussorgsky actually wrote is:

I must repeat here what I said eleven years ago with regard to the falsification of Rust's Sonatas. If it be true that 'style is the sum of the appearances of all the factors that make up a work of art or a living thing,' and that 'the worst fault in style is the mixing-up of types which are especially apt to different groups of conditions, different situations, and different attitudes of mind,'* then there can be no doubt that the outcome of Rimsky-Korsakov's interference with Boris Godunov is as monstrous as would be—to quote Parry's simile—'a tree made up half in the style of an apple-tree and half in that of an orange-tree.'

Of course, I cannot tell how much evidence of the mixing-up would have been detected by any of us if the true Boris Godunov had been blotted out of existence, nor whether in that case Rimsky-Korsakov's tamperings would have made any of us feel as uncomfortable—if only unconsciously—as most of us feel after comparing the two versions. To the second question I almost incline to reply negatively. I believe that the beauties extant in the revised work would have detracted our attention from the weaknesses created by the reviser's excessive polishing and dovetailing. Thence, I fear, it is but a step to the conclusion that if so, Rimsky-Korsakov's orange-scions, grafted upon Moussorgsky's apple-tree, have not driven all vitality from its roots. Then Moussorgsky's partisans and Rimsky-Korsakov's may well go on for ever hurling at one another the warning embodied in the proverbial Video meliora proboque, deteriora sequor, while others will stand bewailing the collapse of yet another of our few and fragile critical standards.

But I am not trying to inflict upon readers an article on criticism under colour of dealing with Boris Godunov. The point is that both versions exist, and there is much in Moussorgsky's letters to show that he formally wished his works to stand or fall as he had written them, and not otherwise.

Even if Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations had not distorted a good deal of Boris Godunov beyond all possibility of recognition, doing away with much that is essential to the carrying out of Moussorgsky's intentions—terseness, directness, and simplicity were his foremost ideals—a question of ethics would arise to which there could be no two replies. But as things are, it is possible to seek guidance in facts, and not merely in principles.

Whoever has compared the two editions has a perfect right to his opinion, whatever it may be, and is entitled to proclaim it as loudly and as persistently as he chooses. Unfortunately, a good many people adjudicate against Moussorgsky without adducing the slightest proof of having gone through the needful preliminary formality. Sometimes the very terms they use are unmistakable evidence to that effect. And for this sole reason it remains needful to protest again and again, showing—so far as is possible within the few pages of an essay—chapter and verse for every protest. Let those who would have us believe that Rimsky-Korsakov's alterations constitute improvements do the same, and the question may eventually be settled.

EMOTION AND TECHNIQUE

BY ARTHUR L. SALMON

The difference between technique and emotion is the difference between mechanism and life. It is the conjunction of the two that makes the rare performer, the player of genius, whose gifts raise technique to a loftier sphere, transfusing and transcending it. Technique is the letter, emotion is the spirit. Yet many performers and many listeners seem satisfied with technique alone. It is either because they have deadened their perceptions by a criticism which is merely a thing of rule and measure, or because they lack in themselves that touchstone by which the qualities of genius are assayed, that sensitiveness which responds to the emotional and the spiritual. They are satisfied with great talent, they do not demand the something more that lifts talent above a technically successful rendering into a personal interpretation, an individual utterance. On a somewhat low plane such persons are content, let us say, with the pianola; and a good many executants, we may assert without cynicism, are nothing but flesh-and-blood pianolas. Or, rather, they are marionettes, skilfully perfected automata, lacking the warmth that pertains to flesh and blood.

We will admit that the pianola may be a good substitute for a performer—but it must be a very poor performer for whom the pianola is thus a substitute. The pianola can give us technique of a sort—it cannot give us emotion. If a player has a bare technique with no emotion or passion behind, the mechanical device may do as well; it has the merit of a cold accuracy, it never falls below its own moderate level, it neither disappoints nor surprises us. Does not this adequately describe many of those performers who lack the divine transforming spark, who never disgrace themselves and never surpass themselves, who go through their parts with the faultlessness that, as the poet says, is all fault? And is it not certain that many listeners are absolutely contented with this, that music means just this to them and nothing more? They are paralleled by those who, in another realm of art, take rhyme and metrical structure to be poetry, not knowing that these externals may be present in perfection and yet poetry be absent. They are satisfied; they are conscious of no further appeal; their ears are tickled; their sense of rhythm and tune is appeased; and that which they have never known they do not miss. It is so in literature, when we find readers satisfied with the second- or third-rate, with cheap easy sentiment or sensational melodrama. But the lover of music, even at this low level, does demand a certain amount of technique, and gets it; the uncultured and unwary reader demands and often gets no technique at all.

* Parry's Style in Musical Art, p. 18.

In its rightful place technique is of immense value. It is like the instrument which interprets or conveys the spiritual message; without it that message cannot be adequately given. A fine performer will make the best of a bad instrument; but the finest performer will naturally do better on a good instrument than on a poor one. The fullest soul that seeks to utter itself in music will be assisted greatly by technical command and ease. Many souls go through life dumb because they have no such means of utterance open to them; they have something to say and cannot say it. Much of the world's sorrow and unrest might be relieved by timely utterance; much is immeasurably increased because it remains voiceless. All forms of art are simply means of such expression; happily there are other means for those who seek them—in life, in action, in love. Such means may be entirely sufficient for many, life being a greater thing than music or literature, which, after all, are only phases or aspects of life itself. But there are souls that crave a definite and articulate expression; rightly or wrongly, they have not found a vent in action; they are constantly troubled with a desire to speak. Lacking the technical facility, they remain speechless. And on the other side we have those who have mastered the technique of expression, but who, apparently, have nothing to say. Good performance is self-expression as well as interpretation; these give us neither. We all know players who are tolerably note-perfect, who have execution and fluency, but who remain unemotional, stolid, stodgy—as satisfactory as a good pianola, but no more. The same judgment must by no means be confined to pianists; it applies to performers on any instrument whatever. Musically, it is the defect of the soulless—which need not mean that the soul is absent, but that it has not found its voice.

Is there any possible remedy for this? We know that a lack of soul in music is more deplorable, more disastrous, than a lack of technique; besides which a certain amount of technique can usually be acquired by patience and moderate gift. Emotion, the pulse and throb of passion, is not so to be acquired. If the defect is unconscious of itself, the condition is obviously hopeless. Such a performer may attain precision and correctitude, every point of expression may be carried into effect; and the result may entirely satisfy those hearers who, like the performer, expect nothing more. Carried to a rare skill of execution, the performance may even cause a sensation, it may astonish and call forth great applause; and though no listener may have been stirred to the depths, only a few may remain aware that there were these depths to be stirred, and that the music has not reached them. Every conservatoire and training-school can turn out many such players yearly, filling to repletion the ranks of the second-rate. Of course it would be absurd to ask that many geniuses should be added to the number of performers in any branch of art. Music is no exception. But what we ask for is not genius, which always comes as a miracle of surprise; it is simply emotion carried into utterance, the touch of true feeling that can arouse feeling in others, the voice that is not merely passionless echo, the interpretation that has found its own voice in that which it interprets, the power that takes up dead notes and makes them live. We want individuality, not mannerism; personality, not affectation.

Perhaps the final thing to say would be that those who lack this gift of emotion should not take up music at all; it is the wrong medium for them. But why should they be deprived of such pleasure as they find in performance; why should the many hearers who are satisfied be deprived? We must be very tolerant of those who are deficient in that which seems to us vital. Obviously it is not vital to all; obviously many find satisfaction in what to ourselves may remain unsatisfactory. If we, in literature or art, turn to that which we believe to be the highest, this does not give us a right to condemn, scarcely even to criticise, those who are gratified differently. Anything of a superior attitude, assumed for these reasons, is mere priggishness, and would hurl us from any height that a purer taste might entitle us to. We are only justified in rebelling when that which is inferior is set up as a standard of excellence. We are justified in remonstrance if a mere jargon is given to us in place of sincere words, or if the feats of the musical acrobat are presented to us as a substitute for living human emotion. If we can only choose one of two things, emotion is better than technique; preferably, we should choose both. The study of music is frequently made too academic, too scientific; it should be spiritualised. Emotional power can be deepened by reading poetry, or by other quickening and enriching of the imagination. Music itself may have little to borrow from literature, belonging as it does to a quite different sphere of utterance; but the passion and the imagination that are the vital impulse may borrow much. Thoughts that 'lie too deep for tears,' too deep for verbal articulation, may yet not lie too deep for music; that is music's glory. And by such thought we mean of course thought that is emotional, not simply intellectual. It is the emotion that we want, in all art that speaks truly for the human soul.

SINGING OFF PITCH

By PROF. E. W. SCRIPTURE

A singer sings off pitch because he does not hear his own voice correctly. The false tone seems to him to be correct; to others it seems wrong. There is no use in discussing the matter with him: it simply seems to him as if you were urging him to sing wrongly. To overcome this difficulty

I have devised an apparatus that shows to the eye automatically whether the singer has the correct pitch—and, if not, just how far he is wrong. He can then learn to sing by the eye and train his ear to hear his own voice correctly. This apparatus is called the strobilion.

FIG. 1.—THE STROBILION.

An apparatus for controlling the pitch of the voice by sight.

The cardboard disc in Fig. 1 contains fifteen rings with white and black spaces. The innermost ring contains eight white spaces, the next nine, &c. The entire series is 8, 9, 10, 10 $\frac{2}{3}$ , 12, 13 $\frac{1}{3}$ , 15, 16, 18, 20, 21 $\frac{1}{3}$ , 24, 26 $\frac{2}{3}$ , 30, 32.

These numbers correspond to the relations of the vibrations in the diatonic scale, do, re, mi, &c. The disc is fixed on the axle of an electric motor whose speed can be regulated by resistance.

The disc is illuminated by a small flame from a burner of a special kind. A sectional view of this burner is given in Fig. 2. The gas from a tank of dissolved acetylene comes in at one side, and issues in a very fine jet. The back wall of the gas-chamber is formed by a thin diaphragm of mica. The sheet of mica is at the end of a wide tube. When a person sings into the tube the vibrations pass to the diaphragm. This sets the gas in vibration and the little flame jumps up and down. When delicately adjusted, the flame actually goes out for an instant at each vibration. This produces a series of flashes of light. The number of the flashes depends on the number of vibrations in the voice.

FIG. 2.—VIBRATORY FLAME-BURNER.

Vibrations of the voice coming down the speaking tube move the diaphragm and cause the gas-flame to vibrate.

The disc is set in rotation by starting the motor. The gas is allowed to burn quietly. The disc appears to be of an even grey colour. Some one now sings into the tube. One of the rings of the disc appears to be composed of black and white spaces standing still, while the rest of the disc remains grey, as before (Fig. 3). The explanation is that during the time the flame is out or nearly out at each vibration, the spaces of this ring have just time enough to move through the size of one space; consequently each flash of light shows the black and white in exactly the same places. For other rings this is not the case, and the result is a blur into grey. When the person sings a different tone, a different ring will stand still. In this way the voice can be pitched by means of sight.

When a person sings so that a ring appears to stand still, he finds that the black and white spaces soon begin to creep forward or backward. This is because he is not singing exactly the tone corresponding to the ring. If he sings sharp, the spaces creep in one direction; if flat, they creep in the other direction. The more he is off the pitch, the faster they creep, till finally they race round. By watching the ring he can keep his pitch constant.

This introduces a new principle in singing: the control of the voice by sight, instead of by hearing. No matter what the singer thinks he hears his voice doing, the truth is revealed automatically to his eye. In this way he can train himself to a correct knowledge of the pitch of his voice.

The singer can learn to strike the various intervals under guidance of the eye. Another disc contains fifteen rings with spaces corresponding to the notes do, mi, sol, over two octaves. When singing do so that the innermost ring is still, the singer can jump to one of the other notes of the chord; if his pitch is correct the corresponding ring will stand still.

This training by the eye acts in two ways in developing voice control. In the first place it corrects the ear and trains it to greater fineness in judging the pitch of one's own voice. In the second place it trains the muscle sense in the larynx so that this sense also takes active part in the control.

How far the training of the muscle sense can be developed is shown by experiments with congenitally deaf children who have never heard. Owing to the training in lip-reading they acquire unnatural, queer voices that are always off pitch. The voices are often very high or very low, and they are always monotonous instead of flexible. These children can be trained to speak melodiously and to sing by the strobilium. It is at first very difficult to make them understand what is wanted. But when they at last get the idea of altering the tension in the larynx according to the indications of the apparatus, they learn to control the pitch

FIG. 3.—STROBILION DISC ILLUMINATED BY THE VIBRATORY FLAME BURNER.

The number of white spaces of one of the rings passing by corresponds to the number of vibrations of the voice; this ring seems to stand still. The other rings appear grey.

of their voices, not only when they are speaking or singing into the apparatus but also without it. That is, they have learned to control the tension in the larynx by the muscle sense.

It is curious how deaf most singers are to their own voices. We are often tempted to think that some of them love their faults and that they simply will not hear. One musician remarked that he wished it were possible to induce Miss ——— (a famous singer in opera) to consult the apparatus; all her friends were pained at her singing off pitch, but no one dared to drop a hint to her.

Vocal instructors are particularly troubled; it often seems impossible to make a student believe that the pitch is wrong, and an appeal to the apparatus is the only resort.

NOTE.—The illustrations for this article are reproduced from the Volta Review and my Stuttering, Lipping, and Correction of the Speech of the Deaf.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

WIRELESS AGAIN

When, some months ago, I ventured to prophesy that the broadcasting of music would eventually kill the ordinary concert I was promptly sat on. Readers told me that people wanted to see, as well as hear the performers; that the social side of the concert-hall was attractive, and so on. During the past few weeks the question has been a good deal in the air, and all the signs, I think, go to support the view put forward in this column. Bournemouth has reported meagre attendances and a heavy drop in receipts at the Municipal Concerts, and it seems to be pretty well proved that broadcasting is at the root of the trouble. Sir Landon Ronald has been telling us that he has never known such bad times in the concert world; the Critics' Circle has decided that the time is ripe for the criticism of the concerts transmitted by the British Broadcasting Company, and the B.B.C. has moved things forward a step by extending its activities from the transmitting station to the concert-hall. It needs no great prevision to see that before long the Company will be able to serve its customers with concerts of all kinds and of first-rate quality. At present it is in the awkward situation of having to cater for widely differing tastes, and we see it attacked for sending out (a) too much good music, and (b) too much of the other sort. Perhaps the B.B.C. will not be above taking a hint from a mere musical journalist. I suggest that the Company will do well to regard itself as being in the position of a conductor who has to please a similarly mixed audience. How would he get over the difficulty? (There are, of course, certain points in which the cases are not analogous. For example, the B.B.C. has the whole of a long evening at its disposal, whereas the conductor must not as a rule exceed a couple of hours. Moreover, a concert to which people go is not on the same footing as one which comes to them; at the former they have to sit through the programme as a whole, whereas the latter can be switched on or off at will. But there remains sufficient similarity to make the comparison helpful, and the differences are all in favour of the Company, as we shall see.)

To begin with, we may be sure that a conductor would base his policy on the sound principle that the patronage of the musical section of his customers must be retained. In order to do this he would avoid such mixtures of good and bad music as are sent out so often by the B.B.C. Had the 'Proms.' been started with a hodge-podge they would not have run for over a quarter of a century. As it is, they have always had the support of musicians, and have been making converts all the time. But the B.B.C. audience is at home in the bosom of its family—in fact the family is listening too; so there must be something for everybody. The question is, should all these diverse tastes be catered for every evening? At present, the plan seems to be that of giving good music a rest on certain evenings. There are many musicians (yours truly is among them) who will not be satisfied until they can count on a dollop of something worth listening to every evening. I hope the B.B.C. will soon see the wisdom of meeting us. We don't want long programmes—forty-five to sixty minutes of good stuff, chamber or orchestral music most evenings, with an occasional solo recital of some kind. This leaves ample time for an hour of ballads, fox-trots, &c., for those who want such fare. We can turn on the tap for our allowance, and then wind up the gramophone while the ballads are on.

Here is an example of the kind of thing that no conductor with gumption would do when making up a programme. On January 1, the B.B.C. began the glad New Year villainously with a programme that contained only one item that musicians would want to hear—some movements (not specified) from Rimsky Korsakov's Scheherazade. Now imagine yourself to be a listener-in (though why the B.B.C.'s clients should bear so dreadful a label heaven only knows: presumably those who are not clients are listeners-out): anyway, suppose you wanted to hear Scheherazade. You didn't know the exact time of its performance, so you had to turn the tap on in good time. This let you in for Stephen Adams's Thora or a selection from The Bing Boys. If, having heard Scheherazade, you felt in the vein for more music, you had to satisfy your craving with an entr'acte, In the Cloisters, by Leo Torrance, Blumenthal's My Queen, and Collman's All that I ask. (Stay; there was something better—a selection from Pagliacci, but this second ewe lamb is not enough to affect the argument.) Now, people who want Rimsky-Korsakov have no use for Thora or My Queen; just as those who care for such feeble songs are happier without Rimsky - Korsakov. The B.B.C. programmes contain too much music that falls between two stools—it is far from good, and if you defend it by saying it is not bad, I reply that this negation is the fault that damns it beyond hope. It has not enough vitality to be bad. The most blatant of fox-trots has life; its blatancy may be misdirected energy, but, at all events, there is the energy. From dance music of this type composers may in the long run evolve something fine, just as the old dances led to the Suites of Bach. But can we imagine anything significant being evolved from Thora or My Queen?

Since the above was written, Mr. Ernest Newman has been dealing faithfully with the B.B.C. (Sunday Times, January 13). Perhaps he is a trifle on the severe side. After all, the Company has a tremendous task, and can hardly be expected to give all-round satisfaction in the short time that has elapsed since its founding. Still, a good jolt will do the music department no harm. Like most musicians, Mr. Newman has not yet a wireless set, simply because of the nature of the programmes. He says that he has no use for ninety-five per cent. of the music sent out:

Most of it consists of things I do not want to hear, performed partly by people whose names I do not know, partly by people whom, having heard them already, I have no desire to hear again.

I have noticed that when a musical critic says this sort of thing, the reply of the criticised is generally something after this manner: 'We don't profess to cater for such folk as music critics. We are out to serve the general public,' and then will probably follow a few sniffing references to 'highbrows' and 'superior people'; if the word blasé doesn't come in it will be by an unusual oversight. This sort of view needs to be sat on, good and hard. It has its origin in the totally mistaken idea that the handful of people who occupy prominent positions in the musical world, either in some administrative or educational capacity, or as critics, have a palate only for things too good for human nature's daily food. There can be no bigger mistake. If you could make an amalgam of the musical tastes of the Principals of the R.A.M., the R.C.M., and the G.S.M., the musical section of the Critics' Circle, the conductors of our leading orchestras, and any dozen prominent teachers, chosen at random, you would find it wonderfully like that of the frequenter of the Promenade concerts on their most crowded nights—especially on the Fridays. In his turn the Promenader is by no means out of the ordinary. There are hundreds of thousands of people like him all over the country. They don't attend concerts for a variety of reasons, some good, some bad. But they are always ready to respond—or react, as the fashionable word is just now—to a very large proportion of the works of the great composers of all periods. Sir Hugh Allen's recent remark that the man in the street had an instinctive liking for good music was widely quoted in the daily press as if it had been the announcement of some new fact. But Sir Hugh, I am sure, would laugh at the idea of his having made a sensational discovery. Few musicians have had more opportunities for observing the normal person's enjoyment of good music when tactfully chosen. I mention this question of tactful choice, because we so often find well-meaning enthusiasts choosing for missionary purposes slow, abstruse, and subtle music instead of drawing on the great mass of classical works that are either markedly tuneful or rhythmical, or both. Everybody, from the critic in the grand circle down (or up) to the policeman at the door, has an ear for a good tune and a pulse that goes out to a piece of vital rhythm.

Musicians themselves are well aware of this widespread natural good taste. The old and pestilent idea that good music is a matter for nobody outside a smallish aristocracy of art has been knocked on the head and put to sleep some time since. No doubt many a casual reader of the Sunday Times has passed by Mr. Newman's weekly article under the impression that he and Mr. Newman have nothing in common. Mr. Newman doesn't make that mistake. He says:

There must be hundreds of thousands of people in Britain with tastes like mine, and I should like to ask the British Broadcasting Company when it proposes to cater for these people, and how.

The programmes have lately shown signs of a real desire to meet the case, but the 'how' is not yet grasped by the Company. When at last it does see its way, it will tap a large, new field. We saw a similar thing in the evolution of the gramophone. A few years ago musicians wouldn't share a house with a gramophone. The recording companies began by supplying the needs of the least musical section of the public. Then it dawned on some of the more enterprising that the musical people's money was as good as anybody else's, and their custom as well worth having. We know the result. Records of the finest music are being poured out on all sides, and if we may judge from the report of the H.M.V. shareholders' meeting, held a few weeks ago, there is at least no cause for regret on the business side.

Discussing the future of wireless music, Mr. Newman makes a valuable suggestion that I hope will be taken up. He points out that practically all the performances of new works are confined to London and two or three large cities. There must be hosts of musicians elsewhere anxious to keep in touch with new productions. Here is an opening for the B.B.C. Mr. Newman is sure that readers of the press, lay and musical, all over the country, must have been puzzled by the critical discussion—not to say wrangling—over Pierrot Lunaire. The work has not been heard in England otherwise than at the two London performances, and not more than six hundred people were present at these concerts.

Mr. Newman asks why the B.B.C. shouldn't look ahead on such occasions, and arrange to broadcast the novelty, either from the concert-hall or from its station. He thinks 'there is not a music-lover from Land's End to John o' Groat's who wouldn't listen eagerly to a thing of this kind,' and he goes on to point out that a good deal of unfamiliar music can be broadcast less expensively than the familiar, because in most cases (he instances the Bartók Violin Sonata) it involves a small number of performers and the minimum of damaging comparison. The Company could drop Thora to-morrow and fill her place with something vital, without losing a single subscriber. When it goes even farther, takes its courage in both hands, and gives a little thought to the needs of Mr. Newman and me and our quarter of a million of fellow-musicians, it will rope us all in, hand over fist.

Having spoken of Mr. Newman's suggestion, I venture to bring forward one of my own. I notice that an influential committee of women has been got together to advise the B.B.C. as to the fare for the Women's Hour. I suggest that a similar committee of representative musicians be called in to help the Company in the matter of music.

The Company has an audience of millions, of all sorts, shapes, and sizes. The business of drawing up those daily programmes would be simplified if, as the result of the work of such a committee, a definite musical policy could be settled. There are a hundred questions on which a body made up of a few music critics, teachers, administrators, and amateurs, could give helpful advice. The thing is too big to be left in the hands of one or two officials, however keen and competent. It is on the point of becoming a national affair, and the Company should not hesitate to make use of the best musical brains in the country.

I mentioned above that the Critics' Circle is of opinion that the time is ripe for its members to deal with the concerts sent out by wireless. This is good, though there are obvious difficulties in the way. To begin with, will the editors of the newspapers dole out the necessary extra bit of space? In too many cases they are inclined to cut down the allowance where music is concerned. (For example, I have just heard that one group of papers, faced with the need for economy, has begun by taking an axe to the music department.) Then again, I imagine that criticism (at all events for a time) will have to be directed to the programmes and the transmission rather than to the performance—otherwise singers and players will be blamed for faults that are likely to be due to atmospheric obstructions or other natural defects. Such rapid progress is, however, being made that we shall soon be able to allot praise and blame with something like confidence.

But perhaps the critics might do even more useful service by discussing the programmes beforehand. They are, I believe, issued well in advance. A weekly article on the chief items selected for the ensuing seven days would be a capital feature. For one thing, it would set a host of people reading about music for the first time in their lives. I doubt if many people yet realise the potentialities of wireless so far as music is concerned. I happen to live in a small village, twenty miles from London, and not easily accessible. Until lately the villagers have been practically starved in the matter of music. A couple of concerts a year in the school-room, or a few gramophone records of dance music or comic songs are all that have come their way. To-day I find my neighbours (some of the unlikeliest, too) nightly taking their allowance of music of all sorts. If this is not an epoch-making new departure, I don't know one when I see it.

But epoch-making departures throw a heavy responsibility on those who set them in motion, and it is 'up to' the B.B.C. It has an opportunity of doing more for music than has ever yet been done by any invention or organization, and it is to be hoped that musicians will help with a push, a pat, or a kick, as may be necessary from time to time.

THE 'EROICA' SYMPHONY

By R. W. S. MENDEL

The object of the present article is to make an attempt at solving some of the difficulties which hearers of the Eroica Symphony have felt ever since its first production.

The Eroica is sometimes said to be programme music, but it is hardly correct to apply that term to this work with the same meaning as to Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony, and still more definitely to the tone-poems of Strauss or such a work as W. H. Reed's Lincoln Imp. The Eroica rather occupies a position on the border-line between such compositions and the pure expression of feeling contained, for instance, in the Symphony of César Franck or the Seventh of Beethoven—for, although it was originally entitled Symphonie Bonaparte, it will not be regarded by many hearers as being descriptive of actual scenes from the life and death of the great Corsican. The Symphony in fact does not tell a story: it unfolds a character. And because it does that—because it deals with the phases of a soul and the emotions experienced by the world at the passing of a great man—it can scarcely be called pictorial in the same sense as Till Eulenspiegel or Moussorgsky's Pictures from an Exhibition.

The Eroica Symphony is the finest piece of idealistic character-drawing in the whole range of musical portraiture. Before its splendours and its infinite variety the boisterous heroics of Wagner's Siegfried fade into insignificance, and even the masterly Heldenleben of Richard Strauss seems artificial by comparison. Sir George Grove long ago proved conclusively that the name Eroica was intended by the composer to refer to the whole work and not only to the first two movements. But though he found in the Trio of the Scherzo 'a feeling of infinitude or eternity' which is 'fully in keeping with the "heroic" character of the poem,' and conceived one of the most illuminative theories in the history of interpretative musical criticism by suggesting that the Poco Andante section of the Finale reveals the apotheosis of the hero, he has not explained in what manner he believes the other portions of those last two movements to be 'included in the picture.' Yet they must be included in it, if the unity of the whole Symphony is to be vindicated completely.

In any attempt to discover the intentions of Beethoven it is advisable to guard against placing too literal a construction on his statement that when composing he always had a picture in his mind. To do so is to fall into the error of supposing that a 'programme'—in most cases not disclosed to us—underlies practically everything which he wrote. That would surely be an exaggeration of the truth. Beethoven does sometimes compose to a programme: in a few instances he has told us what it is, and doubtless in certain other cases he did conceive a programme which for some reason he preferred to keep to himself. But most of his instrumental music is, I venture to think, best regarded as the expression of moods and emotions and not as an attempt to paint the scenes and incidents either of real life or of fiction. Even the Eroica was not a musical illustration of Napoleon's career: it was inspired by Beethoven's highly idealised conception of a great republican leader and reformer, which he assumed Bonaparte to be: and when his illusion was shattered, he tore up the original title-page and gave the work the name which now it bears, 'In memory of a great man.'

Dr. Charles Wood suggested the following explanation of the Scherzo of the Eroica*:

'A crowd, full of pent-up excitement, is awaiting the hero. His approach is welcomed by a sudden (one-bar crescendo) shout of twenty-two bars ff, and he makes his appearance in as revolutionary a style as Beethoven could well make him assume:

(Note the sudden quiet of the crowd.) His object in coming is explained in the Trio. This is an address to the people . . . . . The speech is received with marks of approval and cheers . . . .'

and so on.

This is very ingenious, but its detailed subtlety is appropriate rather to Strauss than to Beethoven. Moreover, it takes no account of the mystic feeling underlying the later part of the Trio. It has, however, two advantages; it rightly assumes that the third movement forms part of the representation of the hero, and also that Beethoven would not be troubled by the idea of continuing that representation after burying his protagonist in the second movement. Beethoven was not a narrative writer: neither the movements of his compositions nor the successive parts of these movements were meant by him to describe events in chronological order. The belief entertained by Berlioz that the Scherzo of the Eroica tells of funeral games after the hero's death, similar to those described in the Iliad, illustrates the danger of interpreting Beethoven in the light of his successors. The same fallacy—the notion that the third movement must have been meant to show what happened after the funeral depicted in the second movement—underlies the more recent suggestion that 'Le roi est mort! Vive le roi!' is the message of the Scherzo. It is indeed hardly credible that the composer intended the third movement of his Heroic Symphony to be concerned, not with the hero at all, but with the acclamations bestowed upon that hero's imaginary successor by his enthusiastic countrymen.

The Eroica Symphony must, I think, be approached in the same spirit as Beethoven's other works. By remembering what he has done elsewhere we shall perhaps arrive at an interpretation which is at least in consonance with the methods most characteristic of his genius. Now, his usual way is to present, in the various movements of a composition, a series of moods strongly contrasted with each other and yet displaying a unity which is spiritual rather than thematic. Beethoven was himself an impulsive creature, given to sudden changes of temper, and the more we study his life in conjunction with his music, the more apparent does it become that his character is over and over again revealed in his art. Just as in the man a fit of moroseness would give place with startling rapidity to outbursts of boisterous fun, and gloomy forebodings would be followed by an exuberance of high spirits, so, too, Beethoven the musician would, for instance, plunge from the vivacity of the first Allegro of his seventh Symphony straight into the melancholy of the Allegretto, and thence—by a contrast no less direct—rise again to the brilliant gaiety of the third movement.

Is it too much to suppose that in the Eroica Symphony the great composer was presenting to us, not a highly complicated programme of events* as to the true nature of which he has left us in doubt, but simply a portrait of his ideal hero in various aspects?

The first two movements have never caused much difficulty. The opening Allegro seems to give a picture of strength and nobility, of tenderness and anguish, of mystery, of hope, and of ultimate triumph. The following movement tells its own tale. It is the most tremendous funeral music in existence. The whole world seems to be paying its last homage to the great man whose glorious career has been cut short so tragically; and though the composer more than once lifts the veil of mourning and vouchsafes to us a voice of comfort, sweet beyond all compare, yet at the end the solemn dirge returns until the sad procession, with faltering steps and slow, gradually moves out of sight.

Then comes the change—perhaps the most complete change in the whole world of music—for Beethoven has hardly written anything more light-hearted than the opening of this Scherzo. Yet—unlike the Finale of the B flat Trio, which it must be confessed is somewhat of an anticlimax after the beautiful Adagio—the beginning of the third movement in the Eroica is not a shock to us. It comes as an immense relief after the gloom that has preceded it. In some sense its effect seems to resemble the impression produced upon our minds by the knocking at the gate in Macbeth and the ensuing speech of the Porter, where, after the almost unbearable strain of the scene of Duncan's murder, we feel, as de Quincey says, that 'the pulses of life are beginning to beat again.'

It may be true that the entrance of the Scherzo—the successor of the old Minuet—at this point of the Symphony is a circumstance thrust upon the composer by the traditions of the past, which demanded that the slow movement should stand second in the order of things, and which Beethoven at this stage of his career would scarcely have ventured to infringe. Yet this is only one more instance of the poetical sublimation of inherited forms which is the peculiar glory of this great master.

* Quoted on p. 95 of Sir George Grove's Beethoven and his Nine Symphonies

What is the message which the Scherzo bears to us? Directly the Funeral March is over, the composer at once lightens the darkness by turning the bright rays of his imagination on to another side of the heroic figure. To Beethoven, who—as we know both from the story of his life and from innumerable passages in his works—was gifted with a strong sense of humour, it would have been inconceivable that the ideal man who formed the subject of his Symphony should for ever have been serious and dignified. The hero could not always be heroic; and accordingly Beethoven, with that amazing instinct for the contrasts in human character which he shares with Shakespeare, now shows us the lighter side of the hero's nature. It ought not to be forgotten that Beethoven at the time he wrote this Symphony was only about thirty-three years of age, and that moreover Napoleon, the original subject of the composition, was but ten months older than his great musical contemporary. The Scherzo of the Eroica is instinct with the spirit of youth—youth in its most buoyant, vivacious, and sprightly form: and if Beethoven, who himself dearly loved to play jokes upon his friends, was not inclined to deny to his ideal character a sense of fun, it is not for us to deny that the Scherzo is in keeping with the rest of his conception. But the movement is not light-hearted throughout. Just as in the Finale of the C minor Symphony the master bids the instruments hush for a few brief moments from their tumultuous joy and listen to the mysterious warning of that unseen power which has dominated the orchestra in the previous movement, so here in the Trio section of the Eroica the music assumes for a while a graver tone, and we are afforded a glimpse into that eternal mystery which lies—potent and incomprehensible—behind and beyond the sparkling gaiety of youthful enthusiasm.

However much of a puzzle the Scherzo has proved to be in the past, the Finale has been even more so. The suggestion of Sir George Grove, however, that the Poco Andante section represents the apotheosis of the hero, is at once so convincing, both from the place at which the passage occurs in the work as a whole and from the nature of the music itself, that it becomes almost impossible to listen to this part of the movement except in the light of that interpretation. But a great deal still remains unexplained. What is the position of the theme and all the variations which precede the Poco Andante, and of the Coda which follows it? How do they fit into the conception of the hero? The movement opens with a loud preliminary flourish, and then the strings give out in soft pizzicato notes the bass alone of the melody upon which the rest of the Finale is built. This curious beginning strikes us at first as being anything but heroic; on the contrary, it is almost trivial, and its continuation is no more dignified. Even the theme itself, charming though it is, is scarcely of the stuff of which heroes are made. Gradually, however, the music becomes with successive variations more and more complex, until at last it reaches a climax, and then Beethoven marks a pause in the score, and introduces the noble Poco Andante section. That—very roughly—is the scheme which he has followed in the first part of this movement.

What is the dominant impression left upon our minds by this music? It is, I think, an impression of growth. With most other sets of variations in existence, the theme passes through a series of phases, each of which is usually in striking contrast with its neighbour; we do not feel that the theme is advancing from strength to strength, but simply that its nature and its possibilities are being continually shown in a different light. With the Finale of the Eroica, on the other hand, the music starts from quite insignificant elements and, as it were, gradually reaches maturity; ultimately a light from heaven shines upon it, and its beauty and strength are at last revealed in their true, ideal significance. Then the joyful acclamations of the Coda bring the whole work to a triumphant conclusion.

Beethoven has in this final movement presented his hero to us in an aspect different again from those set forth in the earlier portions of the Symphony. He shows us how even the greatest of mankind begins by being quite undistinguished, and yet may become a mighty leader of men. In the vigorous G minor episode, which alone interrupts the course of the variations, we seem to see the hero bracing his determination to accomplish his purpose. Throughout his career we watch that same simple nature of his, ever developing, until at last the composer unfolds the wondrous tableau of the hero's ascent to the abode of the blessed. The way in which the original air, once so delicate and childlike, is now transfigured by a vast change of tempo and of instrumentation, and thundered out in all its splendour by the brass, is one of the most impressive passages in the whole work. The hero's life-task has been accomplished. He has entered the kingdom of heaven. And at the end of the Symphony the orchestra seems to lift the melody shoulder high and, personifying all humanity, to proclaim the hero's glory from the housetops.

ON NEGLECTED WORKS

By KAIKHOSRU SORABJI

It is a lugubrious and dreary task making an inventory of the fine works, old and new, ignored or neglected because of the atrophied and refrigerated brains of executive musicians, as always—with very few exceptions—the greatest curse on the advancement and progress of music, repeating all their lives the few stock pieces they drugged at in their student days, incarnated automata, without one ten-thousandth part of the resources of or the value of a first-class pianola or gramophone, ceaselessly ringing the changes on a couple of dozen or so pieces, like a certain pianist who was traced all over Europe for years with the same small number of works. The scandal of this has reached such a size that when Mr. — is down to play a pianoforte concerto, we all know it will be the Tchaikovsky No. 1, or M. de — the Grieg. Of course, I know the individual who will yelp that masterpieces are always welcome, and who, if he happens to possess a Dictionary of Quotations, will babble clichés about age not withering or custom staling. To begin with, neither of these works is even a minor masterpiece—it is not a masterpiece at all, but a very ordinary piece of artizan work, long since worn out. Masterpieces, it is true, may be always welcome, but not the same masterpieces.

Liszt, who is derided and ridiculed by those who know nothing of his work beyond a few virtuoso pieces—and who, with the usual impudence of the ignorant, have, of course, very decided opinions on the subject (or victim) of their ignorance—is known practically only by his worst or inferior works, excepting of course the B minor Sonata. The superb Fantasia and Fugue on B A C H, the wonderful Weinen, Klagen Variations, the great B minor Ballade, the Paganini Études, the Années de Pèlerinage, the Harmonies Poétiques et Religieuses, are scarcely ever heard and are practically unknown. The A major Pianoforte Concerto, incomparably the finer of the two, is rarely played, the Dante and Faust Symphonies scarcely ever. I can remember one performance of the latter in five years, by Busoni, at his memorable orchestral concert in June, 1919—Busoni, who is not merely a pianist and composer of quality that places him alone on a mountain top—as de Pachmann once said of Liszt—but a conductor of very great gifts as well. Among the smaller and lighter pianoforte works of Liszt there are certain numbers of the Consolations, the Valse Impromptu, the fascinating Valse Oubliée—the harmonic origin of the later Scriabin—and the delicately charming Berceuse, that no one ever plays.

We hardly ever hear certain of the lesser pianoforte Concertos and Symphonies of Beethoven, but such atrocities as In questa tomba and the hideous Adelaide are rammed into our ears at every opportunity. The latter is the stalking horse of every miserable voce bianca, voce inglese of a tenor up and down the land.

The solo Cantatas of Bach are ignored. A marvel like Jauchzet Gott in allen Länden (a concerto for voice and instruments a century-and-a-half before the feeble and furiously puffed 'innovations' of Arthur Bliss, and a superb opportunity for pure singing and fine musicianship) has had one complete public performance in London in fifteen years. Miss Carrie Tubb, almost the only English soprano who has any idea of how to sing Bach, and the necessary voice and technique, has once or twice sung the closing Allelujah from this wonderful work so finely that it is matter for acute regret that she does not sing it in its entirety.

The very beautiful Schumann Faust I never remember to have seen on any London programme, and the same remark applies to the Damnation de Faust of Berlioz, whose Symphonie Fantastique was last played four or five years ago. L'Enfance du Christ has, I believe, never been heard here in a lifetime, and surely those whose mania it is to root out the 'odd' and 'queer' might let us hear the very curious and interesting pendant to the Symphonie Fantastique, Lélio. This would surely prove no more unbearable than one less performance of the wretched grimcrack New World Symphony. And if the treacle eaters must have their dose of soothing syrup, why not Dvorák's Pianoforte Concerto for once? It looks no worse than the Symphony, and as it has been in cold storage for decades it has not reached the stage of decomposition that the Symphony has attained.

It is often said by those who live by it, and are therefore under an immoral obligation to lick the public's boot, that in the long run the best works are always the most popular. We are asked to believe this hilarious nonsense in the face of the vastly greater popularity of the Moonlight compared with that of the Hammerklavier or Op. 111; the Tannhäuser Overture with the Prelude to Act 3 of Siegfried; the Bach-Gounod-Wood Ave Maria with the pure, original Bach; the Valse Triste with the composer's remarkable fourth Symphony; the E flat with the A major Liszt Pianoforte Concerto, or the same composer's Liebestraum with his B minor Ballade; the second with the third Rachmaninov Concerto, the Petite Suite with the three Nocturnes, Land of Hope and Glory, Pomp and Circumstance in G, and Cockaigne, with the Symphonies or Falstaff—and so on, as long as one cares to continue. After this, what becomes of twaddlesome sentimentalities such as 'trust-to-the-public's-judgment,' 'heart-in-the-right-place,' 'knows-what's-really-good,' and all the rest of the spurious, discreditable, sycophantic claptrap of parasites and hangers-on? Listen to a 'Prom.' audience applauding. Hear them as ecstatic over some wretched ballad-wailing female committing an assault upon a Mozart aria as over fine playing of a great work—like Victor Schiöler's of the Reger Pianoforte Concerto.

The violinists are perhaps the worst of all. The time-dishonoured association of their whimpering instrument (as it so often is) with suppressed erotic cravings draws them inevitably to the Tchaikovsky Concerto, with occasional daring excursions into Vieuxtemps, Wieniawsky, and Lalo. One's chances of hearing a Bach Violin Concerto are as remote as those of hearing the Brahms, the Elgar, or the lovely Delius.

The Szymanowski Pianoforte Concerto is of course out of the question; a remarkable work, this, by one of the very few contemporary composers who have a profound understanding of the pianoforte. The Reger is still more out of the question; the critics have finally delivered their verdict—as usual, after hearing next to nothing of the composer's work, and that at very rare intervals.

The larger and more important orchestral works of Debussy are outrageously neglected. Not for years do we have a performance of the Three Nocturnes, Nuages, Fêtes, or the marvellously lovely Sirènes; or of the splendid La Mer, with its high fantasy admirably symbolized by a cover reproducing Hiroshige's 'Back of the Wave'; or of the orchestral Images, Gigues, Rondes de Printemps, and Iberia—a superb work, and perhaps one of the greatest things Debussy ever did. Why have we never had a concert performance of Khamma (the ballet written for Maud Allan), or Le Martyre de St. Sébastien? The pianists revolve, like those insect prisoners of two dimensions whom Fabre describes, endlessly following one another round and round, about Reflets dans l'Eau, one of the entirely unrepresentative and paltry Arabesques—or perhaps Jardins sous la Pluie. Very rarely do we hear any of the other numbers of the Estampes, the First or Second set of Images, the second book of Preludes, L'Isle Joyeuse, or the Suite Pour le Piano.

The singers do not even revolve; they remain rooted, fixed immovably to Mandoline (which they all murder, singing it like a dirge), and occasionally Romance. I have not heard certain of the Ariettes Oubliées, the Fêtes Galantes, the Chanson de Bilitis, the Baudelaire songs, or the Proses Lyriques, for years. De Rêve and De Fleurs (from the Proses Lyriques), two of his greatest songs, I have heard sung by no one but d'Alvarez, except once, the second, by that most interesting and enterprising artist, Mlle. Rosowsky. The Ravel songs fare even worse. Once in years do we hear the Clement Marot Épigrammes, the Schéhérazade songs, or the amazing Mallarmé set, surely one of the highest achievements of French song. Of André Caplet, there are at least a dozen very beautiful songs that are never heard.

I now come to one of the most flagrant instances of all—that of a composer who, if not a British composer in the literal sense of the word, is so great that this country is glad enough to stretch the very scanty claim she has to him to breaking-point—Debussy. I shall of course be told of sporadic and regularly execrable performances of the Dance Rhapsody (No. 1) and Brigg Fair; but what of years at a stretch empty of performances of the Mass of Life, Sea-drift, or the Arabesque, works of supreme genius, beauty, and power?

To return. The Reger Pianoforte Concerto has taken thirteen years to reach London. This superb work, one of the very greatest of pianoforte concertos, was heard thanks to the enterprise and courageous unconventionality of the gifted and very able young Danish pianist, Victor Schiöler, who did not think it inevitably necessary to repeat yet again the Saint-Saëns, the Grieg, the Tchaikovsky, or any of the other dilapidated affairs inflicted on us by exhibitionist pianists. The Reger Concerto gives no opportunities to these gentry. Although it is of very great difficulty and complexity, it is inherently and organically so. There are no idle passages of Fingerfertigkeit laid like rags over the meagre nakedness of a scrofulous, chlorotic body; still less has it any taking tunes à la Grieg's golden syrup, although it possesses themes of great and sombre beauty. Equally deplorable is the neglect of the Variations and Fugue on a Theme of Bach, a monumental work worthy of being placed beside the greatest of its genre.

What is the secret of the disappearance from programmes of new works that have carried off a definite 'popular' success, while others that have fallen flat as a wet rag are repeated? Is it that the supply of that lubricant to which I have before alluded in the Musical Times has given out, and that therefore the wheels have come to a rusty standstill? A certain work was extremely well received at its first performance some few years ago: it is a delightful, amusing, and sparkling work by a well-known Englishman. It disappeared completely for four or more seasons. On the other hand, a raw amateur production of a certain young person's, no better than any dozen academy students could have written, has been played again and again, although its reception when I heard it was politely unenthusiastic, and has become a positive public nuisance. If a work that is not a popular success and hopelessly bad (like the Milhaud second Symphonic Suite), can be repeated, why not another work which is also not a popular success but extremely good, like that very remarkable A minor Symphony (No. 4) of Sibelius, a work that for concentrated terseness and closely-woven conciseness of expression is unique?

Is the great Busoni Concerto—a work majestic in proportions and style, and epic in its grandness of conception—never to be heard again? It has, I believe, been performed once only in London—some eleven years or more ago.

Mr. Newman was perhaps wiser than he knew when, pour badiner, he foreshadowed a time when composers would write without reference to performance or the limitations of instruments. The standard of orchestral performances so far as London is concerned is at present so appalling, and the chance of adequate rehearsal so remote, that it is a matter for constant amazement to me that self-respecting composers are willing to allow dreadful caricatures of their works merely for the dubious privilege of such public performances.

Last, but not by any means least (in offences) come the chamber musicians, who persist in playing the not very typical and decidedly inferior Quartet of Ravel and ignoring his superb Trio which, with the Florent Schmitt Quintet, is one of the very best things that has come from France in our time. For gorgeous magnificence and sumptuous splendour, I do not know any chamber work to compare with this great Quintet. It has much of the characteristics of Byzantine architecture, glowing with gold and polychromatic mosaics. The wide, arching curves of its fine themes and its large spaciousness of style are singularly remote from the smallness and meanness that is so typical of modern French music. On the one occasion in eight years that I have had the pleasure of listening to this beautiful work (at South Place) it was enthusiastically received. It seems that our chamber musicians, like the others, when they have one of their rare spasms of enterprise are concerned above all with newness—quality appears to be not even a secondary consideration. In no other way can one explain for instance why any four musicians should waste time on simian gibberings like the Stravinsky pieces for string quartet, while ignoring the quartets of van Dieren—one of the two or three authentic great masters of our time. The Stravinsky pieces call for mere intelligence in performance, apart from mechanical dexterity: the quartets of van Dieren demand intellectual power of considerable order. Ninety-nine per cent. of people, according to recent psychological investigation, remain at the stage of mental development they reached at ten years of age, but that is no adequate excuse for exalting the littérateur and cartoonist of the subways above Buonarroti or da Vinci.

---

Here are some extracts from recently published books on singing:

The Pneumogastric nerve, issuing from the Medulla Oblongata, divides and ramifies in the head, neck, and thorax, and is known to have a direct influence on the Voice.

When the thoughts can be brought to a more idealic [sic] state, the physical voice will more nearly appear in its natural state, which is its best condition, while the mental or spiritual side—the larger part—is enhanced according to the plane of thought.

And for relaxed muscles I know of no greater attribute one can develop for oneself than love for one's fellow man.

Strengthening the hyoglossal, the back, or the intrinsic laryngeal muscles is not only unnecessary but tends to superinduce objective control of the separate factors of speech and an abnormal development.

If the singer of to-day goes wrong it is not for lack of clear direction.

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from January number, page 39)

NO. 14, IN C MAJOR, OP. 165

Præludium; Idyll; Toccata

Rheinberger's skill in construction is shown very strikingly in the first movement of the C major Sonata. Modestly entitled Præludium, it fills eleven pages, and effectively combines fugue and sonata forms. It gives us a Prelude and Fugue, touches the sonata form by including a definite second subject (sandwiched in the middle of the Fugue, and duly recapitulated and briefly developed in true sonata style), and winds up with a two-page Coda compounded of material drawn from both Prelude and Fugue. The form is thus a-b-c-b-c-Coda on a and b—an elaborate scheme carried through with complete success.

The Prelude recalls Bach by making almost constant use of the little figure that plays so big a part in the G major Brandenburg Concerto and other works. The vigour of the opening owes much to the bold plunge into A flat :

Ex. 1.  $\text{♩} = 72$ .

A doubtful point in the text of the first page calls for note. In line 3, bar 3, are bad consecutive fifths between alto and bass—bad, not because they are fifths but because they are ugly. Moreover, the alto part runs into a held tenor note in a very unworkmanlike way. I cannot persuade myself that the bar is right as it stands; the left-hand part has somehow gone astray. Some years ago I hit on a simple solution of the muddle, but I made no note of it, and it has now joined the lost chord. Perhaps some reader can suggest a way out. Here is the bar as printed :

Ex. 2.

There is little to be said in favour of working out sequences mechanically, but in this case, as only two bars are involved, it seems a pity the composer was not content to follow convention and write this :

Ex. 3.

This Sonata is rich in misprints. Some are obvious, of course, but players should never leave their correction to memory. 'Safety first' should be the rule of the busy player with little time for practice, and the pencil should be used freely. On this same page, line 2, bar 4, the first pair of semi-quavers in the right hand should be C-B flat, not B flat-A; and on page 4, line 3, bar 4, the second note in the pedal-part should be B flat, not A flat.*

After three pages of vigorous matter we reach a full close in C, the final chord releasing the following fugue subject :

Ex. 4.

We may be sure that it is not by chance that the opening notes of the subject are an augmentation of those with which the movement begins, and that the rhythm  is a prominent feature in both Prelude and Fugue. Two pages and a-half are given to the working of this subject, after which the key changes to E major, and by means of a bridge constructed from the first three notes of Ex. 4, we come to the second subject proper—a curious, wide-ranging little tune :

Ex. 5.

which is straightway repeated twice—first in G, then in E, an arpeggio tenor part being added for the latter presentment. Six bars of modulation bring us to G major, in which key the Fugue is resumed. Rheinberger is careless here, with a f direction that is unsatisfactory, as it comes on in the middle of a suspension. The best way of managing the transition from the second subject to the Fugue is to play the whole of the section from bar 4, line 3, page 8, to bar 3, line 3, page 9, on Swell or Choir, going over to the Great with the opening note of the fugue subject, thus :

* Some of the engraver's errors in the Sonatas may have been corrected in recent editions, but I have not so far been able to discover signs of a revision. They are therefore pointed out in full. I take this opportunity for thanking Mr. Arthur M. Fox, who a few years ago sent me a complete list of such errors.

A fine entry is that of the subject at the end of this page. It comes in with bold effect on F natural taken as the dominant seventh, so that the bar opens on a  $\frac{4}{2}$ . Fourteen bars of episode, based on the opening of the fugue subject, lead to a recapitulation of the second subject, now in C, presented three times, as before, but now in C, E flat, and C, with a delightful effect made by a double pedal point, the tonic in the bass being balanced by a dominant in the treble, with three parts moving between. At the start of this page occurs one of the worst of all the composer's careless directions, the subject being marked p and the accompaniment mf! The theme may easily be soloed, and the matter so put right, but seeing that the soloing cannot be carried on for the two repetitions of the subject, it seems scarcely worth while starting on such a scheme. It is better to play the whole of this section on one manual. The end of the page brings us to the Coda. The big chordal version of the fugue subject at the close of this page should be brought out by some addition of power and by a slight broadening. We need not be afraid of making the silent pause dramatic. The player should realise, too, the references to the fugue subject in the closing page—at the a tempo and subsequently. They are slight, but they can be thrown up by phrasing and by a touch of the Swell pedal. This is undoubtedly one of the best of all Rheinberger's movements, being full of vigour and masterly in its development and form.

In the matter of registration the only point calling for mention is the commencement of the Fugue. Rheinberger suggests no reduction from the opening ff until the middle of page 8, but we should of course reduce to diapasons f at the giving-out of the fugue subject. The slight increase of pace at this point is important, too.

A few more misprints must be noted. On page 7, line 2, bar 1, the pedal part is badly muddled, being a beat short. Several solutions are possible, but the following seems the likeliest:

A flat is missing from the treble G in bar 3, line 2, page 12.

The Idyll calls for few words, being simple in material and construction—a graceful, flowing 6-8 pastoral section, a middle portion (4-4) in which a broad phrase is treated antiphonally, unison and harmony, loud and soft—one of the oldest and simplest of devices, and still unailing in effect—followed by a resumption of the opening, with fresh treatment. There are some delicious little bits in this movement, especially the following, with its Brahmsian cross-rhythm:

The Idyll makes a capital number for recital or voluntary use.

It seems odd that in all Rheinberger's organ movements (nearly two hundred) there is only one Toccata—a form very popular with organ composers of all schools and periods. Probably the reason lies in Rheinberger's dislike of the showy. Much of his organ music, especially the Fugues, can be made brilliantly effective, but the brilliance is a mere by-product. We feel that the composer's concern is with purely musical values; there is no room for facile passage-work, pedal solos, and other material for technical display. His dislike of ostentation extends even to the use of scientific devices in composition. Rheinberger, as all his pupils testify, was one of the greatest of contrapuntists, but the fact is never obtruded. In one or two of his short pieces he gives us a taste of his quality in canon and stretto (see especially the Trio in F—a canon worthy of Mozart—and the canon-fugue in the Solemn Festival); but, on the whole, it is clear that he prefers to reserve such feats for the class-room. Hence the absence of regular counter-subjects in his Fugues, and the fact that the subjects themselves, with hardly an exception, are of genuine musical value, invented with no eye to ulterior use in stretti.

This solitary Toccata of Rheinberger's is finely effective, though it has nothing in common with the brilliant examples of the French school. It differs, too, from the classical German type, in making use of a mixture of sonata and rondo form. As usual, Rheinberger starts off with a lengthy first subject section—a broad, simple theme with an animated accompaniment. No conventionally brilliant Toccata can give us more genuine life than such writing as this:

Two pages and a-half of this fine stuff bring us to the second subject, with a drop in power and a change from semiquaver to quaver movement. The second subject has a chiming effect, due to the insistent downward scale in the left-hand and pedals. A neat point is scored on the top of page 23, where the rising scale in the treble at first suggests an inversion of the chime, but turns out to be the opening of the main theme. A three-fold use of the scale makes a good bridge to a resumption, ff, of the opening ten bars of the movement, after which a modulation is made to the dominant of C minor, and a fresh bridge-passage (with a canon at the octave) leads to the third subject. This is a broad chordal phrase suggestive of such Beethoven themes as the second subject of the Waldstein Sonata or the opening of the Adagio of the E flat Sonata, Op. 7. At its fifth bar the pedal, by a use of the motive of the preceding bridge-passage, saves the continued manual chords from becoming stodgy. Had this third subject been followed by a return to the first the rondo form would have been pretty well established, but there would have been a lack of contrast, so Rheinberger wisely carries on with the quiet chiming second subject (considerably shortened), makes a second use of the canonic bridge-passage, and gets back to the main theme ff, with the interest and life increased by fresh treatment. But the Beethovenish theme is not yet shelved. A richly harmonized development of the opening notes of the chief subject:

leads to a big six-four chord over a pedal G (with shake) and the broad hymn-like phrase rolls out with splendid effect, after which it comes in for varied treatment, leading to the Coda—three pages made up of free use of matter drawn from the first and second subjects. It is good to feel that this fine Toccata is widely appreciated by players and hearers—so much so that it fairly holds its own with most of its more superficially brilliant rivals. Some misprints should be noted. On page 20, line 4, bar 4, the minim G in the right hand needs a sharp. On page 28, line 4, bar 3, the last note in the left hand should be F sharp. The registration may stand as marked except that the ff passages might well be modified at times in order to leave scope for building up climaxes, and that the more powerful reeds should be reserved for the entry of the broad third subject. Rheinberger indicates this on page 24 by the term Volles W., but gives no sign on page 27, where an increase of power is even more important.

NO. 14, IN D, OP. 168

Phantasie (Andante amabile—Agitato); Adagio; Introduction and Ricercare

Although this Sonata shows a slight falling-off, it deserves to be better known than it appears to be. Perhaps the double-barrelled form of the Phantasie is a hindrance so far as the first movement is concerned. There is a good deal to be said for the old plan of opening an important work with an introduction, but such introduction should be brief, and its character must leave nobody in doubt as to its being merely the prelude to something bigger. Rheinberger seems to have fallen between two stools, the Andante amabile being nearly three pages in length, and with a definite theme which is fully developed. Its pace, moreover, is on the slow side, and it does nothing in the way of working up to the Agitato. In fact, if we resolve the dominant chord at the double-bar on page 5, it makes a complete movement in itself, and a very pleasant one, with its pastoral rhythm and its flowing polyphony. We need not hesitate to use it separately as an involuntary.

No doubt Rheinberger aimed at the dramatic effect of the Agitato bursting forth suddenly, and there is a good deal to be said for the idea, though I fancy most players will agree that the proportions of the movement are wrong. When the Agitato does at last begin, it proves to be of a rousing character:

Does Agitato describe it exactly? The term suggests passion, usually on the melancholy side; but the quality here is bustle rather than agitation. Indeed, the movement always strikes me as a kind of scherzo, despite its 4-4 time. The breezy mood is helped out by prominent use of this cheerful motive:

and by the second subject—a perky little tune started by the tenor, taken up by the treble, bandied about from part to part, and always treated in such a way that it stands out well without the aid of solo stops:

The working-out is free, as befits a Phantasie. After the delivery of the second subject there is no lengthy development or repetition. The remaining five pages deal freely with the various themes, passing easily from one to another in no regular order, the animation and interest being well-maintained. Is it a crime to suggest that this lively Agitato should be played as a recital piece—shorn of the long preliminary Andante? I hope not. It is of ample length, and complete in itself, as it contains no reference to the Andante. It is rather difficult in places, and calls for nimble manual work. There is one misprint: on page 10, line 3, bar 5, the minim F sharp in the left hand is held while the right plays F natural. The effect is bad, and I suggest that the minim be made into a crotchet.

The slow movement is not one of the most appealing of its class. The opening section consists of sixteen bars, bars 3-4, 7-8, 11-12, and 15-16 being the same, with rather square and monotonous result. Dr. Bennett says that the form suggests that of 'the Arabian type, "Ghazel," as used by Hiller, and also by Mr. Frederic Corder in a Rumanian Suite.' This section past, we plunge into a page and a-half of loud material marked Risolto—excellent stuff in itself, but out of place here, because only sixteen short bars separate it from the long and loud Agitato. The opening theme makes a brief re-appearance, and again we are in the hurly-burly, going straight from pp to ff. The oft-repeated two bars then end the movement—an unsatisfactory one, because its most arresting and important parts are loud and vigorous, and so fail to provide the contrast that we expect of a slow movement. Played separately it makes a good out-voluntary.

Perhaps the somewhat intimidating title of the Finale has warned a good many players off. We know but too well that the term Ricercare has been made the excuse for many a dry and devastating page. Rheinberger's example justifies the use of the label from the scientific point of view, but after a good many years' acquaintance with it, I refuse to admit that it is dry. It avoids that fault by yet another of the composer's successful experiments in form. The Introduction is of just the right length and style, suggestive at times of an improvisation, and linking itself to the Fugue by anticipating the subject, and even treating it with an ingenious bit of stretto.

The Fugue is in three sections—marked Con moto, Intermezzo, and Ricercare. As Dr. Bennett points out, there are really two Fugues, as the third section (marked Ricercare) gives the subject entirely new treatment. The subject is less attractive than usual with Rheinberger. For once in a way he seems to have gone to work with future complications in view. Still, it is anything but crabbed; the worst that can be said of it is that it is not strikingly original:

It leads to far more variety and interest than one would expect, the writing being full of the lively ease that never seems to fail the composer in fugal work. The counter-exposition over, instead of the customary episode, we have a further series of entries —four of them by inversion—followed by an episode which ends with a full close in A. A double-bar, a change of signature from D to F, and the Intermezzo begins. Rheinberger happily links it up with the preceding Fugue by taking the first six notes of the fugue subject, inverting them, and using the result for the opening of the new theme :

Ex. 15.

So we see that the composer manages, as usual, to incorporate free matter into the Fugue, Ricercare though it be. No better contrast could be wished for than is provided by this Intermezzo, with its change of key, and its dropping of polyphony in favour of a tune with a figurate triplet accompaniment and the simplest of basses. The Intermezzo lasts for two and a-half pages (really more, for there is a repeat mark which should be observed), and is joined up to the succeeding Fugue very neatly by eight bars of close stretto on the inversion of the subject. The Ricercare proper then begins, with the subject now right side up in the tenor, with a new counter-subject. Mozart himself never wore his learning more lightly than does Rheinberger here. We come on the lilting new counter-subject with surprise—almost with amusement. Who would expect such a cheerful rhythmic figure to be reserved for the most rigorous part of a fugue ? :

Ex. 16.

It is used regularly throughout this section, save for the final entry of the subject, which is given to the pedals with a characteristic Maestoso harmonization. The ingenious little bit of writing in the middle of page 26 will not escape notice. The subject appears three times in diminution accompanied by the counter-subject—or, rather, as much of it as can be got in. In the last line of this page Rheinberger writes in the pedal part an optional B below CC. Of course nobody can play it, and as the shape of the subject suffers badly if the octave leap is up instead of down, I suggest that the whole of the pedal-passage, from the beginning of the subject to the first note on the next page, be played an octave higher than written. If preferred, the return to loco may be made three bars sooner. A cadenza-like passage is followed (not very happily, perhaps) by a few bars' quotation from the Andante amabile, and a massive Coda is provided by the opening theme of the Sonata, now in 9-4 time, ff, Maestoso. This is one of the cases where the return to first movement matter is no drawback when the Finale is played alone. The broad character of the theme makes it analogous with such codas as that of Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Fugue in E minor, which is rounded off with an independent chorale.

The registration suggested by the composer, simple though it be, needs little addition. The soloing of the subject in a fugue is usually bad in principle, but the tenor entry at the end of page 21 may well be brought out. A delightful entry this is, with the C sharp treated as an auxiliary note, the harmony being G. Of course the pedal at the Maestoso on page 26 should be backed up by a powerful reed. It can hardly be made too prominent.

This fine movement is easy to read, but decidedly difficult to play with the right pace and resolution. I believe it has only to be well-known in order to take its place among the best of organ fugues.

Apparently more care was taken with the proof sheets of this Sonata than was ordinarily the case. I have found only one misprint, the phrasing is more reasonable and consistent than usual, and there is even some helpful fingering.

(To be continued.)

THE RE-STANDARDISATION OF THE SMALL ORCHESTRA

By FLORENCE G. FIDLER

A very real problem of the moment, serious alike to the professional and the amateur musician, is that of the financial position of the orchestral concert. It is an open secret that the Philharmonic Society only keeps going by repeated calls on a noble company of patient guarantors, and that the members of the London Symphony Orchestra play at their own concerts without a fee. The various causes for this serious state of affairs are not for the moment under discussion, though one point must be emphasised—the absolute necessity for at least two rehearsals when modern music is produced and often played from MS. parts. No conductor on earth can, in three hours, prepare a worthy performance of a two hours' programme made up of the complex scores of the present day, and the 'one-rehearsal' or 'no-rehearsal' arrangement is only practicable either when the programme consists mainly of well-known music, or (as at the Patron Fund rehearsals) when no attempt is made to do the impossible during the limited time at disposal.

Consequently an orchestral concert to-day entails the hire of the Hall for two mornings as well as for the concert, in addition to the usual expenses (every one of which is now increased) of advertisement, agents' fees, &c. But the biggest item will always be the cost of the orchestra itself, and it is the continual increase in the size of the orchestra that lies at the root of the problem. It has, in fact, brought about still another difficulty, a smaller one—that of space. Often at Queen's Hall, with a band of six flutes, eight horns, and the rest of the wind in proportion, various extra instruments (such as saxophones), a large army of strings, and a small army in the 'kitchen,' the question of fitting in the men so that they can play with even a reasonable degree of comfort is no small matter.

The only way out seems to be that composers who wish to have their works performed in the future must write for a small orchestra instead of a big one. Already various experiments have been made in this direction, notably by Mr. Holst in his one-Act opera, Savitri, and in works performed by Mr. Anthony Bernard's Chamber Orchestra. But rarely has the particular selection of instruments been the same in two cases. Now obviously if one composer scores for one set of instruments, a second for another set, a third for still another, the result is that all the various instruments will still be required in the orchestra for the performance of a mixed programme, the only change being that during each item a certain number of the players will be having a smoke outside.

Salvation seems to lie in one direction only—that of standardisation. The term 'small orchestra' has hitherto generally implied a combination of two flutes, two oboes, two clarinets, two bassoons, four (or two) horns, timpani—that is to say, thirteen players—with strings in proportion. This particular wind combination was based on that of the military band of former times, and has long ceased to be looked upon by composers as adequate for the expression of their ideas. Within the last few months a scheme has been formulated for the standardisation of the military band—a reform long overdue—and what is here suggested is that a new combination should be set up and standardised under the term 'small orchestra,' so that composers writing for such can know exactly what material will be available at any time and place.

After various experiments, I venture, as a practical orchestrator, to suggest the following combination: two flutes (the second to take piccolo alternatively), one oboe (or Anglais alternatively), two clarinets, one bass clarinet, one bassoon, two horns, one trombone, timpani, one 'kitchen,' one pianoforte, and strings in proportion—that is, thirteen players besides strings, exactly the number of the former small orchestra, but a much more serviceable combination. The oboe is best treated as a solo instrument with so small a number; its tone cuts through a 'limited' tutti, so the second oboe is superfluous. High chords of much the same colour can be obtained by flutes and clarinets, middle chords by clarinets and horns, while the four-part horn harmony effect, so beloved of composers, can be got almost as well by two horns, bassoon, and tenor trombone. The drums must be included for their beautiful rhythmical qualities, and the other percussion arranged so that it can be handled by one player. I have hesitated between the trumpet and the bass clarinet. The lovely discarded F trumpet would certainly have won, but the small C and B flat instruments are not much good except for brilliant high brass tone; whereas the bass clarinet can be used for a variety of effects besides that of the hobgoblin.

The usefulness of the pianoforte as an orchestral instrument has been frequently demonstrated at recent concerts; and the stock-phrase, 'The pianoforte never blends with the rest of the orchestra,' is proved to be entirely wrong—based, as it is, on the idea that every pianist playing with the band is necessarily a concerto soloist. When played artistically by an orchestral musician the pianoforte blends perfectly with the rest of the instruments, and can be set to all sorts of work in the mixture of the orchestral colour-scheme. The harp might be substituted, but its limitations are many, while those of the pianoforte are few. In Signor Respighi's charming little Marionette opera, recently performed at the Scala, the perfect 'small orchestra' score includes one of the new two-keyboard pianofortes, which can be made to sound at will like a harpsichord. This instrument would seem to be particularly useful for orchestral purposes.

This suggestion is thrown out only as a basis for discussion. It would be interesting to hear the opinions of composers themselves, and if the Royal Philharmonic Society (the senior musical Society of the world) would extend its activities and convene a conference of composers and conductors for the discussion and settlement of this important matter, it would be carrying out a useful and profitable work. Possibly a concert next season might be arranged for the small orchestra decided upon by these experts, so that the general public could form an opinion on the subject. There is no other organization in England that could embark upon anything so vastly important, and so rich in the promise of results.

Occasional Notes

At the time of writing nothing is settled with regard to the proposed visit of the Vienna Opera Company. The trade-union objection to the visit has several weak points. To take one only, it is inconsistent to bar an orchestra or an opera troupe, and at the same time to leave an open door for performers who come singly or in small parties. Members of the Orchestral Players' Union have had no objection to accepting engagements under Weingartner, Furtwängler, Strauss, Ravel, and other foreign conductors; they have cheerfully collaborated with concerto players from abroad; and a few weeks ago the little party of eight (six instrumentalists, a singer, and a conductor) came and performed Pierrot Lunaire, without a protest from the Union. Evidently it is a question of numbers rather than of principle, and, this being so, we think the Union's action is founded on too vague a basis to be sound. None the less, we hope its protest will succeed, because it has been clearly shown by those at the head of the British National Opera Company that the proposed visit of the Viennese will be fatal to the British organization. There is not room for two opera companies in London in May, and it would be a scandal if our own Company, built up and carried on in the face of great difficulties, had to give place to any foreign rival, however accomplished its members or attractive its programme. London next summer will be full of visitors from the Colonies. We may imagine their feelings on finding Covent Garden occupied by a company from Vienna, while the B.N.O.C. performers were 'resting.'

The opposition to the Viennese visit is concerned almost entirely with this question of date. English musicians in general realise that the visit would do good in giving our public a standard, especially in such matters as production and orchestral ensemble. But they realise, too, that an enforced break of some months in the work of the B.N.O.C. would be bad for the future of opera in this country, because that future, it is clear, is going to be largely in the hands of British artists. The postponement of the Austrian visit until the autumn has been widely supported as a way out of the difficulty—so much so that the letters of Dame Ethel Smyth and Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, in the Daily Telegraph of January 19, are beside the point. The writers are knocking furiously at an open door. Outside the narrow trade-union circle there is practically no opposition to the visit of the Viennese Company, so long as that visit does not clash with the interests of the B.N.O.C. Dame Smyth says: 'It is just because I believe with all my heart in our operatic possibilities that I want our own companies, public, and press to see what opera can really be.' But the 'operatic possibilities' of British companies will not be helped by turning the B.N.O.C. out of Covent Garden next May to make room for the foreign model. Let the object-lesson be postponed till later in the year, when it can be taken with advantage all round.

Whatever happens, the dispute is not unprofitable. Its significance is welcome to all but the superior, dispassionate internationalist, whose 'impartiality' usually ends in a preference for any country but his own. It is clear that our musicians are ready to kick against the old convention that they must humbly give way to the foreigner. Even in distant parts of the Empire there are signs of a refusal to be a door-mat for the Continental. Dame Nellie Melba has just discovered this in Australia. Readers will remember that the Dame recently started recruiting an opera company of her own (after the usual preliminary flourish of trumpets). Unfortunately she forgot that Australia did not cease to produce fine voices when it gave us Melba. There are lots of good singers there, and they naturally looked to her for the only kind of encouragement that cuts any ice—employment. When they found her engaging Italians they rose and protested.

The Theatrical Alliance has asked the Government to bar the entry of the Company, under the Immigration Law, the President of the Alliance adding that ... he viewed with indignation the effort to exploit the artistry of one Australian singer whilst the rest of the Company were foreigners imported not for art but for finance.

The President's implication that the Dame's only concern is with art is, we think, over-generous. We had not observed any signs that way when she was in England last, handing out Minnetonka and other clap-trap to an Albert Hall filled as a result of one of the most deplorable and prolonged 'boosts' the Daily Mail has ever stooped to. The Australian press is less respectful, and makes no bones about speaking its mind on what it calls 'Melba's Dago Chorus.'

In a general way Chauvinism is bad policy, but we are inclined to think that British music and musicians would be helped by a mild dose of it. Our performers especially have good cause to complain of the ease with which foreigners drop into practically all the fat engagements. We alluded last month to the fact that Sammons and Murdoch had been giving joint recitals to meagre audiences. They are merely two of our fine players who receive from their fellow-countrymen nothing like the recognition they deserve. Take the case of Sammons alone. For some years past he has been unanimously regarded as a violinist of the front rank. Yet as a soloist we hear far less of him than of many foreign players who are certainly no better, and some of whom are not so good. Kreisler is a great player, but at all the crowded recitals he has given since the war the amount of really fine music he has played could be got through in a few minutes. The hysterical audiences who fell at his feet when he reappeared at Queen's Hall, and who kept on falling at his subsequent recitals, may be presumed to know something about violin playing, and even a little about music. How is it that so few of them will cross the road to hear Sammons—even with Murdoch thrown in, so to speak? We should not object to their crowding to hear Kreisler fiddle his way through a programme of trifles, if they would turn up to hear a British violinist playing something better, or at least as good. But they don't. Again, how often are any of our excellent British pianists heard at Queen's Hall orchestral concerts? Couldn't the Prokofievs, Cortôts, Schellings, Pachmanns, Sauers, Hambourgs, Pouishnovs, and Moiseiwitschs be given an occasional rest in their favour? The London musical public can spare only a few thousands of pounds for soloists in a season. It would be interesting to know how many of these thousands go to the Continent, while first-rate British performers are left to share the public's remaining shillings.

In saying this we are well aware that we run the risk of being included among those whom Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji accuses of 'spluttering sempiternal balderdash about pro-Germanism if anyone has the temerity to admire a good German work or a good German artist,' but we take the risk cheerfully.

If a prejudice in favour of our fellow-countrymen be a crime, we are guilty up to the neck and with both hands. Dame Ethel Smyth regards protection in artistic affairs as 'uncivilised and hideous.' It would be, if all economic considerations could be ruled out where music is concerned. Unfortunately, as things are to-day, economics refuse to be waived aside with fine phrases. So long as the musical life of every European country is largely a struggle in which the bread and butter question is uppermost, no apology is needed for being 'pro' our own kith and kin. And if there be one country above all justified in adopting some measure of protection in music that country is England.

For generations she adopted the policy of 'Let 'em all come, so long as they are foreigners.' It is time to say instead, 'Let 'em come, despite their being foreigners. But there is a living for the best only, and if an engagement is to be filled, and the choice lies between an Englishman and a foreigner equally good, the Englishman gets it.' When the pendulum has swung this unwonted way for at least a generation, we may begin to talk about the hideousness and barbarity of protection, but not before.

A letter on the subject of turning-over in music appeared in the Daily Express a few days ago:

Sir,—I wonder why it is that one almost invariably has to turn over the music page at the most difficult passages. It has occurred to me that the difficulty might be overcome by (1) limiting a page to one or more staves and leaving the rest blank, or (2) adding further pages. This would obviate the executant having either turn to over at awkward points or to turn one or more pages back. If these simple suggestions were adopted by music printers they would earn the gratitude of the musical profession.

Clapham, S.W.4.

These 'simple suggestions' would also very considerably increase the cost of production. A long and difficult work served up in this way would probably make a formidable volume. Many works have few or no easy passages, and even if they had a good number no publisher would dream of spoiling the make-up of page after page in order to end them with an easy bar—though, of course, he considers the player's convenience as often as possible. Some years ago a move was made in the direction of printing music on a roll, which was fixed in the place of the pianoforte desk, and gradually unwound itself at the required pace. There was a good deal to be said for it, but evidently there was more against it, for it came to nothing. The fact is, in all but fairly simple music there are only two ways out of the difficulty—memorise a few bars, or ask her to turn for you.

The new Mendelssohn Scholar is Mr. Percy Purvis Turnbull, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. There were twenty-one candidates. Mr. Turnbull, who has just come of age, studied first under his father, and subsequently with Mr. Sigmund Oppenheim, of Newcastle. In June last he won a scholarship for composition at the Royal College of Music.

Reading from time to time of performances of the Vatican Choir in different parts of the world during the past year or two, we have often wondered how the singers managed to get permission to be absent from Rome for so long a period. If we may believe the New York Musical Digest, they didn't bother about so trifling a detail:

The Pope was quite bewildered recently to learn, when he wanted music for special services, that both the Vatican Choir and Sistine Choir had left Rome on concert tours. According to the official bulletin of the Vatican, they departed without his permission.

But it seems rather late in the day to miss a couple of important choirs, doesn't it? We cannot imagine the St. Paul's Cathedral or Westminster Abbey choirs being mislaid for more than a week or two without some lynx-eyed official observing their absence.

It is pleasant to be able to add to the long list of Byrd Centenary Celebrations one that took place on December 27, at the Sala del Buonumore, Florence. Signor Vittorio Ricci gave an address on Byrd's life and works, followed by a programme that included five virginal pieces, a Fantasia for strings, the Christmas Carol, and Iustorum Anima, the two last-named items being sung by the Coro Polifonico Fiorentino, conducted by M. Sandro Benelli.

The following, from an American contemporary will be read with misgiving:

Mana-Zucca has done much in the past to bring her name prominently before the public as one of the leading American composers, but she has never before done anything of the magnificence of her new song,

The Cry of the Woman. Magnificent is the only word for it. From the first chords of the introduction—curious altered chords with impressive and trenchant passing-notes suspended over a double pedal bass—to the cry of anguish with which the voice part closes, the music has no moment of weakness, nor any faltering of the high inspiration that insured its creation. The words are real poetry, not the doggerel that so often serves for musical setting, and their strength lies not only in the well-balanced wording but in the theme, which is a prayer of a woman, a typical woman's prayer: 'Let me see Love's face before I die.'

Apparently we are in for another Rosary.

Like some sinuous golden peacock, Georgette Leblanc flashed upon our astonished view and gave us a recital the like of which has never been heard in San Francisco.—San Francisco Journal.

If we were Georgette, we should be vexed at that reference to the peacock. Sinuous? [we should say] By all means. Golden? Why not, being a prima donna? But peacock? Hardly, seeing that the mere name of the fowl has long been a synonym for strutting vanity; and as for voice—in tearing, long-range hideousness it can give the corncrake a start and a beating. So peacock in your teeth, young man, though no doubt you mean well.

ENGLISH AND GERMAN MUSICAL LIFE COMPARED

BY ADOLF WEISSMANN

A happy chance having led me to London three times within the past year, I gladly respond to the Editor's invitation to compare the musical life of London and Berlin. I remain conscious of the fact that London musical life is only a part of that of England. It is, however, important enough to serve as a criterion of what is going on up and down the country. That there has been marked musical progress in England during the past decade cannot be denied, yet undoubtedly a broader background of musical feeling must be assigned to Germany, that country having experienced a whole century both of production and reproduction hardly to be paralleled elsewhere. Though musical life in the English provinces is more important to-day than it was ten years ago, certainly it cannot be compared with the widespread musical culture Germany has enjoyed for generations. This highly-praised artistic advance may also have a revers de la médaille, yet it is based upon certain qualities not easily to be met with in England.

Looking back over three centuries of English history, we find the national capacity for common sense to be, in fact, the big stumbling-block in the path of English music. Common sense is opposed to what we call the Dionysian element in music. Now it is just that in which English music has been consistently found to be lacking: Had not the influences flowing from the Church and from the Universities been strong enough to withstand 'common sense' tendencies, there would at this time be no English music at all. The greater the English people became in the art and science of life—above all, in political life, which means the most universal utilisation of common sense—the more they were deterred from that art whose appeal is so much to anti-common sense faculties, i.e., music. Germans generally admire in the Englishman that quality of self-control which they themselves so seldom possess. This repressive habit is just that which has prevented the English from becoming a musical race, for as a national virtue it has rendered artistic personality much more difficult of attainment than with the German people, who are inclined to utter their feelings in a way which seems rather foolish in everyday life, but which may become precious in art.

Though English musical production had ever-increasing difficulties to overcome, on the other hand sentimentality, as a quality common to the bourgeoisie of the whole world, rendered the bulk of the English public ready to succumb to the influences of German music, which, being romantic, combined both poetical feeling and sentimental power. And so attractive proved this music that even outstanding English musicians were led to adopt the German musical idiom. As everybody knows, this went on during a century, and increasingly so as German composers were called to England to play and to conduct their works. There is in modern times a very intimate connection between creation and performance, a circumstance of which agents and managers are quick to avail themselves. The agent, indeed, knows very well that the performer is even a stronger attraction than the composer himself. It is on this regrettable truth that musical commercialism, the fatal disease of our time, is founded.

When, after the war, I again visited England, I was very well aware that its musical life was passing through a crisis. That music as an art did not play so important a part in the life of the English nation as in that of the German people was a fact well known to me, and may be considered as a natural conclusion of what I have already said. But undoubtedly the situation was changed. This change was due both to interior and external reasons. A younger generation of British composers had arisen, anxious to rid themselves of sentimentality and to make the best of what they had learnt from the French and from the Russians—e.g., from Debussy and from Stravinsky. Though part of this new music was made pour épater le bourgeois, yet the best part of it was beginning to show a character of its own. There was, however, reason to believe that political tendencies had contributed to pave the way for the new music, which boasted of being British but could not conceal the foreign origin of the ideas which inspired it. As far as musical commercialism was connected with musical life, it could not but accept political views, even if it did not agree with them. Concert management, as a business, always depends on what the bourgeoisie demand; and the bourgeoisie asked for romantic sentimentalism, whose best representation lies in German music. But Richard Strauss still lived under the surface, although French and Russian influences seemed to have overthrown him, and the German lied could not be forgotten—in fact, British composers had themselves begun to write lieder. Yet the principal performers of German music were not allowed to appear, and managers had to content themselves with programmes which, from the political standpoint, were generally regarded as harmless.

Here I may be permitted to observe that in Germany, even during the hottest time of the war, political influences were far less apparent in the musical life of the nation than was the case in other countries, where everything that seemed deleterious was ordered to be sacrificed for the health of the State. If this seems to prove that Germans are lacking in national unity, on the other hand it emphasises the far greater importance of art in the life of the people, even at the cost of heavy political disability. Admittedly there were exceptions to the rule, some living composers—as, for instance, Saint-Saëns—being excluded from German programmes; and recently, since the Ruhr occupation, French compositions have been boycotted. The last-named proceeding is very much against the prevalent feeling in artistic quarters, which privately is violating what officially has been established as a principle. National feeling, at present strongly against the French, has brought about a fatal confusion in the minds of the people, and not the German people alone. But as far as French compositions are concerned, it must be said that the material damage done by the Germans to the French is much less than the ideal injury inflicted on Art. Though this is true, it cannot, however, be denied that neither the abuse of music for political propaganda, nor the boycotting of compositions from political motives, has for six or seven years been practised in Germany nearly so systematically as in other countries. In Germany it was acknowledged as a principle that art must not be mixed up with politics. In England I found no system at all, but it was clear that much had been done to protect English musical life against foreign invasion. Whether it was more for political than for artistic reasons, could not always be decided. I have often been told that the question was rather an economic one. Certainly among several points of view this also deserved consideration, though, on the whole, I felt that above all German musicians were to be kept away. Competition had been excluded during the war, why should it be permitted again to enter as it had done before? To be sure, some protest was made, in support of names such as, e.g., Richard Strauss, Fritz Kreisler, and Elena Gerhardt—but as I am to speak frankly, I must confess that this was an exception to a rule established not by written law but by covert agreement. German performers had generally greater difficulties to overcome than did Austrian, and though some first-rank conductors had been called to England, a free exchange between English and German artists had not yet been carried into practice. I fully understand the ambitions of English musicians to be appreciated both as creators and as performers, but, surely, not nationality (which, with artists, is mostly problematic), but quality, should decide the part to be played by them in musical life. Free artistic competition seems to me the first condition of musical progress. If, in the past, German composers and performers have been usurpers, they will perhaps be allowed to be so no more, not so much by force of statutory law or blockade, as by the power of British music itself, which is now strong enough, I hope, not to fear German competition.

I must apologise for having extended these general remarks to greater length than may seem necessary. It seemed, however, useful to point out the intimate contact into which art, economics, and politics have been brought by the events of the last decade.

In all countries music has been used and abused by the agent, who, as a driving and as a degenerating power, has led musical life where it now is. Creative forces ought to do their best to subvert commercial influences; but it is the artist's custom rather to be spoiled by musical industry than to fight it. Therein lies the tragedy of our time, and political excitement contributes still more to poison the founts of artistic feeling. It is with a view to purifying the musical atmosphere, and to bring about the free exchange between the art of the nations, that the International Society for Contemporary music was founded. The appreciation of British neutrality was shown by the choice of London as headquarters of the Society. Let us take it for granted that the number of true music-lovers is by far larger in Germany than in England, and that musical life there rests on a more solid basis of real feeling and knowledge. Musical London and Berlin, however, have something in common, i.e., the apparent dependence on an economic situation, which, for the musical life of both cities, has generated an ever-increasing concert crisis. The concerts held by the really musical section of the community are, of course, independent of the manager—as is the case of some chamber music concerts in Germany with frank modern tendencies. On the whole, concert-management is as powerful in Germany as it is in England, with the sole difference that the consequences of the German social revolution react against the agent's power more and more successfully.

Though the economic conditions of musical life in England are not very different from those existing in Germany, yet the larger number of German people for whom music is a necessity very clearly establishes the difference between the two countries. At an English orchestral concert, even of the highest rank, there will be a found a majority of persons who regard it as a kind of musical show or party. They have appeared there for social convenience. In England it takes a very long time for an artist to become fashionable—much more so than in Germany, where celebrity can be gained in a very few weeks. But the English public remains true to its dozen artists who must be heard. It would be false to say that the snob does not exist in the German concert world, but as a snob he is an exception to the majority of hearers, and is ashamed of confessing his own views on music, however different they may be from those of the connoisseurs. In Germany the snob is generally not allowed to exercise any influence on the style of the programmes. Programmes must have a certain style, even if the line of orchestral numbers is interrupted by solo items, as it is the case in the great Berlin Philharmonic concerts. In England variety rather than style is aimed at. A Verdi aria may be heard between Beethoven and Scriabin, and all of these will be received with equal applause. In Germany the degrees of applause are much more numerous than in England.

What specially struck me at English concerts was the startling contrast between the concert hall and the character of the music heard in it. I heard Kreisler play at the Albert Hall, where many details of his art must necessarily be lost, and I saw Goossens conduct his orchestra at Wigmore Hall—I say 'saw' him, because my ears were continually suffering from the shock of the orchestral sound against the wall of this small auditorium. It is to be regretted that such a venue should be selected for orchestral concerts.

Orchestral playing stands on a high level in England, where the wind players are even better than are to be found in most German orchestras. Of course, certain imperfections in the performance betray the lack of rehearsals. Similar shortcomings are to be noticed also in Germany. My general impression was that modern works belonging to the French or Russian school received better interpretations in England, whereas in Germany idyllic purity of style is made a feature of the classical works presented—except, be it added, in those cases where the conductor has shaped his own idea of Beethoven or Brahms to such an extent that the work in hand can hardly be recognised. Such is the natural result of constant repetition; the work is subordinated to the performer. Weingartner, however old-fashioned and boresome he may be, probably stands alone in not being affected by this disease of the conductor.

The treatment of music in the English press, to speak frankly, seems to me to reflect much more the political mood of the moment than is the case in Germany, where, apart from one nationalist paper, only artistic views are expressed. I am speaking generally. I have some excellent English colleagues who are impartial judges, and I am sure that the more important music becomes for the average Englishman the more freedom will be shown in musical criticism.

The question of British National Opera is a very urgent one. It would certainly be premature to speak of failure. Why should not opera sung in English be successful? Of course, economic necessity is active in the field of opera, and opens the door for the English singer to replace the Italian or German singer. The first condition of success, however, would be the right method of singing, freedom of style in acting, and good management and staging. It is clear that, for the present, from each of these standpoints many faults can be found with British national opera. Will the British singer be able to acquire that complete self-expression which may be called the first essential of the operatic singer? That depends upon the opportunities he has for becoming less reserved, and upon his latent imaginative powers. Some progress has, however, been made.

I witnessed the performance of Holst's Savitri and The Perfect Fool, and found them very well done, but I was greatly disappointed to hear a very elderly singer, although a very celebrated artist, play the part of Mimi, in La Bohème, which ought to be sung by a young woman. Of course she sang in masterly fashion, with the beaux restes of a fine voice, but it was against all theatrical tradition, and I venture to say that the reception she found was characteristic only of a British audience, every ready to subordinate artistic outlook to sentimental feeling. There are very good voices among the English singers, and they may be educated to the point of singing with style, provided able teachers are found for the task. I hope I may be allowed to confess that at the present, performances such as Valkyrie and Tristan seemed to me unsatisfactory from this aspect, and not to be compared with German performances, where also both conductor and stage manager evidently work in perfect accord.

Opera in English, is, on the whole, as practicable as opera in German, and if Gustav Holst fully deserves the laurels of an operatic composer, his performers are also worthy of praise. But an international opera season, however expensive it may be, has the great advantage of producing models and opening the road for national opera. The British, as a nation, are at the beginning of their operatic career, and therefore need models.

I was asked to set down my impressions, and I hope I have done so with due respect and sympathetic feeling for what has been musically realised in England. A country able to produce men like, e.g., Arnold Bax, Gustav Holst, Arthur Bliss, and Vaughan Williams, and possessing so high a standard of choral singing, has something important to say in the domain of an art that, at first sight, seems to hold eternal riddles. Although musical commercialism may do its best everywhere to undermine real productive forces, and to spoil artistic life by its antagonistic ideals, yet we know that what is strong will survive every menace and emerge the purer.

ETHEL SMYTH'S MASS IN D*

By SYDNEY GREW

Between 1889 and 1891, Ethel Smyth wrote her Mass in D. She returned from her studies in Germany in the first of the years named, and in the last showed the work to Hermann Levi. August Manns and George Henschel had produced orchestral works of hers soon after she arrived in England, and the composition of the Mass was partly the result of the publicity their performances had brought to the composer.

But this large work was not given until January 18, 1893. The performers then were the Royal Choral Society (Barnby conducting), and Miss Palliser, Madame Belle Cole, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Watkin Mills. It was not taken up by other societies, and the Royal Choral Society did not repeat it.

Eighteen years later (1911), at a concert given by the composer in London, a portion of the Mass was sung. On the 7th of the present month, the entire work is to be produced by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society under the Society's new conductor, Dr. Adrian C. Boulton.

Various causes operated to keep the Mass in total neglect for thirty-one years, though the causes are not excuses. The chief of these is, in a way, economic. The 1890's was a busy period. A number of good composers were at work—Parry, Stanford, Mackenzie, Cowen, and several others—each of whom seems to have produced a good-sized oratorio or similar work every year. These works received their first performance, and during the year or two following they were repeated. Then their immediate successors came along, asserting themselves to the disadvantage of their slightly elder relatives.

The world of English music in that decade could not support and nourish adequately all its native-born citizens. The composers were responsible for bigger families than were wanted.

We are, it seems, now on the threshold of what might almost be called a revival of pre-Elgarian choral and orchestral music. Students begin to see there is substance in Parry, and that Stanford has something to say. The Birmingham revival of Ethel Smyth's Mass is symptomatic.

This particular work, of course, is not exactly the same in its circumstances as the somewhat similar works of the other composers. It is apparently without brothers and sisters from the same pen; but this fact, while removing family competition, at the same time removed that publicity which a large family guarantees. Moreover, it is a Latin Mass, too big for the church, not (as was imagined in the 19th century) suitable for the Cathedral festivals, and difficult in performance. The Mass in B minor of Bach was only slowly making its way in those days, and it seems that this work by the Englishwoman was frankly overlooked.

The first appreciative word to apply to the Mass is that it is musicianly. The work comes from a well-trained and naturally musical mind; the composer, be it noted, being only about thirty-three years old. She thinks steadily and continuously; and the outcome of such thought is always art that has strength, impressiveness, and the qualities that are convincing, for the reason that thought of this kind is creative. There is therefore nothing hurried or indeterminate in the movements, but, on the contrary, that mighty leisure of classical music, which is as productive Nature.

The thought and its expression are not hindered by any weakness of technique; and the technique does not function in the abstract manner, with nothing to grind into shape. The contrapuntal writing is of high quality. Here and there the harmonies seem dated by their epoch, and one's prevision of some of the harmonic movement rather distracts attention; but as soon as the student has brought himself into the mood of the work, he sees that the composer handles her harmonies as well as she handles her counterpoint. Moreover—as is always the case with music of grand architectural stability, whether by Byrd, Bach, Beethoven, or Brahms—the harmonic element withdraws to a secondary place the moment the true character of the phrase-rhythm is apprehended; Elizabethan harmony, for example, appears restricted to a few conventional progressions; these, after a while, become irritating; yet as soon as we learn to read the music as Form they take on new character, proving to be the only harmony possible. Ethel Smyth's harmonies, again, have frequently the roughness we delight in; and even that old cadence of the 6—5—3 on the subdominant going to the tonic has a novel power. Some of the registering—the disposing of the masses of tone over the range of musical sound—is very striking. The writing for solo voices is perhaps less distinctive than that for chorus; but so much here depends on performance that a critical judgment on this matter needs to await actual hearing of the Mass.

The Crucifixus of the Creed is one of the clauses we turn to at once when examining a setting of the Mass. It is at this point that Ethel Smyth writes some of her finest music and expresses some of her profoundest thoughts. The pain of the fact itself is in the music, yet the section has all the restraint of true art. A powerful fortissimo climax is developed, and then the tone returns to pianissimo for the phrase 'passus et sepultus est':

Ex. 1. Cru - - ci - fix - us, pas - sus,

Adagio non troppo.

pas - - sus et se - pul - tus, et se - ppp pu - tus est.

ppp &c.

The sections of this work that strike most vividly on the imagination in silent reading are the Kyrie and the Agnus Dei. The Credo and Gloria are conceived in bold manner, splendid passages of choral treatment alternating with solo passages. The manner and mood of the composer's treatment of these troublesome numbers is the modern illustrative method: the music is by turns lyrical, ejaculatory, depictive, and dramatic; yet the whole seems bound into unity and consistency, and can certainly be made unified in performance. (By the word 'dramatic' it is not intended to imply that the composer 'stages' these numbers.) There is a pure blend of fancy and idealism in the treatment of the Cum sancto spiritu, where a four-note phrase is repeated more than thirty times. It is, indeed, not unlikely that these two long numbers will, in performance, prove to be an achievement as simple and cohesive as sincere.

All through the Mass it is made clear that the young composer had made music a sort of native language: she composes as easily as a good organist plays, and her declamation is excellent:

Ex. 2. Glo - ri - a in ex - cel - sis De - o.
Allegro vivace.

The Kyrie is bold, original, and dramatic in the sense that its idea is not an abstract thought but an impassioned prayer. It is built on a foundation as pure as the depths of the sky or the a cappella art of the 16th century:

Ex. 3. Ky - ri - e e - lei - son.
Adagio

p cres.

Ky - ri - e.

(The theme in the bass is a key-theme of the work.) But in the Christe eleison the movement develops into a series of climaxes of which the total effect probably touches sublimity, especially in the return to the Kyrie. This third section is curiously disturbed in the depths of its emotion; and the use of the flute in solo but enforces that disturbance.

Space does not permit further exposition of the contents of this work. The composer asks for the Credo to follow the Kyrie, and for the Gloria to come at the end, after the Agnus Dei. But since 1893 the Bach Mass has taught us that this great liturgical creation ends most fittingly with the last group of pieces in the Office; and it seems to the present student that no sequel could be finer in Dr. Smyth's work than the leap from her Kyrie into her Gloria. The choral opening of the Gloria is so strong rhythmically that the blow it strikes on our imaginations ought to vibrate all through the performance. This opening (see the second quotation above) is preceded by seven bars of orchestral music; the form is that of the four-bar phrase, and the passage quoted is truly mighty in respect of syncopated emphasis and declamation, the syncopations being not of the bar but of the phrase; thus if the quotation is reduced to 12-8 time, the music appears in this manner to the eye:

Music in the Foreign Press

GERMANY'S PRESENT MUSICAL SITUATION

In Le Ménestrel (January 4), Jean Chantavoine writes:

Nowadays, Germany is anxiously searching the ranks of her composers for new men of genius. Schönberg was immoderately extolled—perhaps with an intention of pitting his music against Debussy's. The anti-semites, however, protested, as they had done against the Mahler boom. Franck Schreker's success seems to have been a mere flash. Hindemith is creating a sensation somewhat after the fashion of Milhaud in France, and his music is in close relationship to Milhaud's; but this does not imply that he is a genius. Alien elements are making headway—e.g., with Busoni, Bartók, Hába, Krenek—and Hans Pfitzner has lately protested against their influence, describing it as nefarious. This 'Deutsch-National' attitude is characteristic. But it should be obvious that by now, although Germany stands foremost in the matters of musical education and organization, the superiority of her musical output is a thing of the past.

BEETHOVEN'S METHODS

In Die Musik (December), H. H. Wetzler examines the genesis of Beethoven's musical ideas, pointing out how often introductory or transitional passages contain the germ of the themes that follow. He considers in turn the first movement of the seventh Symphony, the Fugue in the Sonata, Op. 105, the last movement in the E flat Concerto, the Overture Weihe des Hauses, and the Trios, Op. 70, No. 2, and Op. 97. He publishes a hitherto unknown sketch of this last.

TONE-PAINTING IN BRAHMS'S MUSIC

In the same issue, Paul Mies adduces various examples of descriptive or representative music by Brahms—most of them simple and obvious. He remarks that their function is never purely episodic; these passages either originate in motives used before the occasion to resort to description or representation arose, or provide motives that are worked out after the occasion no longer exists.

HOW BACH DEALT WITH THE ANSWER

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (November), Max Zulauf examines Bach's methods of devising the answers of his fugue-themes. The conclusions of this valuable contribution are: The old rules are not such as always to apply logically in the major-minor system. But from the point of view of the old Church-modes, they made it possible for each voice to move freely within the limits of one mode. Bach is often under the influence of Church-modes; but his chief concern is always to give the answer as natural and fluent a form as possible. He applies the old rules when they prove helpful to that effect: otherwise he ignores them. The rules concerning the exposition are not so important as they are usually held to be. Bach teaches us that with regard to the structure of a fugue-exposition in a modern key, it is not the old rules, but the opportunities for cadences provided by the new system that should turn the scale. And the attempt to reduce these to a scheme, as effected by Riemann, originates in an utter misapprehension of Bach's spirit.

ON VARIOUS CONTEMPORARY COMPOSERS

In Der Auftakt (1923, No. 10), Dr. Pfohl devotes brief notices to three young composers from Hamburg: Siegfried Scheffler, Ernst Roters, and Robert Müller-Hartmann. Erwin Schulhoff writes on Felix Petyrek, whose music he praises for its unaffectedness and genuineness. Hans Schaub writes on Gerhard von Kuessler, composer and poet, praising his song-cycles, and mentioning his oratorios and his 'symphonic drama,' The Flagellants' Procession.

D'INDY ON MODERN FRENCH MUSIC

Les Tablettes de la Schola (November-December) publishes Vincent d'Indy's lecture on 'The Evolution of Modern French Music,' which was delivered in London, but, owing to lack of adequate announcement, seems to have escaped most people's notice.

D'Indy, after describing the progress of the French School from Franck to Ravel, speaks severely of the ignorance and presumption of 'a few young amateurs in whom the seed sown by Arnold Schönberg has germinated.' Their onslaughts upon the art of music, he continues, represent a new outburst of the war periodically waged between crude sensation and artistic expression. Artistic expression has never failed to emerge victorious, so there is no cause for anxiety.

AN UNFINISHED SYMPHONY BY MAHLER AND AN EARLY SYMPHONY BY DVORÁK

In the Musikblätter des Anbruch (December), Frau Mahler declares that the time has now come to publish the two completed movements of Mahler's tenth Symphony. This Symphony was to consist of five movements: (1) Adagio; (2) Scherzo; (3) Scherzo (bearing the epigraph 'Purgatorio'); (4) a movement in scherzo form; (5) Finale. Only Nos. 1 and 3 were actually completed.

The same issue contains an account (translated from the Listy Hudební Matice) of Prof. Feld's discovery of the manuscript of an early Symphony in C minor by Dvorák, which bears the title The Bells of Zlonitz. The work is in four movements, and the manuscript comprises two hundred and thirty-nine pages.

THE 'ZEITSCHRIFT FÜR MUSIK'

Readers will be pleased to hear that the Zeitschrift für Musik is to continue publication. It appears in a smaller size, handier and more attractive in aspect, and contains plenty of matter. In the November issue, Dr. Fritz Reuter writes on Richard Kaden (1856-1923), a little-known but active teacher and writer, whose contributions to problems of æsthetics and technique he praises highly. In the December issue, Dr. Georg Göhler protests against the treatment meted out to Schubert's operas in Fritz Busch's revisions. Dr. Alfred Heuss passes severe strictures on Stravinsky, describing him as 'the Russian tormentor.'

EXIT A RUSSIAN PERIODICAL

I regret to have to record that the Moscow monthly Towards New Shores, discontinued publication after its third issue.

COMPOSERS' ROYALTIES IN EGYPT

In L'Orient Musical (December 15) an article by I. Aboulafia states that although Egyptian law makes no special provisions for copyright of music, composers need have no fear as to their royalties. A recent lawsuit has shown that existing laws implicitly protect their copyright, without any special formality such as declaration or deposit of a copy being necessary. No unauthorized performance may take place, nor may royalties be withheld provided the mention 'All rights reserved' be made.

A STRAVINSKY NUMBER

The December issue of the Revue Musicale is a special Stravinsky number, far below the standard set by that excellent periodical's previous special numbers (on Debussy, Fauré, Wagner, &c.). It contains a forty-five-page essay by Boris de Schloezer, and briefer contributions by Cocteau, Coeuroy, Levinson, and Georges-Michel.

The Musician's Bookshelf

The Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism.
By M.-D. Calvocoressi.

[Oxford University Press, 6s. 6d.]

Mr. Calvocoressi courageously attacks a very difficult problem. If he does not solve it, if a good many questions are still left in the air, the cause lies in the fact that musical criticism contains too many factors of an unarguable kind. As the author says at the outset, 'we know less of music than of any other art.' He might have gone on to point out that the difficulty is doubled by the fact that not only do we know less; we feel more. Most of the conflicts between critic and critic, and practically all those between critics and public, result from this tug-of-war between strong feeling, liking, taste—call it what you will—and slender knowledge. For our knowledge remains slender, despite the stacks of text-books. You may call in these text-books as evidence that a piece of music is bad, and the piece confounds you and your witnesses by getting hold of you and showing convincingly that its faulty elements in combination have generated some essence of which the text-books have not treated. In fact, a work of art, as Mr. Calvocoressi says, is the product, not the sum of its parts, and the adage applies with special force to music. What can we know of an art in which the difference between success and failure so often lies in a factor that cannot be demonstrated?

Mr. Calvocoressi thinks that the critic's job is difficult, too, because 'although musical criticism is as ancient as all others, it lagged behind while others were progressing.' But surely it is a fairly new thing—a mere babe beside literary criticism, at all events. In England, for example, mountains of critical books on literature were in existence at a time when music had much ado to get itself printed, and public concerts were unknown. When musical criticism did get started it certainly lagged, but hardly through the fault of the critics. Copies of new works were less easily obtainable than to-day, and the opportunities for hearing adequate performances were less frequent. On the whole, I fancy that a random glance through such old journals as the Musical World will show a surprisingly acute summing up of virtues and defects of contemporary performers. Of reviewing of new works there seems to have been little, probably because there were few readers likely to be interested in a discussion that was bound to be largely technical, and which would often be unconvincing without the aid of music-type illustrations—costly and inconvenient even to-day, and doubly so a generation ago.

I am sorry to see Mr. Calvocoressi repeating (and half-supporting) a well-worn gibe, by speaking of musical criticism as a work 'which some people hold (not altogether without excuse) as the last resource of those who fail in other branches of music, writing, or reporting.' So far as the journalistic side of this remark is concerned, I believe the reverse to be the case. I would back any average writer on music to make a far better job of general reporting than is usually achieved by those responsible for the news side of our daily papers. The musical critic—or reporter, if you like, as he is bound to be in most cases—has often to make bricks with precious little straw. The marvel is that month after month and year after year he can go on serving up readable paragraphs based on such stale material as the run of recitals and concerts, with the same works and performers concerned. No wonder he is tempted to make the most of a contretemps of any kind! 'Performer breaks down'; 'Conductor stops choir and apologises for them'; 'Casals attacked by cramp,' and so forth. And he generally does so well with the mishap that we have no doubts as to his ability to acquit himself in first-rate style if he were transferred from the concert-room to the police-court—in a purely professional capacity, bien entendu. The sneer quoted above was probably first uttered by a composer or performer who couldn't take his unfavourable notice like a man; there are, and always will be, plenty of thin-skinned among the criticised, and its repetition should be left to them.

Mr. Calvocoressi makes it clear that technical knowledge will not carry a critic far. It 'may fail to improve a critic's capacity to disengage and interpret what is vital; but it will help him to classify his data and impressions, and to state things more clearly.' In other words, it will improve his efficiency as a reporter. Yet:

It does not matter two pins whether he who listens to music knows that a flute is a flute, a third a third, a Rondo a Rondo, and so on. But he must be able to derive distinct impressions, even if only unconsciously, from the tone of a flute and that of a trumpet, or the sound of a third and that of a seventh, the design of Rondo-form and that of the French Overture. He may be unable to give a name to anything he encounters at a concert or a music-shop, and yet be an excellent judge of music, provided his ear, memory, and imagination are keen enough.

Hence it comes about that one of the best books on musical appreciation is not labelled with that forbidding term, but is modestly called A Musical Pilgrim's Progress, and is written by one whose technical attainments were of the slenderest. Such an one is well on the way to becoming a good critic. He lacks only the wide knowledge of music, without which there can be no more than an elementary sense of values, and the terminology that will enable him to give reasons for the faith that is in him—both adjuncts that call for no more than time and industry.

It was perhaps inevitable that Mr. Calvocoressi should quote a batch of examples of critical obtuseness. Some of them are old friends, but as only two are from the pens of musicians whose opinion is worth having, the list really proves nothing. Does it matter now (even if it ever did matter) what such pedants as Fétis and d'Ortigue thought of Mozart and Wagner? It would not be difficult to find examples of contemporary praise no more worth having than their short-sighted blame. And the two considerable names—Corder and Boughton—are attached to pronouncements on Schönberg and Stravinsky that, sweeping though they may be, may yet justify themselves. Are there not plenty of 'unmeaning bunches of notes' in Schönberg? Is it a desperately rash step to describe a good deal of the later Stravinsky (e.g., the pieces for string quartet) as 'cretinous babble'?

A good point is made on page 120, where Mr. Calvocoressi says that the conscientious discussion of music which one dislikes calls for greater pains than any other critical task. Incidentally, he adds:

It may be pointed out that the importance, from the educational point of view, of a close study of bad music is overlooked by all writers on musical appreciation. One reason probably is that these writers feel that the question why music is bad cannot be disposed of in a few vague generalities such as are held to serve the purpose of explaining why music is good.

I am glad to see a strong case made out against unsigned criticism. As the author says, judgments may be the fruit of long experience and weeks of anxious thought, or they may be dashed off by an ignoramus:

... The result is all one: if you do not know who wrote, the value of the judgment, to you, is exactly nil.

I have been able to touch on only a tenth part of the points I had marked for discussion. Not often does one come across so 'meaty' a book. Mr. Calvocoressi shirks no issue, however tough. As a result his book is one that cannot be skimmed through. You must bend your mind to it or leave it alone. I hope the title will not lead to the mistaken view that it is for critics only. It is for all musicians who really want to clarify their minds on their art—an art which from its nature is especially liable to suffer from sloppy views and vague generalisation. Mr. Calvocoressi's book has many virtues; among them (I mention it for the encouragement of the hesitating reader) an unusual merit in that the farther it goes the more interesting it becomes.

H. G.

Musiques d'Aujourd'hui. By Emile Vuillermoz.

[Paris : Crès. 6 francs.]

M. Vuillermoz is not a very profound critic, but he is more readable than most. He is warm-hearted. A delicate trifle pleases him, and the least he can say of it is 'prodigious, incomparable.' Of Gabriel Fauré's song Reflets dans l'Eau, he declares: 'Never before did any musician by means at once so simple and refined obtain so striking an evocation without leaving the domain of pure music.' But though his language is strained, M. Vuillermoz can write very prettily. He is sincere and, on occasion, witty.

His Musics of To-day (the French, by the way, are lucky to possess that plural) are, as befits a good Frenchman of to-day, nearly all French musics. The exceptions are Stravinsky, Schönberg, and the Catalan composer, Mompou. Some of the post-bellum youngsters would say that M. Vuillermoz's 'to-day' was really the day before yesterday, for he is principally the spokesman of the period of Fauré, d'Indy, Debussy, Ravel, Dukas—the masters, as he calls them, of 'the old classic writing.'

His chapters have the peculiarity of being not general studies, but reviews of newly published works, and to this form of musical criticism, which is usually the most flat and arid, M. Vuillermoz manages (and it is a credit to his talents) to give readability and picturesqueness. In the first paper he discusses Fauré's Quintet in C, and we already have 'a work of incomparable nobility' and a 'prodigious Andante.' The Quintet

... sums up half-a-century of harmonic conquests. It is rich with all the sonorous treasures that have been heroically seized on in the teeth of routine, indolence, and bad taste. Each of these chords once, at its birth, stirred up endless strife and controversy. In these four movements there are more victorious annexations than in all the trophies that are nowadays flourished by certain musical students anxious to rig up a profitable revolution for their own benefit.

This last phrase points to some lack of sympathy with a younger party of Paris musicians, and as we go on we find that M. Vuillermoz is little enough impressed by the Satie-Cocteau group, with the exception of Honegger. Of old, he observes, æsthetic theories sprang from the consideration of masterpieces. Nowadays the latest musicians decline to leave the theorising to others. In fact they start with the exegesis before the work itself exists. One day when the absorbing cares of publicity will allow they may find time to compose something. What they have made certain of is that when the masterpieces come we shall all know exactly what we ought to admire in them. Then M. Vuillermoz sighs when he looks on the new musical generation and sees so many who have clearly followed the wrong calling— young musicians who were so certainly destined to make better solicitors or pastry-cooks.

On another page he suggests that the uncomfortable phase of to-day's music may be to the eventual gain of the art, however little fun the average music-lover derives from it. Of course we ought by now to know that we do not listen to music 'for fun':

... art is simply a series of fightings, aggressions, conquests, annexations, and violations of frontiers. Out of all these brutalities, the æstheticians will later on make a peaceable and reasoning beauty. But poor folk who find themselves too near a field of battle are always apt to have a rough time.

Apparently we Londoners are not alone in suffering from economic hindrances to our music:

The use of a chorus has become such a Sardanapalian luxury that no composer now dare introduce human voices into a score. To perform an oratorio, Mass, or Passion means a financial undertaking needing the help of a Mæcenas. Even the classic Wagnerian orchestra comes under the heading of articles of luxury liable to super-tax. A proper performance of the Finale of the Twilight of the Gods costs an extra fifteen hundred francs for the special bass notes.

Florent Schmitt's 147th Psalm remains an almost legendary work, to be seen in score but never heard—it needs a chorus, and 'the race of choral singers is not acclimatised in France.'

M. Vuillermoz has nothing to say about our music, except for a cut at Mr. Goossens's contribution to the Tombeau de Debussy, in which he detects Tristanisms, and so sneers at Mr. Goossens for 'wiping his eyes on a handkerchief bought long ago at Bayreuth.' We should deserve to be reproached by M. Vuillermoz if we represented him as reactionary. How little he is that will be seen by his agreeing that ... the contemporary ear, slowly educated and rendered subtle by finer and finer perceptions, can now enjoy the advantages of the persistence of auditory impressions, and so follow simultaneously three themes evolving on three distinct planes, without needing them to be pinned pitilessly down by the rivets of classic harmony and counterpoint.

Which at least may look well in print. M. Vuillermoz does not pursue the subject in a way to show us that it means anything.

He gives a chapter to Pierrot Lunaire, which attracted him:

Our harmonic, tonal, and contrapuntal systems do not go far towards explaining this composition, which flourishes with an astonishing liberty of bearing; which is supple; which is naked; which discovers the earthly Paradise, and seems not to suspect that ever before it were music and musicians.

Kœchlin, Aubert, Inghelbrecht, and Migot are some of the less-known French musicians to whom M. Vuillermoz gives papers. Towards the end of the book he writes neatly on French music-hall ditties, jazz music, and the ballet. C.

A History of Music. By Paul Landormy. Translated (with a Supplementary Chapter on American Music) by Frederick H. Martens.

[Charles Scribner's Sons, 10s. 6d.]

The faults in this book are of a type that will make the English reader fail to appreciate its excellences. On page 62, after discussing Purcell, M. Landormy asks:

Was not this greatest among English musicians the last as well? After him English musical history seems to have come to an end. . . . Yet why should musical inspiration not be born again, some day, in a nation which has already given so many proofs of the fine inborn artistic faculties it possesses, which, nevertheless . . .

And so on.

At the foot of this page the translator also asks a question:

In view of what Elgar, Arnold Bax, and Eugène Goossens—the last-named in particular—have given us, is this question well founded?

(Continued on page 149.)

PART-SONG FOR S.A.T.B.

Words by WILLIAM STRODE (1602—1645)

Music by PERCY E. FLETCHER

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO. SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

With grace and charm

SOPRANO

ALTO

TENOR

BASS

mp

I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone, When feather'd rain . . came soft-ly

I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone, . . When feather'd rain . . came soft-ly

I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone, When feather'd rain . . came soft-ly

I saw fair Chlo - ris walk a-lone, When feather'd rain came

With grace and charm.  $\text{♩} = \text{about } 72$

(For practice only)

mp

cres. dim.

down, As Jove de-scend-ing from his Tower To court her

cres. dim.

down, . . As Jove de-scend-ing from his Tower . . To court her

cres. dim.

down, As Jove . . de-scend-ing from his Tower To court her

cres. dim.

soft - ly down, As Jove de-scend - ing from his Tower . . To court her

cres. dim.

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited slightly slower

in a sil-ver show'r: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a-lone.

in a sil-ver show'r: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a-lone. . .

in a sil-ver show'r: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a-lone. . .

in a sil-ver show'r: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a-lone.

With more animation

The wan-ton snow flew . . to her breast, Like pret-ty birds

The wan-ton snow flew . . to her breast, Like pret-ty birds . .

The wan-ton snow flew . . to her breast, Like pret-ty birds

The wan-ton snow flew . . to her breast, Like pret-ty birds

With more animation

in-to their nest, But, o-ver-come with white-ness there, For grief it thaw'd in-to a in-to their nest, But, o-ver-come with white-ness there, Thaw'd,

in-to their nest, But, o-ver-come with white-ness there, Thaw'd,

in-to their nest, But, o-ver-come with white ness there, Thaw'd, slower and expressively

mp

tear: Thence fall - ing on her gar - ments' hem, To deck her,

mp

a tear: . . Thence fall - ing on her gar - ments' hem, To deck her,

mp

a tear: Thence fall - ing on her gar - ments' hem, To deck her,

mp

a tear: . . Thence fall - ing on her gar - ments' hem, To deck her,

mp

slower and expressively

mp lingering . . . . . Original time froze . . in - to a gem. . . . . I saw fair

mp

froze . . in - to a gem. . . . . I saw fair

mp

froze . . in - to a gem. . . . . I saw fair

mp

froze . . in - to a gem. . . . . I saw fair

mp

froze . . in - to a gem. . . . . I saw fair mp lingering . . . . . Original time

cres.

Chlo - ris walk a - lone, When feather'd rain . . came soft - ly down, As

cres.

Chlo - ris walk a - lone, . . When feather'd rain . . came soft - ly down, . . As

cres.

Chlo - ris walk a - lone, When feather'd rain . . came soft - ly down, As Jove.

cres.

Chlo - ris walk alone, When feather'd rain came soft - ly down, As

Jove de-scend-ing from his Tower To court her in a sil-ver

Jove de-scend-ing from his Tower . . To court her in a sil-ver

. . . de-scend-ing from his Tower To court her in a sil-ver

Jove de-scend - ing from his Tower . . To court her in a slowing down

shower, . . As Jove de - scend - ing from his Tower To court her in a sil-ver shower, . . As Jove de - scend - ing from his Tower To court her, shower, . . As Jove de - scend - ing from his Tower To court her, shower, . . As Jove de - scend - ing from his Tower To court her, slowing down

still slower

shower: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone.

to court her: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone.

to court her: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone.

to court her: I saw fair Chlo-ris walk a - lone.

still slower

(Continued from page 144.)

Catechism being the vogue, perhaps this reviewer may take a hand and ask Mr. Martens if he seriously regards the contribution of Goossens as more important than that of Elgar. And while he was trying to show M. Landormy that we have had a few composers since Purcell, he might have found a batch of names at least as important as those of the 'Paris Six,' to whom the author devotes a page and a-half.

Mr. Martens is somewhat to blame in this matter. In his copious bibliography he includes lists of magazine articles on living composers. He cites articles from the Musical Times on Prokofiev, but entirely overlooks the long series by Mr. Edwin Evans on 'British Composers'—a series which ran from February, 1919, to July, 1920, and probably did more for contemporary British music than any other literary effort during the past decade.

After such a floorer as that on page 62, we turn to the chapter headed 'Music of To-day' with no great hopes, and find meagre anticipations well justified. England is allowed twenty-one lines—which is almost as much as Stravinsky gets all to himself. We are told that this country possesses an 'important group of composers,' which is true enough, though the statement cannot be squared with that about English musical history having ended with Purcell. The author seems to have got his information rather too easily. He says:

The 'Musical League,' founded in 1909, includes the names of Edward Elgar, Percy Grainger, Cyril Scott, Joseph Holbrooke, Bell, Frank Bridge, Frederic Austin, Vaughn Williams [sic, here and in the Index], Arnold Bax, Lord Berners, Goossens, Arthur Bliss, and others.

Perhaps Holst is among the 'others,' or perhaps he didn't join the 'Musical League.' And there are a few other British composers of to-day who count for a good deal more than at least six of this lot. Of the above group only three are deemed worthy of special mention—Lord Berners, Eugène Goossens, and Arthur Bliss! M. Landormy is good enough to say that 'Day by day the English School assumes greater importance in the musical life of Europe.' If he really thinks that, he should have treated it seriously, instead of making up his catalogue from a fifteen-year-old list of members of an institution that appears to be dead. Contemporary French music gets so handsome a show on this side of the Channel, both in the Press and on the concert-platform, that it is high time for something like reciprocal treatment, if only on the score of good manners.

Perhaps the translator, rather than the author, is to blame for some of the numerous slips that leap to the eye. For example, on page 87 we are told that 'The Art of Fugue was written for the organ.' The fugue form is discussed misleadingly, the stretto being described as 'a return in compact form of all the elements composing the fugue above the organ point,' whereas a stretto has nothing to do with such important constituents as the counter-subject or the episodes, and is not necessarily above an organ point. On page 91 it is stated that 'Bach wrote four short Masses (Missæ brevis), and especially a Mass in B flat minor, which is one of his masterpieces.' There are a good many cases of gush and over-statement, e.g., 'Handel's art is always impeccable, its forms rigorously correct,' praise that can be given to no composer, least of all to one who was so often hasty in his methods. In view of this laudation, by the by, it is damping to find Handel spoken of later as 'well-nigh a classic.' Franck's Symphony is described as being in B minor. M. Lenormand considers that until he was fifty, Franck produced 'little else but promises,' and among these promises includes the Six Pieces for organ, which are certainly not inferior to the Three Chorals, and are by many considered to be better. In the list of Franck's works, the Prelude, Choral, and Fugue is given as 'Prelude,' 'Choral et Fugue,' and the Three Pieces for organ are described as being for 'pipe-organ'—a term rarely used anywhere but in America. The translation reads far too much like a translation to be a good one. E.g. (of Saint-Saëns), 'He lived like an amateur of life, voluptuously culling the occasional pleasures which our wretched existence offers.'

On the credit side has to be placed the fact that M. Landormy has not succumbed to the usual temptation of musical historians in the matter of proportion. He packs what he has to say about early music into small space, and on page 86 is well away with Bach. As a result, modern music—or rather the Continental (and especially the French) side of it—gets a far better show than it usually does in one-volume histories. The author does well, too, in treating the really important men at considerable length, instead of trying to squeeze in everybody. The latter plan usually results in a mere annotated catalogue. There is a full index and copious bibliographies, but M. Landormy must not complain if the reviewer's last word is like his first—a strong protest against the absurdly inadequate treatment of British music. With a new edition of Grove on the way, as well as the Dictionary promised for this spring by Messrs. Dent, a work of the kind coming from abroad must be a good deal better than Mr. Landormy's in order to ensure a place on our shelves.

H. G.

Hugo Riemann's Musik-Lexikon. Tenth edition.
Revised by Alfred Einstein.

[Berlin: Max Hesse.]

The new Riemann is a monstrous volume of fourteen hundred and sixty-nine pages, all tightly packed with countless facts which busy German bees have so wondrously collected. To English eyes, the use of ugly Gothic type seems a perversity. An artful use of various types can enormously help the usefulness of a reference book. Riemann knows nothing of this. Thus, all the Hoffmanns who have adorned music (eight of them, from 1582 onwards) are lumped together in one unbroken paragraph nearly three columns long.

Riemann is essentially a reference book, and as such is a prodigy of careful toil. Its scope of course is entirely different from Grove, and it could not be expected to be readable as Grove is. Its thoroughness is remarkable, and there are hardly any fish too small to come into its net. The range may be seen from the inclusion, among the notices of modern British composers, of such new-comers to fame as Philip Heseltine and Eric Fogg. English musicians may be said to be well treated, though when it comes to detail there is plenty of room for Riemann to be made more useful still.

For an example, let us take the article on Elgar. It is given about two-thirds of a column, or rather less than half the space allotted to Richard Strauss, which in a German dictionary seems pretty fair dealing. There is a summary biography and a list of Sir Edward's honours. Elgar's position is presented thus :

The very marked successes of his later years (in 1904 a three-days' Elgar Festival was held at Covent Garden Theatre) have given E. a foremost place among the newer English composers.

The greater part of the article is a list of Elgar's works, beginning 'His principal works are——.' The list is rather a jumble. It is not on the one hand a list of everything, nor, on the other, a discriminating selection of the masterpieces. Among the 'principal works' are mentioned the Te Deum and Benedictus, Op. 34, alongside the three great oratorios, and the Sevillana, Salut d'Amour, and the little Serenade for strings, among the Symphonies and Concertos. The compiler flags towards the end of the list, and dates, keys, and opus numbers are missing for the Pianoforte Quintet and Violoncello Concerto. We have, then, to ask, What good can such a list be? It is not ample enough for a specialist, and it is not discriminating enough to give to the seeker after knowledge a simple notion of Elgar's greatest achievements. The Holst article mentions a Cotswolds Symphony (do our Holstians know anything of this?), but not The Hymn of Jesus. And it is to be feared that intending visitors from Germany to the Three Choirs Festival next September will find themselves in the wrong county if they accept Riemann's view that the Festival is held at 'Gloicester, Hertford, Worcester.'

These are trifles, not meant to disparage a remarkable volume, but to indicate (in view of future editions) that Riemann is not perfect. Many musical people will find it uncommonly useful, not to say indispensable. So much about music and musicians has never before been contained in one volume. Riemann's successor, Alfred Einstein, acknowledges help from Mrs. Violet Balkwill and Mr. E. J. Dent. The indefatigable Riemann died in 1919, when the ninth edition of his Lexikon was in the press. C.

Modern British Composers: Seventeen Portraits. By Herbert Lambert, with a Foreword on Contemporary British Music by Eugène Goossens.

[F. & B. Goodwin, 15s.]

Favourite Musical Performers. By Sydnew Grew.

[T. N. Foulis, 6s.]

These fine portraits are worth a good deal more than the modest price of less than a shilling a-piece. The plates were prepared under Mr. Lambert's personal supervision, and printed in rotary photogravure by the Rembrandt Intaglio Company. The portraits are about 6-in. by 5½-in. on a page 12-in. by 9-in. Nothing better of their kind could be wished for. In addition to the book form they may be had in a portfolio, on detached mounts, and separately on mounts suitable for framing, at 2s. 6d. each. The seventeen subjects are Elgar, Smyth, Bantock, Vaughan Williams, Holst, Quilter, Boughton, Holbrooke, Frank Bridge, Cyril Scott, Ireland, Berners, Bax, Armstrong Gibbs, Bliss, Howells, and Goossens. The Foreword by the last-named is pleasantly generous and modest.

Mr. Grew's book gives us portraits of ten musicians—Wood, Beecham, Harrison, Mullings, Radford, John Coates, Terry (R. R.), T. W. North, Sammons, and Ronald. The term 'performers' is not unreasonably stretched to include conductors. Mr. Grew writes discursively, as is suitable in a book dealing with persons rather than with purely musical questions. In a work of this kind one thing brings up another, and as a result Mr. Grew finds or makes an opening for a lot of interesting and useful comments on a variety of topics. The volume is extremely well produced. X.

There is no need to do more than mention the fact that a second edition of Ethel Smyth's vivid autobiographical works—Impressions that Remained (two vols.) and Streaks of Life has just been issued (Longmans, 6s. each vol.).

The excellent Miniature Essays issued by Messrs. Chester have just been added to, the subjects being John Ireland, Casella, and Poulenc (6d. each).

New Music

PIANOFORTE MUSIC

Of a batch of new pianoforte works received from Messrs. Durand, nothing is more French than Blair Fairchild's En Voyage. Mr. Fairchild is an American who has not lived and studied in Paris for nothing. En Voyage consists of eight pieces, some of them descriptive of various ways of getting about—by train, boat, on horseback—together with others entitled Près d'un lac le Wisconsin, Paysage d'été au Canada, Soir d'été aux environs de Chicago, and Dans les bois à Pointe-au-Pic. Mr. Fairchild writes with vigour and brilliance, and shows fine command of keyboard idiom—so much so that only first-rate players will be able to tackle the work. Rhené-Baton's Dans à sept temps sticks to seven-four time and works an angular little theme very hard. But we get to the end convinced that seven-four can be as monotonous as any more usual measure when there is little of melodic interest to save the situation. The piece is on the difficult side.

Difficult, too, are Marcel Labey's Prelude and Scherzo. I fancy that the Prelude demands overmuch of the pianoforte as a melodic instrument, with a slow melody rather high on the keyboard over a widespread arpeggio accompaniment that will not always admit of the use of the sustaining pedal. It is surprising how many composers appear to forget the limitations of the pianoforte—a shortness of memory equalled only by that of the violin composers who seem to prefer ineffective chords and part-playing to a good melody. Alfred Bachelet's Barcarolle Nocturne and Petite Histoire are of moderate difficulty and comparatively old-fashioned in style, with hints of the idiom of such composers as Chopin and Henselt.

A set of Sonnets by H. V. Jervis-Read, published separately (Murdoch), show genuine fancy. They are fairly difficult, and call for a good deal of taste in performance. There are seven of them, and they vary in length, some being quite short, e.g., No. 5 is only about thirty bars long. It happens to be one of the best, too, a delicious morsel that might have been written by the earlier Scriabin. John David Davis's Prælude is a capital piece for concert use—not strikingly original in its material, but so well laid out that a good player could make a hit with it (Murdoch). Of a Moto perpetuo little is demanded beyond perpetual motion. J. Stuart Archer's example breaks away from custom, by contradicting the perpetuo with a slower middle section of different character. A pleasant piece that will give little trouble to a nimble set of fingers (Paxton). Edric Cundell's Valse Fantastique is an effective concert study with plenty of spicy harmony. It is dedicated to Lydia Lopokova, and would lend itself well to ballet purposes. I prefer Mr. Cundell's composing to his arranging. His version of the Londonderry Air is far from happy. A stodgy effect results from too many chords being used (instead of some of the melody notes being treated as passing-notes), and some of the chords are weak and some are clumsy. Both these pieces are from Paxton's.

At what stage in a composer's career is he justified in dropping prefixes and appearing on the title-page with the bare name? Hitherto the distinction has been regarded as one to be conferred by posterity. But the lady who composes under the name Poldowski (her plain English name being, presumably, a hindrance) makes no bones about describing herself as such, tout court. Her Caledonian Market (Chester) owes a good deal to some familiar models, not only in the subjects chosen—Street hawkers, Child talking to the cat, Mouth organs, Humming tops, The bouncing ball, &c.—but also in the methods. You will find some of the imitations successful—if you know the title of the piece. Of musical beauty there is not a scrap. There are some directions which are intended to be funny, but are merely silly—e.g., in the Bloomsbury Waltz, 'mincingly,' 'wooden,' 'genteel.' But satire is not easily expressed in music, and the Waltz is not likely to interest those who have not the music before them. In Picture of Clowns the player is bidden to be 'shrill,' 'violent,' and to play 'with affectation,' 'as though laughing,' 'with imbecile regularity,' and at one point the effect is to be 'like exaggerated groans.' Such aids to the appreciation of the composer's intentions are seen only by the player, and nobody else is likely to grasp the point of most of the passages so labelled. There are some ingenious effects, of course, but a little of this sort of thing goes a long way. However, there are players and hearers who like a composer to have his tongue in his cheek all the time, and I suppose the limited demand for elaborate leg-pulling has to be met. But most of us will be glad to see this clever composer once more take to writing music. It should be added that the pieces are difficult.

Francesco Santoliquido's Ex humo ad sidera has a serious programme, as its title suggests. The struggle of humanity from barbarism to the ideal is depicted with vividness, though we feel at times that more is demanded from the pianoforte than that useful but after all rather limited instrument can supply. The piece ought to be scored for a big orchestra. Still, as it stands a good player could make a highly exciting thing of it. Perhaps the proportions of the piece would have been better had the final section been a little longer. Having struggled out of the abyss, we should have been allowed a little longer on the mountain top. The programme is set forth in Italian; a French or English version would have been a convenience. The work is not desperately difficult, given a player on familiar terms with the fashionable dissonances (Chester).

Air à danser, by C. Chaminade, contains far too many full closes, and shows little of the grace and spontaneity that we associate with the composer's name (Enoch).

An album of three Twilight Pieces, by William Baines, serves to remind us of the loss we sustained in the early death of this gifted boy. These pieces are short, moderately difficult, and show his instinctive knowledge of pianoforte effect. I like especially the third, a significant kind of ostinato (Elkin).

Percival Garratt's Two Epigrams (Curwen) are curious and a bit on the gruesome side, No. 2 especially—a kind of muffled ghostly whisper for the most part. Both show the terseness of the epigram without the clearness.

Felix White's Bumpkin's Dance is a capital piece, attractive in melody, rhythm, and harmony. Perhaps the bumpkin becomes a trifle over-civilized as the dance goes on, but that is a detail that will worry nobody. The work is to be had in an orchestral version also; in any form it is a welcome new recruit to the stock of really good light music.

The same composer's A Viennese Echo is a piece of delicate fancy—a Viennese waltz in a wistful retrospect. Mr. White ought to score this for small orchestra. Its delicate detail of colour and decoration seem to call for muted strings and sotto voce wood-wind. These two pieces are among the best moderately difficult pianoforte music published for some time. Both are published by Curwen.

H. G.

CHAMBER MUSIC

E. J. Moeran's Sonata for violin and pianoforte (Chester) is, in some ways, if not a good, a typical example of modern music. There was a time—not long ago—when we felt a mad desire to break away from the tyranny of the common chord. At present we feel more like revolting against the tyranny of dissonance. Once we questioned the right of theorists to bar the path of progress with set rules and untenable claims. Now the pioneers have set up claims of no-rule, which are at least not less absurd—for while, before, the theorist could point for confirmation to the past and its masters, the modern can only hope to obtain approval from a future which has still to come. The morrow is in the lap of the gods. To anticipate the future may be the duty of the statesman. It never can be the duty of the artist who, if sincere, is concerned with his own immediate present, his own feelings and impressions. It may be that a public that is yet to be will delight in the feeling of hopeless restlessness which so much modern music portrays; on the other hand, it is equally possible to imagine the audience of the future turning on the present futurists with 'You all like sheep have gone astray.' Must we really have ninths and ninths all the way, as before we had 3-5's and 4-6's? Must really the common chord be reserved for special occasions, as once they reserved the diminished seventh? Doubtless great men can say great things without using either the one or the other, but it is also certain that a more conciliatory attitude would be becoming in composers who have some way to go before being counted 'scratch.' In the Sonata under review, for instance, certain qualities of the composer would be far more easily appreciated if they were set in a less ambitious harmonic scheme. None objects to the use of a dissonant chord. But dissonance, like consonance, should be used in its proper place. There is nothing to be gained by employing it in season and out of season; time comes for all things—for consecutive ninths as for the humble chord of C major. The composer uses consecutive fifths very effectively in the last movement. But Gustav Holst used them in a similar way in The Planets, and still more effectively. B. V.

VIOLIN MUSIC

From Messrs. Chester come also two pieces for violin and pianoforte, by Poldowski. The first is a Tango, the second a Berceuse de l'Enfant Mourant—both are exceedingly and unnecessarily difficult. 'D'une façon canaille' may be a novel direction to the player; it is hardly illuminating. A passage like this:

is simply meaningless, for you cannot have vibrato and portamento in one—presuming the wavy line to indicate portamento. Vibrato in a quick descent from a high note to a low gives a glissando effect. If this is what the composer requires, then she should have written Glissando instead of Con vibrato. But perhaps, since the Berceuse has all the air of having been written to provide a swift, if not a sweet, ending for the sufferings of the 'enfant,' these technical details are of little importance. B. V.

SONGS

Arnold Bax's When I was one and twenty is a setting of the well-known lines of A. E. Housman—lines so full of significance that one would think music could add nothing to them. But this music does. Well sung and played the result is almost painfully poignant. The constituents are not elaborate—a folk-song-like melody, and a pianoforte part that gradually grows in quiet intensity, with not a superfluous note—which is saying much where Bax is concerned. The compass is for medium voice. A couple of bad misprints on page 5 should be put right: in line 2, bar 2, the minim B in the left hand should be natural, not flat, and the C that is struck with it needs a sharp. On the last page, line 3, bar 3, surely there should be a natural before the semibreve F in the bass as well as before the quaver. This appealing song has in its favour the fact that it is not unduly difficult for either singer or player; it calls, however, for musicianship, and, above all, temperament (Enoch).

The folk-song style is present also in Roger Quilter's The Fuchsia Tree, a setting of an old Manx ballad. It is short—a couple of verses—and typical of the composer (Winthrop Rogers). Elvira Gambogi shows no marked originality in melody or harmony, but she writes attractively. Of the two short songs published together—Dew and The Little Rain—the second is the better. The words are from old Japanese and Chinese sources. The Dream (also from the Japanese) hangs a bit at its opening. In The Letter (words by Tennyson) the thematic material is very ordinary, but the situation is perhaps saved by the animation (Elkin).

The folk-song idiom is present in almost all the songs received for review this month. Here, for example, is a set of five songs by Peter Warlock, published together under the general and pretty title of Lillygay (Chester). Most of the vocal part might have been drawn straight from folk-song. It is a pity the accompaniment occasionally owes something to quite another quarter—is it wild to suggest Schönberg? Even if one likes the harmony in itself, it is difficult to avoid a feeling of a misfit, e.g., some bars in The Distracted Maid—a delightful song, despite its jagged moments. And at the close of Burd Ellen and Young Tamlane we have a simple vocal part, plainly in A minor, fighting hard against some terrifying structures of dissonant notes that cannot be described briefly, and that I have no space to quote. The pick, I think, is Rantum Tantum, a rousing example of Warlock at his best. The whole set is full of interest and enjoyment for those who can overcome the rather formidable difficulties. A high voice is necessary.

Michael Mullinar's Cotswold Love is an example of the diatonic way of treating a quasi-folk-song melody. The interest is well-maintained by a well-written, animated pianoforte part, the result being a capital song. The words are by John Drinkwater (Elkin).

Cyril Scott's In the Silver Moonbeams combines the diatonic and chromatic methods. The tune is an old French air, and on the whole Mr. Scott treats it simply and delightfully. I part company with him at the end, when he parts company with the tune, tonality, and style of the rest of the song, and falls back on a string of slithering consecutive ninths of the kind we know but too well. The words are elaborated by Mr. Scott from an old French song (Elkin).

From Rushworth & Dreaper, Liverpool, comes T. Hopkin Evans's Ingeborg, for contralto or mezzo-soprano. It is an exacting song in many ways, calling for a big voice and compass, as well as for a lot of dramatic power. The title-page tells us that it is to be the contralto test-piece for the next National Eisteddfod. The text is in Welsh and English, the latter being written by Mr. Evans. His verse is not so good as his music. This song—really a dramatic scena—should be very effective, especially in the orchestral version.

Song Fancies is a set of four songs by Landon Ronald, of which it is sufficient to say that they are characteristic. Sir Landon does not share the fashionable objection to emotion in music. Here, as usual, he serves it up liberally, with his customary knack of setting forth somewhat superficial material to the best possible advantage. The album is issued in three forms—for low, medium, and high voice (Enoch).

After these warm, unreticent songs, Eugène Bonner's Flutes are bleak indeed. The title covers an album of four, in French—humorous in the new, blandly simple way of the Paris 'Six.' As a sample, the close of Chameaux may be quoted:

The same composer's Two Songs from the Chinese are less meagre. The first, Satire on paying calls in August, is not unfunny. The querulous, matter-of-fact text, sung with a straight face, would raise a laugh, at all events on a first hearing. But such Satie-like japes easily become tiresome. These songs are published by Chester.

Rhené-Baton's Au coin de l'âtre, on the other hand, are four delightful songs, finished and expressive, and not over-difficult. They call for a medium-to-high voice (Durand). H. G.

MINIATURE SCORES

A remarkably fine set of miniature scores is being issued by the Wiener Philharmonischer Verlag—the Beethoven Symphonies, two of Haydn's (the London and Surprise), Mozart's G major and Jupiter, and several overtures and works by Weber, Schubert, Schumann, Wagner, &c. Two particularly good examples are the Choral Symphony and Elijah. Both have the text in German and English, the print is clear and bold, and the paper and binding stout. The series is notable, too, in that each number contains a portrait of the composer, a brief preface in English, French, and German, and a synopsis of form.

From Durand comes a miniature score of Louis Aubert's Habanera. All the above are to be had of Novello.

Inquiries are often made for a form of Passion-tide musical service suitable for churches where the choral resources are of the most modest description. The right thing has just been issued by the S.P.C.K.—A People's Passion Music, arranged by Eleanor C. Gregory. It consists of readings from the Gospels, interspersed with hymns and other devotions to be used by the congregation. The Passion Tones are included for optional use, effectively harmonized by Professor Buck. The work is published in two forms—words only, and abridged edition with music, the latter containing only so much of the text as is necessary to enable the choir to follow the service. Simple as this Passion is—being in fact a return to the earliest type—the musical material is so well chosen and arranged that it can hardly fail to be helpful and impressive. C. W.

Gramophone Notes

By 'DISCUS'

H.M.V.

Two late for notice in the January number came a fine lot of new records of Christmas music. The English Singers were recorded on five 10-in. d.s., singing motets and carols by Byrd, Walford Davies, Pearsall, Praetorius, Vaughan Williams (the ever-welcome Wassail Song) and Boughton. The last-named was represented by five numbers from

Bethlehem—arrangements of familiar tunes. The recording is first-rate, and the performance excellent in every way, save for a slight feeling of hustle, especially in the Boughton numbers. The result is that such decorative treatment as that of Adeste fideles sound rather trivial—which, in fact, it is. Boughton here adopts the idiom of an all too efficient student writing florid counterpoint in a hurry.

The special problems of choral recording are being overcome, judging from the success of three 12-in. d.s. of choruses from The Messiah, performed by an admirable choir and the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by Sir Landon Ronald. The balance is first rate—in fact, it seems very likely that these records give us an effect pretty much like that of Handel's day, when the choir and orchestra were about equal. Here the choir is evidently small, but picked, so the result is never heavy, and the orchestral part can be heard clearly throughout. There should be a warm welcome for these records of evergreen music. The choruses recorded are 'For unto us,' and 'Glory to God'; 'His yoke is easy,' and 'Surely He hath borne'; 'All we like sheep,' and 'Lift up your heads.' I was sorry 'And the glory' was not among them, but no doubt we shall in due season have the whole of the work.

Solo records from Handel issued at Christmas-tide are of Tudor Davies in 'Every valley' and 'Comfort ye' (too strenuous in style for this music, I feel); Edna Thornton in 'O thou that tellest,' and 'Return, O God of Hosts'; and Robert Radford in 'For behold,' and 'The people that walked.'

Orchestral records are well up to the mark. Elgar's In the South Overture is on two 12-in. d.s., played by the Albert Hall Orchestra, conducted by the composer—a brilliant work well reproduced. Excellent, too, are a couple of 11-in. d.s. of extracts from Delius's Hassan music, played by His Majesty's Theatre orchestra, with Percy E. Fletcher conducting.

A fine band record is that of the Coldstream Guards (conductor, Lieut. R. G. Evans) in a transcription of Liszt's Les Preludes. The wood-wind playing is delightful (12-in. d.s.).

Many gramophonists have been waiting for some Bach played by Harold Samuel. Here is a first instalment—two 12-in. d.s. of the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue, with the Bourrées from the French Suite in A to fill up the fourth side (the Fantasia has a couple of sides to itself). These are among the most notable pianoforte records so far issued. Gramophonists who don't know these works will find the second of the two records the more easily understood and enjoyed. The Fugue is clearness itself, and the Bourrées are a joy.

It is a drop from these records to a 10-in. d.s. of Una Bourne in Palmgren's Evening Whispers, and a transcription of a familiar Mozart Minuet, but the playing is first-rate in its daintiness, and again the tone is good.

This month's vocal solo records are not on the same level as the instrumental. The outstanding one is a 10-in. d.s. of Elizabethan songs by Campion, Dowland, and Bartlet, arranged by Frederick K-el, and sung by Sarah Fischer, with string quartet accompaniment. Miss Fischer's tone is hard at times, but her singing is full of life and rhythm, and the string accompaniments are so effective that I wish the recording companies would more frequently use string arrangements of the pianoforte parts.

George Baker sings Quilter's Three Shakespeare Songs (10-in. d.-s.). The label describes these songs as 'arranged' by Quilter—a 'curious slip in the case of works so well-known and so very Quilterish. Mr. Baker's singing strikes one as somewhat mincing and affected in O mistress mine and Blow, blow; he is far better in Come away, Death.

Why does Robert Radford trouble about such feeble things as Franz Abt's Still is the night? However, we can forgive him for the sake of the two Martin Shaw songs on the other side of this 12-in. d.-s.—Full Fathom Five and Old Clothes and Fine Clothes, the latter being especially good. Remaining vocal records are of Leila Megane (Land of Hope and Glory—with Coldstream Guards Band—and Goring Thomas's A Summer Night); Ben Davies (Schumann's A Spring Night and Purcell's I attempt from love's sickness to fly—of the singing one can only say that it is a pity Mr. Davies did not enter the recording room twenty years earlier); and Sydney Coltham (an air from Debussy's L'Enfant Prodigue and Löhrl's Margarita).

ÆOLIAN VOCALION

The pick of this month's output—a smaller one than usual—is a 12-in. d.-s. of the London String Quartet's performance of the first two movements of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat, Op. 18, No. 6.

The only orchestral record is a 10-in. d.-s. of the Æolian Orchestra playing four little pieces on Russian folk-songs by Liadov, conducted by Cuthbert Whitmore. They are of no great account, but a special word is due to the highly-enjoyable Rondo, in which the piccolo player has the time of his life.

Liadov is represented again on a 10-in. pianoforte record—Sapelinikov playing his piquant Musical Box and Tchaikovsky's well-known Humoresque in G, from Op. 10—a good reproduction of some capital playing.

The vocal records give us some fine voices wasted on poorish material: Ethel Hook in Hullah's Three Fishers and Roeckel's Angus Macdonald; John Charles Thomas in Frank Tours's Trees and Fleeson von Tilzer's If you only knew; Eric Marshall in Löhrl's Roadways and d'Hardelot's Never mind; and Malcolm McEachern in Kennedy Russell's Young Tom o' Devon and Coningsby Clarke's The Golden City of St. Mary.

Two operatic records are of Giacomo Rimini in an air from L'Africaine, and Armand Tokatyan in 'Cielo e mar?' from La Gioconda, and a cheerful Neapolitan air.

COLUMBIA

It was a happy idea of Sir Henry Wood's to give gramophonists an opportunity of hearing the wind and string departments of his Orchestra separately. Here is a 12-in. d.-s. of Beethoven's Rondino for wind instruments, and Bach's Gavotte in E for strings. As a piece of music, much cannot be said for the Rondino; but it makes an interesting and instructive gramophone item, because, the reproduction being excellent, it gives us an unusually good chance of studying the tone-colour of woodwind and horns in combination.

A fascinating record is that of Ravel's Septet (harp, flute, clarinet, and strings), played by some of our finest soloists. But I wish the Company had not cut it into four short sections (two 12-in. d.-s.). It looks as if it could have been got on two sides of a 12-in. disc. The interest of novelty attaches to some records of the band of the R. Marina Italiana. A 12-in. d.-s. of the Overture to Egmont shows them to be a good deal less brilliant than the Service bands of this country and France. The work suffers, too, in the transcription. A 10-in. d.-s. shows us the band playing the Prelude to Act 4 of Traviata, and on the other side a dreadfully inane affair which the label assures us is a Nibelungen March by Wagner. Of course, there are Wagners and Wagners, and this may be any one of the clan. But if the March is by the one and only Richard, I will eat the disc on which it is recorded, labels and all.

Two vocal records call for a note. Norman Allin sings Peel's The Lute Player and Korbay's Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane (10-in. d.-s.). I have heard this magnificent voice to better advantage.

A 12-in. d.-s. gives us Ulysses Lappas singing a couple of extracts from Andrea Chenier. I can imagine no worse object-lesson for a young singer than this record. Lappas, as his voice reaches me via the gramophone, is nearly always slightly flat, almost invariably wobbly, and the rest of the time either raucous or snivelling. Listening to records of operatic tenors of the Mediterranean breed, I have often wondered what depths of blatant vulgarity they could plumb. I think Lappas has managed to reach bottom.

Church and Organ Music

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

DIPLOMA DISTRIBUTION

On Saturday, January 19, Dr. Alan Gray, LL.M., President of the College, presented the diplomas to the recently elected Fellows and Associates. Among those present were Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., Vice-President, and the following members of the Council: Dr. P. C. Buck, Mr. E. T. Cook, Mus.B., Dr. H. E. Darke, Dr. H. G. Ley, Dr. C. Macpherson, Dr. G. R. Marchant, Dr. H. W. Richards, Mr. E. S. Roper, Mus.B., Dr. F. G. Shinn, Dr. E. T. Sweeting, and Dr. H. A. Harding, hon. secretary.

The PRESIDENT began the proceedings by saying—I am quite sure we should all like to express our sincere regret that Sir Walter Parratt has been seriously ill, and I feel that we should send a message to him expressing our sympathy and our great hope that he will soon be better again. I therefore propose the following Resolution:

'It is the unanimous wish of the members gathered together to-day at the public distribution of the R.C.O. diplomas that much sympathy be sent to you in your illness, and deep gratitude to you for all you have done for organists and the organ world. It is their earnest wish that your health may be speedily restored, and that they may have the great gratification of welcoming you back again in the near future.'

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE seconded the motion.

The Resolution was carried with acclamation, and on the suggestion of Dr. Harding, it was agreed to send the message to Sir Walter in the form of a telegram.

Dr. HARDING (Hon. Secretary): For the Fellowship Examination there were seventy-seven candidates, of whom fifteen passed; for the Associate Examination there were a hundred and sixty-four candidates, of whom fifteen passed. The Fellowship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to W. J. F. Avery, and the Fellowship Turpin Prize will be announced later.

The Associateship Lafontaine Prize was awarded to L. Forrester, and the Associateship Sawyer Prize to E. J. Down.

There were altogether two hundred and forty-one candidates, and only thirty passed! Two candidates who had obtained pass-marks in organ-playing and paper-work, failed because their Essays were so thoroughly inadequate.

We wish it generally known that the Essay is a failing subject, and that it is possible to pass in everything else and yet to fail on the whole through inability to write an Essay of two hundred words.

I have two things to mention as Secretary. First of all, I want to tell you that the syllabus for the Choir-training Examination is now available. I do commend these examinations to you. We hear from clergymen nowadays that they do not attach so much importance to the playing; they want choir-trainers. It is in your power to show the ecclesiastical authorities that you are good choir-trainers. Then I would like to point out that all the new regulations for F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. come into force next July. Do not be afraid of them. To the musician, I believe they are easier than they were before. In any case, I assure you the examination will not cramp the genius of any budding composer. We are on the eve of publishing Specimen Tests of all the tests we are going to give next July. They are sixpence per set, post free, from the College. They show you exactly the character and difficulty of the new tests.

The Diplomas were then presented by the President to the successful candidates:

PASSED FELLOWSHIP, JANUARY, 1924

Allen, C. V., Winchester	Masser, W. E., Reading
Avery, W. J. F., London	Miles, T. P., Eastbourne
(Lafontaine Prize)	Newman, S. T. M., Bristol
Franklin, O. Le P., London	Pritchard, T. C. L., Glasgow
Jarvis, C. E., Port Sunlight	Rablen, A. W., London
Jones, W. Probert., Reading	Sykes, H. H., Huddersfield
Lawrence, A. H., Normanton	Thorne, G. H., Felstead
Marsden, H., Oughtibridge	Veitch, W., Enfield

PASSED ASSOCIATESHIP, JANUARY, 1924

Balkham, A. E., St. Leonards-on-Sea	Hannah, S. H., Newcastle- on-Tyne
Boraston, F. R., Formby	Jolly, W., Peterborough
Cartner, H., Carlisle	Minay, W. O., Manchester
Crick, G. F., Bury, Lancs.	Phillips, Walter, Wrexham
Downs, E. J., Southport (Sawyer Prize)	Richards, J. H., London
Evans, D. M., Tonbridge	Salmons, C. L., Bedford
Forrester, L., Stoke-on- Trent	Smith, H. F., West Hartlepool
(Lafontaine Prize)	Strange, H. A. W., Reading

ALEX. W. SHINDLER, Registrar.

Appended are the Reports of the Examining Boards:

FELLOWSHIP ORGAN-WORK

Of the pieces, the Bach number (Chorale Prelude on Lord Jesus Christ, unto us turn) was phrased better, and the pace was more even than usual. Bairstow's Toccata-Prelude on Pange Lingua proved to be a searching test, the meaning of which many failed to grasp; others ignored the staccato, or seemed quite unable to cope even tentatively with the printed registration marks. In spite of this, however, the actual ability to play the right notes continues to show a higher standard of attainment. This ability proved to be the undoing of certain candidates, who entirely failed to perceive the innate gracefulness of the Mozart piece (Andante from fifth Quintet, arranged by Best), which was consequently played in the majority of cases far too heavily.

On the purely mechanical side, there were several instances where candidates did not notice for pages on end that they were playing on the Great organ without the Pedal coupler. As the R.C.O. organ has three ways of giving this coupler to the performer, it is advisable to know for certain beforehand how to employ at least one of them at a moment's notice.

Of the practical tests, that for score-reading was too often played in a way that would hinder rather than help a choir, and mistaken clefs were common. The unfigured bass seemed to be thought out from the wrong way up. Very few apparently seemed to make the effort of imagining a melody to which the printed notes would supply a suitable bass, nor did many resort to the obvious and helpful expedient of contrary motion when in difficulties.

Too many candidates merely played chords with each note of the bass, and there were few instances where a practical knowledge of passing-notes was apparent.

The sight-reading was disappointing, the faults in time being more numerous than those of wrong notes.

The extemporizing showed signs of improvement, though the following faults were still much in evidence:

- (1.) Inability to play the subject in correct time.
- (2.) A tendency to make the second phrase an exact copy of the first both in melodic and rhythmic outline.
- (3.) Failure to continue in any recognisable time.
- (4.) Introducing middle sections quite out of keeping with the opening.
- (5.) Pumping the Swell pedal, or playing the subject on a solo stop in order to cover up the lack of inventive ability.

Taking it all round, the melody was not well done. As in the bass test, few showed more than a nodding acquaintance with accented or unaccented passing-notes, a fact that accounted for failures far more than the mistakes attributable to the state of candidates' nerves supposed to be inevitable in the examination room.

CHARLES MACPHERSON (Chairman).
A. HERBERT BREWER.
WALTER G. ALCOCK.

FELLOWSHIP PAPER-WORK

Melody.—This was on the whole creditably done. But in many cases there was a tendency to over-elaboration and over-harmonization. There were not many attempts to use definite figuration, the parts moving in a somewhat aimless fashion.

Unfigured Bass.—Generally satisfactory, and better than the working of the melody, showing more appreciation of what is meant by 'style.'

Counterpoint.—The strict counterpoint was generally good, the free counterpoint poor. Candidates are in too much of a hurry to get their parts in. The result is, the entries are often pointless and clumsy.

Fugue.—There is the same old difficulty in making the free parts interesting and relevant. If candidates would try to state one or two definite ideas on figures in the counter-subject, they would then have material capable of development in the free parts, beside that afforded by the subject.

Orchestration.—Generally passable, but of only average standard.

Ear-Test.—Very good in most cases.

Questions.—Fair. There were some curious ideas as to the meaning of the words 'right' and 'wrong' in music, and also of 'tonality' and 'key-colour.' Further, it should be pointed out that when asked to give brief headings for a lecture on 'Organ Composers since Mendelssohn,' candidates do not give any indication of what they are going to say by writing down a list of such composers.

J. F. BRIDGE (Chairman).
P. C. BUCK.
C. H. KITSON.

ASSOCIATE ORGAN-WORK

The standard generally seemed to be below the average, and many of the failures were due to quite elementary faults—e.g., the hands not together in chord-playing; fugue subjects given out unrhythmically, and not phrased consistently throughout the work; lack of continuity in rhythm (this was especially noticeable in Frank Bridge's Allegro Marziale); bad time, pointless rallentandos, &c. The Psalm-Prelude of Howells almost invariably suffered from vagueness of rhythm, and apparent ignorance of the psalm-text on which the piece is based. The repeated L.-H. chords in the Lloyd piece were usually made unpleasantly abrupt in effect.

Registration: Many players used a 16-ft. pedal, uncoupled, with the result that the bass of the harmony was often uncertain; the reeds and doubles were over-used, especially in the Bach C minor Fugue, the 16-ft. manual stop being frequently used in giving out the subject; more attention to balance of manuals and pedal was needed in the Bach Sonata; cres. and dim. were generally too sudden.

The tests were often attacked recklessly, the key- and time-signatures sometimes not being grasped until the test was well on its way. (The accompaniment-test was in G minor; several players began in G major, and continued in that key till half-way through. On the other hand, the score-reading test, in G major, was several times started in G minor, C major, or in an unclassifiable compound of keys.) The accompaniment-test suffered badly in the matter of wildly incorrect time-values, and was often played as a piece of organ music, no notice being taken of the text; here, and in the transposition, the pedal part was frequently played an octave lower than written, and indications as to ped. and man. were disregarded. Without exaggeration it may be said that seventy-five per cent. of the faults and slips in both solo playing and tests were either elementary or of a type that could have been avoided by the use of a little observation and common-sense.

EDGAR T. COOK (Chairman).

HARVEY GRACE.

HENRY G. LEV.

ASSOCIATE PAPER-WORK

The paper-work, as a whole, did not attain to the usual level, although elementary mistakes were rather less in evidence. The primary cause of many failures was that much of the music which came before the examiners was built upon commonplace bass parts and weak harmonic foundations. Crude progressions and monotonous harmonies were the inevitable result.

Many slips in workmanship are excused, provided that some musicianship is shown; without this essential the tests cease to have any value.

Under the new regulations for paper-work there will be wide scope, and we may reasonably expect that this fact will be taken advantage of and realised by all candidates.

G. J. BENNETT (Chairman).

H. W. RICHARDS.

H. A. HARDING.

THE PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS

I propose this morning to say something on the appreciation of music. This is a subject on which a good deal has been written, but the only book on the subject that I have lately read is an admirable little work by Mr. Calvocoressi. This goes far more deeply into the subject than I propose to do to-day; and, indeed, it is written for the guidance of professed musical critics. These gentlemen certainly should be grateful for any help in their difficult task, for the records of their predecessors' opinions make, indeed, a sorry show. Any new departure in the art creates a problem, and at the present time the critic's task must be more difficult than ever. But as regards estimation of older work, one fact stands out clearly. That is that one generation will inevitably disparage the work of its immediate predecessors. This is true of other things besides music. Take literature. There is the supreme case of Shakespeare. In the 17th and 18th centuries it was found necessary, even by so great a writer as Dryden, to alter and rewrite Shakespeare's plays. In the latter part of the 18th century interest in these gradually increased, but it was not till the 19th century that his greatness was fully realised by Coleridge in England and Goethe in Germany. Shakespeare's eclipse was not a total eclipse like that of Bach, but it lasted longer. In later days the same thing is perceptible in the appreciation of Victorian literature, which to my mind is the greatest literature since Elizabethan times. Even Dickens had a period of depreciation, though in his case recovery seems to have set in, as well it might. Thackeray and Tennyson have also suffered, but their turn must come again. Then Stevenson. Thirty years ago the best judges worshipped him, but that does not seem to be the case nowadays. The same is true in other things besides Literature and Art. There is the question of dress. Take up an old Punch and see how absurd the fashions of only a few years ago seem. Further back there were dresses that saved the street sweeper trouble, Dundreary whiskers, and crinolines. Perhaps all may come again. Then there is furniture. I have seen fashion run the gamut of revival of mahogany, old oak, Queen Anne, Georgian, Chippendale—note that all of them come on in chronological order. I am told now that even early Victorian is showing signs of vitality. What a satisfactory thing it is that dealers are always ready to supply us with furniture of any period! But it is time we returned to music. In the 'seventies and 'eighties we were, of course, very German. Mendelssohn was beginning to wane, and Schumann was a new discovery. We had previously only known his Album and a few songs. Brahms and Wagner were alive and working, and the Ring was being produced. And as a confession, I may say that we thought rather well of Raff. I have not seen any of his works for years, but I have the idea still that he does not deserve the complete oblivion into which he has sunk. Of these composers, Schumann has declined most; partly, I think, for his deficiencies in technique, and partly for the general decay of romanticism in all art. 'Romanticism' is a blessed word, and I should be sorry to have to define its boundaries, but I imagine that most people would agree that Schumann was a prominent exponent of that state of mind. Brahms and Wagner have also declined relatively, but this falling back can be only temporary, though Wagner's operatic theories may hamper him. Then to turn to the other side. We fully appreciated Bach as far as we knew him—at all events, organists did—but we knew comparatively little of him. For those who heard it, the first performance of the B minor Mass in England was an epoch, but we knew few of the cantatas, and nothing of the Brandenburg Concertos. The revelation of Bach's amazing versatility, and the gain of insight into his spiritual qualities, have been the work of the last twenty years. We also, I am ashamed to say, decidedly underestimated Mozart. Richter's often-quoted remark, 'There is a future before Mozart,' loses point if this is forgotten. In later times we heard much of two composers—Tchaikovsky and Dvorák. Tchaikovsky is denounced as morbid, but he wrote many things besides the Pathetic Symphony. There is nothing morbid about the Casse-Noisette. Dvorák was very uneven. I have a vivid recollection of the first performance of The Spectre's Bride, which, in spite of a gruesome libretto and ridiculous words, gripped one absolutely. And I have also a melancholy remembrance of the first performance of Ludmila. But surely no modern writer has ever written such tunes. And I confess to a weakness for tunes. I do not think that these two composers will be entirely forgotten in the future. There is not much to be said for our early Victorian music before 1880. But Macfarren's St. John the Baptist was hailed as a masterpiece by all the critics in the 'seventies. I regret to say that certain irreverent young men of my acquaintance have been lately giving private concerts of what they call 'bad music,' and it is a sad fact that extracts from Macfarren's later oratorios formed a part of the entertainment. I hope the shade of George Alexander Macfarren, Principal of the Royal Academy of Music, Professor of Music at Cambridge, was not present. Theory was the ruin of Macfarren as a composer. Before he became a convert to Day's theory his music is often fresh and interesting—in later times he seemed to be always trying to justify this theory by his work. 'Day' chords appear in all sorts of unsuitable situations, and the result is an extraordinary angularity which, coupled with an amazing lack of humour in setting the words, has resulted in his suffering the indignity I have described. In his early days he wrote a very pleasant Overture, Chevy Chase, which Mendelssohn liked, and to which Wagner alludes in his letters under the name of Steeple Chase! Another curious reversal of taste occurs in the case of Sullivan. In former days all the wise heads regarded Sullivan as a very talented man who had gone astray, and shook their heads violently over his comic operas. To-day the enthusiasm of the young men over these same operas is delightful to behold, and Sullivan's attempts at more solid work are discarded. But I confess

I should not mind hearing again a string of choruses from a much despised work, The Martyr of Antioch, though I don't suppose I ever shall have the opportunity. I have said enough, I think, to prove the proposition I began with. We may now consider some more immediately practical points. In estimating such music as we may happen to hear at a concert, there is one thing to bear in mind, and that is the enormous power of the performers to influence our judgment. We have long been acquainted with the spell of a great artist to put a new meaning into music that we know quite well, and similarly we have learnt what havoc an inferior performer can play. But in later days the amazing power a modern conductor has to make or mar a piece has to be recognised. May I give a personal reminiscence? I was well acquainted with Brahms's first Symphony from its first performance in England conducted by Joachim. I heard it afterwards with several conductors, and was familiar with it as a pianoforte duet. Richter was one of these conductors. Now Richter was the most eminent orchestral chief of his day, in fact he was the father of the modern conductor. He did things with the orchestra which no one had done before. But Richter had his limitations, and as Wagner was one of his specialities, it almost followed in those days that he had scant sympathy with Brahms. Be that as it may, though I knew that Symphony so well, and admired it so much, I was never able to get over the feeling that as an orchestral work it was stodgy. Then about twenty years ago the Meiningen Orchestra came to London, conducted by Steinbach. They played this work, and it became a living thing. As a very eminent musician said to me afterwards, 'Well, I did think I knew that work.' Now if this result could happen with a familiar composition, what an enormous power a conductor-performer has over an unfamiliar composition! (I might add that we also owe a debt to that concert for the first introduction to London of the Brandenburg Concertos.) We have some good examples of English conductors doing fine work in both ways. I need mention only what Sir Henry Wood and Sir Thomas Beecham have done in popularising Bach and Mozart. Then again at a concert so many things may interfere with calm judgment—an uncomfortable seat, a missed meal, and other such drawbacks. Fortunately, most of us have not got to write a report of the proceedings that same evening, but the professional critic has to do so, and he, like us, is subject to such infirmities. So let us pity and not blame him if he writes what we do not like. What are we to say when two men of the highest competence and distinction give us diametrically contradictory opinions on a technical point? Mr. Calvocoressi quotes paragraphs from D'Indy and Ravel on the respective merits of the development of sonata form by Brahms and César Franck. And there is no doubt that these two eminent men contradict each other. On which Mr. Calvocoressi remarks: 'The reader is bound to come to the conclusion that judgments on form, in spite of appearances, are very much more a matter of opinion than fact.' Can it be that criticism is reduced to the elementary position of 'I like this' and 'I don't like that'? I confess to a certain growing mistrust as to the possibility of a proper appreciation of a new piece of music by reading the score. Of course every educated musician can read a score to at least a moderate extent, and the ability of some people in this matter is perfectly marvellous. It is always possible of course to decide whether the music is generally bad or good; bad work can be detected and fine points noted, but music is meant to be heard and not read. Cannot many of us recall melodies which on first hearing produced little effect on us, and only revealed their full merits with familiarity? Personally I can recall many Bach melodies of this kind. If we fail then in the proper estimation of a melody at first hearing, it is not likely that we shall always come to a correct judgment of a more elaborate work at first sight. It is well at all events to play the work over either with two hands or four. For music is a great mystery, and we must in the last instance appeal to the senses by which it is ordained that its mysteries are to be conveyed to us. And, above all, we need not accept blindly what people write about it.

The following pieces from the selected list for the Examinations in July, 1924, were played upon the College organ by Dr. Alan Gray:

ASSOCIATESHIP

Psalm XII ... .. Charles Wood
No. 1 of Three Preludes, from the Genevan Psalter.

Cantabile in G ... .. Jongen
Sonata No. 4 (1st movement) ... .. Mendelssohn

FELLOWSHIP

Canon in B minor ... .. Schumann
Prelude and Fugue in E minor ('Wedge') J. S. Bach
(Novello: Book 8, p. 98.)

Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE: It gives me great pleasure to propose our best thanks to our President. I appreciated his address very much. We also owe him a great debt for undertaking this onerous task at the organ, of playing before such a highly critical audience. Those who are coming up for examination next July have had a first-rate lesson for nothing at the expense of the R.C.O. There are advantages and disadvantages in being spared so long as I have been beyond the allotted span of life. I am almost inclined to think I am the oldest member of the College. I rejoice to have been spared so long to see the great results that have been achieved. I propose that our best thanks be accorded to our President, Dr. Alan Gray. More power to his elbow, and more agility to his feet as well! At any rate, it was a very great feat that he performed this morning.

The vote having been accorded with acclamation,—

The PRESIDENT said: I am very much obliged to you for this kind reception. I tried to do my best. I was doubtful whether I ought to accept the invitation to play, but as the Council was kind enough to invite me to do so, I thought it would be ungracious to refuse. Before we part this morning I should like to propose a vote of thanks to our worthy secretary, Dr. Harding. I expect you are all aware of the enormous amount of work he does for the good of this College, and has done for so many years. It is not too much to say that the really extraordinary state of efficiency of this Institution is due to his initiative, and I am sure you join me in according him our warmest thanks, with the hope that he will continue to give us his services for many years to come.

The meeting then concluded.

LOUIS VIERNE AT WESTMINSTER

In the last few years we have had visits from five celebrated foreign organists—three of them Frenchmen—and all have drawn huge audiences. The wonderful playing of brilliant young Dupré is still fresh in our memories, and we shall not soon forget Bonnet, Schweitzer, or Lynnwood Farnam.

Having entertained, and been entertained by, the pupil (Dupré), it was but fitting that we should extend our hospitality to the tutor (Vierne), and that he should tour the country giving recitals. This fine musician already had many friends in England. It was therefore with particular pleasure that we welcomed him, now restored to some degree of good health. And it says a great deal both for him and for the public that, notwithstanding the absence of press 'puffing'—which is so often given indiscriminately to foreigners—one of his first recitals in this country (at Westminster Cathedral) attracted an enormous crowd.

We have still to become thoroughly accustomed to the characteristics of French organ playing, but we are well on the way, and if at times M. Vierne seemed to give us rather an overdose of high-pitched registers and twangy reeds, the effect was considerably less unpleasant than on former occasions. Of course, the player gave us beautiful phrasing, highly artistic registration in the quieter movements, and his finger and foot agility were quite up to expectations. Only one item was below the standard we looked for, and that was the improvisation on Adeste Fideles—a splendid tune which, if already rather overworked, gives ample scope for original extempore variations. Making every allowance for M. Vienne's state of health and the fact that he had had a tiring day (in the morning he gave a recital at Trinity College, Cambridge), it is impossible to deny that this extemporisation was not what it ought to have been. Somehow, where a famous recitalist is concerned, one instinctively shrinks from using such terms as 'aimless, rather puerile meandering,' but—well, anyway, it was unconvincing. The second effort in the same direction was distinctly better, but even here one missed the unity and balance of a good improvisation.

But, on the whole, one finds less fault with the playing than with the build-up of the programme. Was M. Vienne wise in conceding to the request for a programme entirely devoted to his own works? His Symphonies have long been recognised as very fine compositions, but we can have too much of even good things, which is what most of us felt at the end of the recital. Vienne's music is usually fine, but it has its dull moments. As individual numbers these Symphonies and the shorter works are delightful, but lumped together in one programme, they are apt to become wearisome. As a whole the recital lacked verve and energy—there was too much of the pastorale, cantabile style. The most energetic number was the Carillon, though for me even this was spoilt by the pedals appearing to speak about half a beat behind the manuals. Perhaps this was the fault of the building, but one cannot help thinking that it is another case of the mistake of writing quick passages for heavy, sluggish pedal stops. Having delivered oneself of these grumbles, it is only fair to repeat that otherwise the event was an enjoyable one. We may hope that before long M. Vienne will pay us another visit, and give recitals in which he includes a few bold, energetically diatonic works of Bach, Rheinberger, and some English composers. A final point: When will some of our leading players, like Wolstenholme, Hollins, Alcock, Henry Ley, and others, be invited to show the French what we can do in the organ playing line? STANLEY LUCAS.

The London Sunday School Choir will give its annual concert at the Albert Hall on February 16, at 6.30, when the programme will consist of selections from St. Paul, and short miscellaneous items. The soloists will be Miss Kate Winter, Miss Phyllis Lett, Mr. Ben Davies, and Mr. Allan Brown. There will be a choir of a thousand, and a large orchestra.

A concert will be given at Bishopsgate Institute on February 28, at 7.30, by the boys of the City of London Choir College, assisted by gentlemen from St. Paul's Cathedral, Westminster Abbey, and other choirs. The programme will include The Hymn of Praise, madrigals, part-songs, &c.

Holst's Hymn of Jesus and Two Psalms, Brahms's Song of Destiny, and Vaughan Williams's Pastoral Symphony will make up the programme at Southwark Cathedral musical service on February 9, at 3 o'clock. The London Symphony Orchestra will play. No tickets.

Dr. Harold Darke has just begun his twenty-third series of recitals at St. Michael's, Cornhill. Mondays, at 1. The programme on February 11 will be devoted to Bach, and Mr. John Adams will sing an aria and the cantata Ich Lasse dich nicht.

Parts 1, 2, and 3 of the Christmas Oratorio were sung by the City Temple Choral Society, on January 12, conducted by Mr. Allan Brown, with Mr. G. D. Cunningham at the organ, and Mr. E. E. Withall playing the drums.

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Pastorale, Franck; Overture to 'Occasional' Oratorio; Choral-Improvisation on 'In dulci jubilo,' Karg-Elert; Fantasy on two Christmas Carols, John E. West; Christmas Postlude, Grace.

Dr. Wilson, Manchester Cathedral—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Sonata No. 2, Bach; Fugue in G and Preludes on 'St. Thomas' and 'Eventide,' Parry.

Sir Ivor Atkins, Manchester Cathedral—Fuga on the Magnificat, Bach; Allegretto in B minor, Vienne; Dithyramb, Harwood.

Mr. Norman Cocker, Manchester Cathedral—Overture to 'Otho,' Handel; Prelude and Fugue in B minor and two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Allegro (Symphony No. 2), Vienne.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, Bishopsgate Institute—Sonata No. 7, Rheinberger; Air with Variations in A, Lyon; Chorale Prelude, 'I give to thee farewell,' Bach; Capriccio in F, Purcell J. Mansfield.

Mr. Philip Dore, Queens' College Chapel, Cambridge—Toccata and Fugue ('Dorian'), Bach; Chorale No. 1, Franck; Two Versets on 'Ave Maris Stella,' Dupré; Minuet and Final (Symphony No. 4), Vienne; Pastorale, Franck; Fantasia on 'In dulci jubilo,' Karg-Elert.

Dr. J. Kendrick Pyne, Whitworth Hall, Manchester—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; 'Aspiration,' Kitchener; Sonata in F sharp minor, Rheinberger.

Mr. C. Hopkins Ould, Wesley Methodist Church, Fort William—Sonata No. 1, Guilmant; Introduction and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Andante Cantabile (Symphony No. 4) and Toccata (Symphony No. 5), Widor.

Mr. Edward J. Robinson, Pitt Street Congregational Church, Sydney—A Bach programme: Fantasia and Fugue in G minor and eight Chorale Preludes.

Mr. William Robson, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Stockton-on-Tees—Toccata and Fugue in C, Bach; Theme with Variations, Tchaikovsky; Evening Song, Bairstow.

Mr. F. A. Mouré, University of Toronto—Toccata and Fugue in D minor, Bach; Sonata in G minor, Carl Piutti; 'Evocation à la Chapelle Sixtine,' Liszt; Sonata in C major, Rheinberger; Symphonie No. 6, Widor.

Mr. W. W. Thompson, St. Dunstan's-in-the-East—'Ode Héroïque,' Cyril Scott; Rhapsody and 'Cradle Song,' Grace; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. Wallace G. Breach, Tytherington Church, Gloucester—Prelude on 'In dulci jubilo,' Bach; Minuet and Trio (Symphony in G minor), Sterndale Bennett; Fantasia on Christmas Carols, John E. West.

Mr. Ernest F. Mather, St. Vedast Foster—Prelude on 'Old 104th,' Parry; Réverie on 'University,' Grace; Sonata No. 5 (first movement), Bach; Pièce Héroïque, Franck.

Mr. H. Percy Richardson, Cathedral Church of St. Nicholas, Newcastle-on-Tyne—Largo ('Sea' Symphony), Vaughan Williams; Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach; Prelude on 'Old 113th,' Charles Wood; Étude Symphonique, Boss.

Mr. Godfrey Sceats, St. Saviour's, Ealing—Four Advent Preludes from the 'Orgelbüchlein,' Bach; Double Fugue on the name B A C H, Karg-Elert; Choral Preludes by Reger and Karg-Elert.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata in D, Joimey; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow.

Mr. Frank B. Porkess, St. Decuman's Parish Church, Watchet—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Chorale No. 3, Franck; Postlude in D minor, Stanford.

Mr. Philip Miles, All Saints', Eastbourne—A Bach programme: Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Pastorale, Sonata No. 5 (first movement), Toccata and Fugue in F, two Chorale Preludes, Passacaglia.

Mr. Cyril Pearce, St. Thomas's, Norwich—Preludes on 'Sleepers, wake' and 'In dulci jubilo,' Bach; Fantasy on two Christmas Carols, John E. West.

Miss Ada Petherick, Parish Church, Turnham Green—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn.

Mr. Gilbert H. Grice, Free Christian Church, Longsight, Manchester—Sonata in D minor (first movement), Bach; Rhapsody, Herbert Howells; Choral Prelude on 'Rhosymedre,' Vaughan Williams.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Arthur C. Bennett, organist and choirmaster, Andover Parish Church.

Mr. H. A. Bennett, organist and choirmaster, Doncaster Parish Church.

Mr. Wilfrid Dunwell, organist and choirmaster, Mill Hill Chapel, Leeds.
 Miss Doris Fenner, organist and choirmaster, St. Cuthbert's, West Hampstead.
 Mr. Henry C. Hart, organist and choirmaster, Kentish Town Parish Church.
 Mr. Frederic Lacey, organist and choirmaster, St. James-the-Less, Westminster.
 Mr. G. McNaughton Harvey, organist and choirmaster, Wallasey Parish Church.
 Mr. J. L. Slater, assistant-organist, York Minster.
 Mr. B. M. Harvey, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, Bootle.

Letters to the Editor

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS

SIR,—In your January number Mr. Wyatt challenges my accuracy. He has overlooked a somewhat material point, namely, that he, in the 20th century, is impugning the statements, not of myself, but of writers from the 12th to the 17th centuries, or even later. He does not support his argument with those categorical references without which historical research is valueless. I must refer him to my earlier chapters for my attitude in this respect.

Two further quotations may be of help to those of your readers who have been interested in those chapters:

'Iubili [i.e., Alleluia] nomen tribuerunt Antiqui. Ab aliis sequentiae dictae sunt quia sunt quaedam veluti sequela et appendix cantici Alleluia, quae SINE VERBIS [my capitals] post ipsum sequuntur.' Mr. Wyatt can find this and a dozen similar references in one of the authors whom I have mentioned. It is not unreasonable to believe that these were the sources of the almost literal statement in Grove (2nd ed., iv., 416): 'Sequentia originally was a long jubilus or melody without words.' Whatever the later meaning of the word 'sequence,' at first it had nothing to do with words. Paradoxically the Prose 'followed' the Sequence.

The second quotation is this, which touches upon a far-reaching question of philology quite as much as of music: 'Neuma canit sine p; cum p sit Spiritus almus.'—Yours, &c.,

WILLIAM WALLACE.

11, Ladbroke Road, W.11.

January 7, 1924.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP

SIR,—I think the reasons for drawing upon the English Hymnal for illustrations, rather than Hymns Ancient and Modern, are:

(1.)—The latter book so often plays fast and loose with the 'old' tunes. Compare, if you will, such examples as:

8 A. &amp; M. with 259 E.H.
439 " " 202 "
86 " " 86 "
201 " " 277 "

(2.)—It is scarcely necessary to point out how impossible the plainsong tunes become as set out in A. & M. Compare:

15 A. &amp; M. with 264 <sup>2</sup> E.H.
45 " " 1 "
96 " " 94 "

The 1889 edition of A. & M. is indicated here. The 1904 book is infinitely superior to the 'old,' but this very fine hymnal has not received the attention it deserves.

In answer to Mr. Marriner's aspersion, may I refer him to the Preface, which reads: 'It is not a party book, expressing this or that phase of negation or excess, but an attempt to combine in one volume the worthiest expressions of all that lies within the Christian creed,' &c., &c.

History repeats itself. Fifty years ago it was said, 'Ah! that book A. & M., which is administering popery to our people in homœopathic doses.'—Yours, &c.,

Christchurch.

JOHN NEWTON.

SIR,—Mr. H. A. Marriner's letter in the last issue of the Musical Times surely advises a difficult task to those responsible for the careful selection of our church hymns and tunes, when the English Hymnal is so infinitely superior to Hymns Ancient and Modern.

The beautiful Bach settings to such hymns as Wachet auf and Nun freut Euch, mentioning two only, to say nothing of the delightful collection of plainsong hymns and melodies, and the Communion hymns, the majority of which are quite congregational, in the E.H., bear no comparison with such a quantity of bad hymns and ironed-out tunes as are found in the A. & M. collection.

Our congregations sorely need healthy and robust hymns, full of melody, not sickly sentimentalism.

Many people are apt to cling tightly to the things they learnt in their youth without pausing to ask whether such are now worthy their riper experience.—Yours, &c.,

Frensham, Surrey.

VICTOR J. C. G. BALL.

SIR,—I have just finished a close perusal of Hymns of the Kingdom, edited musically by Sir Walford Davies, and if we have not at last the ideal hymn-book (there are only some two hundred hymns in the collection), I venture to say we are now nearer to it than we have ever been before.

Those of us who, while agreeing that the sentimental part-song type of tune so largely represented in the old A. & M. book has now fulfilled any purpose it ever had, yet refuse to bow the knee to the secular and other monstrosities which form so large a proportion of the much vaunted English Hymnal, will find in this new book a real via media between the two extremes, and no fads—folk-song, sugar, or any other variety! On the other hand there is evidence of real musicianship in the setting out and arrangement of practically every tune in the book.

I write this letter quite as an outsider, entirely unacquainted with any of the promoters of the book; but in the hope that it may perhaps cause an organist or clergyman here and there to obtain a copy, and above all to read and if possible act upon the inspiring suggestions set out in the Musical Editor's preface.—Yours, &c.,

Wells, Somerset.

M. P. CONWAY.

DO COMPOSERS UNDERSTAND THE TRUMPET?

SIR,—Is the trumpet understood? Judging by a good deal of modern music I should say this is very doubtful. In the first place, why do composers write for seven different trumpets? A few players, and only very few, use a C trumpet, the instrument in general use being the B $\flat$ . Are composers aware of this? If so, why do they score for seven instruments, when with the very small exception mentioned only one is used?

On entering an orchestra a 'player finds parts for B, C, D $\flat$ , D, E $\flat$ , E, and F trumpets. He cannot take seven instruments about with him, and would not if he could; he has therefore to transpose everything a tone, third, fourth, and so on.

It happens very frequently, almost invariably, that the composer writes for three or four trumpets in one work, so that the player has to keep switching off from one transposition to another. Why this is so puzzles me. Why does the composer leave the transposition to the player? I suppose he can manage it, therefore why doesn't he do so, and write for the instrument in universal use. He would be better served in numbers of cases if he did. The difficulties of reading and execution are quite sufficient without the transposition.

Another point is the constant use of the mute. All modern writers seem to think that it is necessary every few bars. I suppose if they want or prefer a penny trumpet effect they can have it; they certainly get it. It kills all the brilliance of tone; and apparently they do not know that mutes throw the instruments out of tune, on some notes very badly.

Then, again, where is the sense in writing ff con sordino. A trumpeter can blow his hardest, and is hardly audible with the mute in use—at all events, against a full orchestra. No doubt the piercing quality of the high notes is wanted at times, but why so much?

In Lalo's Le Roi D'ys there are fifty-four consecutive bars of one recurring note, viz., B above the stave, in triplets. I don't know how it sounds to the listener. I know it is very difficult to play. I should think it sounds something like a siren or steam whistle. I wonder whether Lalo knew what he was writing. No doubt he was aware of the compass of the instrument, and he wrote half a tone from the top note. He couldn't know the difficulty, the high and tiring tension of the lips. It is something like writing pages of A's and B's for tenors to get on with. We know how much they would enjoy them!

Occasionally music is met with that is impossible. There are some passages for trumpets in a Suite by one of our foremost composers which I should say are unplayable. These consist of several recurring bars of eight semiquavers, in two-four time, Presto (I quote from memory, but correctly, I feel sure):

The Suite is taken at about the same tempo as, or perhaps a little faster than, the well-known quick-step in William Tell. At moderate tempo or even allegro there is not much difficulty—but Presto. . . ! It is like the rattle of a side-drum. A piccolo might manage it, but not a trumpet.

I think it would surprise some of our conductors if they asked their trumpets to play it and similar passages alone, without the cover of the full orchestra. In this instance it is taken too fast to render correctly, or to tongue it really as it should be tongued. The player simply scrambles in here and there, coming in well on the last note.

In another composition, Kikimora, by Liadov, the composer seems to have no use for any but top notes. He has written bar after bar of monotonous repetitions of one note, the highest on the instrument. Writers like Liadov may be gifted or talented in other directions, but they would not seem to know much about the trumpet.—Yours, &c.,

'TRUMPETER.'

THE DOH-MINOR: A WARNING

SIR,—I feel the letter in your January issue should not pass unanswered.

I have no personal or other interest in Doh-minor or Lah-minor, but as a teacher of sight-singing, ear-training, and harmony, all of which subjects must be linked together for purposes of study, I have an interest in discovering the most musical and the most logical method of presenting pitch-relations to the minds of young music students. Your correspondent quotes a short melodic extract with its translation into Sol-fa notation. Taking that as his text, he holds up to ridicule what is known as the Doh-minor method of representing in Sol-fa the minor key. I know nothing more of the extract or of its source than what is stated in the letter. From the Sol-fa translation supplied, those responsible for this regard it as belonging to C minor. Their decision is, I suppose, based upon a study of the complete piece, melody and harmony. That is the way a musician would instinctively approach the subject. If the Tonic Sol-fa College, intent upon demolishing a method with which it does not agree, can find condemnation only in short melodic extracts of a quasi-modal character, then its case must indeed be a weak one. Believers in the Doh-minor are not yet reduced to methods of this kind. Only recently there came before me a piece of evidence in support of the Doh-minor which to my mind is conclusive. In the Cathedral Psalter Chants, the first

Psalm for the sixth morning is set to the following chant by Hayes:

(a) Major.

(b) Minor.

The first six verses are sung in the major key (a), then five in the minor key (b), and the last verses and Gloria in the major key (a). The harmonies are simple, and identical in each key, allowing for the difference between major and minor. Can anyone who has a feeling for the mental effect of the different notes of the scale feel that when we pass from the major form to the minor form, and back again to the major, with similar harmonies in each form, that the Doh has been altered? Surely if the major form is then the musical and logical representation of the minor must be:

{ D | m : r | D || D | f : m | r : r | D ||

To link up the minor version to the key of C and call it seems to me opposed to musical feeling and to common sense. Surely this latter is the method which all who aspire to be musicians rather than Tonic Sol-faists should be warned against, even if it is true, as your correspondent states, that 'all the leading music publishing firms in this country adhere to it.'—Yours, &c.,

{ L | d : te | L || L | r : d | te : te | L ||

Sydenham, S.E.

FREDERICK G. SHINN.

January, 1924.

SIR,—Referring to Mr. Walter Harrison's letter (January number, page 64), one would like to know exactly what he means when he says, 'out of this simple phrase of ten notes, not one of which is out of the key, no less than four are chromatically altered in the Doh-minor version.' To what key does he refer?

If he considers the passage as being in E flat major there is nothing more to be said. But if he regards it as being in C minor, as presumably he does, it cannot be correct to call the intervals of a minor third, minor sixth, and minor seventh from the key-note 'chromatic.'

We shall all agree as to the construction of the minor scale, the difference of opinion being in the nomenclature of the various degrees.

It is my humble opinion that until the keynote is called Doh in both major and minor modes, the real differences existing between the two modes will never be thoroughly understood by the majority of students. The method is difficult only because it is new.—Yours, &c.,

Forest Gate, E.7.

LOUISE DUGDALE.

VOICE FAILURE

SIR,—I have read with interest and considerable puzzlement, Mr. David Houston's letter in your issue for October last.

It seems to me that all these arguments about reeds and vocal cords, as well as false vocal cords, referred to by Mr. Hunt in the same issue, are swept aside by the established fact that Mr. White tested his Sinus tone-production theory, before proclaiming it as a fact, by restoring the voice of a man of twenty-eight years, who had had his vocal cords totally excised as a child. The restored voice was a normal man's voice, and as Mr. White alone has given us a constructive alternative in his Sinus tone-production, the vocal cord enthusiasts are placed at a disadvantage at the very outset—and Sir James Cantlie's teaching gives them the 'knock-out.'

Mr. White restored my voice after my throat had been pronounced incurable, an operation being suggested according to the usual orthodox idea. I am therefore content to leave it to Mr. Houston, my friend, Mr. Ernest Hunt, and others, to theorise, Mr. White carrying on his beneficent work the while, based on sound, and above all, practical lines. Magna est veritas.—Yours, &c.,

‘Restharrow,’

W. H. CHISHOLM.

Longfield, Kent.

SIR,—With reference to the criticisms of Messrs. Hunt and Houston, which appeared in your October issue, I should like to make it clear that I have never adopted any militant attitude with regard to my theory of sinus tone production. After expending considerable time and money upon research, I discovered facts which I believed—and have since proved—to be of special value to the vocal world. These facts were published (at a pecuniary loss to me) so that my fellows might if they wished have the benefit of my labours. I have no wish to make converts of those who prefer the accepted ideas of vocal culture.

Taking Mr. Hunt's letter as being the more important, he remarks: ‘Mr. Lunn's illustration of the two pairs of lock-gates is illuminating.’ I would alter the qualification, and say it is misleading. Let us consider the matter. The object of the lock-gates is (a) to hold back a flow of water, and (b) to arrange for two distinct levels of water. The object of the vocal cords is the reverse, viz., to control and direct a column of air which must be moving. Then one pair of lock-gates, either the upper or the lower, must always be closed in order to effect their purpose, whilst in voice production both pairs of vocal cords must be open. Let Mr. Hunt open his two pairs of lock-gates, and he will soon find that Mr. Lunn's parallel does not hold good. It is obvious that there is not, and could not, be any variation in level with respect to the air in the body as there is in the water of a river. Further, the two sets of lock-gates are in all respects similar to each other in mechanism and structure, whilst the true and false vocal cords are dissimilar in every respect. Then, as I pointed out in your August issue, in the case of the river current it is the pressure on the first gate that shields the second, whereas Mr. Lunn would have us believe that the second gate shields the first from pressure, the false cords being above the true.

Last, but by no means least, it has never yet been shown that there is any air pressure on the vocal cords; any damage sustained by the vocalist in these regions is caused by muscular contraction, and not by air pressure at all. The small column of air which we use would be quite incapable of inflicting such damage. Mr. Hunt admits that neither the true nor the false cords can be seen whilst good vocal tone is produced. It is, therefore, purely a conjecture on his part as to whether the false cords are operative or not.

With regard to Mr. Houston's letter, as you inform me that you cannot spare space for my reply, I have no choice but to leave it, but would remark that any one who can state, as Mr. Houston does, that the vocal cords are one inch in diameter, can have but a very slight acquaintance with his subject.—Yours, &c.,

ERNEST G. WHITE.

Æolian Hall Studios,

New Bond Street, W.1.

[Many letters are unavoidably held over.—EDITOR.]

Dr. H. A. Harding has retired from the post of honorary conductor of the Bedford Musical Society, after twenty-three years' service. Our columns have frequently borne witness to the enterprise and success of the Society, and we are glad to see that the Doctor's services to Bedford's music have been recognised by his fellow-townsmen. At the Society's concert on December 18, the President handed him an address on vellum and a cheque for £100, the presentation being followed by musical honours. Dr. Harding is succeeded by Mr. A. F. Parris and Mr. H. J. Colson, who will act as joint-conductors.

The Apostles will be performed at the People's Palace on February 9, at 7.30, under the direction of Mr. Frank Idle, the soloists being Miss Stiles-Allen, Miss Dilys Jones, Mr. John Adams, Mr. David Evans, Mr. Arthur Rose, and Mr. Joseph Farrington.

E

Sharps and Flats

My technique is my shield. My personality is my sword. . . I sit down at the pianoforte, well-armed, unafraid. With my shield I protect myself. But with my sword I strike.—Moris Rosenthal.

The music at the movies may not appeal to you, but at least it drowns out the gum chewing.—New York Evening Telegram.

I have often thought that music and all art have become impossible in England.—Sir Thomas Beecham.

I wish I could be as optimistic as that.—Ernest Newman.

It's a terrible responsibility to have a soul. I sometimes wish I didn't have one. Or if a soul, not a brain. But both! The combination is terrible.—Marguerite d'Alvarez.

There are three categories of people who have any liking for music: (1) the people who really know about music; (2) the people who think they know, and don't; and (3) the people who think they don't, and DO.—Sir Hugh Allen.

I owe much to broadcasting. My neighbours now have their wireless set and I can enjoy a Sunday nap in peace, instead of having to listen to the continual thumping of the pianoforte.—Allen Gill.

The composers of to-day? Atonality! All unimportant. A way out? They know nothing and try to capitalise the fact. Stravinsky? As bad as the rest!—Moris Rosenthal.

Beethoven's fifth Symphony is one of the great masterpieces of music; but after forty years the mention of it on a programme is enough to keep me away from any concert. Yet it must be played.—James Agate.

By his singing of Arise, ye subterranean winds, Mr. — gained such applause that he was determinedly encored, and sang The Vulgar Boatsman.—Local Paper.

After that, we suppose, the audience left him alone.—Punch.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

First tenors wanted, male-voice choir. Wood Green district.—Write, GOODE, 58, Mayes Road, N.22.

Lady pianist, good sight-reader, wishes to meet vocalists or instrumentalists for mutual practice. Kensington district.—Write, N., 6, Wellington Terrace, W.2.

A few sight-readers wanted to form a madrigal party. Regular and keen. Weekly, near Victoria Station.—E. T. BATES, 11, Cheltenham Road, Leyton, E.

West London Choral and Orchestral Society, Whitefield's Institute, Tottenham Court Road, W.1, resumed rehearsals, Orchestra, January 7, Choir, January 9.

Wanted: basses, flute, cello, clarinet, and trombone.—E. PUDDINGTON, 90, Tantallon Road, Balham, S.W.12.

Experienced violinist wishes to join, as leader, good trio or quartet. Classical music. East district preferred.—M. S., c/o Musical Times.

Young lady pianist wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. Lady or gentleman. S.E. district.—H. S., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced lady pianist desires to meet accomplished instrumentalists for chamber music. N.W. district.—G., c/o Musical Times.

Experienced string players are invited to co-operate in church music service. South Kensington.—W. MACK SMITH, 18, Colet Gardens, W.14.

Good jazz-drummer and violinist wanted immediately for small dance orchestra. S.W. district.—‘MUSICAL,’ 16, Lambton Road, Cottenham Park, Wimbledon, S.W.20.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist or 'cellist for mutual practice.—G. V. D., 259, Brownhill Road, Catford, S.E.6.

Good amateur viola players required for Civil Service Orchestra. Also second oboe and second bassoon. Queen's Hall pitch. Rehearsals, Law Courts, Thursdays, 5.30 to 7.30.—ERNEST J. STEVENS, 50, High Road, Chiswick, W.4. Telephone: Chiswick 1824.

Timpanist offers services to orchestral society (N. London district preferred) which possesses its own instruments.—W. H., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (gentleman) wishes to meet 'cellist or other instrumentalists for mutual practice. Good music only. Keen amateurs, also able vocalists interested, please write. Croydon district preferred.—C. P. COCKS, 'Trenance,' Morland Road, Croydon.

Young lady accompanist would like to form or join a trio, for mutual practice. Good music only. Also would like to meet pianist for two-piano forte work.—I. M. BOWELL, 12, Eaton Rise, Ealing, W.5.

Violin-violist would like to meet string players or pianist, Clapham Junction district, for practice of classical or standard music. Advertiser is experienced string quartet player.—'VIOLA,' 6, Hauberk Road, S.W.11.

Good amateur instrumentalists (all instruments) will be welcomed by the N. B. & M. Operatic and Musical Society. Rehearsals in the City on Thursdays at 5.30.—SECRETARY, 66, Watling Street, E.C.

Pianist (young gentleman) wishes to meet vocalists, with a view to practising accompaniments. Birmingham or surrounding districts.—K. A., c/o Musical Times.

Will volunteers willing to assist at fortnightly evening services at St. Paul's Church, Aldgate, E., kindly apply to F.R.C.O., 22, Shelley Avenue, E.12? Mixed choir. Bach, Mendelssohn, Stainer, secular, &c.

The Ladies' London Orpheus Choir has vacancies, especially for contraltos. Rehearsals, St. Andrew's Hall, W. Kensington, Tuesdays, 8.15.—Mrs. BRIER, 8, Erpingham Road, Putney, S.W.15.

Bass singer wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. If a lady who also sings, contralto preferred. Brighton or Hove district.—BASS, c/o Musical Times.

Vacancies in N. London Orchestra for French horn, viola, 'cello, double-bass, and drums.—Write, A. J. PICKETT, 4, Burghley Road, Kentish Town, N.W.5.

Leader and 'cello player wanted to complete string quartet, in East Finchley. Must be first-rate experienced players.—S. J., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady, L.R.A.M.) wishes to meet 'cellist and/or violinist for mutual practice; classical works. Victoria district.—M. H., c/o Musical Times.

The Coleridge Glee Singers have vacancies for contraltos, tenors, and basses. Must be good readers.—SECRETARY, 38, Chestnut Avenue, Crouch End, N.8.

Wanted, good viola or 'cello player, also pianist, to join quartet. Good library. Sunday mornings, at 11. 6, Newton Street, Hyde.

Liverpool readers on the look-out for a pleasant method of improving their knowledge of music will find what they want in the Liverpool Music Study Circle, which meets on Mondays, at 7.30, at 107, Canning Street. An excellent syllabus of lectures, recitals, &c., has been arranged. The hon. secretary is Mr. John F. Ward, 91, Windsor Road, Tue Brook.

The fifty voices of the Railway Clearing House Musical Society, conducted by Mr. John E. West, gave some excellent music at Kingsway Hall on January 10. The programme included Brahms's Alto Rhapsody (with Miss Nora Scott as soloist), Morley's My bonny lass, Gibbons's The Silver Swan, Wesley's I wish to tune my quiv'ring lyre, Arnold Bax's Boar's Head Carol, Balfour Gardiner's Sir Eglamore, two of Stanford's Newbolt settings, and Mr. West's arrangement of The bonnie banks o' Loch Lomond. The whole programme, well sung, was of high quality.

Mr. Alan May will lecture on Elizabethan music (with special reference to the forthcoming Festival) at King's College, Strand, on February 11, at 5.30 p.m. Illustrations by the Choir of the Church of English Martyrs, Streatham. Admission free.

BRITISH NATIONAL OPERA COMPANY AT COVENT GARDEN

'ALCESTIS'

The performance of Rutland Boughton's Alceste claims, for many reasons, special consideration. In the first place there is the interest of the Euripidean text, translated by Gilbert Murray, which attracts both for its great beauty of expression and for the new problems it set before the producer. Then there is Boughton's music, very beautiful at times and rising to something akin to greatness in the choric sections—which is all in accordance with Greek tradition and with the importance given to the chorus by the Greek tragedian. Alceste moreover is the third British opera which the National Company has produced in the few years which have gone since its creation, and we are thus reaping some of the benefits of possessing such a Company. When, however, we have subscribed wholeheartedly to all the good things that have been said about the text and the music of Alceste one disturbing factor remains—the production. Those of us who saw its modest first performance at Glastonbury could not but miss some of the points, of the thrills, the work afforded when it was given with a piano-forte instead of the orchestra in a little hall accommodating, perhaps, an audience equal in numbers to the ushers and ticket-collectors of Covent Garden.

The London production laboured under a load of misadventures. In the first place Mr. Percy Pitt, who conducted the rehearsals, was not well enough to conduct the performance, and had to be replaced at the last moment by the composer. Now there is no question of skill and ability. As a conductor Mr. Boughton may be as good as, or better than, Mr. Pitt. But an orchestra cannot possibly fall into the ways of a new conductor at a moment's notice. Then there was the illness of Miss Rennie, and the important part of the Handmaid had to be taken by Miss Davies, of Glastonbury. Miss Davies's singing was quite good in its way, but her range is somewhat restricted. It was excellent miniature work which, in the small hall of Glastonbury, proved very attractive and effective. At Covent Garden, unfortunately, it never got over the footlights. In its turn the staging was utterly unsuitable. Admetus's house at the back of the stage (on the steps of which most of the action takes place) left a wide gap between actors and orchestra. Greek plays are at the opposite pole from modern cinema horrors, in that they give the utmost importance to the word, while for cinemas all that matters is the action. But the absence of action implies closer contact between spectators and performers, and at Covent Garden the depth of the stage and indistinct pronunciation acted like a film of mist between interpreters and audience.

It was, of course, almost inevitable that some of the Glastonbury effects should go by the board. There the procession led by Thanatos and bearing the body of the dead Queen passed right through the hall, and one recalls the thrill of feeling these heroes and demigods getting nearer and nearer at each step—Thanatos the messenger of Death; Admetus, irresolute where even a hero may be irresolute, but a human, intensely pathetic figure; and those who had loved the hallowed victim, the representatives of a world which at the same time congratulates and blames the King for having allowed the sacrifice. This procession would have been impossible at Covent Garden without some radical change in the customs and traditions of the house.

For my part, I confess that had I been responsible for the production I would have insisted on carrying out all the changes that would have seemed necessary to bridge over the gulf between the spectators and the performers. It is preposterous that while theatre managers are ready with all kinds of suggestions and devices to add to the effect of a parade of mannequins in a revue, they should be so dull of hearing when they are asked to show a little more initiative and intelligence in the staging of great operas. In Alceste they had a good opportunity to strike a new line and attract a public tired of old conventionalities. The opportunity was lost through that moral laziness which is the besetting sin of opera.

Finally, something should be said of the orchestral scoring which, candidly, seemed wholly inadequate.

This takes the critic on to dangerous ground, for if a composer says, 'This is the effect I want,' then of course there is nothing more to add. But, at any rate, let the reasons be stated for the objections here set down. Mr. Boughton's harmonic scheme, his melody, his general outlook, are entirely of our own time. Like the wise man he does not believe in the enormities of the ultra-modern; he delights in four-part harmony. He is not a blind follower, and still less an imitator, of Wagner, but he employs the tools that Wagner—and many another besides—have used. Yet when it comes to scoring this excellent modern music he seems suddenly anxious to give it an archaic colour. He deprives certain branches of the modern orchestra of their inevitable complement (inevitable for modern music); he denies himself the use of instruments Beethoven would have used; he gives his drummer a sinecure, and thus robs himself of every means the composer has to secure effective contrast. Surely there is little consistency in this. Had he written his choruses in unison—in the Greek way—or given prominence to Greek modes, the orchestral limitations would have been accepted as a matter of course. But there can be no logic in dressing Peter in the modern way and then denying a similar garb to Paul. The impression we thus had, sometimes, was as if an old composer had scored the music of a modern—instead of a Handel Overture scored by Elgar, the Dream of Gerontius scored by Handel. Mr. Boughton seems reluctant to use any 'alloy' in his orchestra—to add, say, to the violins, the oboes, or the flutes, in order to give them a new tint, or to use certain instruments to support others, or to stress an accent or a phrase. I speak, of course, without ever having seen the score, but the strings sounded distinctly 'undiluted,' and the strings predominate to the point that we sometimes longed for the reedy sound of the oboes and cor anglais (as, for instance, in the poignant phrase of the Funeral March), or for the low, brooding notes of the clarinet (as in the exquisitely pathetic music of the Handmaid's tale of Alcestis's gentleness and suffering). This at least is what I felt during the performance, and it is quite probable that some evidence which could be used against my argument escaped me partly because, beside the usual claims on our attention, we were all trying desperately to understand what the singers were saying.

For the actual music of Alcestis there can be little but high praise. All the choruses are arresting, individual, and often moving. The solos are perhaps unequal, but the great beauty of the leading themes stands unchallengeable—the theme which we may associate with Admetus's sorrow, the touching pathos of the Eldest Child's music—above all, the very delicate music which accompanies the Handmaid's narration, which in the orchestra, alas, sounds more thin than delicate. If the characterization appeared now and again a little weak—this is particularly the case with Heracles—that is most likely the consequence of an incomplete orchestra. Heracles the slayer of monsters, the reveller who overcomes Death, surely deserves as large an orchestra as ever accompanied the songs of drunken monks in Russian opera.

The chief parts were taken by Miss Clara Serena (Alcestis), Mr. Walter Hyde (Admetus), and Mr. Robert Parker (Heracles). They all sang well enough, but Miss Serena alone took pains to make her words intelligible. The minor parts, adequately filled, revealed the same imperfect appreciation of the value of words, the only exception being Miss Doris Lemon, whose singing of the Child's music was admirable in every way.

'GIANNI SCHICCHI'

The revival of Gianni Schicchi and its performance in English evoked much interest. Indeed any good comic subject set to good music is bound to appeal to the public just now, for we all feel the load of care that has been put on our shoulders since 1914. What we need is not the softening influence of tragedy, but the tonic of good comedy. There is surely a rich harvest for the enterprising manager with a flair for a great comic-opera of the present or of the past. A really adequate revival of Fra Diavolo might carry the town by storm. Gianni Schicchi is not like Auber's masterpiece. But it is genuinely comic, even if its wit is the wit of a pessimist. A rogue, two moonstruck lovers, and a pack of fools—this is the world in which such exceedingly practical jests as the forging of a will are perpetrated. Of the rich humanity of Falstaff, of the frankly farcical humour of Fra Diavolo there is not a trace. But author and composer have done their work very ably. They have told a witty story in a witty way. They hardly give us time to weigh up the action. Incident follows swiftly upon incident, and when for a moment the action halts to give the composer the opportunity to indulge his lyrical vein, Puccini steps in smiling, friendly with his old tricks with a full-throated song about Florence and the surrounding hills, the beauty of May, the flowing Arno—all done so easily, gracefully, pointedly, that it would indeed be ungracious to recall how closely related musically is the beauty of Florence to the beauty of Puccini's other heroines—the ever pathetic Mimi and the exotic Butterfly.

The translation offered at Covent Garden is effective. Hardly any of the points of the original were missed. The production was exceedingly creditable. Mr. Herbert Langley made a lively and resourceful Schicchi. Miss Doris Lemon sang and looked like the young heroine eager to win at one stroke both wealth and love. Mr. Tudor Davies sang of Florence and Schicchi with such delightful ardour that his jest could not have been greater had the subject been down on the Welsh hills and Mr. Lloyd George. The minor characters were excellently enacted, and Mr. Percy Pitt conducted an acceptable orchestral performance of a clever, if not too subtle, score.

'OTELLO' AND OTHER OPERAS

The performance of Verdi's Otello showed clearly two things. First, that the company does not lack singers of ability; second, that it does not by any means make the best of the resources it possesses. The orchestra is not as numerous as it should be—especially in the lower strings its weakness is lamentable. But there are ways of hiding, to some extent, such a flaw, either by inducing the string players to put more vigour into their playing, or else by moderating the exuberance of the other branches of the orchestra. And, with another rehearsal or two, Mr. Goossens no doubt would have got the right balance, as his father used to do before him, with the less competent body of players of the old Carl Rosa Company. The chief weakness of the production lay in a conception of the score more in keeping with the style of Trovatore than the style of Otello—unsteady rhythms, tendency to stress the wrong accents and the wrong notes. All this could have been avoided by a more thorough preparation. But it was a great pity that these details had been neglected, because the performance just missed real greatness. Take, for instance, Mullings, who sang the title-rôle. He is one of the very few singers who possess the physical qualifications the part demands—the range and the endurance. Moreover, he is what the celebrated Tamagno never was, an intelligent and admirable actor. What might have been a great achievement lacked just that discrimination between the relative value of different phrases which makes the difference between promise and achievement. Mr. Herbert Langley's Iago was all that could be wished, vocally and histrionically. Iago and Otello omitted a note at the close of the 'oath' duet, but this, we presume, was merely an accident. The choice of Miss Miriam Licette as Desdemona was not very wise. Miss Licette has great qualities, but the part demands a robustness in the middle and lower registers, which is not Miss Licette's strongest point. The other characters were all well represented. It is also important to note that there was a good attendance and much enthusiasm. With a little more care we should have seen one of those successes which often are the making of a season. By the way, the changing of the scene in the middle of the third Act is not a good innovation. The arrival of the Venetian ambassadors, however unexpected, need not cause the roof and rafters of the old castle to shake as if in an earthquake, nor the chorus to give their welcome before the lights have been turned on. Of the other performances given by the Company Die Meistersinger was notable chiefly for the fine Beckmesser of Mr. William Michael, and Aida for Miss Florence Austral's inspiring interpretation of the title-rôle.

In Die Meistersinger Miss Constance Willis (late of the 'Old Vic.') also gave us a capable interpretation of Magdalen. Phobus and Pan and Hänsel and Gretel had the same cast as last year, and the two Holst operas gave special opportunities to Mr. Joseph Farrington (Death in Savitri) and Miss Gertrude Johnson (the Princess in The Perfect Fool). The Magic Flute on the whole was more creditable to the men than to the women, and the chief honours went to Mr. Norman Allin (Sarastro), Mr. William Anderson (High Priest), and Mr. Ranalow (Papageno), with Mr. Tudor Davies a capable Tamino. These are chiefly the outstanding features of the productions so far given. It should be added that the conductors, besides those already noted, included Mr. Aylmer Buesst (Hänsel and Gretel), Mr. Julius Harrison (Magic Flute, Phobus and Pan), and Mr. Leslie Heward (Savitri and The Perfect Fool). F. B.

MOZART AT THE 'OLD VIC.'

The annual Mozart Festival—and may it continue as long as the 'Old Vic.' has walls and we have ears!—which Miss Lilian Baylis provides for us ended on January 19 with Don Giovanni. It deserves more than a cursory record. We have heard a good deal lately about English opera and opera in English apropos of the scramble for Covent Garden, and it has been gravely said that the future turns on the possession of that repository of foreign memories during the coming summer. We wonder if those who allow their judgment to be thus clouded by the prestige of a single opera-house ever visit the 'Old Vic.' on Thursdays or Saturdays. And more particularly have they ever been there when the Mozart Festival was in progress?

Had they done so it is probable that they would be less disposed to pessimism about the future. For the 'Old Vic.' by sheer brains and hard work, has proved that not only can opera be given under such comparatively modest conditions as enable prices to be charged for admission which really bring it within the reach of the people, but that such limitations do not preclude a standard of achievement which in the case of Mozart opera attains undeniable excellence.

We do not mean to suggest that Mozart at the 'Old Vic.' is sung as he ought to be. Mr. Herman Klein asserts that the art of bel canto, which found its most perfect expression in Mozart's later operas, is as good as lost. If that be so we must not expect to find it preserved in Waterloo Bridge Road. But thanks in no small degree to Mr. E. J. Dent—whose admirable translations led a critic last year to write of a da Ponte Festival—at least we get very close to the Mozart tradition of setting and playing the operas. Take Don Giovanni for instance, in its wit and irony thoroughly typical of the 18th century, which refused to take life or death too seriously. The usual modern setting of this opera ends with the forced exit of the unrepentant Don, whom the devils remove to the place reserved for such libertines. But at the 'Old Vic.' no such concession is made to the amour propre of the leading tenor and the crude desire of the management for a drastic curtain. The original ending is given. The other characters clear up the intrigue. Anna agrees to marry Ottavio after a year of mourning, Elvira decides at length to enter a convent, Zerlina and Masetto go home to dinner. Leporello, in the same spirit of reason which was the distinguishing mark of that age, repairs to the nearest tavern to find a new master. But the convenances must first be observed. Leporello therefore, since it appears that Don Giovanni has gone 'to hell,' draws the moral:

'So to you, good friends before us,
We will sing a moral chorus,
Pray take heed and note it well.'

And the others join in with

'Sinner, pause and ponder well;
Mark the end of Don Giovanni,
Are you going to heaven or hell?'

This restores that atmosphere of comedy without which the opera is meaningless, or even revolting.

The same respect for tradition is shown in The Magic Flute, where the original division into two Acts is followed, and the many scenes are not separated by intervals while the scene-shifters get busy. These only give us time to ponder on the curious mentality of Schikaneder, who was responsible for the thousand absurdities of the libretto for which a thousand reasons have been adduced to prove their beauties.

To deal in more detail with the actual performances, The Marriage of Figaro, which led off the Festival, was given five times—twice more than either of the others. Technically it was the best of the three. Mr. Sumner Austin, the life and soul of the Festival, was quite admirable as Figaro, and acted with the most infectious high spirits. He gave us the accustomed thrill in 'Non più andrai'—Figaro's one great opportunity in the opera—and fairly brought the house down. How Mozart would love the way the applause at the 'Old Vic.' continually bubbles up—to the annoyance of highbrows who object to clapping till the music is over.

Miss Winifred Kennard, another old favourite, was the Countess, and sang her invocation to the god of love with much charm. Miss Kathleen Lafia, who was new to the part of Cherubino, after overcoming some preliminary nervousness, established herself in the affections of 'Old Vic.' audiences by her singing of 'Voi che sapete.' Her voice is of clear, attractive quality, and she has an unaffected style that suited the part well. Miss Muriel Gough, also well-known to 'Old Vic.' opera-goers, and a thoroughly competent soprano, played Susanna. Amongst those who took the minor rôles, the amusing Antonio of Mr. S. Harrison should be mentioned. He helped to bring out the delicious humour of the scene in the Countess's boudoir, in which Mozart reaches his high-water mark in the broader comedy.

Chorus, and especially orchestra, were more at home in Figaro than in The Magic Flute, which was the second opera of the Festival, though if anything its popularity appears to be greater than either of the others, in itself a tribute to the sound taste which the 'Old Vic.' has instilled into its patrons. Certainly it was thoroughly enjoyable, but without asking for impossibilities we should have liked to hear it better sung and the music better played. Papageno (Mr. Sumner Austin) deserves all the praise we can give him. Miss Cecile Whitefield as the Queen of Night did not disappoint us. But on the first night Miss Winifred Kennard appeared tired, and rather uncertain of her voice, and if the Three Genii were adequate, the same cannot be said of the Three Ladies. One of them, we believe, had just stepped into the part, so there may be an excuse. Miss Mary Bonin, by the way, made an elfish little Papagena, and we ought to mention Mr. Ewart Beech's amusing Monostatos. Doubtless the obvious imperfections of the first night were eliminated afterwards. The staging of the opera, the celerity with which the incidents succeeded one another, and the simple, yet effective, mounting were in the best traditions of the 'Old Vic.'

We have kept Don Giovanni till the end only to suffer the fate that so often happens to those who come last. Another year it shall have precedence. It must suffice to say that it brought the Festival to an end amidst great enthusiasm, and established Mozart more firmly than ever in the affections of those who in humbleness of heart go to the 'Old Vic.' to learn and not to criticise. H. E. W.

'BETHLEHEM' AT THE REGENT THEATRE

Mr. Rutland Boughton's setting of the old Coventry Nativity play, Bethlehem, at the Regent Theatre, was a Christmas entertainment out of the ordinary, for our theatres have principally in the past considered that season to be properly dedicated to transformation scenes, fairies in 'tights,' red noses, and the like. Nevertheless, the unassuming, homely presentation of the sacred story found a willing public, and it ran throughout January. Those who were the least pleased were those who had seen Bethlehem in its original circumstances—that is, as a village production, sung and played by the 'local talent' for which it had been composed. In that 'upper chamber' at Glastonbury everything was harmonious and apt. Mr. Boughton's frankly Victorian treatment of the carols was in place—it was what the local choristers expected and understood. And such strains as the Virgin's Lullaby —sung with all faultless grace by Miss Silk—made, in that little corner of the world, where it was always such a surprise to find anything at all musically good, an effect really fresh and affecting. The show at the Regent Theatre was, of course, very handsome and artistic, but the original rustic touch had gone. It was no improvement, surely, to have banished the carol-singing folk in favour of angels. Mr. Boughton's carol arrangements are so much more characteristically folkish than angelic. And we didn't at all care for the Regent Theatre's notions of Gothic.

The Glastonbury Virgin was a Perugino. Miss Gwen Ffrangcon-Davies at the Regent was a Burne-Jones. The shepherds watching their flocks by night were again delightfully of the English countryside. The good artists of the cast include Messrs. Johnstone-Douglas, Colin Ashdown, Frank Titterton, and Frederick Woodhouse. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted. C.

THE INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS

The thirty-fourth annual conference of the Incorporated Society of Musicians was held at the Examination Schools, Cambridge, on December 31 to January 4, under the presidency of Mr. Allen Gill. The chief papers read were by Sir Hugh Allen on 'The Man in the Street,' by Sir Dan Godfrey on 'Municipal Music and its Influence upon Musical Education,' and by Dr. Adrian C. Boulton (in the place of Sir Walford Davies) on 'The Ideal Concert Programme.' There were discussions on 'The Place of the Amateur in Music' and 'Harmony of Yesterday and To-day.'

On the morning of January 3, M. Louis Vierne, of Notre Dame, Paris, gave a recital on the Harrison organ at Trinity.

'THE MAN IN THE STREET'

'There are three categories of people,' Sir Hugh Allen said, 'who have any liking or aptitude or ability for music: (1) the people who really know about music; (2) the people who think they know, and don't; and (3) the people who think they don't, and do! The last sounds contradictory, but it means that they sometimes know without realising it! The "Man in the Street" seems to belong largely to this third category. Those who have learnt a little, dabbled in or pattered about in music, are perhaps the second class, and the first are the elect, the I.S.M. and such like who create, perform, think, and teach music with inspiration and intelligence. The second may be likened to those on the door-step, and the first really inside.

'In music it is difficult for the expert to see things with the eyes of the non-expert. We may say that most people are susceptible to music, and enjoy it in some kind of simple-minded way. Of these a certain number are qualified by training and natural ability; are able to get down to bed-rock, and enter into the beauty and meaning of the finest music. A great body is working to qualify to enter the select group. Outside this is by far the biggest number, who have no opportunity or time or means for developing their abilities by instruction and practice, and who look on music as a thing to fill up the chinks of life with jolly sounds, requiring no mental effort to absorb, and entailing no responsibilities. This body is the "Man in the Street." He has in him vast material for a fine musical development if carried on the right lines of simple, good music. And he has, without knowing it, the means of doing incalculable damage to musical progress.

'The number of people who have learnt or are learning music is perhaps a million. The rest form the body of the "Man in the Street." He is under no law as regards music; he belongs to no school; is free of all standards but the one he likes to adopt; is tied by no conventions, and is responsible to no one but himself. He might be considered as virgin soil from certain points of view. He has not, except in a few cases, been trained to listen. When he does listen, how does it affect him? He has got an ear all right, and it is trained for ordinary affairs of life and could be made much of for music.

'What is the influence of music on the "Man in the Street"? If only he could be reached by as much good music as possible he would be willing to trust to his judgment, for he is curiously apt to like good things if they are simple. If only he could get a standard, all would be well. This is being supplied in increasing quantity to children.

'Music is exceptionally under the public's control—more and more so as taste gets diffused. We rather overlook the fact that the wide promiscuous public has remarkable capacity for exercising an influence on music. The undeveloped mind which has no real musical intelligence likes being helped by being told that music represents something he understands. This undeveloped mind is especially subject to be imposed on and to fall a prey to commercialism.

'What is our attitude as musicians towards the "Man in the Street"? We always hope that he will be on our side. Composers want him to come and hear their works, when they must know that he is entirely unacquainted with their language. A great deal is being done in teaching children. The pianola, gramophone, and wireless are also influences, and some day a broadcasting set will be provided in every home. The Broadcasting Company is supplying a great deal of good music, and much other music. The danger is that people who do not like to listen-in to good music will bring pressure to bear on the Company.'

'MUNICIPAL MUSIC'

At the outset Sir Dan Godfrey claimed that it was the duty of Municipalities to take a deep interest in Music in all its aspects—and in Art generally—because it was incumbent upon them to do everything to elevate and refine the people. The question of profit or loss should not be made the first consideration. No direct profit was expected from public parks and pleasure grounds, which were for the benefit of the health of the people; and the same attitude should be adopted with regard to music.

Municipal music was no new thing, and nowadays it was more vital than ever before. It had been of long and slow growth, and at the present day there was on every hand active interest in the provision of music by civic bodies.

It should not be imagined that health resorts were the only place that provided Municipal Music. For example, one of the most flourishing Municipal enterprises was at Manchester—hardly a health resort!

At Birmingham the City Orchestra had been doing good work, and that city was well provided for educationally owing to the work done at the Midland Institute under Prof. Granville Bantock. The same account could be given of Liverpool, and Bath and Municipal Music were inseparable. A definite attitude had also been taken up by the Glasgow Corporation, who provided Saturday afternoon recitals, and organ recitals at various places in the city. Recently the Corporation had instituted a series of Evening Concerts in the City Hall. At Harrogate the Corporation spent something like £12,000 each season for concerts, which had been given for the past twenty-five years; at Leeds the Orchestral Concerts were well attended. Similar activity was going on at Eastbourne and Hastings. At Eastbourne amateur players had been introduced side by side with professionals. Eastbourne was to be felicitated upon the fact that it had been able to do this, and others might perhaps be able to follow the example, though personally, said Sir Dan, he had very serious doubts as to its real value.

The tradition so ably carried on in his day by the late Julian Clifford was being carefully fostered at Hastings. At Norwich, Municipal Music had been going on since the days of Sir Francis Drake. Bournemouth deserved every praise in the matter. There they had Symphony Concerts, festivals, and general work, and the young British composer was encouraged by granting him good opportunities for presenting his works. Sir Dan claimed that the day had passed when people stayed away from a concert because a British work was included in the programme.

He passed in review many other places, including London, and mentioned that the great difficulty was the increased cost of musicians' salaries. The only real solution was, he thought, the formation by the various Boroughs of permanent Municipal orchestras to give periodical concerts, and for the purpose of playing during the dinner-hour in factories or other business centres, thus applying the humanising influence of music to industry. This was a plan that might be adopted everywhere.

Touching upon municipal music in Germany, Sir Dan said that even compared with that country forty years ago we were much behind the times. When, as a boy, he passed six months at the town of Brunswick, there was a Municipal Theatre at which could be heard a concert one night, another night Shakespeare or Goethe, another night light opera, and another grand opera—and all at a very moderate cost. He mentioned this to show what could be done without profit-making!

Sir Dan also spoke of the great possibilities of the gramophone as a means of musical education in schools—given proper tuition. In cultivating the art of understanding, the use of the gramophone, in illustrating lectures in schools, was invaluable.

In conclusion, Sir Dan said it was the duty of the State, as represented by the Municipality, to see that there was proper amusement for the people, and if music were made that amusement it should combine education, for the more one knew of music the more one learnt. The future was in the hands of the young, and to the young they must look for the expression of public opinion which would force Municipal Music to be as universal as Municipal control.

'THE IDEAL CONCERT PROGRAMME'

Dr. Adrian C. Boult said that the ideal concert programme was comparatively rarely achieved. The art of programme-making was one of the most elusive things in the world. It might be possible to imagine a programme made up of acknowledged masterpieces and yet arranged in such a way that one-half of the audience would call it a bad programme, and the other half would call it a good programme. It might be of interest to try to discover some of the reasons for this divergence of taste and the principles which governed the whole question.

The first principles, Dr. Boult explained, were Unity and Variety. The question then arose, How were these qualities to be applied? The principle of Unity was much the more difficult to maintain, and was often sadly lacking in this country. Our audiences were partly to blame. Their preference was usually on the side of Variety, and they seemed inclined to treat the concert like a succession of turns at a music-hall instead of following it almost as they did the scenes of a play, leading them forward from the first words to the ultimate conclusion. But this blame also reflected on the concerts given, for how was an audience to know what a well-built programme was if it never experienced one?

In concerts where smaller forces were engaged, from the string quartet to the recital of the single artist (and in this category may be included the unaccompanied choir), Unity was largely supplied by the nature of the forces employed, and for a not very musical audience Variety was the virtue to be cultivated. In a concert of an unaccompanied choir, as in a vocal recital, a large number of very short works must be assembled into groups which must themselves obey our two conditions.

Dr. Boult then dealt with the special problems of miscellaneous concerts organized by local associations. The personal wishes of performers should, he said, be disregarded so far as possible, and the music should be arranged with reference to its poetic and musical content. Chronology was worth considering, modern works coming more readily later in a programme. It was as well to alternate vocal and instrumental things. Items involving a large number of performers come best at the end. It was wise to have an interval, for the social side should not be neglected, but short concerts were best—those which could be taken in one gulp, so to speak, with no need for rest in the middle. Real enjoyment would come only when the mind was keen and active throughout a performance. Any work in which the audience could be invited to join should be welcomed; the mere physical act of standing up and singing was a tonic itself, to say nothing of the mental and moral stimulus.

There were two factors, said Dr. Boult, to a successful concert: adequate performance and sympathetic listeners. Both must be considered in relation to our two principles. Take listeners first. Some audiences, those at Amsterdam, for example, enjoyed a one-composer programme. With an audience like that of the I.S.M., which was keen on Unity, the stiffest programme was welcome, and it disliked too great violence of contrast. London was changing remarkably. Time was when the famous Promenade Concerts ran on night after night in an unbroken stream of unblushing Variety. Now Unity was asserting itself, and the most crowded nights were Mondays, when Wagner was played, and Fridays, which were devoted to classics (including at least one work by Bach). The popular Saturday programme was also crowded, but Sir Henry Wood was gradually leading his audience on to the Unity of good music.

Dr. Boult said that a quite unmusical audience would accept the classics in a most remarkable way.

'THE PLACE OF THE AMATEUR'

Sir Hugh Allen, in opening this discussion, quoted the remark that Handel was so great and simple that only professional musicians could misunderstand him. Dr. Markham Lee pointed out the wide knowledge and keen critical faculty of the modern amateur—largely fostered by mechanical reproductions. Mr. Frank Roscoe said that the amateur should strive with all his might to become a professional, and the professional should keep his soul alive by remaining an amateur.

'HARMONY OF YESTERDAY AND TO-DAY'

Dr. Eaglefield Hull dealt with the technical aspect, and Mr. E. J. Dent with the historical aspect of this subject; it was regretted that Mr. Eugène Goossens could not be present to deal with the composer's side.

Sir Hugh Allen said that harmony must be defined as making things fit. But we had not yet found out whether modern harmonies fitted. That was for the future to tell, and was an important thing to remember. If harmony had done nothing else, it had provided more ground for conjecture and criticism than anything else, and the subject needed a whole Conference to itself.

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

During the vacation a competition for the recently-established Wesley Exhibition took place, and as the conditions run on somewhat unusual lines, it may be of interest to describe some salient features of this award.

The Exhibition was founded by the bequest of the late Rev. Francis G. Wesley in memory of his grandfather, great-uncle, and father—Samuel, Charles, and Samuel Sebastian Wesley—with a view to encouraging among students of the College an art closely associated with the Wesleys, namely, extemporising. But the exercise of this art being nowadays something more than the prerogative of church organists, the conditions of the competition go farther afield, and provide for the improvising of 'bridges' between the numbers of a cycle or group of songs, and even for the extemporising of incidental music to a film shown on a screen.

On the occasion of this, the second competition for the Exhibition, the competitors were first tested in their ability to improvise on certain themes—especially on some selected from the organ works of the Wesleys.

They then repaired with the examiners to the Strand Cinema, where, by the courtesy of Mr. Boekbinder, the proprietor, a special film was privately shown. This film illustrated a short, romantic episode, full of variety and not too sudden changes of mood, affording scope for development of musical material as well as for atmosphere and characterisation. The film was first shown to the competitors together, and was then run through to each of them separately. Having thus had some warning of the length and moods of the various scenes, the competitors had to improvise incidental music simultaneously with the presentation of the pictures. The level of performance in this test—both in invention and execution—was high, and no little skill was also shown in the extemporisation on the Wesley and other themes. Taking all the circumstances of the competition into account, the examiners decided that the award of the Exhibition should go to Mr. Thomas Armstrong, who may count himself fortunate in that the distinction is worth £40 for one year, with a possible extension for another year.

At this early date of the term it must suffice to record that the College reassembled for the Easter term on January 14, when a large crowd of students and their relatives attended to hear the terminal address of the director, Sir Hugh Allen. These 'director's addresses' have been an informal means of opening the term ever since the foundation of the College, and though they are personal to members of the College, and therefore not amenable to public comment, it is permissible to say—and we could hardly say more—that the addresses of the present Director fittingly uphold the tradition laid down by Sir George Grove and Sir Hubert Parry.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

It is encouraging to be able to state that the New Year for the College has opened brightly, the number of students again showing an increase. A prominent feature of the enrolment is that of the larger number of students who continue to enter for tuition in the theoretical musical subjects, in addition to pianoforte and violin playing, singing, &c.—a fact surely indicating a more fundamental interest in music on the part of the amateur.

The College class for training clergy and candidates for Holy Orders in the efficient rendering of the priest's part in the services of the Church, has also proved a most successful institution under the direction of Dr. George Oldroyd.

The inaugural address, delivered by Mr. W. W. Cobbett, a member of the College Corporation, on the subject of 'General Culture among Musicians,' was attended by an appreciative audience. The address was followed by the distribution of diplomas and prizes recently gained by students, and a short programme of music was performed.

A College student—Eric Harding Thimann—was one of the three successful B.Mus. candidates at the recent London University examinations. Mr. Thimann has held one of the three 'University degree' scholarships at Trinity for the past three years.

The result of the Scholarship competition in January, 1924, is as follows (all these scholarships are awarded for one year, except where otherwise stated): Pianoforte—Elga V. Collins, Helena A. Horgan, Norman W. G. Tucker; Singing—Violet Annear, Dorothy N. Fox, Richard F. Reader, Myrtle C. Stewart, Ted Warburton; Organ—George E. Ansell; Double-Bass—Jessie Mason; Violoncello—Gastone Marinari; Clarinet—Walter H. Scrutten; Violin—Harry Blech, Albert Bregman. For one term only—Helen M. Sharman (pianoforte); for two terms only—Alexandrina Stringer (singing).

London Concerts

THE BACH CHOIR

The Bach Choir's concert at Queen's Hall on December 18 gave no rest to those who like to get on terms with music while listening to it. Every work was either new or one that does not yield easy acquaintance. The Pastoral Symphony of Dr. Vaughan Williams, for instance, does not tell its secrets to a casual friend, but has to be wooed into self-revelation—and what chances have we for courtship? Here is a work which we are permitted to like or not to like, just as we may like, or not like, our Bartoks, Schönbergs, and French half-dozen. But these we may dislike, and freely say so. The Pastoral Symphony we may not dislike, or we lose caste. Wrapped up in it is a composer's self-confession, and it says, on every page, 'If you don't follow this, admit that the fault is in your understanding.' The same challenge, or apology, has been read into other works of our day that have failed to reach the multitude, but none of them speak it with truth as this simple-speaking, remote Symphony. The music has no bar of striving or stumbling. It is like a dream of sad happiness—a requiem for Pan, with no word of grief. It should have a small Bayreuth, somewhere in Kent or Surrey, and no overtures, tone-poems, or other unpoetical things should be let in to jostle it.

If the Symphony must have a setting, Dr. Vaughan Williams gave it the best that could be devised: Harold Samuel in a Bach Concerto and Byrd's This day Christ is born. This was the Choir's most dignified task; the most anxious was Holst's Ode to Death. This again is a work that ingratiates itself gradually even after a prepossessing start. It does for Walt Whitman just what music should do—not 'reproduce the spirit of the poem, &c.,' but get deeper into it and tell of the mystic lower strata that the average reader of the poem might not contemplate. The technical ingenuities of the music, too, take on a fresh interest at every hearing, and as the Ode to Death came twice in the programme, it rode into great esteem. Holst's Festival Te Deum, a very decided utterance, opened the evening. The finale was Three Carols by Mr. Peter Warlock, which came in as aptly as a Finale of an old-time symphony does. The second of them, sweet in tune and harmony (sweet as a bed of flowers rather than a bowl of sugar) was encored. Choral society conductors, if present, surely took notice. Criticism, on its best behaviour, nods benign approval. M.

CAROLS

Even plain folk among us own the sway of music as the handmaid of sentiment, to put it no higher. At the traditional Christmas concert of the Royal Choral Society they assisted, as usual, in filling the Albert Hall to capacity. Sentiment put the trained singers on their mettle, sentiment induced the audience to join them with obvious sincerity in Adeste Fideles and Noël, and, by the same token, the usually callous critic found it irksome to produce the serviceable foot-rule of his calling. Occasion for its strict application was, however, infrequent. The Society has rarely given more sensitive exhibitions of unaccompanied part-singing than some secured by its conductor, Mr. H. L. Balfour. The Coventry Carol might have been breathed by the angelic host itself. Its primitive strains represent perhaps the ideal type, surpassing the gold, frankincense, and myrrh distilled by subsequent sophistication for the allurements of intellect. In Bach's harmonization of In Dulci Jubilo, God rest you merry, Gentlemen, The Wassail Song, and Good King Wenceslas expert expression was wedded to simple conception—only in What Child is this? was mortality seriously betrayed. The more complicated beauties of Holst's Lullay, my Liking, and the garland woven by Dr. R. Vaughan Williams were displayed with similar fidelity. Ballads of an appropriate burden were interpolated by Miss Dora Labbette, Miss Carmen Hill, Mr. Archibald Winter, and Mr. Herbert Heyner. Messrs. Berkeley Mason and R. Arnold Greir were at the pianoforte and organ. H. F.

ARNOLD BAX'S SYMPHONY

As Mr. Holbrooke has frequently urged, second performances are as important in their way as the first. And as they usually do not obtain the same notoriety, all the more credit goes to Sir Henry Wood this winter at his Saturday afternoons at Queen's Hall. Among his various second performances of interest, that of Arnold Bax's Symphony in E flat minor on January 12 stood out. Has Mr. Bax ever been reproached with easy-going diffuseness? In this Symphony, and other pieces of its period, he certainly earns nothing of the sort. Here he is consciously concentrating with clenched fists and unyielding foothold.

We have in this Symphony music of a tense violence, and gather that a poetic soul has been affronted with something of singular monstrosity and woefulness in the doings of a wicked world. And what should that be, for a poetic soul of our generation, but the events of 1914 and after? We may wonder if the composer is not still too freshly quivering under the outrage to his sensibility to have made a final expression—this music is not 'emotion remembered in tranquillity,' but an immediate reaction to the shock, in a moment in which all raging retorts are good. The slow movement, a Lament of deeply sombre but rich colouring, is that in which pure music has most indubitably disengaged itself from the conflict. Elsewhere we may feel that his crowding thoughts and passionate feelings are not entirely solved. The Symphony remains a work of a rare order of imaginativeness, not to speak of its abundant technical invention.

Emil Sauer, the pianist, was heard again at this concert after his long absence. He played in Chopin's E minor Concerto. The venerable artist was consummately elegant. It was pleasant to see the audience so taken with this aristocratic sort of pianoforte playing. C.

MR. GOOSSENS'S CONCERT

The first of Mr. Eugène Goossens's projected series of five chamber concerts was given at Æolian Hall on January 16. We are to have from them between now and next May works of Armstrong Gibbs (new String Quartet), Eugène Bonner (songs), E. Goossens (songs, pianoforte, and harp pieces), Arnold Bax (Oboe and String Quintet), Herbert Bedford (songs), Arthur Bliss (new String Quartet), and Stravinsky, Schönberg, Roussel, and Charles Lefebvre.

The first concert began with Goossens's Philip II. Overture, played by a small orchestra of the first quality, which later on gave us Bedford's Hamadryad, which had been heard at Queen's Hall a few weeks before. Darius Milhaud's Catalogue de Fleurs, for voice and small orchestra, was new. M. Milhaud has been struck (as who has not?), with the peculiar unctuous lyricism of a seedsman's catalogue—apparently very much the same thing in France as here. The text of this composition might almost be an extract from an actual trade catalogue—thus the seventh song: 'Eremurus Isabellinus. It is guaranteed to bloom. The stem of this magnificent species sometimes attains six feet. Its flowers are of a fine colour between yellow and pink, and last well. Prices on application.'

Such is the reaction against the poet's praise of flowers in the past. They certainly overworked their roses and lilies, and so did their attendant composers, to the point that a truly modern youth can hardly bear the name of them, still less their traditional symbolism. Sing a song of the crocuses most suitable for growing in saucers, either alone or with other seasonable bulbs! It was a nice idea, only we couldn't help feeling that M. Milhaud had left most of the song out. Only the advertisement of a new line in hyacinths (No. 4), which was brief and rather pretty, made anything of a song-like effect. Possibly a bold kind of parlando was wanted, with humour. Miss Esther Coleman delivered the text (which, after all, is a joke) with a rather timid sort of grace. It was sung in French, of course, and everyone at a Goossens concert knows French, at least, as well as English; but to sing an elaborate joke tellingly in French is not so easy. Miss Coleman might, by the way, note that in 'œufs' the f is mute.

There was an extraordinarily accomplished performance of Stravinsky's ballet suite The Soldier's Fiddle (L'Histoire au Soldat), a work not heard here since the Ansermet performance of 1920. This is more or less the Stravinsky of Petrushka, only a degree or two bolder, more direct, eliminatory, cutting, and rasping. The ballet is a rustic ballet, and Stravinsky with his cornet, trombone, and drums has set out to make music that should be the equivalent of the crudest sort of coloured wood-cuts on a broadsheet. The source of suggestion has been the sounds of the merry-go-round at a fair. We do not forget that the soldier's fiddle was, as the synopsis tells us, a cheap fiddle, and the soldier made no vain pretence to elegance of execution. He scraped on the strings with primitive zest. The noise all along is barbarous—but of what a sharply calculated barbarousness! This music, so far from flattering gentle tastes, outrages them at all points. But how can the fantastical wit of it be denied? The little score is written for seven virtuosos. They were: Mr. Reillie (violin), Mr. Watson (double-bass), Mr. Draper and Mr. Dubrucq (clarinet and bassoon), Mr. Barr and Mr. Stamp (cornet and trombone), and Mr. Wheelhouse (percussion). C.

EMIL SAUER

The reading of Beethoven's Appassionata, which M. Emil Sauer gave at his recital at Wigmore Hall, on January 19, might be explained by a plea that he is an elderly man and past the fire of youth, or another that he is naturally incapable of the musical and emotional depths that are necessary for a proper playing of this work. The true explanation is, however, far simpler, and can be found in the reading he gave of Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso. Than his playing of this, it is hard to imagine, and perhaps impossible to remember, a more exquisite performance, though we do not admit such ignorance of the work itself as the writer of the programme-notes, who, because it is not in the regular concert repertoire of the bigger pianists, says that 'it is possible that (he) would write of it entirely differently after to-day's performance than before it'! The quality of mind which M. Sauer here displayed has no one technical term; it was the quality of understanding the pianoforte in precisely the same way that Mendelssohn, when writing this admirable Rondo, understood it. He is simply a pure pianist, a man whose mind and fingers are exactly suited to the instrument itself, more than to the music, unless the music happens to be wholly suited to and conceived in the soul of the pianoforte. There is the supporting evidence of his technique, which is entirely under his control, perfectly even, and never gives the faintest suspicion of a fault—except in the use of the sustaining pedal. There is, too, his manner of classical restraint. Further, if anything else is necessary, there is the testimony of his handling of the rather unmusical ending of Chopin's first Impromptu; by his pianistic ability M. Sauer made it explicable, if not excusable. So, what can we expect with the Appassionata? That is not pianism, but music, and it is not part of M. Sauer's métier. His handling of the repeated chords that link the two last movements was alone enough to show this, for as mere loud chords they are not significant in repetition. The whole lacked continuity, rhythmic drive, darkness of colour; the rhythm was individual without being full of meaning. But turn to Rameau's Gavotte and Variations, to the Rondo Capriccioso, to the Chopin Etudes which were played as encores—and you have exquisite playing, playing of the highest rank, playing that shows the real value of the pianoforte. M. Sauer has not perhaps quite the Chopin hand: in the Nocturne (Op. 9, No. 2) the pianism was perfect; only the sentiment was lacking—and the same with Schumann's Romance. Here the attenuated Romanticism had the compensation of a lovely handling of the mere notes. The programme closed with pieces by the player and by Smetana, and with Liszt's Mazeppa Etude and Rêve d'Amour (as he called it in his book of words).

H. J. F.

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Miss Dorothy Silk sang some Bach and Purcell at Mr. Gerald Cooper's concert on January 11, and we were reminded of the singing which is an art—something altogether beyond the stumbling and stammering of everyday singing. Mr. Leon Goossens's oboe playing was as good, and everything else helped to make this evening bright and beautiful.

Miss Katharine Arkandy's singing at Æolian Hall was somewhat faulty, and it was explained that she was indisposed. We were the sorrier for this since there were signs that in favourable circumstances she might have won exceptional praise. At its best moments Miss Arkandy's voice was steely bright and so lightly poised and flexible that the vocal ornaments in the music were indeed ornamental. Her breath control was firm enough, and though she did not strive for big tone her slender voice had carrying power. The programme was an assembly of coloratura pieces. It included moderately interesting novelties by Braunsfels and Pfitzner.

Mr. Ingo Simon sang at Wigmore Hall a good programme which testified to his taste and ingenuity, and his singing was that of an artist. It was not faultless. It was marred by certain mannerisms and hybrid vowels. But it had the dignity and interest of a good chamber style, seriously calculated, not ardent (Eritu even was given with a certain discretion which took us far away from operatic associations). It was precisely this urbanity of the singer, this absence of electrical disturbance, which gave the right tone to some of the sensible English songs—songs 'with no nonsense about them.'

Miss Esther Coleman, at Æolian Hall, should have endeavoured to persuade us that she was more interested in her songs (Brahms, Cyril Scott, Milhaud). She was steady, she kept to pitch against difficulties, and her voice was pretty up to a point. But the effect generally was lukewarm. In Immer leiser the singer was at sea.

Miss Norah Pasley, at Wigmore Hall, sang with a light soprano voice that was agreeable in the more modern items of the programme. Mr. Percy Judd, made a premature appearance, and ought to go back to study. His voice was dry, his singing unpersuasive. But he has assets in good diction and a straightforward platform manner.

Miss Helen Henschel, at Wigmore Hall, accompanied herself as usual with neatness, although the imposing newspaper article which, a day or two later, urged other singers to go and do likewise, was something near an absurdity. It is rather pleasant to hear Miss Henschel so intelligently contriving a double debt to pay, especially in folk-songs, but all the while we reflect that not the concert-hall, but the drawing-room, is the place where her accomplishments would be most appropriate.

In various directions there has been marked progress in the singing of the British National Opera Company at Covent Garden since last summer. Whatever the shortcomings, we must more than ever hope that the Company's existence is adequately secured, and will increasingly flourish—for in the long run its activities, maintained at the present level, must count enormously in developing English operatic singing. A destructive critic could—nothing easier—pick holes in a good many of the performances, but what it is much fairer and more useful to recognise is the abundance of true talent, quick wit, and honest intention, which (often with inadequate guidance, scamped rehearsing, and no traditions) are here busily at work, sometimes achieving capital things, and, still more, laying foundations for a better future.

Several of the younger members of the Company are quite touching in the way they assert themselves. If we were not so certain that they mean well we could call them aggressive in so boldly putting themselves forward instead of the parts they are playing. It simply is that they have not yet realised how to fit themselves into the frame. What more than anything hampers the inexperienced singer is the impossibility of hearing himself as others hear him. A properly produced voice escapes the singer, and it takes time to learn that tones apparently ineffective are very possibly one's best. Even singers of eminence may be uncertain. A celebrated bass told me that once when singing as one of the giants in Rheingold he felt so overwhelmed by the power of the voice of his fellow-giant that he was tempted to throw prudence to the winds and shout. Happily he resisted, and in reality he had no cause for any concern.

Several of the younger B.N.O.C. singers are over-impressed by the size of Covent Garden, and consequently exert themselves for big tone at the expense of finely modelled phrasing. There is too little artistic delicacy. We have heard far too rarely a true mezzo-voce, and singers who ought to know better adopt at moments a curious parlando style of their own, from which music is nearly dropped. But whatever we miss at these performances, we are grateful for much that is done, and heartily believe that the B.N.O.C. deserves of the community still more than it gets. A permanent English opera company means everything for the future of singing in England. Present confused standards and inadequate technics are the fruit of the old quasi-monopoly of Covent Garden by foreign languages and foreign singers.

H. J. K.

The Ealing Philharmonic Society sang Stanford's Blue Bird, Elgar's After many a dusty mile, Balfour Gardiner's Cargoes, Holst's Hampshire folk-song Swansea Town, and other folk-song arrangements, on January 17, under the direction of Mr. E. Victor Williams. The orchestra played a Brandenburg movement, Elgar's Serenade in E, a Mozart Rondo, and Grainger's Mock Morris. Both choir and orchestra acquitted themselves with great credit.

Two lectures will be given at King's College, Strand, on February 14 and 21, at 5.30, by Dr. E. W. Scripture, on 'What the voice looks like' (illustrated by experiments and lantern slides) and 'The Psycho-analysis of the Poet.'

THE BALANCE OF EXPRESSION AND DESIGN IN MUSIC

On January 8, Sir Henry Hadow gave the second of his three lectures on the above subject, before the Musical Association, at the College of Preceptors.

He began by pointing out that there were two theories in regard to music. One was that it was the youngest of the arts, and was therefore just beginning to face problems which the other arts had had to encounter years, even centuries, ago. The other was that it was the oldest of the arts, as we found at the beginnings of human history evidences of susceptibility to music, and even some means of expressing it. Though contrary, both propositions were true. It all depended upon whether we regarded music as a separate entity, with laws and methods of its own, or whether we regarded it as an accessory to something else—to the words of a poem, or to the rhythms of the dance.

The beginnings of our music could be illustrated by two tributaries, the Greek and the Hebrew. There were certain examples of Greek music still extant, such as the Hymn to the Muse and the Hymn to Apollo. There was a glamour about anything which contained the word Greek. We thought that anything Greek must be the best possible of its kind, and we were not far wrong. Yet when we came across specimens of Greek music we were woefully disappointed, for of all the wearisome forms of music in the world these were the worst. So far as we could see, there was no sense, no music, no delight at all in the Hymn to Apollo. That was a thing needing investigation. How was it that the Greeks should have excelled in sculpture and poetry, in philosophy and politics, and other occupations of the human spirit, and yet have failed so lamentably in music?

Greek music aimed at something totally different from what we mean by music to-day; it was a method of reciting poetry. If we thought of it from that point of view, many of the difficulties disappeared. The whole aim and object of Greek music was expression; there was no evidence of what we called musical design in it at all. In its origin it was intended entirely for the recitation of verse, and the Greek musical instrument was used in the first place solely for doubling the voice, without an idea of playing an independent part. The Greek writers on music all regarded the instrument as being secondary to the voice. The whole aim was directed towards fixing the actual up and down movements of the speaking voice.

We all had our favourite landmarks in the history of music, and perhaps one of the most important was the time—if we could ascertain it—when tune was first detached from the words for which it was originally written; when it went out into the void and became an entity itself; when it could be used by itself or appended to another set of words than those to which it belonged. Of the existence of a tune in itself, a tune which was not necessarily verbal, there was no evidence in Greek at all. The criticisms we got of Greek music by Greeks, all were rhythmical, not musical; they dealt with merely the emotional effect of the particular kind of thing sung.

Music must have held an extraordinarily meagre position in the everyday life of the people. Some dances no doubt had instrumental accompaniment, but not many of them; the greater portion of the dances were choral. But there was enough evidence, so far as it went, to indicate that in Greek music the whole effect was produced by the treatment of words. The idea of music as a detachable thing had not yet come into existence.

But turn to the Old Testament—it was saturated with music. The Jews held themselves debarred from pictorial representation or sculpture, and therefore the whole of their artistic nature was concentrated upon music. The Old Testament was full of it. There was the great Music School which David established at Jerusalem, with a choir of four thousand voices and an orchestra of harps, &c., which varied in size. At a big ceremonial there would be a hundred and twenty trumpets, and to balance these the whole of the orchestra must have been considerable. There was not only Temple music; there was obviously much secular music as well—music for the marriage-feast, for the vintage festival, and so on. One could not read the Song of Solomon without being sure that it was intended for music. There was music in every line of it. A paper on 'Synagogue Music,' by the Rev. F. L. Cohen, at the Anglo-Jewish Exhibition of 1887, told us all that scholarship had discovered up to the present. From this we learned that the expressions such as Gittith, Alamoth, &c., prefixed to some of the Psalms referred not to instruments, as had been supposed, but to melodies. The preposition which is translated 'upon' in our version should be 'to the tune of.' These tunes were evidently detachable, and could be treated as things by themselves, which was an enormously important matter.

When musical historians told us we owed so much to the Greeks, we were probably a little beside the mark. There was more evidence of Hebrew influence than they were ready to admit. At any rate, the Greek and Hebrew streams flowed into our civilization, and after a long, dark period, began once more to influence and affect the course of our mediæval music.

The next very important landmark was when harmony and rhythm came into existence. Without going into the origin of this, it might be said that Sumus is icumen in pointed to a generation of skilful achievement which we had lost. Now the discovery of harmonic, and especially of polyphonic, treatment cut two ways. It very much enlarged the scope of design; the musician could make ever so much more beautiful designs in music with many parts than with only one. It was not so obvious, but equally true, that discoveries in polyphonic elaboration could have enormous effect upon the emotional content of music. The emotional effect of an unexpected chord or a beautiful, unexpected succession of chords, or still more of a beautiful and unexpected modulation, was a matter of common experience. The discovery of polyphony not only had its effect in the weaving together of the texture of the music, but also an equally important part—although that was not sufficiently regarded—in the gradual emotional development of the art.

Then there was another stream which flowed into that period of our musical history. Not only was there the feeling of design coming into existence as a thing of itself; not only was the feeling of expression beginning also to make itself felt more keenly than before, but there was also the sense of familiarity. Once you get detachable tunes, then these become the common property of the citizen, just as people like old favourite tunes nowadays. Composers soon found that familiarity was in itself an asset, a means of expression, and they began to use folk-songs round which to weave their more elaborate music. Thus Masses were written round folk-songs. There did not seem to be any particular regard for the words. The balance had swung into the composer thinking entirely of musical design, of making an effect of pure beauty.

As time went on, scholars came after the artists and composers, and employed more and more ingenious elaboration, getting farther and farther away from anything like music, until at length the thing was brought to a reductio ad absurdum. That was what must happen if you left emotion, and regarded music as a pattern of sounds. Then a gradual change came, and, beginning with the madrigalists, composers began to make their music more expressive. As harmony and the power of striking harmonic colour developed, so the resources of music as expressing emotion became more and more vivid, to which must be added the enormous influence caused by the discovery of new instruments. There could be no doubt that the gathering together of the instruments of the orchestra in Beethoven's time, or that the development of the orchestra in the 19th century, had given music a greater power of stirring the emotions.

So from time to time through the history of music the balance had gradually swung from side to side. There were two different ideals which in some form or another were combined in almost all music, although examples could be found separate in some periods of our musical history. Greek music was almost entirely built on expression; it had little sense of musical design. The feeling for pure music in its beginning was Hebraic. These streams converged; then gradually one got ahead of the other; but they ran side by side through the whole of musical history.

The attainment of the fiftieth year of the Musical Association was celebrated by a dinner at the Connaught Rooms, on January 8. There was a large and distinguished company, numbering a hundred and twenty-five. Sir Hugh Allen presided, and, in responding to the toast of the 'Musical Association,' proposed by Sir Henry Hadow in an interesting and felicitous speech, adumbrated certain ways in which the Society's work might be enhanced and extended, especially if, as he strongly urged, it should receive increased support from the musicians of to-day. Other toasts were spoken to by Sir Frederick Bridge, Mr. J. B. McEwen, Mr. James Swinburne, and Mr. J. Percy Baker. Schubert's Quintet in C, with two 'cellos, was admirably played by the Mandeville Quintet.

'WEE MEN' AT BIRMINGHAM: RUTLAND BOUGHTON'S MUSIC

The 'Wee Men' are the mischievous imps of Scottish folk-lore, and one night they are on the prowl for a baby girl; the eldest old-man of the tribe is to be forced to take a bride. The Blue Lady with her baby flees from them; she leaves the baby safe behind the protecting rowan over the lintel of the door of the cottage of Grandpa Grumps the village cobbler. But a cantankerous customer, wishing to do him harm that night, removes the rowan, and the 'wee men' enter and make off with the precious baby. The baby's name is James, however, which proves to the 'wee men' that he cannot be a girl; but before their mistake has been discovered they have endowed him with 'the wings of imagination, the bowl of pathos, and the feather of laughter.' We learn just before the end that the baby's surname was Barrie, and a solution of a literary problem as convincing as most has been propounded to us. The authoresses of a children's play of considerable charm are two Scottish ladies, Misses Brenda Girvin and Monica Cosens, and the incidental music is by Rutland Boughton. Produced at the Repertory Theatre, Birmingham, on December 26, for a five weeks' run, the little musical play met with a good deal of enthusiasm from children of all ages, in spite of an infusion of Scottish dialect well enough done to be a trifle baffling to the Birmingham public, but scarcely well enough done to pass for the real thing.

A 'Rowan' duet for Grandpa and his niece Patsy early in the cottage scene has an attractive lilt; it is an interpolated number, and not by Mr. Boughton. The composer of The Immortal Hour is never at a loss, however, when dealing with fairies and other unseen people, and the airy lightness of his music to the scenes in which these play a part is just the sort of thing which carries conviction. He has his own formulas for the unseen, of course, and those who know his Fiona Macleod settings do not need to be told what these are, but they are here tempered very finely to the mood of a play designed to appeal to the child mind. A March of the Wee Men is conceived in a vein at once simple and grotesque which is extremely captivating when heard in association with the action devised to accompany it. The score does not suggest that the composer spent much time in polishing it, but Mr. Boughton's first-hand thoughts are nearly always his most apt, and in this music he accomplishes what he set out to do.

The production was in the hands of the Repertory Theatre's dramatic company, and what the singing lacked in style and vocal beauty was well compensated for by the zest put into it. Mr. Cedric Hardwicke as the Oldest Wee Man was particularly good, and Mr. Scott Sunderland gave a delightful study of Grandpa. Miss Phyllis Shand's Patsy was vivacious and girl-like; Mr. Hedley Briggs, as a Puppy in kilts, had a part to baffle any actor, yet got some sort of dramatic credibility out of it; and Miss Eileen Beldon and Mr. Melville Cooper were among others who did good work. Mr. Appleby Matthews directed an orchestra which left something to be desired at the first performance, but improved as the season went on. The scenery and costumes by Mr. Paul Shelving were generally tasteful. His 'wee men' belied their name, and though he had to take what he could get, they were not the 'wee men' of tradition. The dancing was not a strong feature of the production. GLADYS WARD.

Music in the Provinces

ABERYSTWYTH.—The first College concert of a new session, on January 11, included a lecture given at the pianoforte by Sir Walford Davies, on Musical Subjects, in which he dealt particularly with the importance of listening. Grieg's Sonata in A minor, for 'cello and pianoforte, and Mozart's Trio in G, were played, and a small choir sang Arcadelt's Bow down Thine ear.

BARRY.—The County School gave its fourth annual symphony concert on December 19. It was a conspicuous triumph for a secondary school music-making, for the boys' orchestra played Mozart's Jupiter Symphony, Boëllmann's Symphonic Variations for 'cello and orchestra, with Mrs. Christopher Whitehead as soloist, and Mendelssohn's Fingal's Cave Overture. Mr. Christopher Whitehead conducted. A Beethoven String Quartet and a Bach Violin Duet were also performed.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—The City Orchestra's Sunday concert, on December 23, was in aid of the Mail Christmas Tree Fund, the members of the Orchestra on this occasion giving their services. Mr. Appleby Matthews secured a finely rhythmic reading of the New World Symphony, the cor anglais solo being beautifully played by Mr. Whittaker. Edward German's Welsh Rhapsody, perhaps the composer's best work in the orchestral medium, and a selection from Ponchielli's opera, La Gioconda, were included in the programme. In Bach's My heart ever faithful, Miss Gladys Aird-Briscoe was a tasteful, if somewhat conventional, singer. Mr. Alan Head's singing on the following Sunday may be similarly described. Saint-Saëns's Le Rouet d'Omphale, Sibelius's Swan of Tuonela, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony were ably conducted by Mr. Appleby Matthews. A feature of the concert on January 6 was Miss Mary Abbott's playing of Tchaikovsky's Pianoforte Concerto in B flat minor. Her sound technique, supported as it is by considerable gifts for vital phrasing and tone gradation, enabled her to compass the difficult work with astonishing success. On January 13, at the Futurist Theatre, Max Bruch's G minor Violin Concerto, played by Mr. Paul Beard, proved greatly to the taste of a large audience. Mr. Beard's lovely, velvety tone drew every ounce of romanticism from the well-known work. Two Bach songs, My heart now is merry, and the big bass aria from the Christmas Oratorio, were skillfully sung by Mr. Leslie Bennett. Beethoven's Rondino in E flat for wind instruments left much to be desired in the matter of tonal ensemble, though Smetana's Bartered Bride Overture was brilliantly played by the orchestra. Conducted by Dr. Adrian C. Boulton, the Festival Choral Society, in conjunction with the City Orchestra, gave a performance of The Messiah on December 26. Several of the rarely-heard numbers—e.g., 'Their sound is gone out,' 'The Lord gave the Word,' and the bass solo, 'Thou art gone up on high'—were included. The conductor's reading proved singularly impressive. Messdames Lilian Stiles-Allen and Clara Serena, and Messrs. Robert Radford and Walter Hyde, were the soloists. A concert in the 'Classical' series brought the De Reszke Singers, who gave part-songs by Elgar, Liszt, and others. Bratza, and a new pianist, M. Dushko Yovanovitch, also played. At the 'Mid-day Concert' on January 4, Mr. Walter Heard played several flute solos. Admiration for his skill was, however, submerged in dislike of the trivial works chosen. Mr. Karl Melene sang tastefully in Somervell's music to Tennyson's Maud cycle, but the settings are hardly appropriate to the beautiful poems. Three members of the Philharmonic Pianoforte Quartet played Alfred Wall's Trio in B flat on January 11. Judged by this work, the composer possesses considerable constructive gifts. The slow movement, based on a Hebrew tune, is singularly attractive; the other movements also suggest a gift for fine, sweeping melody. With the collaboration of the 'cellist the unfinished Quartet of Lekeu was given.

BOGNOR.—The Bognor Bach Choir gave its second concert on December 17, with a well varied selection of works by Parry, Stanford, Vaughan Williams, Boughton, Debussy, Hahn, &c. A group of folk-songs were joined in by the audience. Voting on the items produced an interesting result—the top of the poll was shared by Vaughan Williams's Wassail Song and a two-pianoforte arrangement of L'Après-midi d'un Faune. Mr. Norman Demuth conducted.

BRIDGWATER.—At the November meeting of the Musical Club, a Bach programme included a Trio in G for flute, violin, and pianoforte, a Sonata in A for flute and pianoforte, and another in G for violin and pianoforte, the Organ Toccata and Fugue in D minor, transcribed for pianoforte by Tausig and played by Mrs. T. J. Sully, and songs from the St. Matthew Passion.

BRIDPORT.—The Orchestral Society, twenty-six strong, under Mr. Alex Stone, on December 11 played Haydn's sixth Symphony, two of Brahms's Hungarian Dances, the Rosamunde Entr'acte music, and an Idyll, by Battison Haynes, for solo and orchestra.

BRISTOL.—The Philharmonic Society opened its twenty-third season on December 8 with the Handel-Elgar Overture, and a concert performance of Rutland Boughton's Bethlehem. The choir was about a hundred and sixty strong, with an orchestra of forty. The principal singers were Miss Dorothy Silk, Miss Helen Anderton, Mr. Glyn Eastman, Mr. Robert Percival, Mr. Frederick Woodhouse, Mr. Stuart Smith, and Mr. Seymour Dossor. Mr. Arnold Barter conducted. A new chamber-music party, consisting of Mr. Maurice Alexander, Mr. F. Tratman, Miss J. Reece, and Mr. H. Parsons, gave a concert on December 10; their programme included Mozart's String Quartet in B flat. Staple Hill Choral Society, of which Mr. S. A. Harris is conductor, sang Elgar's Light of the World, Brahms's 'All flesh doth perish' and 'Blest are they that mourn,' from the Requiem, Bach's Lord, our Redeemer, and Parry's Jerusalem, on December 17. A song, pianoforte, and 'cello recital was given at Clifton on December 28 by Miss Dorothea Price, Madame Eileen Cooper, and Miss Evelyn Pullen. Miss Pullen sang music by Harry Story, Rachmaninov, Koreschenko, and Arnold Bax. The instrumentalists played Sonatas by Handel and Grieg.

BUDLEIGH-SALTERTON.—Mr. Hugh Fowler's Musical Society sang unaccompanied part-songs and madrigals of the 16th and 17th centuries on December 13, and were supported by an orchestra in carols written and composed by blind artists. Mr. G. H. Norman played flute solos.

CARDIFF.—Cardiff and District Male Choir sang pieces by Vaughan Thomas and Protheroe on December 16, conducted by Mr. Ted Lewis. Pupils of Mr. Percival Hodgson played three Bach pieces for strings, and music by B. J. Dale and Albert Sammons, on December 15.

CHATHAM.—The Royal Marine Band played Gade's second Symphony and Coleridge-Taylor's incidental music to St. Agnes' Eve on December 10, Lieut. Charles Hoby conducting. On December 17 the band played Mozart's Italian Symphony and music by Coleridge-Taylor and Rimsky-Korsakov. The chief items at the Royal Engineers' orchestral concert on December 18 were Roger Quilter's Suite, As you Like It, Tchaikovsky's first Symphony, and Meyer Helmund's Serenade Rocco. Lieut. Neville Flux conducted. On January 5, the Co-operative Choir, conducted by Mr. F. C. Newnham, sang part-songs and madrigals, including Strike the lyre (Cooke), When evening's twilight (Hatton), and The sun doth arise (Luard-Selby). The Royal Engineers Orchestra played numbers from German's Much Ado about Nothing, the Overture to Karl Reissiger's opera, Libella, and the Unfinished Symphony, on January 8.

CWMAMAN.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. S. Lewis, sang the St. Matthew Passion on Christmas night, Sir Walford Davies assisting at the pianoforte. The choir was augmented by the Aberaman Choral Society, and there was a good orchestra.

DERBY.—The 'Municipal and County Chamber Concerts' have brought Madame Suggia, and, later, the Birmingham Orchestra to the town. Mr. Appleby Matthews conducted, and the programme included Holst's Fugal Concerto for flute and oboe (Messrs. Heard & Whittaker), and a Brandenburg Concerto, with Mr. Paul Beard as violin soloist.

EDINBURGH.—At his pianoforte recital on December 8, Eugène d'Albert played Bax's Mediterranean, Delius's A Dance for the Harpsichord, and other music by John Ireland, Debussy, and Grainger.—At the Nelson Hall concert, on December 11, the Edinburgh String Quartet gave a recital of chamber music by Mozart.—On December 12 the Amateur Orchestral Society, numbering seventy players and conducted by Mr. Paul Della Torre, played the New World Symphony, two Chansons by Elgar, and Berlioz's Rakoczy March. Miss Isa Anderson sang Hamish MacCunn's Lie there, my love.—On December 15 Glasgow Orpheus Choir gave two concerts in Usher Hall, conducted by Mr. Hugh Robertson. They sang the Fairy Chorus from The Immortal Hour, psalm tunes, and part-song arrangements of Scots songs.—On December 16, the Reid Orchestra, conducted by Prof. D. F. Tovey, played Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and Schumann's Allegro appassionata for pianoforte and orchestra, with Miss Mary Grierson as soloist.—The Scottish Orchestra, on December 24, played music by Mozart, Svendsen, and Stanford, Sir Landon Ronald conducting.—At the Paterson Orchestral Concert on January 14, the Scottish Orchestra played the César Franck Symphony, Parry's posthumous English Suite (Mr. Horace Fellowes playing the violin solo), Ravel's Mother Goose Suite, and the dances from Borodin's Prince Igor. Mr. Maurice Besly conducted.

EXETER.—The Ladies' Choir, conducted by Madame Isabel Hickson, sang Stanford's Meg Merrilees, The Shepherd's Sweet Lot (Luard-Selby), and Ireland's Aubade, on December 11. The choir was joined by a few male voices in Vaughan Williams's Just as the tide was flowing. Macfarren's Break! break! and 'Praise the Lord,' from The Hymn of Praise.—At the December meeting of the Chamber Music Club, the chief numbers were Brahms's Pianoforte Quintet in F minor and the Liebeslieder Walzer for two pianists and vocal quartet.—Exeter String Orchestra, founded by Mr. Edward Petherick and conducted by Mr. A. J. James, does very good work in the city, and at the first concert of the season in the new Civic Hall, on December 20, the programme included Holst's St. Paul's Suite. Mr. Walter Belgrove sang songs by Stanford and Aitken.

EXMOUTH.—Pupils of Southlands School gave performances of Eager Heart in December, with music from the Christmas Oratorio, Dr. Bullock conducting a choir of thirty voices and an orchestra of fourteen players.—At the annual performance of The Messiah by the Choral Society, on December 19, Mr. Raymond Wilmot, the conductor, was presented with a cheque for £50 in recognition of his devoted work over a period of twenty-seven years.

GLASGOW.—This month's record is a summary of the activities of the Scottish Orchestra. On December 5, Mr. Maurice Besly directed performances of Elgar's Enigma Variations, Ireland's A Forgotten Rite, and the Overture to Prince Igor. The programme also included Somervell's Highland Concerto, Miss Jessie Munro playing the pianoforte part. The composer conducted.—Dr. Adrian C. Boulton conducted a performance of The Planets on December 11. He made his last appearance at Glasgow for this season at the joint concert given on December 15 in collaboration with the Choral Union. Holst's Hymn of Jesus, Beethoven's eighth Symphony, and Smetana's Vltava, were in the programme.—On December 23, the programme comprised Tchaikovsky's Violin Concerto, with Mr. William Primrose as soloist, Elgar's arrangement of Handel's Overture in D minor, Dvorák's Carneval Overture, and Finlandia. Sir Landon Ronald conducted.—Christmas Day afforded a varied selection, including Humperdinck's Overture to Hänsel and Gretel, Two Poems by Frank Bridge, and Schumann's Pianoforte Concerto, with Mr. Herbert Samuel as soloist. The pianist also played Bach's Partita in C minor.—Sir Landon Ronald conducted on December 29, when the principal items were Schubert's tenth Symphony, and Butterworth's Rhapsody, A Shropshire Lad. Mr. Norman Allin was the vocalist.—On New Year's Day, Beethoven's fifth Symphony was played.—Madame Guilhermina Suggia was the soloist at the eighth classical concert, on January 8, and played the violoncello part in Haydn's Concerto in D, and Böellmann's Variations Symphoniques. Mr. Maurice Besly conducted.—Mr. Besly also directed the concert on January 13, when the programme comprised Bach's Trio in C minor, Elgar's Serenade for strings, and a Fantasie Espagnole by Lord Berners. Miss Marcia van Dresser sang Mahler's Songs of the Wayfarer.

HUDDERSFIELD.—The Christmas Oratorio had never been heard at Huddersfield before the Glee and Madrigal Society performed it under Dr. C. H. Moody on December 19.

HULL.—Nicholas Gatty's Prince Fereol was played here by the Carl Rosa Opera Company on December 31, and was very well received. Mr. Hubert Bath conducted.

LEEDS.—The Christmas concert of the Leeds Choral Union, conducted by Dr. Coward on December 17, was as usual a performance of The Messiah.—Two churches offered the Christmas Oratorio—West Leeds Bach Choir at St. Bartholomew's, Armley, under Dr. T. E. Pearson; and Leeds Parish Church, under Dr. A. C. Tysoe.

LIVERPOOL.—Mr. Eugène Goossens conducted the Vickers Orchestral Concert on December 8, when the programme included Schubert's sixth Symphony, the Siegfried Idyll, and Lalo's Aubades. Princess Catherine Yourievsky sang Russian songs.—At her song recital on December 12, Miss Ellen Watson sang songs of Schubert and Wolf, and Bax's Christmas Carol. Mr. Reginald Harvey, Mr. G. F. Mason, and Mr. F. W. Hague played a Schumann Pianoforte Trio.—At Crane Hall, on December 12, Mr. Joseph Greene played Schumann's Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp minor, Norman Peterkin's Dance Rhapsody, and Bartók's Allegro Barbaro.—The Philharmonic Society, after a year's preparation, gave a great and memorable performance of Bach's B minor Mass on December 18. Sir Henry Wood conducted, and the solo singers were Miss Carrie Tubb, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. John Adams, and Mr. Horace Stevens.—At a recital of Bach music given by Miss Gladys Sellick (pianoforte) on December 14, transcriptions of a Flute and Pianoforte Sonata and the G minor Fantasia and Fugue for organ were played.—The Christmas Oratorio was sung at Ullet Road on December 23 with a small orchestra. Dr. J. S. Wallace conducted.—The group recently formed by Dr. Wallace, under the name of the Tudor Singers, gave a recital at the Bon Marché, on December 28. Dowland's Awake, sweet love, Byrd's Come to me, grief, for ever, two of Vaughan Williams's Mystical Songs, and his Turtle dove, and Holst's Lullay, my liking, were important items.—Members of the local branch of the British Music Society enjoyed a recital on January 10, given by the Tudor Singers, who were heard in Vaughan Williams's Ring out your bells and The springtime of the year, and Morley's Arise, get up, my dear.—The Royal Air Force Band, formed three years ago under the direction of Flight-Lieut. J. H. Amers, R.N., played at the Capitol on January 13. Holst's Suite in F and some numbers from Peer Gynt being the chief items.—Mr. Eugène Goossens was the conductor at the second Vickers Orchestral Concert on January 13. The ballet music from La boutique fantasque and music from Wagner's operas were played, and the Cymric Vocal Union sang Stanford's Sea Songs (with Mr. Howard Fry as soloist) and an Old Welsh Hymn.—Mr. Szulc was the conductor at the Philharmonic Society's concert on January 15. The well-varied programme included a symphonic poem, Returning Waves, by Karłowicz, Brahms's Variations on a theme by Haydn, Mozart's Violin Concerto in A, with Miss Anna Hegner as soloist, and Weber's Euryanthe Overture.

MANCHESTER.—Apart from the usual Messiah performances the holiday season brought forth plenty of good music. Mr. Brand Lane's mammoth popular orchestral programmes conducted by Sir Henry Wood were such as are heard here only at this season of the year; but Madame Suggia at the Bowdon chamber concert; Mr. Isaacs and Miss Lucy Pierce in pianoforte recitals; the Cathedral Choir in a carol service on Christmas Eve; Miss Muriel Robinson's programme of rarely-heard Christmas and New Year songs drawn from Bach, Schumann, Wolf, Humperdinck, &c.—all these contrived to alleviate the lot of such as had to endure (for purposes of recording), say, four performances of The Messiah in one week.—Hamilton Harty and the Hallé Band probably both found their greatest delight during the holiday season in playing an appropriate programme to an audience of two thousand five hundred juveniles, who in this way may have heard for the first time (gramophone records apart) what orchestral music sounded like.—The first Harty chamber concert of the year brought together the leading wind players of the Hallé Band, and enabled us to gauge the solo capacities of those whom we hear orchestrally at every Hallé concert. The Beethoven and Thuille Quintets revealed fine sensibility as to balance and ensemble, but the greater delight was found in the solo work, notably in Bach's E minor Sonata for flute and pianoforte, in which Mr. Joseph Lugard and Mr. Harty were associated.—At the Hallé concert on January 11, Miss Beatrice Harrison played the Dvorák B minor 'Cello Concerto, and, for the first time at Manchester, Harty played the Respighi orchestral transcription of 16th century Italian airs and dances. This 'arrangement' justified itself; others heard this season have not. Despite its modern treatment, the feeling for the grace and charm of the old music was preserved and even intensified.—On January 17, Brahms's Symphony No. 4, and Mozart's Violin Concerto in A, played by Mr. Arthur Catterall, were the most interesting features in the twelfth Hallé concert. The Carnaval des Animaux of Saint-Saëns, although played here for the first time, hardly merits mention, much less comment. Not even at a children's concert of orchestral music should it find a place. No wonder the composer did not release it for publication. Harty's Brahms interpretations pass from strength to strength, and one's enjoyment of the larger orchestra is intensified on such occasions.

MOUNTAIN ASH.—Protheroe's dramatic cantata, St. Peter, was performed on Christmas Day, Mr. Hugh Ellis conducting.

NEWCASTLE.—The Bach Choir, under Mr. Edgar Bainton, gave Bax's Mater ora filium and Dale's Before the paling of the stars on December 15.—A Bach Suite in B minor, Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony, and the Egmont Overture were played by the Symphony Orchestra, under Mr. Hamilton Harty, on the afternoon of December 12, and in the evening the Oriana Choir, conducted by Mr. Arthur F. Milner, sang an excellent selection of madrigals and modern part-songs.—The Copenhagen String Quartet played the Elgar Quartet for the Chamber Music Society on January 13.

NEWCASTLE (STAFFS).—Mr. S. E. Lovatt conducted the Male-Voice Glee Union on January 10 in Goss's O Thou whose beams, Schumann's The lotos flower, Elgar's Feasting I watch, MacDowell's From the sea, Mr. Lovatt's arrangement of the Gathering song of Donald the Black, and The old folks at home, as arranged by Dr. Vaughan Williams in recollection of the 'harmonies often improvised by members of the British Expeditionary Force.'

OXFORD.—Mr. Maurice Besly conducted the Orchestral Society on December 8 in Cherubini's Anacreon Overture, Beethoven's eighth Symphony, three movements from Holst's The Planets, and an Idyll composed by Mr. Besly, Mist in the Valley.—In the Town Hall, on December 30, Ifley Choral Society sang Holst's I vow to thee, my Country, Vaughan Williams's Toward the Unknown Region and Wassail Song, Parry's Since thou, O Fondest, and Maurice Besly's Noel and Shenandoah, and the Ifley Quartet sang Brahms's The Angel's Greeting and As Torrents in Summer. Mr. Reginald Jacques conducted. He had hoped to have the support of an orchestra, but as the band parts arrived too late for adequate rehearsal, recourse was had to pianoforte accompaniment only. The occasion was the first appearance in this environment of this small but enthusiastic body of singers, who have done good work within their own borders and are now seeking a wider public.—To enable a young student to continue pianoforte study at the R.C.M., a concert was given on December 16, when Dr. Ernest Walker played pianoforte music, including Balfour Gardiner's London.

PLYMOUTH.—On December 11, the concert of the Orpheus Choir was given with the help of Miss Rosina Buckman, Mr. Maurice d'Oisly, and Mr. Backhaus. The choir, conducted by Mr. David Parkes, sang Song of the Bards (Julius Harrison), a choral scena, The Rising Storm, by Mathieu Neuman, Cyril Jenkins's Sea Fever, and Dunhill's Full fathom five.—Millbrook and District Choral and Orchestral Society performed St. Paul on December 19. Mr. P. P. Wedlake conducted.

PONTYFRIDG.—The Redemption and the Christmas Oratorio were performed by the Tabernacle Choral Society on Christmas Day, Mr. Alun Drummer conducting.

READING.—The New Berkshire Symphony Orchestra of fifty performers under the direction of Dr. E. O. Daughtry, gave its first concert on January 9, with a programme that included Mendelssohn's Italian Symphony and Hebrides Overture, and Balfour Gardiner's Shepherd Fennel's Dance.

TAUNTON.—The Choral Society, conducted by Mr. Reginald Ward, assisted by an orchestra, performed B. J. Dale's Before the Paling of the Stars and Parry's Pied Piper of Hamelin. The orchestra played Beethoven's fifth Symphony and Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas Overture.

TEIGNMOUTH.—The Choral Society has started a new era this season with a young and ambitious conductor, Mr. J. Smith. On December 13 the choir sang Brahms's Liebeslieder Walzer for voices and pianoforte duet. The pianists also played Schumann's Andante and Variations for two pianofortes. With Mr. Walter Belgrove as soloist, Vaughan Williams's Fantasia on Christmas Carols was admirably performed. There was a capable string orchestra, which played also Parry's Lady Radnor's Suite and some Bach. Walford Davies's O Little Town of Bethlehem completed the choral work.

TORQUAY.—Mr. E. W. Goss has been appointed music-director of the Municipal Pavilion, and is gradually restoring the standard of orchestral music to its former high level. Fortnightly symphony concerts are now being given. On December 20 the programme included Smetana's symphonic poem, Vltava, Holst's Fugal Concerto for oboe and flute, with Messrs. Gleghorn and G. Ellis as soloists, and Beethoven's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor, with Dr. Harold Rhodes as pianist.

TRECYNON.—Rossini's Stabat Mater was performed on Christmas Day, Mr. Dan Edwards conducting.

TREORCHY.—The Rhondda Musical Festival was held on Christmas Day and Boxing Day. The choir numbered three hundred voices, and was assisted by a capable orchestra. The works performed were St. Paul, Parry's Job, and Verdi's Requiem. Mr. J. T. Jones conducted, and the soloists were Miss Cecilia Farrar, Miss Muriel Brunskill, Mr. Robert Naylor, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

YORK.—Mr. H. A. Bennett conducted the Symphony Orchestra on January 16, in an excellent programme that included Parry's English Suite, Bantock's arrangement of a Suite by Giles Farnaby, the Byrd Fantasia, arranged by Dr. Fellowes, a Bach Concerto, and Holst's St. Paul's Suite.—At the Cathedral, Dr. Bairstow gave the Brahms Requiem.

IRELAND

At the Scala, Dublin, on December 16, the Dublin Symphony Orchestra played some acceptable items, and the vocalists were Miss Eileen Gunning and Mr. Hughes Macklin.

Messrs. Hugh S. Robertson and Julius Harrison have been selected as adjudicators at the Ballymena Musical Festival, May 3 to 9.

Miss Culwick's Choral Society gave a delightful concert at Dublin on December 18, Madame Borel contributing some songs, and Miss Rhoda Coghill some pianoforte solos.

At the conferring of degrees in Trinity College, Dublin, on December 19, Miss Rhoda Coghill graduated Mus. Bac.

Humperdinck's fairy opera, Hänsel and Gretel (first produced in 1893), was given by Mr. Walter McNally at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on Boxing Day, and had a successful run of a fortnight—produced by Mr. T. C. Fairbairn, under the direction of Mr. Vincent O'Brien. Quite delightful was the Hänsel of Miss K. Destournell, as was also the Witch of Miss Joan Burke.

It has been decided that this year's Oireachtas (Festival of Irish language and music) will be held at Cork for the first time, but the date has not yet been fixed.

Mr. Cyril Scott, pianist and composer, gave an enjoyable recital at Ulster Hall, Belfast, on January 5, his Lotus Land and Water Wagtail being enthusiastically received. Miss Gertrude Johnson contributed three groups of Mr. Scott's songs with rare charm. On January 11, Mr. Scott appeared at the Gaiety Theatre, Dublin, in conjunction with Miss Jean Nolan's song recital, and delighted a large audience; his Irish Famine Song receiving an irresistible encore.

On January 7, under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society, the Catterall Quartet gave a delightful programme, the pièce de résistance being Elgar's Quartet in E minor—its first hearing at Dublin—admirably played and vastly appreciated. Elgar is still to be reckoned with notwithstanding the carplings of ultra-moderns and lovers of cacophony. On January 14, Prof. Esposito and Mr. Clyde Twelvrees gave an interesting pianoforte and 'cello recital under the same auspices.

Among the bequests of the late Edward Martyn, founder of the Palestrina Choir, was one of £5,000 to Mr. Vincent O'Brien, organist.

At La Scala, Dublin, on January 13, the Dublin Symphony Orchestra gave the last concert of the season, the two attractions being Mr. H. P. Killikelly and M. Jean Bertin.

On the same evening, at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, the Army School of Music Band (No. 1), conducted by Herr Fritz Brase, gave a fine programme, the Magic Flute Overture being exceptionally well played. Songs were contributed by Mr. Joseph O'Neill, accompanied by Lieut. Arthur Duff.

Obituary

We regret to announce the following deaths:

GEORGE SAINT-GEORGE, on January 5, in his eighty-third year. Not often does a musician distinguish himself in the triple capacity of composer, executant, and musical instrument maker, as did Mr. Saint-George. Born at Leipzig, of English parents, on November 8, 1841, he went at an early age to Prague to study the violin, and afterwards to Dresden, where Julius Otto and Rühlmann instructed him in composition and pianoforte playing. Afterwards he came to London, and married Miss Jessie Bryce, the vocalist, and, some ten years after her death, Miss May Chanot (daughter of the late Frederick Chanot), who became his devoted nurse during the four years of his last illness, caused by a fall. While at Prague he became acquainted with the viol d'amour, which fascinated him to such an extent that he studied not only this but also other members of the viol family, especially the viol da gamba, and eventually became the fortunate possessor of a beautiful viol d'amour by Guidanti and a viola da gamba by Barak Norman, entirely in its original condition (see reproduction in E. van der Straeten's History of the Violoncello). The beauty of form in these instruments induced him to apply himself to the luthier's art, in which he acquired great mastery, which—apart from some violins and violoncellos—resulted not only in the skilful repairing, but also in the production of viols d'amour and da gamba, with elaborate original designs in coloured wood, inlaid in the finger-board and tail-piece, and of purfling for the back and belly, the peg-boxes being surmounted by carved heads of animals. In his later years he also made a few fine lutes. His instruments were not only attractive in appearance but possessed also a fine quality of tone—as a viol da Gamba made for his late son, and only child, Henry, a skilful performer thereon, and a viol d'amour, used by his pupil, Miss Kate Chaplin, in The Beggar's Opera, amply prove. It was not only these instruments but also the old music that he dearly loved, and many fine masterpieces had their first revival on the instruments for which they were originally written, at concerts, in conjunction with his son and the writer. Some of the most notable of such works were Bach's sixth Brandenburg Concerto, for two violas, two gambas, and bass; Sonatas by F. W. Rust and Ariosti (with his own accompaniments), and pieces by Huberti for viol d'amour, and a Canon (three movements) for two gambas, by Fux. As a composer Mr. Saint-George is best known by his charming little Suites for strings, but many of his melodious and effective solo pieces and songs are undeservedly neglected. His Overture Le Réveil du Printemps was given by Sir August Manns at the Crystal Palace. The loss of his genial personality will be keenly felt by all who had the privilege of his acquaintance.

E. VAN DER STRAETEN.

WILLIAM LUDWIG, on December 28, in London. Born at Dublin, in December, 1847, he studied under his father (who was second tenor at the pro-Cathedral) and under Richard V. O'Brien, and joined the Carl Rosa Opera Company in 1874. Of splendid physique, a magnificent actor, possessing a glorious voice, and being a genuine artist, Ludwig—whose real name was Ledwidge—quickly won fame in various rôles. In 1883 he created the part of Frollo in Goring Thomas's Esméralda, and sang in the first performance of Sir Alexander Mackenzie's Colomba (April 5, 1883). His impersonation of Vanderdecken in the Flying Dutchman will not readily be forgotten. He also appeared with conspicuous success in oratorio, notably in Elijah (with Joseph Maas), and in Rubinstein's Paradise Lost. He toured America in 1886-88, and again in 1906-09. Having rejoined the Carl Rosa Opera Company, he created the part of Hans Sachs in Die Meistersinger, at Manchester, on April 16, 1896. His last operatic appearance was at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, at Christmas, 1910. As a concert singer he was immensely popular, and he made a speciality of Irish folk-songs—indeed, his singing of The Croppy Boy was an epic. Owing to an incurable throat malady, Ludwig retired in 1911, and spent his last years in London. W. H. G. F.

The Abbot of Solesmes, DOM JOSEPH POTHIER, at the ripe age of eighty-eight. Born at Bouzémont, near St. Dié, on December 7, 1835, he joined the Solesmes Benedictines in 1859, becoming sub-Prior in 1862, and Professor of Theology in 1866. From 1893 to 1895 he was Prior of Ligugé, and was Prior of San Wandrille from 1895 to 1898, becoming Abbot in the latter year. His efforts in the cause of the reform of Church music led to the Papal Motu Proprio. His Mémoires Gregoriennes, published in 1880, has been adopted as the text-book for the study of plainchant according to the Solesmes reform. Between the years 1883 and 1903 he published numerous liturgical chant-books, and in 1889 he instituted the well-known Paléographie Musicale (a quarterly review) now in its thirty-fifth year. In 1904, Pope Pius X. appointed him President of the Commission for publishing the new liturgical chant-books, replacing the Ratisbon publications. This Gregorian Commission sat at Appeldurcombe House (Isle of Wight) in September, 1904. His life-work accomplished, Dom Pothier spent his remaining years as a faithful follower of Dom Gueranger. W. H. G. F.

DOUGLAS REDMAN, on December 14, after a long and painful illness. He was born in London in 1862, and commenced his musical career as a choir-boy in H.M. Private Chapel, Windsor, later becoming a student at the Royal Academy of Music. He held appointments as organist of St. Alban's, Birmingham; St. George's, Botolph Lane; and Brixton Parish Church. He founded the Brixton Choral Society, and later the Brixton Oratorio Choir. His powers as a choral conductor were exceptional, and as an all-round teacher he also achieved conspicuous success. His personality was one of singular charm, and his passing will be sorely felt by all who knew him.

W. H.

GUSTAV DANNREUTHER, at New York, on December 19. He was born at Cincinnati, on July 21, 1853, and studied under Joachim, at Berlin. After a few years in London, he went to America in 1877, and thereafter played a prominent part in New York music, where he was professor of the violin at Vassar College. He was a brother of Edward Dannreuther.

FREDERICK ROBERT GREENISH, whose death was announced in the December Musical Times, spent the active part of his musical life at Haverfordwest, where he was honorary organist at St. Mary's. He took his Mus. Doc. degree at Oxford in 1891. (It is worth recording that the performance in the Sheldonian Theatre of his Exercise was the last of the kind, the custom being shortly afterwards abolished.) He was Justice of the Peace at Haverfordwest, and High Sheriff. During his retirement at Warlingham he took a prominent part in church work, musical and otherwise.

Miscellaneous

NEW CHORAL SOCIETY FOR THE CITY

It is proposed to start a Choral Society for workers in the City, the strength aimed at being three hundred. Dr. Harold Darke will conduct. Rehearsals on Tuesdays, from 5.30 to 7 (commencing on February 5), at St. Michael's, Cornhill. The Dream of Gerontius will be studied with a view to performance at Queen's or Central Hall in the autumn. Subscription, 7s. 6d. (not including music).

Mr. Munro Davison, assisted by pupils, gave a recital of Christmas music at the Northern Polytechnic on December 16, with a delightful programme drawn from Bach, Holst, Parry, Mendelssohn, Walford Davies, &c. These Christmas recitals have now been carried on without a break since 1898.

The Easter Vacation Schools of the English Folk-Dance Society will take place at Harrogate and Exeter from April 21 to 26. Full particulars of the secretary, E.F.D.S., Mr. Benham Gavin, 7, Sicilian House, Southampton Row, W.C.1.

The Cambridge University Musical Society announces a fine list of concerts, among them being two performances of the B minor Mass—at the Guildhall, Cambridge, on February 15, at 8.30, and at Ely Cathedral on the following day, at 2.30.

Carols were sung at the Royal Exchange on December 19, by Lloyd's Choir, Mr. Geoffrey Toye conducting. Nearly four thousand people listened.

At his recital at Wigmore Hall, on February 9, Mr. Harold Craxton will play, and speak on, the test-pieces set for pianoforte at the Elizabethan Festival.

We regret being obliged to hold over 'Musical Notes from Abroad.'

Answers to Correspondents

Q.—Please give me the true tempo of grandioso when it occurs at the Coda of a work. I am told that it should be exactly the same as that of the previous movement.—A. I. W.

A.—The term has less to do with tempo than with style, but obviously the necessary breadth and stateliness can rarely be obtained without the adoption of a slower pace. The case can often be met by a change of tempo so slight as to be barely discernible, and no doubt your informant had this point in mind.

Q.—Does any lending library exist from which books for organists and choirmasters may be had for periods of fourteen to twenty-one days?—'INGTON.'

A.—We know of no music libraries that lend books on music. Many Public Libraries include works of the kind you mention, and we have seen such volumes on the shelves of The Times Book Club.

Q.—Is there any association of professional musicians or others which has on record a list of undesirable organist posts, viz., in country parishes, the acceptance of which would be disappointing and the expenses of removal a waste of stipend?—'BLACK LIST.'

A.—We hope and believe there is no such list. Who is to decide as to the undesirability of a post? Nobody should accept an appointment without making inquiries as to teaching and other prospects. Most country parish organistships make no pretence to be other than part-time jobs. As such they provide pleasant spare-time occupation for many keen and not inefficient musicians. Work of this kind can rarely be judged on a purely financial basis.

Q.—Do you consider shouting during games and street cries injurious to boys' voices?—'PNEUM.'

A.—Yes; but it is so good for the boys that we should not attempt to gag them, except for an hour or so before practice, or on the day of an important bit of singing.

Q.—Is it not strange that in listening to good choirs we do not oftener hear the pure harmony 'coming through'? I have just heard Evensong in a Cathedral, and in only a few 'Amens' was there an atmosphere of ensemble. Why is this?—'CLEF.'

A.—Because the few 'Amens' were the only items that were well sung. When we don't hear 'the pure harmony coming through,' the choir is not a good one.

Q.—What is the meaning of the pause in Bach's Chorale Preludes? It is a breathing point in the tune, I know, but is there any way of marking it in playing these pieces?—'PAUSE.'

A.—In the Chorale Preludes the pause merely indicates the end of a line of the melody. There is no way of showing it in performance when the counterpoint is elaborate, because the flow of the movement must be maintained.

Q.—I hear that gramophone records of accompaniments to well-known songs have been made or are about to be made. Can you give me any information? Are such records likely to be of practical use?—'SOUND-BOX.'

A.—Captain H. T. Barnett, in his little book, Up-to-Date Gramophone Tips, mentions such records. Write to him for particulars. His address is 12, Whittington Chambers, King's Road, Southsea. Records of the kind may prove to be useful, but one obvious drawback lies in the fact that the singer will have to accompany the record, as a change of pace in the latter will involve a change of pitch as well. The only way out is for singers to keep good time. If the gramophone can make them do this, it will add one more to its list of miracles.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines ... ..	0	3	0
Three Lines ... ..	0	3	4
For every additional Line ... ..	0	0	10
One inch (displayed) ... ..	0	10	0
Half a Column ... ..	2	0	0
A Column ... ..	4	0	0
A Page ... ..	7	10	0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.

A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

CONTENTS.

	Page.
The Conductor and his Fore-runners. VI.—The Method. By William Wallace ... ..	113
One Generation Cometh. By Alexander Brent Smith	116
Boris Godunov : Genuine and Otherwise. By M.-D. Calvocoressi ... ..	117
Emotion and Technique. By Arthur L. Salmon ...	119
Singing off Pitch. By Prof. E. W. Scripture ( Illustrated ) ... ..	121
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste' ... ..	123
The Eroica Symphony. By R. W. S. Mendl ...	125
On Neglected Works. By Kaikhosru Sorabji ...	127
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace ...	130
The Re-Standardisation of the Small Orchestra. By Florence G. Fidler ... ..	134
Occasional Notes ... ..	135
English and German Musical Life Compared. By Adolf Weissmann ... ..	137
Ethel Smyth's Mass in D. By Sydney Grew ...	140
Music in the Foreign Press. By M.-D. Calvocoressi	141
The Musician's Bookshelf ... ..	142
New Music ... ..	150
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus' ... ..	153
Church and Organ Music ... ..	154
Royal College of Organists ... ..	154
Letters to the Editor ... ..	159
Sharps and Flats ... ..	161
The Amateurs' Exchange ... ..	161
British National Opera Company at Covent Garden	162
Mozart at the 'Old Vic.' ... ..	164
Bethlehem at the Regent Theatre ... ..	164
The Incorporated Society of Musicians ... ..	165
Royal College of Music ... ..	166
Trinity College of Music ... ..	167
London Concerts ... ..	167
The Balance of Expression and Design in Music ...	169
Wee Men at Birmingham: Rutland Boughton's Music ... ..	170
Music in the Provinces ... ..	171
Ireland ... ..	173
Obituary ... ..	174
Miscellaneous ... ..	175
Answers to Correspondents ... ..	175

MUSIC.

'Chloris in the Snow.' Part-Song for S.A.T.B. By PERCY E. FLETCHER ... .. 145

EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number :
Evening Hymn for S.A.T.B. By H. Balfour Gardiner.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20 (FIRST POST).

MR. HORACE CURTIS

(Tenor Soloist, St. Michael's, Cornhill).
Oratorios, &c.
34, Ravenslea Road, Balham, S.W.12.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO & CO., LIMITED.

FLETCHER, PERCY E.—"Chloris in the snow." Four-part Song. (No. 972, The Musical Times.) 2d.

HAWTHORN, SYLVIA.—"The Dream Divine." Song. 1s. 6d.

ROSS, G.—Chants for Benedictus. 2d.

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 380, contains the following music in both notations,—"In Derry Vale" (Londonderry Air). Unison Song. Arranged by W. McNAUGHT. "See-Saw," "How flowers grow," and "Fairy Dance." Junior Action-Songs. W. B. OLDS. 2d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1374. "A Hill Song." Unison Song. ALEC ROWLEY 3d. —

No. 1375. Three Rounds (Old English) and Canon, "Hey ho, to the Greenwood" 2d. —

No. 1376. "I waited for the Lord." Arranged as a duet. MENDELSSOHN — 2d.

SIBLEY, CHURCHILL.—"Easter Joy." Hymn. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES :

No. 2442. "Arise, shine, for thy Light is come." Christmas Anthem. H. A. CHAMBERS 3d.

No. 2443. "The Song of the Gale." Part-Song for S.A.T.B. M. B. FOSTER 3d.

TYTLER, R.—Valse Brillante. For Piano-forte. 2s.

WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN.—"Bushes and Briars." Essex Folk-Song. Arranged for S.A.T.B. (No. 1416, Novello's Part-Song Book.) 3d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

ANDREWS, MARK.—"O Beautiful, my Country." Anthem. 20 cents (10d.).

BINGHAM, SETH.—Counter-Theme. For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

ENGLISH, G.—"The Ugly Duckling." Cantata for Children. 50 cents (2s.).

LEMARE, E. H.—"Bonnie Doon." Transcribed for Organ. 50 cents (2s.).

—"Daughters of Erin." Old Irish Melody. Transcribed for Organ. 50 cents (2s.).

PALMER, D.—"Shadow March." Part-Song for S.S.A. 12 cents (6d.).

SANDERS, H.—"Ballade." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

VIBBARD, H. L.—"Scherzino." For Organ. 75 cents (3s.).

FOR SALE.—Oak Adjustable ORGAN BENCH. Apply, stating price, to the Secretary, 5, Chesterfield Gardens, W.1.

ORGAN BLOWER, low-pressure water. Suit Pipe or Reed Organ. Cost, £60. Sacrifice, £20. Carriage Paid. Henry Riley & Sons, Ltd., Riley Hall, 25, Constitution Hill, Birmingham.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EVENING HYMN

COMPOSED BY

H. BALFOUR GARDINER.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED: NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Slowly. ♩=84.

ORGAN. mf G♯ & Sw. coupled.

poco a poco cresc.

Soprano. full voice: even tone.

Thee, Lord, be-fore the close of day, Ma - Te lu - cis an - te ter - - mi - num Re -

Alto.

Thee, Lord, be-fore the close of day, Ma - Te lu - cis an - te ter - - mi - num Re -

Tenor.

Thee, Lord, be-fore the close of day, Ma - Te lu - cis an - te ter - - mi - num Re -

Bass.

Thee, Lord, be-fore the close of day, Ma - Te lu - cis an - te ter - - mi - num Re -

f

- ker of all things, Thee we pray For Thy dear
- rum Cre - a - tor pos - ci - mus Ut pro tu -

- ker of all things, Thee we pray For Thy dear
- rum Cre - a - tor pos - ci - mus Ut pro tu -

- ker of all things, Thee we pray For Thy dear
- rum Cre - a - tor pos - ci - mus Ut pro tu -

- ker of all things, Thee we pray For Thy dear
- rum Cre - a - tor pos - ci - mus Ut pro tu -

lov - ing kind - ness' sake To guard and guide us
- a cle - men - ti - a Sis prae - sul et cus -

lov - ing kind - ness' sake To guard and guide us
- a cle - men - ti - a Sis prae - sul et cus -

lov - ing kind - ness' sake To guard and guide us
- a cle - men - ti - a Sis prae - sul et cus -

lov - ing kind - ness' sake To guard and guide us
- a cle - men - ti - a Sis prae - sul et cus -

molto f

in Thy way.____
- to - di - a.____

in Thy way.____
- to - di - a.____

in Thy way.____
- to - di - a.____

in Thy way.____
- to - di - a.____

ff brighter tone.

menof

Gt & Sw.

Sw. alone

p rich tone *

p

Ban-ish the dreams that ter - ri - fy, And night's fan-tas-tic
 Pro-cul re - ce - dant som - ni-a Et noc - ti - um phan-

p

Ban-ish the dreams that ter - ri - fy, And night's fan-tas-tic
 Pro-cul re - ce - dant som - ni-a Et noc - ti - um phan-

p

Ban-ish the dreams that ter - ri - fy, And night's fan-tas-tic
 Pro-cul re - ce - dant som - ni-a Et noc - ti - um phan-

p

Ban-ish the dreams that ter - ri - fy, And night's fan-tas-tic
 Pro-cul re - ce - dant som - ni-a Et noc - ti - um phan-

* † p Ch.

pp

com - pa - ny: Keep us from Sa - tan's ty - ran -
 - tas - ma - ta Hos tem - que nos - trum com - prim -

pp

com - pa - ny: Keep us from Sa - tan's ty - ran -
 - tas - ma - ta Hos tem - que nos - trum com - prim -

pp

com - pa - ny: Keep us from Sa - tan's ty - ran -
 - tas - ma - ta Hos tem - que nos - trum com - prim -

pp

com - pa - ny: Keep us from Sa - tan's ty - ran -
 - tas - ma - ta Hos tem - que nos - trum com - prim -

* Between the signs † the voices are to sing unaccompanied; the organ part is only added for the purposes of practice.

Four vocal parts (Soprano, Alto, Tenor, Bass) and piano accompaniment. The vocal parts have lyrics: - ny: De - fend us from un - chas - ti - ty. - e Ne pol - lu - an - tur cor - po - ra. The piano accompaniment features a melody in the right hand and chords in the left hand. A dynamic marking mp Sw. is present.

- ny: De - fend us from un - chas - ti - ty.
- e Ne pol - lu - an - tur cor - po - ra.

- ny: De - fend us from un - chas - ti - ty.
- e Ne pol - lu - an - tur cor - po - ra.

- ny: De - fend us from un - chas - ti - ty.
- e Ne pol - lu - an - tur cor - po - ra.

- ny: De - fend us from un - chas - ti - ty.
- e Ne pol - lu - an - tur cor - po - ra.

mp Sw.

Piano accompaniment section. The right hand features a melody with a crescendo. The left hand provides harmonic support. Dynamic markings include f and cresc.

f Gt. & Sw. with 16 ft cresc.

Piano accompaniment section. The right hand features a melody with a crescendo. The left hand provides harmonic support. Dynamic markings include f and cresc.

full voice: even tone.

Pro - tect us, Fa - ther, God a - dor'd, Thou too, co -
 Prae - sta, Pa - ter pi - is - si - me Pa - tri - que

Pro - tect us, Fa - ther, God a - dor'd, Thou too, co -
 Prae - sta, Pa - ter pi - is - si - me Pa - tri - que

Pro - tect us, Fa - ther, God a - dor'd, Thou too, co -
 Prae - sta, Pa - ter pi - is - si - me Pa - tri - que

Pro - tect us, Fa - ther, God a - dor'd, Thou too, co - Prae - sta, Pa - ter pi - is - si - me Pa - tri - que

molto f

- e - qual Son and Lord, Thou Ho - ly Ghost, our
 com - par un - i - ce Cum Spi - ri - tu Pa -

- e - qual Son and Lord, Thou Ho - ly Ghost, our
 com - par un - i - ce Cum Spi - ri - tu Pa -

- e - qual Son and Lord, Thou Ho - ly Ghost, our
 com - par un - i - ce Cum Spi - ri - tu Pa -

- e - qual Son and Lord, Thou Ho - ly Ghost, our
 com - par un - i - ce Cum Spi - ri - tu Pa -

Ad - vo - cate, Whose reign can know nor bound nor date.
- ra - cli - to Reg - nans per om - ne sae - cu - lum.

Ad - vo - cate, Whose reign can know nor bound nor date.
- ra - cli - to Reg - nans per om - ne sae - cu - lum.

Ad - vo - cate, Whose reign can know nor bound nor date.
- ra - cli - to Reg - nans per om - ne sae - cu - lum.

Ad - vo - cate, Whose reign can know nor bound nor date.
- ra - cli - to Reg - nans per om - ne sae - cu - lum.

molto f ff

ff poco a poco dim.

A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men

ff dim.

A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men

ff poco a poco dim.

A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men A - - - - - men

poco a poco dim.

men A - men A - men
 men A - men A - men
 dim. p
 men A - #men A - #men
 men A - men A - men
 p
 men A - men A - men
 men A - men A - men
 A - - - - men A - - men A - - men
 A - - - - men A - - men A - - men

A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.
 A - - - - - men.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE BENEDICITE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

*THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By JULIUS BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 4s.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price, 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 2d.

*Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.*

ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... ..	4d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison) ... ..	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
BLAIR, H. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES ... ..	2d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. E. (in D) ... ..	2d.
BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G) ... ..	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) ... ..	2d.
EYRE, A. J. (in E flat) ... ..	3d.
EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F) ... ..	2d.
FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	6d.
FROST, P. H. (in D) ... ..	3d.
GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison) ... ..	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C) ... ..	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) ... ..	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants) ... ..	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D) ... ..	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat) ... ..	4d.
LLOYD, C. H. (in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting) ... ..	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each ... ..	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) ... ..	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) ... ..	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) ... ..	1½d.
ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat) ... ..	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, B. (in A flat) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). S.A.T.B.B., also simplified for S.A.T.B. ... ..	3d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., R. de LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER ... ..	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1½d.) ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS ... ..	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STEWART, C. H. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... ..	4d.
BARNBY, J. ... ..	4d.
FOSTER, J. ... ..	1½d.
SMITH, M. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
TURLE, J. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings) ... ..	1½d.
TOZER, F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple ... ..	3d.
WEST, J. E. (in G) ... ..	6d.
WEST, J. E. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D) ... ..	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) ... ..	2d.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, J. B. ... ..	4d.
GOUNOD, CH. ... ..	3d.
HOYTE, W. S. ... ..	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) ... ..	6d.
SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) ... ..	4d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO

SET TO MUSIC BY

BUNNETT, ED. ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT ... ..	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
STAINER, JOHN (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.

Words only, 2s. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paperboards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON

(CHRIST LAG IN TODESBANDEN)

CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

ENGLISH WORDS BY PAUL ENGLAND.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S.A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

THE ATONEMENT

(Op. 53.)

A SACRED CANTATA FOR S.M.-S.A.T.B. SOLI

WORDS BY

ALICE PARSONS

THE MUSIC BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS.

Vocal Score:

Paper cover, 5s. 6d.; Paper boards, 6s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.
Vocal parts, 2s. 6d. each. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. per 100.
String parts, 28s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN
BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal Parts, 1s. each.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES
OR FOR GENERAL USE

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS,
WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.

ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE
CONGREGATION.THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE

(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 12d.

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY

JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

ANTHEMS FOR LENT.

All ye who seek for sure relief .. .. .	H. M. Higgs	4d.	Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake	*R. Farrant, G. R. Vicars, ea.	2d.
*All ye who weep .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.	Lord, how are they increased .. .. .	Kent	3d.
And Jesus entered into the Temple .. .. .	H. W. Davies	6d.	Lord, how long wilt Thou forget me .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.
Art thou weary .. .. .	C. H. Lloyd	8d.	Lord, I call upon Thee .. .. .	Ouseley, West, and Culley, each	2d.
At the Cross her station keeping (s.s.) .. .. .	A. E. Baker	3d.	Lord, on our offences .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.
At Thy feet in adoration .. .. .	A. Dvorák	4d.	Lord, teach us to number our days (A.A.T.T.B.B.)	C. H. Lloyd	4d.
Be merciful unto me .. .. .	E. A. Sydenham	4d.	Lord, Thou hast searched .. .. .	A. Whiting	4d.
Be not Thou far from me, O God .. .. .	F. W. Hird	2d.	Lord, what is man .. .. .	W. Boyce	4d.
Behold, I come quickly .. .. .	I. Atkins	3d.	Make me a clean heart .. .. .	J. Barnby and A. W. Bateson, each	4d.
Behold, two blind men .. .. .	J. Stainer	4d.	May my heart with ardour burn .. .. .	A. Dvorák	4d.
Blessed are they that mourn .. .. .	A. W. Bateson	4d.	Mine eyes look unto Thee, O Lord God .. .. .	H. Baker	4d.
*Blessed Jesu .. .. .	Dvorák	8d.	My God, I love Thee .. .. .	G. J. Bennett	4d.
Bow down Thine ear .. .. .	*Attwood, Beale, and Brewer, each	2d.	My God, look upon me .. .. .	J. L. Hopkins	4d.
Bow Thine ear, O Lord .. .. .	W. Byrd	4d.	*My God, look upon me .. .. .	J. Reynolds	2d.
*By Babylon's wave .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	3d.	My soul is weary .. .. .	J. C. Beckwith	6d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Boyce and H. Clarke, each	6d.	O all ye that pass by .. .. .	Vittoria	4d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Goetz and Palestrina, each	4d.	O bountiful Jesu .. .. .	J. Stainer	2d.
By the waters of Babylon .. .. .	Higgs and *Coleridge-Taylor, each	4d.	O Fount of love .. .. .	Wilson	2d.
By Thy glorious Death .. .. .	A. Dvorák	6d.	O God, Thou hast cast us out .. .. .	H. Purcell	6d.
*Call to remembrance .. .. .	R. Farrant	2d.	O God, Whose nature .. .. .	A. Gray and *S. S. Wesley, each	2d.
Cast me not away .. .. .	C. Lee Williams	3d.	O have mercy .. .. .	H. Leslie	2d.
Cast me not away .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	4d.	O harken Thou .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.
*Cast thy burden upon the Lord .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.	O harken Thou .. .. .	A. Sullivan	2d.
Come, and let us return .. .. .	G. M. Garrett	2d.	O Jesu! Victim blest .. .. .	J. B. Powell	4d.
*Come, and let us return (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	O Lamb of God .. .. .	J. Barnby	4d.
*Come, and let us return .. .. .	J. Goss and W. Jackson, each	4d.	O Lamb of God .. .. .	G. E. Lake	2d.
Come, let us worship .. .. .	Palestrina	2d.	*O Lord, correct me .. .. .	J. Coward	2d.
*Come now, and let us reason together .. .. .	R. Brient	2d.	O Lord, give ear .. .. .	W. H. Cummings	3d.
Come now, let us reason together .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	6d.	O Lord God, Thou strength .. .. .	J. Goss	4d.
*Come unto Him .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	3d.	O Lord, look down .. .. .	J. Battisill	4d.
*Come unto Him .. .. .	H. Leslie	4d.	*O Lord, my God .. .. .	C. Malan and S. S. Wesley, each	2d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	Bach, Coudrey, and *Elvey, each	4d.	O Lord, my God .. .. .	H. R. Coudrey and C. Lee Williams, each	3d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	H. Hiles	3d.	O Lord, rebuke me not .. .. .	C. Simpson and H. Lahee, ea.	2d.
Come unto Me .. .. .	M. Kingston and J. S. Smith, each	2d.	O most merciful .. .. .	J. F. Bridge	4d.
*Come, ye sin-defiled and weary .. .. .	J. Stainer	3d.	O most merciful .. .. .	*E. Bullock and J. W. Elliott, ea.	2d.
*Comfort, O Lord .. .. .	W. Croft	3d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	W. A. C. Cruickshank and Rossini, each	4d.
Comfort the soul of Thy servant (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	John E. West	6d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	J. L. Bennett, 4d.; *Ch. Gounod	6d.
Create in me a clean heart .. .. .	P. J. Fry	4d.	*O saving Victim .. .. .	J. Stainer	3d.
*Enter not into judgment .. .. .	T. Attwood	2d.	O saving Victim .. .. .	Tours, *Koenig, *Westbury, and Wilson, ea.	2d.
Flee from evil .. .. .	W. J. Clarke	4d.	*O Saviour of the world .. .. .	J. Goss	4d.
For a small moment .. .. .	J. Stainer, 3d.; J. V. Roberts	2d.	*O Saviour of the world .. .. .	H. Moore	4d.
For our offences .. .. .	Mendelssohn	2d.	*O Saviour of the world (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	3d.
Forsake me not, O Lord, my God .. .. .	Goss	6d.	*O Thou that hearest prayer .. .. .	H. W. Davies	2d.
Give ear, O Lord .. .. .	*T. M. Pattison, 3d.; C. Oberthur	4d.	*O Thou that hearest prayer .. .. .	R. W. Robson	4d.
Give ear, O Shepherd of Israel .. .. .	A. Whiting	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	J. W. Elliott and *S. Coleridge-Taylor, ea.	2d.
*Give ear unto my prayer .. .. .	J. Arcadelt	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	F. A. W. Docker and G. J. Elvey, each	6d.
Give sentence with me, O God .. .. .	F. R. Thomas	4d.	O ye that love the Lord .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	4d.
*God so loved the world .. .. .	Goss, Kingston, and Stainer, each	2d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	F. E. Gladstone and G. C. Martin, each	4d.
*God so loved the world .. .. .	Harold Moore and J. V. Roberts, ea.	2d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	H. Clarke, 4d.; Mozart	4d.
*God so loved the world (from "The Passion") .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	3d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett	1s.
Grant, we beseech Thee .. .. .	*M. Elvey, 3d.; J. Booth	2d.	Out of the deep .. .. .	H. W. Davies and J. Naylor, each	6d.
Grant, we beseech Thee .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	Ponder my words, O Lord .. .. .	N. Hatfield, 4d.; A. D. Culley	6d.
Hail, true Body .. .. .	H. Willan	3d.	Put me not to rebuke, O Lord .. .. .	W. Croft	6d.
Have mercy upon me, O God .. .. .	J. Barnby, 3d.; J. Goss	6d.	Remember not, Lord .. .. .	*H. Purcell	6d.
Have mercy upon me .. .. .	Barnby, Minshall, Pye, and Shaw, each	4d.	*Remember now thy Creator .. .. .	C. Steggall	6d.
Have mercy upon me .. .. .	J. White	4d.	Remember, O Lord .. .. .	T. A. Walmisley	6d.
Hear me, O Lord .. .. .	W. H. Dixon	4d.	Rend your heart .. .. .	W. H. Dixon and *J. B. Calkin, ea.	2d.
*Hear me when I call .. .. .	A. W. Marchant, 4d.; King Hall	3d.	Rend your heart .. .. .	J. Clippindale	4d.
Hear me when I call (Male) .. .. .	John E. West and T. Distin, each	3d.	Rend your heart (Turn ye even to Me) .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	4d.
Hear my prayer .. .. .	Winter, 2d.; *J. Kent	4d.	Save me, O God .. .. .	C. S. Jekyll	4d.
Hear my prayer .. .. .	*Mendelssohn and C. Stroud, each	4d.	*Seek ye the Lord .. .. .	J. F. Bridge, 4d.; C. Bradley	2d.
Hear, O Lord .. .. .	*M. Watson, 4d.; J. Goss	3d.	Seek ye the Lord .. .. .	H. Kinsey and *J. V. Roberts, ea.	4d.
Hear, O Thou Shepherd .. .. .	J. Clarke-Whitfield & T. A. Walmisley, ea.	6d.	Show me Thy ways .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	4d.
*Hear the voice and prayer .. .. .	J. L. Hopkins	2d.	Spare us, Lord, most holy .. .. .	E. A. Sydenham	2d.
*Hear us, O Saviour .. .. .	M. Hauptmann	2d.	*Sweet the moments, rich in blessing .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	2d.
He in tears that soweth .. .. .	F. Hiller	2d.	Teach me, O Lord .. .. .	T. Attwood and B. Rogers, each	2d.
Hide not Thy Face .. .. .	K. J. Pye	4d.	Teach me Thy way .. .. .	Spohr and W. H. Gladstone, each	2d.
How long wilt Thou .. .. .	O. King	3d.	*The Heavenly Word .. .. .	Williams	2d.
*I came not to call the righteous .. .. .	C. Vincent	4d.	The Lord is full of compassion .. .. .	F. E. Gladstone	4d.
I will arise .. .. .	C. Wood	2d.	*The Lord is high .. .. .	W. H. Cummings	2d.
I will cry unto God .. .. .	H. J. King and C. Steggall, each	4d.	The path of the just .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.
*I will look unto the Lord (Two-part Anthem) .. .. .	G. A. Macfarren	3d.	The sacrifice of God .. .. .	H. W. Wareing	2d.
*I wrestle and pray .. .. .	J. C. Bach	6d.	The sacrifices of God .. .. .	H. Blair	2d.
If any man s .. .. .	H. Hiles	4d.	*The secret of the Lord .. .. .	John E. West	4d.
In Thee, O Lord .. .. .	*Coleridge-Taylor, Weldon, and *Tours, each	4d.	*The Story of the Cross Stainer, Somervell, Foster, & Roberts, ea.	4d.
*Incline Thine ear .. .. .	Himmel	2d.	The Story of the Cross .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett and H. E. Button, each	3d.
*Is it nothing to you? .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	*There is a green hill (Ed. by Bentley) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	6d.
*Is it nothing to you? (S.A.T.B.) (also for S.A.) .. .. .	M. B. Foster, each	4d.	There is a green hill (Ed. by West) .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.
Jesu of Nazareth (Turbarum voices) .. .. .	G. Byrd	6d.	*There is a green hill .. .. .	F. H. Burstall, 3d.; J. H. Somerset	2d.
*Jesu, Blessed Word of God .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	2d.	Think not that they are blest alone .. .. .	F. Brandeis	3d.
*Jesu, Lord of life and glory .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.	Thou didst turn Thy face .. .. .	T. Attwood	2d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory (S.S.A.) .. .. .	C. Macpherson	3d.	*Through peace to light .. .. .	J. H. Roberts	4d.
Jesu, Lord of life and glory .. .. .	G. A. Naumann	3d.	Thus saith the Lord .. .. .	G. M. Garrett	2d.
*Jesu, meek and lowly .. .. .	E. Elgar	4d.	Try me, O God (A.T.T.B.) .. .. .	A. D. Culley	3d.
Jesu, Saviour, I am Thine .. .. .	B. Steane	2d.	Try me, O God .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	4d.
*Jesu, Word of God Adlam, Gounod, Hoyte, Mozart, & White, each	2d.		Try me, O God .. .. .	C. Wood	2d.
*Jesu, Word of God Incarnate .. .. .	E. Elgar	3d.	Turbarum voices (Jesu of Nazareth) .. .. .	W. Byrd	6d.
Judge me, O God .. .. .	Ouseley and *Mendelssohn, each	2d.	Turn Thee, O Lord .. .. .	N. Hatfield, 4d.; T. Attwood	2d.
Just as I am .. .. .	F. Tozer	4d.	*Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	T. Attwood and A. Sullivan, each	2d.
Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	B. Smith and R. Dunstan, each	4d.	Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	C. Harris, 4d.; C. Steggall	6d.
Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	C. L. Naylor and *J. Stainer, each	6d.	Turn Thy face from my sins .. .. .	C. Lee Williams	3d.
*Lead, kindly Light .. .. .	Pughe-Evans	4d.	Turn ye even to Me (Rend your heart) .. .. .	A. E. Godfrey	4d.
Lead me in Thy truth .. .. .	Ed. Bunnett	4d.	Unto Thee have I cried .. .. .	G. J. Elvey	4d.
*Lead me, Lord .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	3d.	*Wash me thoroughly .. .. .	S. S. Wesley	4d.
Let my complaint .. .. .	A. Batten	3d.	Watch ye and pray .. .. .	G. R. Vicars	3d.
Let my complaint (A.A.T.T.B.B.) .. .. .	E. H. Thorne	4d.	*Weary of earth .. .. .	F. Tozer	2d.
*Let my prayer come up .. .. .	H. Purcell	2d.	*Weary of earth .. .. .	E. Vine Hall	4d.
*Let the wicked forsake his way .. .. .	J. Goss	2d.	Whom the Lord loveth .. .. .	C. Macpherson	4d.
Let the words of my mouth .. .. .	H. Blair and J. Barnby, each	2d.	Whosoever shall do the will .. .. .	Roberts	2d.
Let the words of my mouth .. .. .	A. D. Culley	4d.	*Why art thou so heavy, O my soul .. .. .	O. Gibbons	2d.
Let us come boldly .. .. .	C. H. Lloyd	2d.	Why art Thou so vexed .. .. .	C. Macpherson	3d.
Let us go forth .. .. .	J. V. Roberts	2d.	Word of God Incarnate .. .. .	Ch. Gounod	4d.
Like as the hart .. .. .	T. Adams, J. H. Clarke, and W. S. Hoyte, ea.	4d.	Ye who from His ways have turned .. .. .	Mendelssohn	4d.
Like as the hart .. .. .	C. Locknane, 4d.; *V. Novello	2d.

Anthems marked thus * to be had in Tonic Sol-fa, 1st, 2d., and 3d. each.

Popular Anthems for Easter

BY

CALEB SIMPER.

44 Separate Anthems which have run into over
2,000 Editions.

GEORGE BELCHER.

As it began to dawn ...	...	...	...	4d.
He hath redeemed us ...	...	...	...	4d.
A Prince and a Saviour ...	...	...	...	4d.

ARTHUR BERRIDGE.

This is the Day ...	...	...	...	4d.
Hallelujah! to the Saviour ...	...	...	...	4d.
Tell the Tidings ...	...	...	...	4d.
Christ our Passover ( Introducing a strain from Palestrina ) ...	...	...	...	4d.

REV. E. VINE-HALL.

I am Alpha and Omega ...	...	...	...	4d.
Ye choirs of New Jerusalem ...	...	...	...	4d.
Alleluia! Alleluia! ...	...	...	...	4d.
Welcome Happy Morning ...	...	...	...	4d.
Christ is risen from the dead... ..	...	...	...	4d.
Praise the Lord, ye heavens adore Him ...	...	...	...	4d.

All Anthems also in Sol-fa at 3d. each.

Send for a selection on appro.

A. WEEKES & Co., Ltd., 14, Hanover St., London, W.1.

SUCCESSFUL PERFORMANCES of this Devotional work have taken place at the University Church, Oxford; SS. Philip and James, Oxford; the Abbey Church, Bath; St. Mary's, Liverpool; the Parish Church, Bradford, Nuneaton, Southsea, Banbury, Chipping Norton, Kidderminster, Biggleswade, Kettering, Oldham, Tackley, Blackburn, Adderbury; St. Paul's, Western-super-Mare, Bideford, Oldham (Australia), &c.

VIA CRUCIS

(THE WAY OF THE CROSS)

(10TH EDITION)

A SACRED CANTATA

DEPICTING THE THREE LAST SCENES OF

THE SAVIOUR'S LIFE ON EARTH

FOR

TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS.

Interspersed with Hymns to be sung by the Choir and Congregation.

THE WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES

AND THE MUSIC COMPOSED BY

FREDERICK ILIFFE, M.A.,

Mus. Doc., Oxon.; Organist to the University of Oxford.

PRICE:

Vocal Score, 2s. 6d. net. Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 1s. 4d. net.

Words only, complete, for the use of Congregation, 1½d. each,
or 11s. 3d. per 100.

Words complete, with addition of Hymn Tunes, 3d. each,
or 22s. 6d. per 100.

Orchestral Parts, for Strings, Two Horns, Two Trumpets, and Drums may be hired of the Publishers.

Send for a specimen on appro.

LONDON: A. WEEKES & Co., LTD.,
14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.

MUSIC FOR LENT AND EASTER

For S.A.T.B. except where otherwise stated.

ANTHEMS, ETC.

LENT.

Cross of Calvary ( Passion ) ...	...	A. Redhead	85177	2d.*	Teachings of the Cross... ..	...	Dr. Vincent	85160	3d.*
Passion of Jesus, The ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85030	3d.*	Great Day of the Lord ( S. Solo )	...	J. Stuart Archer	85244	3d.
O Saviour of the World ( A.T.B. ) ...	...	G. E. Ryley	85109	4d.

EASTER.

Alleluia! Alleluia! ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85016	3d.	Now dawning glows the day ...	...	J. Stuart Archer	85245	3d.
Christ both died and rose ...	...	F. C. Woods	85161	4d.	Resurrection Morn, The ( S. Solo ) ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85045	4d.*
Christ is Risen ...	...	B. Johnson	85190	2d.	They have taken away my Lord ...	...	W. C. Filby	85113	4d.
Christ is Risen ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85104	4d.	To Thee and to Thy Christ ( Short ) ...	...	H. E. Watts	85194	3d.
I know that my Redeemer lives ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85031	4d.	Very early in the morning ...	...	Dr. Vincent	85017	4d.

* Words, Price 1d. each; 4/- per 100.

SACRED CANTATAS.

BY THE CROSS. By F. N. BAXTER. (No. 15004.)

A Passion-tide Church Cantata for Choir and Congregation. PRICE 1/6, POST 1½d. Words, 4d. each; 16/- per 100.

CALVARY. By LEONARD H. FOWLES. (No. 15102.)

A Sacred Church Cantata for two solo voices (Tenor and Baritone), Quartet and Chorus.

SYNOPSIS: Prelude, The Supper Chamber, Before Pilate, Procession to Calvary, The Crucifixion.

O.N., PRICE 2/-, POST 2d. Book of words and annotation (No. 15103), 3d. each, 4s. per 100.

ORATORIOS.

MESSIAH (O.N. & S.F.)... ..	Handel	15014	2/6	ST. MATTHEW PASSION (O.N.) ...	Bach	15154	3/-
-----------------------------	--------	-------	-----	--------------------------------	------	-------	-----

HOSANNA.

A SACRED SONG FOR EASTER AND OTHER OCCASIONS.

Words by EDWARD LOCKTON.

Music by JULES GRANIER.

No. 40317. In two keys—A (C<sub>1</sub>—F<sup>1</sup>) and C. Price 2/- net.

Of all Music Dealers, or if OFFER No. 17 is mentioned, POST FREE, from:

PAXTON'S: LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.1.

Ask to see copies through our "On Approval" Department. Send for complete Vocal Catalogue, (C 201), post free.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."

Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity." Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-95: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."

Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."

Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."

Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 4d.; Words, 3s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC SERIES.

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

- VOL. 1. THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.
" 2. GREAT MODERN COMPOSERS.
" 3. SHORT STUDIES OF GREAT MASTERPIECES.
" 4. MUSIC AS A HUMANITY.
" 5. A GUIDE TO MUSIC.

Cloth, Six Shillings per Volume.

THE PRINCIPLES OF PIANO PRACTICE.

BY

JAMES FRISKIN.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO. (ILLUSTRATED).

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., 159, EAST 48TH STREET.
London Agents: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

NEW PART-SONGS

FOR

Male Voices, Women's Choirs, and Mixed

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

MALE VOICES.

Tell me not of a lovely lass (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
The Lord of Heaven (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	8d.
To America (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	8d.
At the Play (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Highland Love (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Queen and Huntress (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
When thou must home (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Roses of Sixteen (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Rose Aylmer (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Twenty Years Hence (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
When Lovely Women (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
You and Me (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Late Leaves (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
Remain (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
With Leaden Foot (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.
Silver Key (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	4d.
The Cave-Men (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	6d.

WOMEN'S VOICES.

London Bridge is Broken (S.S.A.)	...	...	8d.
I know they'll shine again (S.S.)	...	...	4d.
Highland Love (S.S.A.)	...	...	4d.

MIXED VOICES.

To America (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.
Tell me not of a lovely lass (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
Highland Love (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
The New Dawn (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	6d.
I know they'll shine again (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	4d.
O let my lamp (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.
Mirth (S.A.T.B.)	...	...	8d.

CANTATAS

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

Cat and Gold Fish, The (S.S.A.A.)	...	...	s. d.
Last Supper, The	...	...	1 0
Luck of Eden Hall, The (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	1 0
Tinker Tailor (S.S.A.A.)	...	...	2 0
Tinker Tailor (T.T.B.B.)	...	...	2 0

NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., 159 EAST 48TH STREET.
London Agents: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FAITH HOUSE THE STAMP OF EFFICIENCY. FAITH HOUSE

The Passion of our Lord according to S. Mark

SET TO MUSIC BY

CHARLES WOOD, MUS. DOC.,

Organist of Caius College, Cambridge.

THE WORDS ARRANGED BY

THE REV. E. MILNER-WHITE, M.A.,

Dean of King's College, Cambridge.

FOR CHOIR AND ORGAN, PRICE 3s. 6d.

Words only, with six Illustrations, 1d.; or 8s. per 100.

THIS really magnificent work, fit to rank with the great compositions of the past, is more than an Oratorio. It is a devotional service, and as such, was sung at upwards of thirty Cathedrals and Churches last Passion-tide. Its atmosphere is created at the start by the hymn "Pange Lingua," treated as only Dr. Wood can treat such a melody, and the last verses of that hymn are re-introduced at the end with splendid effect.

Musical Times :—"On a plane far above much of the Church Music of the day. A deeply devotional spirit pervades the whole, and the music maintains a lofty standard throughout. Not the least noteworthy feature of a very fine work is the masterly treatment of the various hymns which play an important part in the setting."

Cambridge Review :—"Characterised by the utmost dignity, and by the restraint that all such devotional music should show."

Church Times :—"An unique and precious gift to Church Music."

CHURCH MUSIC MONOGRAPHS, 4s. 6d. each.

1. THE CHORALES. A. W. WILSON, M.A., Mus. Doc.
2. THE CHURCH ORGAN. NOEL BONAVIDA-HUNT, M.A.
3. PLAINCHANT. DOM. GATARD, O.S.B.
4. LATIN HYMNODY. H. V. HUGHES, M.A.
5. THE PRIEST'S PART OF THE ANGLICAN LITURGY.
C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. Doc.
6. BYZANTINE MUSIC AND HYMNOGRAPHY. H. J. W. TILLYARD, M.A.

MASS in the Phrygian Mode. By Dr. CHARLES WOOD. 1s.

Other Masses by VIADANA, GABRIELI, FARRANT, NICHOLSON, LEY, WILSON, STOCKS, &c., &c.

Full list on application.

TE DEUM AND BENEDICTUS. By Dr. CHARLES WOOD. 1s. 6d.

THE TENOR TUNE BOOK. New and enlarged edition. Descants, old and new, to well-known hymn tunes, by Harvey Grace, H. V. Hughes, H. R. Norton, Geoffrey Shaw, Martin Shaw, and Becket Williams. Third Edition in the press. Price 2s. 6d.

THE KYRIE BOOK. Containing 22 Settings of the Ninefold Kyries, arranged from the works of composers of the 16th, 17th, and 18th Centuries. 1s. 6d.

THE FAITH PRESS, Ltd., 22, Buckingham Street, Charing Cross, W.C.2.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LTD.

CHURCH MUSIC.

(Full List on application.)

No. 81. Mag. and Nunc ( Martin Shaw )...	9d.
No. 95. Mag. and Nunc ( Geoffrey Shaw )...	8d.
No. 103. Come to us, we beseech thee (S.A.T.B.) (Compline Service) ... ( Wm. Byrd )	8d.
No. 104. Come, O Creator Spirit (S.S.A.T.B.) ( W. Gandy )	6d.

PART-SONGS.

CYRIL JENKINS (T.T.B.B.).

Lament ... ..	6d.
*Forth to the battle ... ..	6d.
*Men of Harlech ... ..	6d.

* Welsh and English Text. "Specimens" half-price (post free.)

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS (S.A.T.B.).

Three Elizabethan Part-Songs ... complete 1s.

EDWARD ELGAR.

From the Bavarian Highlands (Choral Suite)
S.A.T.B. Nos. 1 to 6.Complete O.N., 4s. ; Sol-fa, 1s. 3d.
Band Parts can be had on hire.

DEPT. L, JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LIMITED,

32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

POPULAR EASTER ANTHEMS.

COMPOSED BY EDWYN A. CLARE.

Highly effective without being difficult. World-wide popularity.

*HALLELUJAH! KING OF KINGS ... ..	28th 1000	4d.
*HE IS RISEN. A great favourite ... ..	38th 1000	4d.
*CHRIST SHALL GIVE THREE LIGHT ... ..	30th 1000	4d.
*THANKS BE TO GOD (with a fine Bass Solo)	26th 1000	6d.
*WHY SEEK YE THE LIVING AMONG THE DEAD?	30th 1000	4d.
*NOW IS CHRIST RISEN... ..	18th 1000	4d.
*HALLELUJAH! CHRIST IS RISEN ... ..	28th 1000	4d.
*THE LORD REIGNETH (Festival) ... ..	20th 1000	4d.
PRaise THE LORD, O JERUSALEM (Festival)	47th 1000	4d.
THE BLESSINGS OF PEACE (I WILL EXTOL THEE), 5th	1000 New	4d.
FAVOURITE MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D	30th 1000	6d.
Full of flowing melody. Sung at a Choral Festival.
BENEDICTE IN D. Quadruple Chant ... ..	8th 1000	3d.
Varied Acc. for Boys' verses and Men's or Unison Verses.
*NEW BENEDICTE IN B FLAT ... ..	5th 1000	2d.
Very effective changes. No monotony

Those marked * may also be had in Tonic Sol-fa.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.
New York : THE H. W. GRAY CO., Sole Agents for the U.S.A.

NEW EASTER ANTHEM.

FULL THROUGHOUT. EASY. JUBILANT. TREBLE COMPASS UP TO F.

"THE STRIFE IS O'ER."

By H. ERNEST NICHOL, Mus. Bac., OXON.

O.N. and Sol-fa in one copy. Price 4d.

Specimen Free to any Choirmaster.

Specimens of Five Easter Anthems, 1s.

H. E. NICHOL, 23, CHARLOTTE STREET, HULL.

Church Music by Matthew Kingston.

HO! EVERYONE THAT THIRSTETH (Bass Solo and Chorus) ...	3d.
{ COMMUNION SERVICE IN A FLAT (Entire Service) ...	1s.
{ CONGREGATION'S MELODY IN SAME (Treble Clef) ...	3d.
TE DEUM IN A FLAT (Festal or General) ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN A FLAT ... ..	4d.
MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN D (Short Festal) ...	3d.

London : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

OVER SEVEN MILLION COPIES OF CALEB SIMPER'S Compositions in Church Music now sold.

NEW EASTER ANTHEMS, Etc.

COMPOSED BY CALEB SIMPER.

*SHOUT ALLELUIA! ... ..	Just Published	4d.
Beautiful Sop. or Tenor Solo, with fine attractive Choruses, Very effective throughout.
*TO HIM ALL POWER. New ... ..	8th Edit.	4d.
*HALLELUJAH! THE LORD IS RISEN ... ..	9th Edit.	5d.
*NEW BENEDICTE. No. 9, shortened ... ..		3d.
Already much appreciated. Different Harmonies for Boys' and Men's voices.
*HIM HATH GOD EXALTED ... ..	8th Edit.	4d.
*REJOICE AND BE GLAD... ..	6th Edit.	4d.
*THE VICTORY ... ..	6th Edit.	4d.
*AWAKE! ARISE ... ..	5th Edit.	4d.
GOD IS OUR REFUGE ... ..	4th Edit.	8d.
Short Work. Solos and Choruses. Occupies about 18 minutes.
*NEW ANNIVERSARY SELECTIONS, Nos. 23, 24, and 25. Each Set Complete, 3d. Words only, 5s. per 100. Quantities on liberal terms. Seven Festival Hymns and Tunes in each Selection.
NEW VOLUNTARY BOOKS, Nos. 11 and 12. Price 2s. each.
Wonderfully popular. Each Book contains Seventeen Pieces written on Two Staves with Pedal-part indicated. (7th Edition).
Those marked * are also issued in Tonic Sol-fa.

London : A. WEEKES & CO., 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.
Chicago, U.S.A. : CLAYTON F. SUMMY CO., 429, S. Wabash Ave.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
Price Sixpence.

BANKS &amp; SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

Crown 8vo., Cloth 7s. 6d. net.

Music in the Days of Shakespeare.

ABOUT ELIZABETHAN VIRGINAL MUSIC AND ITS COMPOSERS. WILLIAM BYRD, JOHN BULL, ORLANDO GIBBONS, GILES FARNABY, and others. With facsimiles of the original Manuscripts. For General Reader and Musician alike. By M. H. GLYN.
THE BYRD ORGAN BOOK, for Piano or Organ. Collection of 21
Pieces (Pavans, Galliards, &c.), by William Byrd, 1543-1623, edited from the Virginal MSS. and now first published in Modern Notation.
By M. H. GLYN. 5s. net, or in 2 books, 3s. each net.

A charming collection. "West Sussex Gazette."

MODERN ORGAN BUILDING. Practical Explanation and Description of Organ Construction. Especial Regard to Pneumatic Action, Chapters on Tuning, Voicing, &c. 76 Illustrations drawn to scale from actual Working Drawings, together with Diagrams, Tables, &c. By W. and T. Lewis. Second Edition, corrected and added to in text and illustrations. 4to, extra gilt, cloth, 17s. 6d.
net; or cloth, 15s. 6d. net, postage, 1s.PRIMARY COURSE IN RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, with Hints on answering Questions (Written Work) for All Examinations in Primary, Elementary, and Preparatory Grades. By WILSON
MANHIRE, L.R.A.M., etc. 1s. net.EXAMINATION CANDIDATE'S GUIDE to Scale and Arpeggio Piano Playing (with Tests). All that is Required for the various Examinations. By WILSON MANHIRE. 2s. net.CANDIDATE'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO TESTS for Piano.
In the Primary, Elementary, and Junior Grades of all Local Examinations in Music, and Higher and Lower Divisions of Associated Board of R.A.M. and R.C.M. By WILSON MANHIRE.
9d. net.YOUNG VIOLINIST'S SCALE AND ARPEGGIO MANUAL.
With Directions. By WILSON MANHIRE. Folio. Text and Music.
2s. net.70 PREPARATORY VIOLIN EXERCISES for Beginners, in the First Position. Carefully Graduated, Supplementary to First Instruction Book. By WILSON MANHIRE. 2s. net.HOW TO LISTEN TO GOOD MUSIC and Encourage the Taste in Instrumental and Vocal Music. With many useful Notes for Listener and Executant. By K. BROADLEY GREENE. Complete, cloth, 4s. 6d. net; or in 2 books, paper, 1s. 6d. each net.THE SPIRIT OF MUSIC FROM EAST TO WEST IN NATURE, ART, AND LEGEND. Penned in 16 Articles for General Reading, with Drawings of Eastern Musical Instruments.
By G. P. GREEN (author of "Some Aspects of Chinese Music").
Cr. 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d. net.

WILLIAM REEVES, BOOKSELLER, LTD.,

83, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.2.

* Ask for Reeves's Musical Literature List (Catalogue B).

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH, CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH.

No.	No. 1.
1.	Interlude ...	Th. Dubois
2.	Chanson de Matin ...	Edward Elgar
3.	Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" ...	W. Faulkes
4.	There is a green hill far away ...	Ch. Gounod
5.	Marche Triomphale... ..	Alexandre Guilmant
6.	Ave Maria ... ..	A. Henselt
7.	Grand Chœur No. 2... ..	Alfred Hollins
8.	Andantino in D flat ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
9.	Chanson Triste ... ..	P. Tschaiowsky
10.	Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I. ...	R. Wagner
11.	Romanza ... ..	W. Wolstenholme
12.	Allegretto in E flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	No. 2.
1.	Chanson de Nuit ... ..	Edward Elgar
2.	Alla Marcia ... ..	Myles B. Foster
3.	Minuetto ... ..	Alexandre Guilmant
4.	Lied ... ..	H. Hofmann
5.	Barcarolle ... ..	H. Hofmann
6.	Spring Song ... ..	Alfred Hollins
7.	The Curfew ... ..	Edward J. Horsman
8.	Pastorale in E ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
9.	Ave Maria d'Arcadelt ... ..	Franz Liszt
10.	Cantique d'Amour ... ..	Theo. Wendt
11.	The Seraph's Strain ... ..	W. Wolstenholme
12.	Le Carillon ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	No. 3.
1.	Scherzo in A flat ... ..	Edward C. Bairstow
2.	Melody ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor
3.	Serenade ... ..	H. Hofmann
4.	Bridal March ... ..	Alfred Hollins
5.	Berceuse ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
6.	Melodie in E ... ..	S. Rachmaninoff
7.	Aubade ... ..	A. Strelitzky
8.	Nocturne in C sharp minor ... ..	P. Tschaiowsky
9.	Procession to the Minster ("Lohengrin")	R. Wagner
10.	Passacaglia ... ..	John E. West
11.	Fantasia upon the Plain-song Melody "Ad cenam Agni" ... ..	Healey Willan
12.	Allegretto in A flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	No. 4.
1.	Arietta ... ..	S. Coleridge-Taylor
2.	Souvenir de Printemps ... ..	Joseph Holbrooke
3.	Andante in D ... ..	Alfred Hollins
4.	Pavane in A ... ..	Bernard Johnson
5.	Harmonies du Soir ... ..	Sigfrid Karg-Elert
6.	An Eton Memorial March ... ..	C. H. Lloyd
7.	Allegro alla Marcia ... ..	A. L. Peace
8.	Visione ... ..	J. Rheinberger
9.	Chant sans Paroles ... ..	P. Tschaiowsky
10.	Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger")	R. Wagner
11.	Allegro Pomposo ... ..	John E. West
12.	Canzona ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	No. 5.
1.	Jour de Noces ... ..	J. Stuart Archer
2.	Festival Prelude on "Ein' feste Burg" ...	W. Faulkes
3.	Legend ... ..	Harvey Grace
4.	Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	H. M. Higgs
5.	Benediction Nuptiale ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6.	Sursum Corda ... ..	John N. Ireland
7.	Alla Marcia ... ..	John N. Ireland
8.	Adagio Cantabile ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
9.	Fanfare... ..	J. Lemmens
10.	Intermezzo ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
11.	Easter Morn ... ..	John E. West
12.	Finale in B flat ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	No. 6.
1.	Nocturne ... ..	Thomas F. Dunhill
2.	Postludium ... ..	William Faulkes
3.	Andante Tranquillo ... ..	H. M. Higgs
4.	In Springtime... ..	Alfred Hollins
5.	Madrigal ... ..	Edwin H. Lemare
6.	Triumphal March ... ..	J. Lemmens
7.	Allegro in B flat ... ..	F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8.	Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" ...	C. Hubert H. Parry
9.	Præludium Pastorale ... ..	J. Stainer
10.	Romance in F minor ... ..	Tschaiowsky
11.	Romance in A flat ... ..	H. Sandiford Turner
12.	Festal Commemoration ... ..	John E. West

No.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 26) ...	Beethoven
2.	Blest are they that mourn (Requiem) ...	Brahms
3.	Funeral March (Pianoforte Sonata, Op. 35) ...	Chopin
4.	Funeral March ... ..	William Faulkes
5.	Funeral March ("Saul") ... ..	Handel
6.	I know that my Redeemer liveth ("Messiah")	Handel
7.	Funeral March ("Lieder ohne Worte") ...	Mendelssohn
8.	O rest in the Lord ("Elijah") ... ..	Mendelssohn
9.	Marche Solennelle ... ..	Schubert
10.	Marche Funèbre ... ..	Tschaiowsky
11.	Finale from "Symphonie Pathétique" ...	Tschaiowsky
12.	Lament ... ..	John E. West

No.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).
1.	Chorale Prelude, "In dulci júbilo" ... ..	J. S. Bach
2.	Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio")...	J. S. Bach
3.	Quem Vidistis, Pastores ... ..	W. T. Best
4.	Venite in Bethlehem ... ..	W. T. Best
5.	December—Christmas Morn ... ..	Frederic H. Cowen
6.	Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols ... ..	William Faulkes
7.	For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") ...	Handel
8.	Pastorale ... ..	Theodore Kullak
9.	Chorus of Shepherds ... ..	J. Lemmens
10.	Christmas Pastoral... ..	Gustav Merkel
11.	A Christmas Pastoral ... ..	B. Luard-Selby
12.	Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ... ..	John E. West
	("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.")

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.
1.	Andante Grazioso ... ..	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante ... ..	W. G. Alcock
3.	Largamente ... ..	George J. Bennett
4.	Andante Religioso ... ..	Myles B. Foster
5.	Andantino ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6.	Adagio Cantabile ... ..	Alfred Hollins
7.	Larghetto ... ..	Charles J. May
8.	Andante con Moto ... ..	John E. West
9.	Andantino quasi Allegretto ... ..	John E. West
10.	Andante ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	Book II.
1.	Andante con Moto ... ..	Thomas Adams
2.	Con Moto ... ..	W. G. Alcock
3.	Moderato ... ..	H. A. Chambers
4.	Marziale, poco Lento ... ..	Myles B. Foster
5.	Moderato ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6.	Andantino ... ..	Alfred Hollins
7.	Adagio ... ..	Charles J. May
8.	"Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto ... ..	John E. West
9.	Andante Serioso ... ..	John E. West
10.	Adagio ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	Book III.
1.	Moderato e Legato ... ..	Thomas Adams
2.	Moderato ... ..	W. G. Alcock
3.	Andante con Moto ... ..	George J. Bennett
4.	Andante ... ..	H. A. Chambers
5.	Grazioso molto Espressivo ... ..	Myles B. Foster
6.	"Song without Words"—Con Moto ... ..	Alfred Hollins
7.	Andante ... ..	Alfred Hollins
8.	Andante Dolente ... ..	John E. West
9.	Andante Pastorale ... ..	John E. West
10.	Adagio ... ..	W. Wolstenholme

No.	Book IV.
1.	"Elevation"—Andante e Legato ... ..	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante Religioso ... ..	Myles B. Foster
3.	"Simplicity"—Andante ... ..	Barry M. Gilholy
4.	Largamente ... ..	R. G. Hailing
5.	"Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso... ..	Charles H. Lloyd
6.	Andantino ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Con Moto Moderato... ..	William Sewell
8.	Andante Amabile ... ..	William Sewell
9.	Andante ... ..	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Andante Sostenuto ... ..	F. Cunningham Woods

No.	Book V.
1.	"Invocation"—Andante Grazioso ... ..	Thomas Adams
2.	Andante con Moto ... ..	Percy E. Fletcher
3.	Poco Adagio ... ..	Myles B. Foster
4.	Andante Espressivo ... ..	Ignace Gibsone
5.	Adagio ... ..	Alfred Hollins
6.	Poco Lento ... ..	Charles H. Lloyd
7.	Andante Dolente ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
8.	Andantino con Tenezza ... ..	William Sewell
9.	Andante con Moto ... ..	Clement M. Spurling
10.	Adagio Molto ... ..	F. Cunningham Woods

No.	Book VI.
1.	Dolente... ..	Edmund T. Chipp
2.	Andante Sostenuto ... ..	Myles B. Foster
3.	Andantino ... ..	R. G. Hailing
4.	Con Moto ... ..	Alfred Hollins
5.	"Communion"—Cantabile ... ..	J. Lemmens
6.	Andante Religioso ... ..	Arthur W. Marchant
7.	Lento ... ..	Charles J. May
8.	Larghetto ... ..	Albert Robins
9.	Adagio e Mesto ... ..	William Sewell
10.	Andante Afetuososo ... ..	William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S PIANOFORTE ALBUMS.

In Numbers, each 1s. 6d., except Nos. 26, 27, and 28; or, Cloth Volumes, each 6s.

VOLUME I.

- No. 1.—BACH. Twenty pieces from Petits Préludes, Suites Anglaises. Partita Nos. 1 to 3, &c.
No. 2.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Suites Anglaises, Suites Françaises. Partita Nos. 4 and 5, &c.
No. 3.—BACH. Twenty Pieces from Petits Préludes, Concertos, Suites Anglaises, &c.

VOLUME II.

- No. 4.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 1 to 7, Sonatas, "Harmonious Blacksmith," &c.
No. 5.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 8 to 12, Gavottes, &c.
No. 6.—HANDEL. Twenty-four Pieces from Suites 13 to 16, Water Music, &c.

VOLUME III.

- No. 7.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Hero's March, Rakoczy March, Bridal March ("Lohengrin"), &c.
No. 8.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Meyerbeer's Coronation March, Cornelius March, Pilgrims' March, &c.
No. 9.—MARCHES. Fifteen Pieces, including Mendelssohn's Wedding March, March "Tannhäuser," &c.

VOLUME IV.

- No. 10.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Rameau's Gavotte, Zimmermann's Gavotte, Calkin's Minuet, Silas's Bourrée, &c.
No. 11.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including Gluck's Gavotte, W. Macfarren's Bourrée, Bach's Bourrée, &c.
No. 12.—GAVOTTES, MINUETS, ETC. Sixteen Pieces, including W. Macfarren's 2nd Gavotte, Benedict's Gavotte, Mozart's Minuet, &c.

VOLUME V.

- No. 13.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including Marche Hongroise, Scherzo Brillant, &c.
No. 14.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "La Gazelle," "Mazeppa Galop," &c.
No. 15.—WOLLENHAUPT, J. Ten Pieces, including "Les Clochettes," "Feu Follet," &c.
No. 16.—SCHWEIZER, OTTO. Eight Scottish Airs (arranged for four hands).

VOLUME VI.

- No. 17.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "Murmuring Rivulet," The Pilgrims' Chorus ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 18.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Nine Pieces, including "L'Oisillon," "Le Carillon," "The Evening Star" ("Tannhäuser"), &c.
No. 19.—SPINDLER, FRITZ. Ten Pieces, including "Jeu des Ondes," Valse Mélodieuse, Spinning Song, ("Flying Dutchman"), &c.

VOLUME VII.

- No. 20.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Five Compositions.
No. 21.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Four Compositions.
No. 22.—GOETZ, HERMANN. Six Compositions.

VOLUME VIII.

- No. 23.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 24.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Eleven Compositions.
No. 25.—RHEINBERGER, JOSEF. Seven Compositions.
No. 26.—TOURS, BERTHOLD. Juvenile Album, Eight Characteristic Pieces (Duets), 3s.

VOLUME IX.

- Nos. 27 and 28.—MOSCHELES, I. "Domestic Life." Twelve Characteristic Duets, Two Books, each, 3s.

VOLUME X.

- No. 29.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Nine Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 3; Op. 12, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 30.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Ten Pieces. Op. 24, Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 27, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 28, Nos. 1 to 4.
No. 31.—KJERULF, HALFDAN. Op. 28, Nos. 5 and 6; Op. 29; and Twenty Songs arranged.

VOLUME XI.

- Nos. 32, 33, and 34. The National Dance Music of Scotland. Arranged for the Pianoforte by Alexander Mackenzie; with additions by his son, A. C. Mackenzie.

VOLUME XII.

- No. 35.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Eight Pieces. Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 5; Op. 15, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 36.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Nine Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 6; Op. 23, Nos. 1 to 3.
No. 37.—MACKENZIE, A. C. Six Songs. Transcribed for the Pianoforte by Giuseppe Buonamici.

- No. 38.—ALTSCHUL, RUDOLF. Fifty Hungarian National Songs.

VOLUME XIV.

- No. 41.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Twenty-one Pieces. Op. 2, Nos. 1 to 14; Op. 3, Nos. 1, 3, 4, and 6; Op. 6; Op. 15, Nos. 1 and 2.
No. 42.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Seven Pieces. Op. 4, Nos. 1 to 4; Op. 7, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 11.
No. 43.—LIADOFF, ANATOLE. Ten Pieces. Op. 8; Op. 9, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 10, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 13, Nos. 1 to 4.

VOLUME XV.

- No. 44.—CUI, CÉSAR. Thirteen Pieces. Op. 20, Nos. 1 to 12; Op. 21, No. 3.
No. 45.—CUI, CÉSAR. Eleven Pieces. Op. 21, No. 4; Op. 22, Nos. 1, 2, and 3; Op. 31, No. 2; Op. 39, Nos. 1 to 6.
No. 46.—CUI, CÉSAR. Seven Pieces. Op. 22, No. 4; Op. 29, No. 1; Op. 30, No. 1; Op. 35, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 40, Nos. 2 and 4.

VOLUME XVI.

- No. 47.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 90.
No. 48.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Four Impromptus. Op. 142.
No. 49.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Moments Musicaux. (Op. 94), and Adagio and Rondo (Op. 145).

VOLUME XVII.

- No. 50.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Three Sets of Variations, Andante, and Klavierstück.
No. 51.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Adagio, Allegretto, and March in E major, &c.
No. 52.—SCHUBERT, FRANZ. Five Klavierstücke and Two Scherzi.

VOLUME XVIII.

- No. 53.—HOFMANN, H. "The Trumpeter of Säckingen" (Op. 52) and Two Valses Caprices (Op. 2).
No. 54.—HOFMANN, H. "Italian Love Tale" (Op. 19) and Five other Pieces.
No. 55.—HOFMANN, H. Fourteen Pieces.

FOUR CHARACTERISTIC WALTZES

1. VALSE BOHEMIENNE.

3. VALSE DE LA REINE.

2. VALSE RUSTIQUE.

4. VALSE MAURESQUE.

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

(Op. 22).

PIANOFORTE SOLO.

PRICE, COMPLETE, FOUR SHILLINGS; SEPARATELY, 2s. 3d. EACH.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. complete	4	6	Full Score (Full Orchestra) ... ..	11	6
Violin and Pianoforte ... .. separately, each	2	3	Full Score (Small Orchestra), MS.
String Parts for Full or Small Orchestra ... ..	9	0	Arrangements, as Quintets, for Pianoforte and
Wind Parts for Small Orchestra ... ..	10	5	Strings, each Number ... ..	3	0
Ditto, for Full Orchestra ... ..	17	5	Separate String Parts, 8d. each.
			Military Band Arrangement ... ..	19	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s.	d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3	6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1	6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2	3
80.	DÉSÉSPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1	6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2	3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
83.	" " " No. 2 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
84.	" " " No. 3 ... .. H. Howells	1	6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. C. Palmer	1	6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH ... .. R. G. Hailing	1	6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... .. C. F. Waters	1	6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... .. Alfred Hollins	3	0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... .. S. Karg-Elert	3	6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2	3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÖLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÖRT" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2	0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5	6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2	0

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS. SELECTED LIST.

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.
OLD ENGLISH SUITE. Small Orchestra.
Full Score, 16s. String Parts, 6s. 9d. Wind Parts, 11s. 1d.
EDWARD ELGAR.
VARIATIONS ON AN ORIGINAL THEME.
Full Score, 25s. String Parts, 14s. 9d. Wind Parts, 31s. 6d.
EDWARD GERMAN.
MARCH RHAPSODY.
Full Score, 16s. String Parts, 8s. 3d. Wind Parts, 19s. 8d.
HAMILTON HARTY.
WITH THE WILD GEESE. Poem for Orchestra.
Full Score, 19s. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Wind Parts, MS.
DOROTHY HOWELL.
LAMIA. Symphonic Poem.
Full Score, 15s. String Parts, 6s. 8d. Wind Parts, MS.
A. C. MACKENZIE.
THE LITTLE MINISTER. Overture.
Full Score, MS. String Parts, 6s. 9d. Wind Parts, 14s. 8d.
Wind Parts (Small Orchestra), MS.
CHARLES MACPHERSON.
HALLOWE'EN. Suite.
Full Score and Wind Parts, MS. String Parts, 16s. 6d.
ARTHUR SULLIVAN.
OVERTURE "In Memoriam."
Full Score, 19s. String Parts, 6s. 9d. Wind Parts, 12s.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PROGRESSIVE STUDIES

FOR THE PIANOFORTE

EDITED, ARRANGED IN GROUPS, AND THE FINGERING REVISED AND SUPPLEMENTED

BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

THIS Collection of Studies is intended to illustrate the various elements of a complete course of pianoforte technique, and to provide students with the means of attacking and overcoming the different special difficulties which have to be encountered. With this view, the Studies have been arranged in groups, those in each group being placed in progressive order, and having reference to some one particular difficulty. The greater part of the Studies themselves have been selected from the standard works of the most eminent Study-writers, and with these are included numerous others, which, though of equally great practical utility, have hitherto been less generally accessible.

1.	FIVE-FINGER STUDIES ...	...	...	Part I	31.	DOUBLE NOTES ...	...	...	Part I
2.*	"	"	...	"	2	32.	"	...	"
3.	SCALES	...	...	Part I	33.	"	"	...	"
4.	"	...	...	"	2	34.	"	...	"
5.	BROKEN CHORDS...	...	...	Part I	35.	OCTAVES	...	...	Part I
6.	"	"	...	"	2	36.*	"	...	"
7.	"	"	...	"	3	37.	CHORDS	...	Part I
8.	"	"	...	"	4	38.	"	...	"
9.	"	"	...	"	5	39.*	STACCATO	...	"
10.	LEFT HAND...	...	...	Part I	40.	REPETITION	...	...	Part I
11.	"	"	...	"	2	41.*	REPETITION AND TREMOLO	...	"
12.	"	"	...	"	3	42.	"	"	"
13.	"	"	...	"	4	43.*	PART-PLAYING	...	Part I
14.*	ARPEGGIO	...	...	Part I	44.	"	"	...	"
15.	"	...	...	"	2	45.*	ORNAMENTS	...	Part I
16.	"	...	...	"	3	46.	"	...	"
17.	VELOCITY	...	...	Part I	47.	ACCOMPANIED MELODY	...	...	Part I
18.	"	...	...	"	2	48.	"	"	"
19.	"	...	...	"	3	49.	EXTENSIONS AND SKIPS	...	Part I
20.	"	...	...	"	4	50.*	"	"	"
21.	"	...	...	"	5	51.	RHYTHM	...	Part I
22.	"	...	...	"	6	52.*	"	...	"
23.	"	...	...	"	7	53.	EXERCISES FOR THE WEAKER FINGERS. By J. A. O'NEILL.	...	"
24.	FIGURES IN SEQUENCE	...	...	Part I	54.	WRIST STUDIES (Handgelenkstübungen). By ARNOLD KRUG.	...	By
25.*	"	"	...	"	2	55.	EXERCISES FOR FACILITATING INDE- PENDENCE OF THE FINGERS (Übungen für die Selbständigkeit der Finger). By ARNOLD KRUG.	...
26.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES ...	...	...	Part I	56.	PRELIMINARY STUDIES IN PLAYING POLYPHONIC MUSIC (Vorübungen für das polyphone Spiel. By ARNOLD KRUG.	...
27.	BROKEN THIRDS, SIXTHS, AND OCTAVES ...	...	...	"	2
28.	SHAKES	...	...	Part I
29.	"	...	...	"	2
30.	"	...	...	"	3

* These Books contain Studies composed by Mr. Franklin Taylor specially for this Series.

FIFTY-SIX BOOKS, PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH.

FROM THE ABOVE:

SELECTED PIANOFORTE STUDIES

PROGRESSIVELY ARRANGED BY

FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

The present collection of Studies is designed to provide teachers with a short course of Pianoforte Technique adapted to the needs of the average pupil, the intention being to spare the teacher the labour of choosing a sufficiently varied selection from the large mass of material existing, and at the same time to ensure that the different departments of technique shall be undertaken in the order which experience has proved to be the most beneficial.

The Studies are grouped in two Sets, and are so arranged that the different Books in which they are contained may be taken in consecutive order, but pupils who are already further advanced than the elementary stage represented by Set I. may commence at once with Set II., which will be found to be complete in itself, and to illustrate all the essential elements of technique.

Where additional studies are desired, or studies on certain subjects which are not touched upon in this series, the larger collection, published under the title of "Progressive Studies" (from which the present examples have been selected), is of course available.

IN TWO SETS (EIGHT BOOKS). PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SOLOS FROM THE SACRED CANTATAS

OF

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH.

In eight Books—each Book, One Shilling and Sixpence.

FIRST SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air WITHIN MY HEART OF HEARTS ("A Stronghold Sure").
- Air OUR JESUS HATH FOR AYE ("God goeth up").
- Air MY HEART EVER TRUSTING ("God so loved the world").
- Air O GRANT US, MIGHTY LORD ("Jesus, now will we praise Thee").
- Air SIGHING, WEEPING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").

ALTO.

- Air THOU, WHOSE PRAISES NEVER END ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { THE FATHER HATH APPOINTED HIM ("God goeth up").
- Air { MY SPIRIT HIM DESCRIBES ("God goeth up").
- Air INTO THY HANDS ("God's time is best").
- Air REJOICE, YE SOULS, ELECT AND HOLY ("O Light Everlasting").

TENOR.

- Air LORD, TO US THYSELF BE SHOWING ("Bide with us").
- Recit. { WHY HAST THOU THEN, O GOD ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air { FAST MY BITTER TEARS ARE FLOWING ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Air REJOICE, O MY SPIRIT ("My Spirit was in heaviness").
- Recit. { THE MIGHTY GUARDIAN ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air { HIS FACE MY SHEPHERD LONG IS HIDING ("Thou Guide of Israel").
- Air AND WHY ART THOU, MY SOUL, SO FEARFUL ("When will God recall").

BASS.

- Recit. { HE COMES, THE LORD OF LORDS ("God goeth up").
- Air { 'TIS HE, WHO ALL ALONE ("God goeth up").
- Recit. { IT IS NOT MINE ("God so loved the world").
- Air { ON MY BEHALF " " "
- Recit. { YEA, THIS THY WORD ("Thou Guide of Israel")
- Air { WHOM JESUS DEIGNS " " "
- Air YET SILENCE ("When will God recall").

SECOND SET.

SOPRANO.

- Air OPEN WIDE, MY HEART ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air FATHER, WHAT I PROFFER ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air COME, VISIT, YE GLOWING ("How brightly shines").
- Air I HAVE WAITED FOR THE LORD ("If thou but sufferest").

ALTO.

- Air GOD'S ENSAMPLE THUS TO FOLLOW ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air JESUS SLEEPS ("Jesus sleeps, what hope remaineth").
- Recit. { INCLINE THINE EAR ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air { THE LORD HATH HEARD ("Lord, rebuke me not").
- Air ALL EARTHLY POWERS FROM GOD INHERIT ("Praise thou the Lord").

TENOR.

- Recit. { THE SAVIOUR NOW APPEARETH ("Come, Redeemer").
- Aria { COME, JESU, COME ("Come, Redeemer").
- Air WHAT VOICE IS WITH THE TEMPEST ("From depths of woe").
- Air TUNEFUL HARPS AND VOICES ("How brightly shines").
- Air THOU ART MY GOD ("Lord, rebuke me not").

BASS.

- Air THE PASCHAL VICTIM HERE WE SEE ("Christ lay in death's dark prison").
- Air DO THINE ALMS ("Give the hungry man thy bread").
- Air WITH JESUS WILL I GO ("Wailing, crying").
- Recit. { AH, WHEN ON THAT GREAT DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").
- Air { BLESSED RESURRECTION DAY ("Watch ye, pray ye").

NURSERY SONGS

FROM THE

APPALACHIAN MOUNTAINS

ARRANGED WITH PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT

BY

CECIL J. SHARP.

ILLUSTRATED IN SILHOUETTE

BY

ESTHER B. MACKINNON.

FIRST AND SECOND SERIES.

Price, Paper Boards, Six Shillings each Series.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SUITABLE FOR SCHOOLS.

Recently performed at Bedford School and Haileybury.
College.

KING ESTMERE

(OLD ENGLISH BALLAD)

FOR

CHORUS AND ORCHESTRA:

COMPOSED BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

PRICE THREE SHILLINGS.

The work is scored for ordinary full orchestra, but it is so arranged that it can be played by an orchestra consisting of two Flutes, Oboe, two Clarinets, two Bassoons, two Horns, two Trumpets, Trombone, Strings, and Harp (or Pianoforte).

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

OF IMPORTANCE TO TEACHERS.

New Edition of

THE ELEMENTS OF PIANO TECHNIQUE

arranged upon a Rhythmic Basis.

Revised Edition containing new Polyphonic Section.

By DR. RALPH H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

Complete Lists Post Free.

ENOCH & SONS LD., 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

"THE SINGER'S ART."

A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M.

MANUAL FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

Recommended for Study for the L.R.A.M. Teacher's Diploma.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

AN EVENING HYMN

ON A GROUND

("NOW THAT THE SUN")

WORDS BY

DR. WILLIAM FULLER

MELODY AND BASS BY

HENRY PURCELL

EDITED AND AN ACCOMPANIMENT WRITTEN BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS

Price ... Two Shillings each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

JOHN SEBASTIAN BACH

48 PRELUDES AND FUGUES

(THE WELL-TEMPERED CLAVICHORD)

A NEW EDITION, EDITED BY HAROLD BROOKE.

IN TWO PARTS.

Price Four Shillings each.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonetics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs: balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

IMPORTANT NEW WORK FOR CHORAL SOCIETIES.

NOW READY.

CONCERT VERSION

OF THE SUCCESSFUL ROMANTIC LIGHT OPERA

"THE REBEL MAID"

MUSIC BY

MONTAGUE F. PHILLIPS.

This Edition is uniform with "MERRIE ENGLAND," "TOM JONES," &c., and may be had as follows:

Vocal Score (8vo) Paper Covers	...	5/- net.
" " " Cloth Boards	...	7/- "
Choruses only	... ..	2/- "

PRINTED ORCHESTRAL PARTS AVAILABLE FOR HIRE.

Applications for terms of performance should be addressed to CHAPPELL & Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, LONDON, W.1.

A few important works which are in the permanent repertoire of all the leading pianists of the day:—

SELIM PALMGREN. Refrain de Berceau - - - 1s. 6d. net

SELIM PALMGREN. The Sea - - - 1s. 6d. net.

EUGÈNE GOOSSENS. Kaleidoscope. 12 Short Pieces 6s. od. net.

1. Good Morning. 2. Promenade. 3. The Hurdy-Gurdy Man. 4. March of the Wooden Soldier. 5. The Rocking-Horse. 6. The Punch and Judy Show.
7. A Ghost Story. 8. The Old Musical Box. 9. The Clockwork Dancer.
10. Lament for a departed Doll. 11. A Merry Party. 12. Good-Night.

POLDOWSKI. Caledonian Market. 8 Short Pieces - 5s. od. net.

1. Street Hawkers. 2. Mouth Organs. 3. The Bloomsbury Waltz. 4. Humming Tops. 5. Child talking to the Cat. 6. Musical Box. 7. The Bouncing Ball.
8. Picture of Clowns.

MANUEL DE FALLA. Fantasia Bætica - - - 5s. od. net.

MANUEL DE FALLA. Ritual Fire Dance - - - 2s. od. net.
(El Amor Brujo.)

FRANCIS POULENC. Mouvements Perpétuels - - - 3s. od. net.

I. CERVANTES. Two Cuban Dances - - - 2s. od. net.
(Gran Señora Porque, Eh?)

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

'AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 973.—Vol. 65
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

MARCH 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron - HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29, AT 2.30 P.M.

A SEA SYMPHONY - VAUGHAN WILLIAMS

A HYMN OF PRAISE - MENDLESSOHN.

MISS DOROTHY SILK.
MISS KATHLEEN RYAN.
MR. ARCHIBALD WINTER.
MR. TOPLISS GREER.

Conductor - MR. ADRIAN C. BOULT.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 18, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MISS ASTRA DESMOND.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

Conductor - MR. FRANK BRIDGE.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

At the Organ - MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus.Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

FORTNIGHTLY CONCERTS, Saturdays, March 1, 15, and 29, at 3.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Wednesday, March 5, at 3.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, April 1, at 3.

THE STERNDALÉ BENNETT SCHOLARSHIP "In any Branch of Music," for male candidates, and THE MAUD MARY GOOCH SCHOLARSHIP in ORGAN PLAYING, either sex, will be competed for in May. Last day for entry, April 14.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Monday, May 5. Entrance Examination on or about May 1.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

GLASGOW

ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

SESSION 1923-24.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 10 to December 1, December 3 to March 8, and March 10 to June 6.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes.
Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

A BALLET CLASS under the Direction of Lady George Cholmondeley is held at the College.

The OPERATIC CLASS has the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in E minor ("Wedge"), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 98; Augener, p. 227; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 9.)

Canon in B minor, Schumann. Op. 56. (Any edition.)

Andante in F, from the 6th Quartet, Mozart. Best's Arrangements, No. 2, p. 12 (Novello). This arrangement only.

The selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the July, 1924, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1924.

The Choir-Training Diploma Examination will take place during the week beginning May 12th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, April 14th.

Application for re-election to Membership must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before Monday, April 7th.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, to be set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examination, may now be obtained at the College.

Associateship and Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary,
Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, W.1.
Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter 1830.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal: Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus. Doc., F.R.C.M.

METROPOLITAN EXAMINATION,

CHRISTMAS, 1923.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL:

SINGING.—As TEACHERS: Amy A. Binns, Montague Buxton, Grace Dow, Adeline M. Goodman, Alberta Martin, Ernest Parkes, James Arthur Saunders.

As PERFORMERS: Katharine Barnes, Helen Basson, Irene May Boggis, Winnifred Ida Lendrum Boobier, Florence Brittain, Dora Margarita Brown, Muriel Alice Clark, Stephanie Elise Dymond, Mary Agnes Fuller, John Stewart Glasson, Edith May Goldswain, Mary Frances Hamlin, Evelyn May Hedgecock, Gwendolyn Hollis, Florence Hyde, Vida Jones, Catharine Ellinor Lewis, Margery Wrisdell Lindley, Frances Hilda Martin, Rose Taylor Kinnell McKenzie, Mabel Frances Moore, Edith Josephine Pascoe, John William Scholes, Renie Smales, Ella Rosa Snow, Hélène Taylor, Mary Taylor, Sebott Thomas, Dieudonné Wilson, Edith Mary York, Susanna Johanna Cathrine Zuidmeer.

EXAMINERS: J. Frederick Keel, Agnes Larkcom, Thomas Meux, Arthur Thompson, Marcus Thomson, Mary Wilson.

PIANOFORTE.—As TEACHERS: Nellie Addison, Doris Mary Beaublet Allen, Elaine Amsden, Alice Anderson, Edith Andrew, Sydney Derick Morton Ashley, Winifred Mary Aykroyd, Margery Megary Baker, Frederic Bateson, Winifred Marykroyd Beaumont, Winifred M. Bennett, Bertha Leighton Black, Mary Elizabeth Braithwaite, Ernest Broadley, Veronica Mary Brown, Winifred Irene Brown, Marjorie Bunker, Constance Butler, Jean Morrison Cameron, Gladys Anne Margaret Campbell, Marjorie Caplin, Olive Amelia Carrivick, Marjorie Kathleen Clayton, Clarice Marie Clowes, Lorraine Marguerite Coates, Ethel Margaret Collins, Edith Cooper, Dorothy Cowlishaw Cope, Winifred Annie Cornell, Arthur Thomas Cotton, Edna C. Crossley-Billing, Dorothy Powella Dales, Dorothy Darroll, David Thomas Davies, Gwendoline Davis, Vera Kathleen Day, Michael Warton Dawson, Ethel Mary Day, Thomas Percival Dean, Barbara Denison, Frances Emily Dennis, Frances Aster Dickson, Gertrude Elizabeth Dickson, Nora Euphemia Dodd, Janet Douglas Drummond, Marion Winifred Duncalfe, Marjorie Grace Eade, Evelyn Mary East, Douglas Egginton, Doris Margaret Euerby, Amelia Matilda Beatrice Flower, Mollie Forbes, C. Norman Frankall, Annie Gilmour, Phyllis Audrey Girdlestone, Audrey Gomersall, Dorothy Green, Arthur Charles Gregory, Catherine Mary Griffith, Marjorie Woollatt Hartop, Isabel Haslett, Alice Margaret Hawkes, Mildred Henry, Daisy E. S. Higgins, Frances Kathleen Hilliard, Elsie Newman Hoddie, Emmie Honeysett, Dorothy Howard, Edna Clarke Howard, Vera Howard, Enid Mary Hugh-Jones, Myra Hurst, Arthur Vivian Jackson, Elsie B. J. Jackson, Rebe James, Frances Mary Jenkin, Mary Josephine Jones, Elsa Jordan, Nora Marion Joslin, Mary Norah Isabel Kerr, Dorothy Edith Kershaw, Brenda Margaret Kirkpatrick, Florence Mary Lamb, Kathleen Lamsdale, Barbara Marion Lanes, Laura Ada Catherine Little, Josephine Lilian Lomax, Ernestine Luke, Janetta R. Mackinnon, Jean Lorimer MacLaren, Margaret Joan Maddison, Dorothy Margarets, Ethel Marquis, Gladys Haughton Fane Mason, Olive Sylvia Mason, Cyril Edward McGuire, Eustace C. Minchington, Emily M. Mitchell, Mary Frances Mitchell, Alice Bertha Mole, Robert Edmondson Moreton, Blodwen Morgan, Doris May Morton, Marjorie Beryl Morton, Thomas Morton, Evangeline Mullins, Ethel Mary Newton, Elizabeth Mary Nicol, Judith Nimerovsky, Ruth Oldman-Brownlee, Muriel Owen Jones, Mabel Oxley, Audrey Eleanor Paddon, Muriel Palmer, Esther Hilda Pavey, Doris Pearson, Alice Beatrice Phillips, Audrey Wakefield Pim, Ethel Marjorie Pitt, Mary Evelyn Plummer, Doris Mary Potter, Laura Purcell, Susan Emily Randolph, Gwyneth M. Ratcliffe, May Reed, Mary Louise Rendell, A. Winifred Renshaw, Doris Richards, Flora Inez Aileen Richardson, Beryl E. M. Ruscoe, Lilian Victoria Doreen Salmon, Alan Diamond Sanders, Joan Saxon-Mills, Daisy E. Shaw, Gladys Shaw, Marjorie Florence Sherborne, Irene Muriel Short, Ida Simpson, Marjorie Rosalind Slade, Daisy Croft Sleight, Elsie May Smith, Eva Mary Smith, Gwendoline Clifford Smith, Jeanne Maude Herbert Smith, Marion Smith, Annie Snowdon, Kathleen Stanley-Latham, Charlotte Margaret Stewart, Muriel Frances Stokes, Elizabeth Jane Strachan, Harvey Albert William Strange, Jane Doris Tarbert, Beatrice Clara Taylor, Norah Davenport Thompson, Ruth Kathleen Thompson, Gladys Bertha Malvin Thorne, Ena Towns, Dorothy Mary Trowsdale, Eileen T. Twomey, Harold Uttley, Léonie Mary Vigo, Hazel Louise Wade, Mary Kathleen Walker, Janet Gillman Way, Winifred Emily Wearing, Phyllis Limrick White, Christina Whitehouse, Dora A. Wildgoose, Elsie Worsnop.

As PERFORMERS: George Altham, Constance Alice Collier, Marion De Boer, Mary Grace Domton Duff, John Henry Hunter, Myra Eily Elizabeth Ison, Phyllis Macqueen, Freda Constance Monk, Florence Edith Pitches (Florence Mayhew), Rose Remington, Louis Shaw, Eileen Marjorie Sinker, Eveline Thomson-Price, Dorothy E. Tucker, Harry Whittemoss, Winifred Williamson.

EXAMINERS: Carlo Albanesi, Victor Booth, Ambrose Coviello, Harold Craxton, W. J. Kipps, Thomas B. Knott, Herbert Lake, Vivian Langrish, Leo Livens, Dora Matthay, Tobias Matthay, Mrs. Hedwig McEwen, Frederick Moore, Claude F. Pollard, Charles F. Reddie, Felix Swinstead, Egerton Tidmarsh, Percy Waller, Septimus Webbe, Cuthbert Whitmore.

VIOLIN.—As TEACHERS: Eileen Andjelkovitch, Muriel Annie Mein Findlay, Christina Ramsay McLeod, Walter Donald Swanson, Rosa Kate Wessely.

As PERFORMERS: Lilian Josephine Hurd, George Tobias

VIOLONCELLO.—As PERFORMER: Douglas Cameron.

EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Spencer Dyke, H. Wessely, Rowsby Woof, James T. Lockyer, B. Patterson Parker, Herbert Walenn.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC—continued.

BANDMASTERSHIP.—William Allan, Frederick William Coleman, Samuel Taylor, Bandmaster E. J. M. Watson.
THEATRICAL CONDUCTORSHIP.—Lawrence Sidney Beach.
EXAMINERS: F. Corder, Neville Flux, Lieut.-Col. J. Mackenzie Rogan, C.V.O., Mus. D.

PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT.—Thomas William Beckett, Arthur Wilkinson Urquhart, Isobel Scott Aitken Wright.
EXAMINERS.—Victor Booth, F. Corder, Welton Hickin, Cuthbert Whitmore.

AURAL TRAINING AND SIGHT-SINGING.—George Watkin Beynon, Eva Mildred Dennison, Jean Helen Margaret Fleming, Constance Hook, Ella May Kinsay, Arthur Phillips, Harry Luther Willis.

EXAMINERS: Stewart Macpherson, Ernest Read, H. W. Richards, Mus. D., Frederick G. Shinn, Mus. D.

VOICE CULTURE AND CLASS SINGING.—Harry Brook, Blodwen Evans.

EXAMINERS: A. J. Greenish, Mus. D., Stewart Macpherson, H. W. Richards, Mus. D.

ELOCUTION.—As TEACHERS: Dulcie R. Bowie, Constance Dorothea Gregory, Pinkus Harris, Gilbert Hudson, Frances Mede, Liliat Elizabeth Shutt, Nelly Thomas, Nancy Tricks.

As PERFORMERS: Hilary Frances Brough Reynolds, Evelyn La Trobe Workman.

EXAMINERS: A. Acton Bond, Wilton Cole, F. Corder, Cecil Martin, Mrs. Tobias Matthay, Constance Newell, Katie Thomas.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD

OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M.

FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).

Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres. Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 15th, 1924.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).

Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 7th (Irish entries, April 30th), 1924.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

ROYAL
MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: Dr. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.
Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—The Wigmore Hall and Piano Galleries, Ltd., have now forty-two Music Studios: Grand Piano in every room. Every comfort and convenience. Inclusive rates. Apply, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.I.
TOBIAS MATTHAY
PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by Mr. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

Mr. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.

(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE
SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.

Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2

Founder: Mr. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL

(CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL),

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.

(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;

L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124.

Apply, Secretary.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.I.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art, for both Professional and Amateur; and specialises in the production and artistic development of the voice.

A special short course for beginners has now been arranged.

Auditions and advice free.

Lessons in Pianoforte and Theory.

For particulars and appointment please apply to Secretary.

Telephone: Mayfair 3819.

EASTER CONCERTS.

THE IMPERIAL CONCERT AGENCY of Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W. (Gerrard 5267), make a special study of Clients' requirements for Oratorio, and all kinds of Concert work, and endeavour to arrange "en route" bookings, thereby saving considerably on Artists' fees. You are invited to write to the Secretary for new handbook of Artists, sent gratis, together with any particulars desired.

£100 SINGING and Piano Free Scholarships, Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. The Clifton Cooke open competition for trained and untrained singers and players. May 3 and 10. Adjudicators, Mr. Philip O'Donnell, L.R.A.M., Principal, O'Donnell School of Professional Pianoforte Playing, and Mr. Clifton Cooke. Results at Lecture-Recital, "How to Sing," King George's Hall, Y.M.C.A., Caroline Street, W., May 15, at 7.30 p.m. Tickets 1s. 3d. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

MENTAL-HEARING

How to acquire it.

By WALTER H. WATSON, F.R.C.O.

THE ability to HEAR MENTALLY seems to be possessed by few students, as the following from a well-known Musical Paper proves:

"Harmony on paper is a dead thing except to those who can hear what they see—the possession of about one student in a thousand."

Mental-hearing will enable the student to hear in his mind the sounds of the notes he is writing on the paper; they will not be mere soundless signs, but each will convey a definite sound to him, and until they do so all written harmony is a waste of time.

The acquisition of Mental-hearing will materially assist the practical work of the pianoforte and organ student, for if the student can hear mentally he will be encouraged to study mentally. Mental-hearing is the key to mental study, and Mental study is the key to more rapid progress. The mastery of this subject will also improve the student's sight-reading and memorising.

Mental-hearing is a necessity for candidates for Diplomas such as L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., A.R.C.O., &c., and this work will also be of the greatest help to pupils preparing aural tests for the Associated Board Examinations.

Particulars of Correspondence Course of seven Lessons from

W. H. WATSON, GORDON COTTAGE, ELGIN.

BEHIND THE TIMES!

Are you one of the many teachers of the pianoforte who realise

That your teaching methods do not come up to modern requirements?

That your pupils do not make the progress desired?

That the marks gained at examinations are not so satisfactory?

That Teachers who have embraced modern methods are rapidly gaining ground and bid fair to displace you?

This is a problem that should cause you serious thought, and lead you to fully investigate

MR. CHARLES A. GILLETT'S

MOST MODERN METHOD OF PIANOFORTE TEACHING, which deals fully and clearly with every aspect, and is the result of wide and long experience in teaching pupils of every grade, amateurs, teachers, and performers.

Mr. Gillett's method is quite unique and distinctive, and is based on the only true source of tone beauty—"WEIGHT TOUCH"—and has been attended by one long series of successes in cases similar to your own.

Any sensitiveness on your part in the matter of taking lessons will be quickly allayed by the confidential, sympathetic, and enthusiastic co-operation which Mr. Gillett devotes to all his pupils, and his method will enable you quickly to change over from the old method, in your own home and in your spare time, by means of TWELVE PERSONALLY DIRECTED CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS.

This most modern teaching of "WEIGHT TOUCH" deals exhaustively with the real use of Relaxation and every phase of Pianoforte technique: Octaves, Fingering, Rotary, Memorising, Sight-Reading, Pedalling, &c., &c.

PERSONAL LESSONS DAY AND EVENING—Open to Beginners, Amateurs, and Professionals.

Write to-day in confidence, stating your individual difficulties, and name one or two pieces you play. If you prefer to call and discuss the lessons with Mr. Gillett you are invited to do so.

CHARLES A. GILLETT, PIANOFORTE SCHOOL, (Studio M.T.), 11, SOUTH MOLTON ST., NEW BOND ST., LONDON, W.1.

SPECIALISED POSTAL COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus.Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Mus. B., Mus. D., and Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH'S SPECIAL COURSES.

1. Special Revision Course for Candidates for L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M. this Easter.
2. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O., July.
3. A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L., July.

NUMEROUS SUCCESSES at the above Examinations.

Full Preparation may now be commenced for

L.R.A.M. (Sept., 1924).

A. and F.R.C.O. (July, 1924).

A.R.C.M. (Sept., 1924).

Durham 1st and Final Mus. B. (Sept., 1924).

PRACTICAL WORK—PERSONAL LESSONS IN LONDON AND BRISTOL.

These Postal Courses enable you to STUDY AT HOME in your SPARE TIME. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of Successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for Degrees and Diplomas.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING.

48, LINDEN ROAD, REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

A.R.C.M. A.R.C.O. L.R.A.M.

Candidates for the above cannot afford to neglect the enormous advantage of a Postal Course in my "From Brain to Keyboard" System, to which many pupils attribute their success.

OPINIONS OF PUPILS.

- "One of the greatest assets a pianist can have."
- "Worth twenty times the fee charged."
- "I have passed my examination with honours."
- "The technical rules are alone worth the fee."
- "I have acquired easy trills, at sixty."
- "The exercises are a veritable treasure trove."
- "The effect sometimes seems supernatural."
- "To me it has been a veritable godsend."

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Musical News describes my system as "the most striking discovery of the present generation for practical musicians."

My illustrated book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing," will gladly be sent to any pianist. It fully explains the principles and advantages of the methods used in the System. When applying, please do not omit to state whether comparative beginner, average, or advanced pianist. The book will be sent free of charge, and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C. 1.

An Entirely New Departure HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

* D.MUS. LOND., A.R.C.M.

*Being Harmony in Pianoforte Idiom—
without written exercises.*

A COURSE OF INSTRUCTION
BY CORRESPONDENCE IN CHORDS
and ORNAMENTAL DEVICES, together with their TEMPERAMENTAL VALUE as bearing on MUSICAL APPRECIATION and
INTERPRETATION, the whole being based on and ILLUSTRATED by music written for the Pianoforte.

AN ESSENTIAL PART OF A PIANIST'S
EQUIPMENT, affording a CLEAR INSIGHT into the MATERIAL FORMING THE STRUCTURE OF MUSIC, and ITS MEANING.

The foundation of the Art of Style and Interpretation.

A COURSE OF TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS
AND EXAMINATION PAPERS.

For further particulars, apply—

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT

Pianoforte School,

(Studio M.T.), 11, South Molton Street, London, W.1.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

FINAL ... Sept., 1925

MATRIC. Successes - 104

January, 1924 .... 5

EX. ... Mar., 1925

A.R.C.O.

Mus. Bac.

1ST M.B. ... Sept., 1924

SUCCESS at the 5th ATTEMPT.

A Student failed 4 times (under other tuition).

MATRIC. ... July, 1924

Joined the M.C.C., March, 1923.

PASSED, July, 1923.

GUARANTEE COURSE - One Fee.

1st M.B. - Sept., 1923

4

Successes, January, 1924

6

A.Mus. T.C.L. 94% for Counterpoint. A.T.C.L. 86% Art of Teaching.

Pianoforte Teaching

S. VIII.

S. IX.

L.R.A.M.

S. XIII.

Musical Appreciation.

A.R.C.M.

SINGING.

REVISION OF COMPOSITIONS.

ELOCUTION -

L.R.A.M.

A.R.C.M.

A.T.C.L.

MEMORY TRAINING.

SINGLE SUBJECTS.

THREE COURSES.

ORDINARY.

SELF-PREPARATION.

GUARANTEE.

FREE GUIDES:

MATRIC., MUS. BAC., Etc.

“ST. MORITZ,” 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

JOHN B. WOOD, MUS. BAC.
C. G. WOOD, MUS. BAC., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,
5, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

CORRESPONDENCE or ORAL COURSES

In preparation of all PAPER WORK required for
Mus. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L.
Examinations.

Also Courses of preparation for the AURAL TESTS of the above-named Examinations.

GEO. H. SKAER, MUS. B., DUNELM.,
50, Park Road, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

WILLIAM WOLLER SCHOOL OF VOICE CULTURE

75, GUNTERSTONE ROAD, BARONS COURT, W.14.

COMPLETE SPECIALIZED TRAINING FOR CONCERT AND OPERA.

SPECIAL COURSES FOR { CHOIRMASTERS.
RESTORATION OF IMPAIRED VOICES.
VOCAL RECITALISTS.

Special arrangements for Colonial pupils.

PAPER WORK BY MUS. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."
"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

VOICE TRAINING.

A Special Course of TEN CORRESPONDENCE
LESSONS (named the "Simplex" Course), covering the whole range of Voice Production. Interesting, concise, and easy to follow. Invaluable to Teachers and Students alike.

Dame Clara Butt writes: "I advise all would-be Singers and all interested in the Teaching of Singing to take the 'Simplex' Course. They will find it most helpful."

Mr. Ben Davies writes: "The ideas which comprise the 'Simplex' System of Voice Training are most excellent, and I certainly think that all who apply themselves diligently to these Lessons will greatly benefit thereby."

For Full Particulars address: Mr. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

MR. W. H. BREARE
VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING
TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution, Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique:
How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referree.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—"Musical Courier, N.Y."

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—"Gentlewoman."

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—"Eastern Morning News."

"Do not hesitate to commend."—"Glasgow Herald."

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—"Aberdeen Free Press."

"Common-sense in all he utters."—"Leeds Mercury."

"Is an acknowledged authority."—"Western Morning News."

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H.
Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—"Daily Telegraph."

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—"Era."

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—"Daily Telegraph."

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

THE IMPORTANT THING

IS TO

TRAIN THE ACTUAL MUSCLES USED IN SINGING.

SAXBY'S CALISTHENICS

FOR THE VOCAL MUSCLES

— BY CORRESPONDENCE. —

THE COURSE, £2 2s.

T. CHURCH SAXBY, L. MUS. T.C.L.,
LEWES.

MR. JACQUES HOPKINS

(1er Prix Paris National Conservatoire),
Musical Director, St. Paul's, Portman Square.

VOICE TRAINING—SINGING.

OPERA—ORATORIO—RECITALS—COACHING FOR L.R.A.M. AND
L.R.C.M. EXAMS.

Auditions free.

Write for terms, appointments, &c.,
Studio, 16, Baker Street, W.1.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPosed
AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLI-CATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks.

CAN YOU PLAY FROM MEMORY?

Many pianists and organists imagine that musical memory is a natural gift for which the only substitute is hours of hard, uninspired practice.

This is not the case. Musical memory can be acquired through correct training.

The MACKINNON MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE, written by a well-known concert pianist and teacher, brings the training of musical memory to such perfection, that any pianist or organist who has fifteen minutes a day to spare, can acquire a sound and reliable musical memory. Previous failure to memorise is of no importance.

After taking the COURSE players who were unable to memorise the easiest piece, play difficult music from memory without nervousness.

The COURSE is complete in SIX CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS. No drudgery is required. Every lesson is novel and fascinating. From the outset a repertoire of beautiful music is formed. Fill up the Coupon below, and send for free booklet to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE

EMPIRE HOUSE, PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS.

Fee, £3 3 0.

GUARANTEE

If within four weeks from the receipt of the first lesson, and before the receipt of the second, any Student feels that he or she has not already made definite progress as a result of taking the Course, Miss Mackinnon will unconditionally refund such Student's fees in full.

USE THIS COUPON
TO-DAY.

Extracts from a few of hundreds of testimonials received:

From a Church Organist :

Of the greatest assistance. Cannot fail to play from memory where your instructions are followed.

From a Cathedral Organist :

To all who find difficulty [in memorising Chants], I recommend this Memory Course.

From a Pianist :

Quite wonderful — could not memorise a single note before I started the Course. Can now play Scriabin from memory.

COUPON

MISS LILIAS MACKINNON, Empire House, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, without obligation, your free booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

CRYSTAL PALACE EMPIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL

MAY 19TH TO 24TH, 1924.

Advisory Musical Director ... MR. CYRIL JENKINS.
Musical Director ... MR. WALTER W. HEDGCOCK.

CHIEF CHORAL COMPETITIONS.

OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR MIXED VOICES.

(Number of voices not less than 125 and not more than 250.)

PRIZE: THE CRYSTAL PALACE FIVE HUNDRED GUINEA CHALLENGE TROPHY AND £100 IN CASH.

- (a)—"Go, song of mine." Unaccompanied ... Edward Elgar.
(Novello & Co.)
(b)—"Ode to the West Wind." Accompanied. ... Cyril Jenkins.
(Curwen & Sons.)

OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR MALE VOICES.

(Number of voices not less than 75 and not more than 100.)

PRIZE: GOLD CUP AND £100 IN CASH.

- (a)—"Down among the dead men" Arr. by R. Vaughan Williams.
(Joseph Williams, Ltd.)
(b)—"Feasting I watch" ... (Novello & Co.) ... Edward Elgar.
(c)—"Sea Fever" ... (Curwen & Sons) ... Cyril Jenkins.

OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR FEMALE VOICES.

(Number of voices not less than 40 and not more than 80.)

PRIZE: SILVER HARP (presented by the Proprietors of

The Daily Telegraph) AND £25 IN CASH.

- (a)—"Gentle Moon" ... (Curwen & Sons) ... Julius Harrison.
(b)—"To primroses filled with morning dew" ... C. M. Edmunds.
(Joseph Williams, Ltd.)

OPEN CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION FOR CHILDREN'S CHOIRS.

(Number of voices not less than 35 and not more than 60.)

PRIZE: SILVER SHIELD (presented by Messrs. Joseph Williams, Ltd.) AND £10 IN CASH.

- (a)—"Lady moon" (Joseph Williams, Ltd.) ... Cyril Jenkins.
(b)—"By dimpled brook and fountain brim" ... Dr. Arne.
(Joseph Williams, Ltd.)

OTHER CHORAL COMPETITIONS AND CHAMPIONSHIP CONTESTS FOR ORCHESTRAS, VOCALISTS, AND INSTRUMENTALISTS, ALSO DRAMATIC, ELOCUTION, AND DANCING SECTIONS FOR SCHOOLS AND OTHERS.

Full Syllabus (price 6d.), post free on application to

HENRY JAMES BUCKLAND,

General Manager, Crystal Palace, London, S.E.19.

HASTINGS MUSICAL FESTIVAL (COMPETITIVE).

APRIL 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th and 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1924.

Entries received up to March 3rd (with extra 1s. fee).

Address: LADY ISHAM } Hon. Secs.
JOHN LOCKEY }

Festival Office, c/o Borough Association, Hastings.

CROYDON MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

MAY 5th to 10th, 1924.

PUBLIC COMPETITIONS

IN

MUSIC, ELOCUTION, AND FOLK-DANCING.

Challenge Shields for Mixed-Voice, Girl Guides,
Boys' and Girls' School Choirs.

Gold Medals for Solo Singing, Piano, Violin, and Elocution.

65 Classes open to any district.

SYLLABUS (Postage 1d.), from the Secretary,

7, Katharine Street, Croydon, Surrey.

PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL.

MAY 15th, 16th, 17th, 1924.

Adjudicators: { Prof. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
{ Mr FELIX SWINSTEAD, F.R.A.M.

ALL CLASSES OPEN.

Copy of SYLLABUS (postage, 1d.), may be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, 7, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

THE GLASGOW ORPHEUS CHOIR.

HUGH S. ROBERTSON, CONDUCTOR.

PRIZE COMPETITION.

FIRST PRIZE, £30, awarded to WILLIAM BURT, M.A., Linthgow, for a setting for mixed voices of "O Jesu Parvule."

None of the other pieces submitted was adjudged sufficiently meritorious to be included in the Prize List. Premiums of Three Guineas each have been awarded to "Dionysius," "XXX," and "Balgownie," for work which was considered promising. The balance of the prize-money (£100 was offered), amounting to £60 11s., is being paid over to the Capital Fund of the Federation of Competition Festivals.

G. G. MAXWELL, General Secretary,
69, Prince Edward Street, Crosshill, Glasgow.

IF YOU HAVE A SMALL HAND:
IF YOU HAVE A STIFF HAND:
IF YOU HAVE LITTLE TIME FOR PRACTICE:

USE THE TECHNIQUER.

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

It will not enable you to play without practising, nothing will do that, but it will make practice more valuable and save years of labour.
The high commendation of Lamond, Pouishnoff, and dozens of eminent teachers of all instruments speaks for itself.

Send for full particulars free.

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

The Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.O., &c., 21, Boundary Road, N.W. 8,
Maida Vale 1715.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

U.S.A.—FOR SALE.—The sole rights to manufacture, import, or sell in the United States.

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

HENRY M. BYRON, CONCERT AND RECITAL
DIRECTOR. Established 1890. Unknown talent write.
Address: 75, Church Road, Leyton, London, E.10.

MR. CHARLES TREE

LECTURE-RECITALS on "The CAUSE of our great annual loss of fine young voices and its CURE."

Glasgow Herald, Feb. 6, 1924.—"His illuminating guiding principles and the humour with which these were interspersed, to which of course must be added the skilful exposition of the art, as practised by himself, creates quite a demand. He showed how to obtain correct tone placing, breath control, vocal colour, &c., singing in his usual skilful and lucid style."

Aberdeen Press, Feb. 5, 1924.—"The hints he gave were such as would be regarded as extremely valuable to aspiring vocalists. He sang fourteen songs with great richness of voice and dramatic power, and this was as enjoyable as the hints were interesting."

"How to ACQUIRE EASE of VOICE-PRODUCTION" and ITS COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 postfree. (If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Battistini says: "Exponents of the old Italian school have almost died out, hence the reason of the dearth of lasting voices."

Concerts, &c., address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

CHARLES KNOWLES

BARITONE.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY

(ROYAL ALBERT HALL).

FAUST, Berlioz.—Mr. Charles Knowles sang all the sinister music of Mephistopheles with a dramatic intensity and perfection of diction all too rare amongst English singers to-day. After Mr. Hart's, his indeed was the outstanding achievement of the afternoon.—Daily Telegraph, February 4, 1924.

Mr. Charles Knowles sang Mephistopheles strikingly well, apart from some exaggerated snarls.—Daily Mail, February 4, 1924.

Mr. Charles Knowles "barked" a bit as Mephistopheles, though his voice is superb when he does not abuse it.—Evening Standard, February 4, 1924.

Mr. Charles Knowles, dramatically clear and sinister in his words.—Observer, February 4, 1924.

Yorkshire was well represented at the Albert Hall on Saturday, when Charles Knowles sang Mephistopheles. He infused much sardonic humour into the songs.—Yorkshire Observer, February 4, 1924.

SHREWSBURY PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

FAUST, Berlioz.—Charles Knowles sang the music of Mephistopheles with all that dramatic vigour which one associates with him, and gave full play to his sardonic humour, subtly suggesting the atmosphere of the stage.—Shrewsbury Chronicle, February 1, 1924.

Charles Knowles, who as Mephistopheles gave a rendering which was all that could be desired.—Wellington Journal, January 26, 1924.

For terms and dates apply—

87, ALEXANDRA ROAD, ST. JOHN'S WOOD, N.W.8.

Telephone, "Maida Vale, 1576," or Usual Agents.

MR. JOSEPH WHITESIDE

A.R.C.M.

(Professor and Examiner Metropolitan Academy of Music).

VOICE CULTURE AND SINGING.

Method acquired from the best London and Continental Teachers.

Pupils received at

MARYLEBONE MUSIC STUDIOS,

72-74, High Street, Marylebone, W.1.

Telephone: Mayfair 2596.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition. Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

"THE PILGRIM'S PROGRESS" (Ernest Austin)

will be given at St. Matthew's Church, Croydon, as follows: Wednesday, March 19, Parts I.-IV.; Wednesday, April 2, Parts V.-VIII.; Wednesday, April 16, Parts IX.-XII. The performances will begin each evening at 8 p.m. There will be a Silver Collection. At the Organ, Mr. N. Victor Edwards, B. Mus., Oxon., F.R.C.O., &c.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John), at St. Anne's, Soho, during Lent, with full orchestra and organ. Saturdays, March 8, 15, 22, at 3.30 p.m.; then on Fridays, March 28, April 4, 11, at 8 o'clock. Tickets may be had by sending stamped envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS DOROTHY COLE

(MEZZO-SOPRANO).

Certificate of Merit, Silver Medallist R.A.M.

Concerts, Oratorios, &c.

Gyppeswyk, Rothesay Avenue, Chelmsford.

MISS WINIFRED HELLIS

(SOPRANO).

"MESSIAH," "HIAWATHA," "ELIJAH," "St. PAUL,"

"TOM JONES," ETC.

Address, 29, Portman Avenue, East Sheen, S.W.14.

MISS NELLIE B. PAYNE

(MEZZO-SOPRANO).

5, Cambridge Road, New Malden, Surrey.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

A.R.A.M. CONTRALTO.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6.

Tel.: Hampstead 5797.

DEREK INKPEN

(ALTO, SOUTHWARK CATHEDRAL.)

65, Montpellier Rise, N.W.11.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, Etc.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

MR. HORACE CURTIS

(Tenor Soloist, St. Michael's, Cornhill).

Oratorios, &c.

34, Ravenslea Road, Balham, S.W.12

MR. SAM PAYNE

TENOR

(late of St. Paul's and Exeter Cathedrals).

For Oratorio, Concerts, &c.

Communications to 35, Lurline Gardens, Battersea Park, S.W.11.

FREDERICK SINDEN (TENOR).

"Messiah," "Crucifixion," "Olivet to Calvary," &c.

11, St. Martin's Mansions, Ullswater Road, W. Norwood.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist, BASS.

Oratorio, Concerts, Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.

Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road, Grove Park, S.E.12. ('Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

MISS MARGERY PAGE

(L.R.A.M.), Medallist, R.A.M.

Specialises in the personal preparation of Candidates in Practical and Paper Work for L.R.A.M., &c.

Curwen and Matthey Methods,

18, Staverton Road, Brondesbury Park, N.W.6.;

and Ramsden's Music Studios, 65, Wigmore Street, W.1.

VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE

(Professor of Singing, Trinity College of Music)

has a few vacancies for pupils at his Studio,

99a, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.7.

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.)

Founder of "The Gresham Singers,"

Receives Pupils in Voice-Culture and Singing,

at 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.

Tele.: Sireatham 2525.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &c., apply to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

MISS FREDA EVANS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

L.T.C.L. (Late Pupil of Felix Swinstead), visits or receives Private Pupils for Pianoforte, Harmony, &c. Prospectus on application to 26, Granard Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.12.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.
FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,
MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.
(Double Dip. Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer and Teacher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation
to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.
Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.
Phone: 1715 Maids Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY kindly permitted his name to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O.; Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M.; Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus.Doc.

MR. W. ADAMS, F.R.C.O., A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), prepares for Musical Diplomas, Pianoforte, and Paper Work
(personally or by post). Latest Success: A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), January, 1924. 16, Homefield Road, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford,
Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities. Diplomas of
F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and
L.R.A.M. (1920). Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes,
"Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and ninety. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations.
Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition
by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge,"
"Studies in History and Form," &c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-
Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus.B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations,
Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1.
Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Craveney, S.W.17.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

- (1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.
- (2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.
- (3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments,
Harmony, Form, &c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 233 Correspondence Pupils successful.
A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 61 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.
- (2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.
- (3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.
- (4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments,
Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

ARCHIBALD CURTIS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Prof. of Singing T.C.L. Expert Coaching for Singing Teacher's Diplomas. Special Postal Course. Personal Lessons. Many Successes. 14, Hanover Street, W.1.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist.
Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc.,
Dunelm. (1921). Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., ETC. Voice
Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth & Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus.Doc., Dunelm.,
F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE
TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.
FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-
INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &c. For Terms, &c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTLEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922,
L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction
(or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas
Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,
SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.
Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1923—2 out of the 3 Mus. Doc. passes, and 4 out of the 6 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also several 1st Mus. Bac. and 2 Exercises, after prelim. course in composition. All in 1923. Over 160 Successes at Durham alone. The Durands, Reigate.

MR. GORDON JACOB, A.R.C.M., gives lessons
personally or by correspondence in Harmony, Counterpoint,
Fugue, Form, and all theoretical subjects.
Special Course in Modern Orchestration.
MUSIC SCORED for any combination of instruments required.
Incidental Music, &c., written or arranged.
1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920) specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M.,
A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M., "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte.
Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M.,
and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., Prepares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes. 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4.

FREDERICK TAMMADGE, L.R.A.M. (Eloc.),
A.L.A.M. (Eloc.), Examiner, Adjudicator, and Registered
Teacher of Elocution. Speech Training for Teachers—Public Speaking—Stammering, and all defects cured. 5, Chertsey Road, Leytonstone, E.11.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subject. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

AN EMINENT MASTER, whose Pupils are artists of International repute, will train and "present" a promising voice on exceptional terms. Write, "Influential," 195,
Oxford Street, W.1.

MISS MARGARET YOUNG, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.
(Pianoforte), A.T.C.L. (Vocal and Pianoforte). Registered Teacher, T.R.C. Postal Tuition for Theoretical, above Diplomas; also General Musical Knowledge and Advice. Bawburgh, Norwich.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus.Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O. SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

- (1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
- (2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
- (3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
- (4) Mus. Bac. Degree.

Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view.

R.C.O. SUCCESSSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

COUNTY OF HAMPSHIRE.

MR. ARTHUR PHILLIPS, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M., F.T.S.C., Registered Teacher (T.R.C.), gives notice that after Easter he will be resident at Sparsholt, near Winchester, from Thursdays to Mondays, and is prepared to undertake musical work as organist, conductor, lecturer, teacher, &c., in any part of the above County.

Write: 11, Brondesbury Villas, London, N.W.6.

ACCOMPANIST and PIANIST (EXPERIENCED) disengaged one or two evenings. "W." 107, Alderney Street, S.W.1.

EASTBOURNE.*DOWNSMEADE BOARDING SCHOOL FOR BOYS.

Modern education with special musical training if desired. Prospectus on application to the Headmaster, F. E. Wilson, F.R.C.O., L.R.A.M.

LICHFIELD CATHEDRAL CHOIR.

There is a VACANCY for a LEADING BOY (Soloist). Candidates must have very good voices, and be good readers of music, and should be between 9 and 12 years old. Board, lodging, education, and medical attendance free. Apply, Rev. M. Hardey, Subchanter, The Close, Lichfield, Staffs.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton, F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Wallbrook, E.C.4.

LEADING TENOR REQUIRED for St. Bartholomew's, Sydenham. £20. Apply, Dr. Shinn, 4, Sydenham Park, S.E.20.

VOLUNTEERS WANTED.—Ladies and Gentlemen for Choir, W. C. District. Two Sunday Services; Friday practice. Also 2 Violins to help at Evening Service. Please write to Rector, Holy Trinity Rectory, 27, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

TENOR REQUIRED.—City Church. £15 per annum. Good reader essential. Apply, Choirmaster, St. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street, E.C.

TENOR WANTED for City Church. Salary £15 to £20. Apply, Organist, 367, Camden Road, N.7.

BARITONE (Church Soloist), for Oratorio, &c. "Olivet," "Penitence," Stainer's "Crucifixion," a specialist. Excellent Press notices. "Hazeldeane," Sudbury Avenue, Wembley.

BASS, for Gaul's "PASSION," and Stainer's "CRUCIFIXION." Phillips, 45, Station Road, Hampton, Middlesex.

CHOIR-MASTER WANTED for Fulham Congregational Church, Dawes Road, S.W.6. Applications to be made in writing, addressed to the Secretary, giving particulars as to age, salary required, and musical ability.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER required for Woodford Congregational Church, Woodford Green, Essex. Apply by letter to the Minister, stating experience, salary required, &c.

ORGANIST REQUIRED for North London Congregational Church Willis 3-manual. Salary £40 per annum. "J. P. S.," 16 Highbury New Park, N.5.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER, M.A., Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., desires good post on South Coast, with Teaching. Good connection in South London could be exchanged. Address, "L. E.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires APPOINTMENT in Midlands. Anglican Music, and scope for teaching. Good testimonials and references. Denny, 71, Doney, Stafford.

ORGANIST, 30 years' experience Anglican and Plain-song, M.A., Mus. D., &c., wants HOLIDAY WORK from June 16 for month or so in return for use of house. South preferred. "Ludo," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., London, W.1.

£5 is offered by well-known London Organist (Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O.) for information leading to, or exchange with, a good appointment, with good connection, in healthy residential district within 1½ hours of London. Present appointment, £90. Fine organ. Apply, "London," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

WILL any LADY or GENTLEMAN undertake to TRAIN CHOIR (mixed) in poor parish in North London? Simple Services. Salary impossible, but Organ practice offered on Two-Manual Willis Organ. Apply, "Vicar," 22, Marquess Road, Canonbury, N.1.

WILL any generous person financially Assist Young Man (20) in training as Singer? Career predicted by famous Italian. Agree almost any contract to obtain same. Kindly inform "Louis," 45, High Street, Hampstead, N.W.3.

LADY ACCOMPANIST desires work. Concerts, Lessons, or Practices. Excellent sight-reader and time-keeper. Highest recommendations. Write, "B.," 60, Stanhope Gdns., S.W.7.

ACCOMPANIST WANTED by well-known Master, who offers Singing lessons in exchange. Write, Canto, 54, New Oxford Street, W.C.1.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for Sale.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—PIPE ORGAN. Three-manual, pedals, and fitted with self-playing attachment, 17 stops, 5 couplers, fitted with both hydraulic and electric blowing apparatus. Handsome oak case. Suitable for Church, Chamber, or Cinema. For further particulars apply, "F. J. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIPE ORGAN. Two-Manual, Pedal, 10 Stops, 2 Pedal stops, 3 Couplers, Composition Pedal, Pedal to Swell. Pneumatic action throughout. Blown by electricity or hand. Electric Motor and Fan all perfect working order, with 1½ H.P. oil Engine and Accumulators. Exceptionally beautiful tone. Private ownership. Built 1912. New condition.

Rev. W. Clayton, Bulford Vicarage, Wilts.

HOLT ORGAN, Two-Manual and Pedals. 18 Stops; perfect order. What cash offers? "W.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

FOR SALE.—Reed ORGAN, with Pedals, large, powerful (alternative blowing). 6 Stops. Good tone. Suit small Chapel. 49, Church Lane, Hornsey, N.8.

WANTED, for country Church, second-hand PIPE ORGAN, two-manuals and pedal, suitable to be blown by electricity. Reply, with full particulars, to L. Foster Stedman, Machen House, Lower Machen, Mon.

FOR SALE—POSITIVE ORGAN. Pattern No. 64. In first-class condition. Price £150. Apply, Garson, 29, Montague Road, Wimbledon.

REED ORGAN, Two-Manual; concave, radiating Pedals. Full compass. £50. 168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

CHURCH ORGAN RENOVATIONS.—Attractive and reasonable terms from Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 19, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Founded 1890.

FOR SALE, at reduced price, new Electric Organ—blower, suitable for small Church organ, complete with 100-volt motor ready for installation. For full particulars apply, Nidd Estate Office, Ripley, Harrogate.

ORGAN by Mustel, Paris. 20 stops. Bargain. Also Two-Manual one by Trayser, and Eolian Orchestrelle, 22 stops. "G. J.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour St., W.1

PIANO PEDALS WANTED. Must be Pneumatic, Radiating, and Concave, with Stool and Accessories. In good condition. Price and particulars to Underwood, 5, Nippet Rd., Leeds.

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO ATTACHMENT, complete with stool, £8 ros. Apply, "A. P.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BARGAIN.—BABY GRAND PIANO for SALE. Collard & Collard. Good condition. £15. Apply, "J. M.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

GENUINE STRADIVARIUS VIOLIN for SALE (1699). Excellent condition. Apply, Muller, 6, Parton Street, Red Lion Square, W.C.1.

ORGAN MUSIC, Piano Music. Bach, Guilment, MacDowell, Grieg, &c. Cheap. 168, Ivydale Road, Peckham.

GRAMOPHONE TIPS, 1924. 1s. Post Free. H. T. Barnett, 77, King's Road, Southsea.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new song, "THE GONDOLIER" (Oakley). Compass C to C. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover Street, W.1, and all music sellers.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., on "English Folk-Song and Dance." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays—valuable hints. Secure Success. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hessele.

FOR SALE.—Genuine "Peter Guarnerius" VIOLIN (certified). Perfect tone, and in excellent condition. £840, or near. "W.," Lloyd's Bank, Vaughan Parade, Torquay.

SHAPED PIANO COVERS, stocked in twelve different materials. Plush Tops, Backings, Key Covers. Patterns and prices by return post. William Moore & Co., Lauderdale Buildings, Aldersgate, London, E.C.1. Telephone: Clerkenwell 2827.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E.W. Cartwright, 20, Waverley Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPYING and Transposition Work WANTED. Neat and accurate. Terms moderate. "M. O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET
LONDON, W.1.

TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2553.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.
Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

HIAWATHA'S WEDDING-FEAST

AND

THE DEATH OF MINNEHAHA

COMPOSED BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

ARRANGED FOR PIANOFORTE SOLO

BY

JOHN POINTER.

Price, Five Shillings and Sixpence each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

THE "DISCUS"

REGD.

ORGAN BLOWER

THE QUIET EFFICIENCY OF THE "DISCUS"—

Blower is largely responsible for its widespread adoption in Cathedrals and Churches at home and abroad. Nearly a thousand are now in use. Apart from its quietness of working the "Discus" is a very attractive financial proposition. It saves the wages of a blower, and gives the organist the opportunity for rehearsal at all times. Any organ, large or small, can be fitted with the "Discus," and the motive power may be either electric motor, gas, or oil engine. Constructed of metal throughout, well designed and of the best workmanship. Its reliability and efficiency are guaranteed.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

MADE BY

B. WATKINS AND WATSON

ORGAN BLOWING SPECIALISTS FOR THE PAST THIRTY YEARS.

Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ blowing.

WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE

Telegrams : "HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON."

Telephone : NORTH 2039.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... .. Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

NOVELLO'S HANDBOOKS FOR MUSICIANS.

EDITED BY ERNEST NEWMAN.

CHORAL TECHNIQUE AND INTERPRETATION

BY

HENRY COWARD.

MUS. DOC., OXON.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Seven Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE TEACHING AND ACCOMPANIMENT OF PLAINSONG

BY

FRANCIS BURGESS.

*Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Five Shillings and Sixpence net.*THE Interpretation of the Music of the 17th & 18th Centuries
AS REVEALED BY CONTEMPORARY EVIDENCE

BY

ARNOLD DOLMETSCH.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

APPENDIX

CONTAINING TWENTY-TWO ILLUSTRATIVE PIECES.

*Price Five Shillings and Sixpence.*THE SOURCES OF KEYBOARD MUSIC IN ENGLAND

BY

CHARLES VAN DEN BORREN.

Professor of the Université Nouvelle of Brussels.

TRANSLATED FROM THE FRENCH BY

JAMES E. MATTHEW.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Ten Shillings and Sixpence net.

THE THEORY OF HARMONY

An Inquiry into the Natural Principles of Harmony, with an examination of the chief systems of Harmony from Rameau to the present day.

BY

MATTHEW SHIRLAW,

MUS.D., F.R.C.O.

(Lecturer in Music, University of Edinburgh, &c.)Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, gilt, Fifteen Shillings net.

THE ORGAN WORKS OF BACH

BY

HARVEY GRACE.

With an Introduction by ERNEST NEWMAN.

Published as a Net Book.Price, Cloth, Nine Shillings.

LONDON : NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THAYER'S LIFE OF BEETHOVEN

THE FIRST ENGLISH EDITION

CORRECTED, REVISED, AND EDITED BY

H. E. KREHBIEL.

The best biography of Beethoven, although it was originally written in English, has hitherto been obtainable only in German. This was the work of who wrote it while he was stationed at Trieste as Consul to the United States of America; to which circumstance no doubt must be attributed the fact that his work was first published in the German language from a translation by H. Deiters, of Bonn.

ALEXANDER WHELOCK THAYER

The first three volumes of the Biography were published by Weber, of Berlin. Vol. I. in 1866, Vol. II. in 1872, and Vol. III. in 1879. Vols. IV. and V. appeared later, and they were compiled respectively by Dr. Deiters and Dr. Riemann from a mass of notes left by Thayer at his death in 1897.

Referring to the original German edition the late Sir George Grove in his Dictionary remarks:

"When the work is completed it will be a mine of accurate information, indispensable for all future students. With some condensations an English edition would be very welcome."

Not only has the work been completed, but an English edition, with the desired condensations, is now published under the auspices of

THE BEETHOVEN ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK, U.S.A.

The English edition has been revised and corrected by Henry Edward Krehbiel, the well-known critic and musical scholar of New York, from the original manuscript and other material entrusted to him by Mr. Thayer's heirs, and used in the spirit and with the purpose indicated by the author before his death.

It consists of Three Volumes containing in all 1,137 + xxxix. pages; many appendices and reproduced documents, which encumber the German text, being advantageously omitted.

By arrangement with the Beethoven Association of New York, Messrs. Novello & Company have undertaken the publication of the work under a Sole Agency Contract for Great Britain and the Colonies (other than Canada).

PRICE - - - £5 5s. NET.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

ORIGINAL COMPOSITIONS FOR THE ORGAN.

(NEW SERIES.)

No.	RECENT NUMBERS	s. d.
76.	TOCCATA AND FUGUE ("The Wanderer") C. Hubert H. Parry	3 6
77.	ANDANTE RELIGIOSO ... .. Alec Rowley	1 6
78.	SCHERZO ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
79.	THREE PRELUDES ... .. G. J. Bennett	2 3
80.	DÉSÉPOIR ... .. Ch. Quef	1 6
81.	CAPRICE IN D FLAT ... .. J. A. Sowerbutts	2 3
82.	THREE PSALM-PRELUDES, No. 1 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
83.	" " " No. 2 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
84.	" " " No. 3 ... .. H. Howells	1 6
85.	THEMA OSTINATA ... .. C. C. Palmer	1 6
86.	COVENANTERS' MARCH ... .. R. G. Hailing	1 6
87.	CHORAL MELODY ... .. C. F. Waters	1 6
88.	CONCERT OVERTURE IN F MINOR ... Alfred Hollins	3 0
89.	HOMAGE TO HANDEL ... .. S. Karg-Elert	3 6
90.	THREE SHORT AND EASY POSTLUDES (2nd Set) F. W. Wadely	2 3
91.	INTERMEZZI (No. 1, Pastorale) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
92.	" (No. 2, Marcia Eroica) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
93.	" (No. 3, Hush Song) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
94.	" (No. 4, Intermezzo Founded upon an Irish air) ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
95.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "DER HÜLLE PFORTEN SIND ZERSTÜRT" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2 0
96.	CHORAL IMPROVISATION ON "GELOBT SEI GOTT IM HÖCHSTEN THRON" ... .. S. Karg-Elert	2 0
97.	SEVEN PASTELS FROM THE LAKE OF CONSTANCE S. Karg-Elert	5 6
98.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
99.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN C MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0
100.	PRELUDE AND FUGUE IN B MINOR ... .. C. V. Stanford	2 0

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Chairman of the Board:

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

The following CANDIDATES were SUCCESSFUL in the HIGHER EXAMINATIONS held at the College and at certain Centres in January last.

FELLOWSHIP (F.T.C.L.).—Joseph L. Alker, Dorothy G. Callender, William Lovelock, Mus. B., F.R.C.O.

LICENTIATES (L.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Winifred B. Allenby, John N. Audoire, Nora Baird, William Barrowclough, Marjorie W. Burge, William A. Carter, Frances M. Chapman, Eva M. Church, Primrose Cobb, Pollie Cooke, Freda L. Cornick, Lewis Dennison, Ernest G. Duggan, Mona F. Fletcher, Emily Healey, Catherine J. Hoddinott, Lena Hooper, Mary A. James, Ethel Kerkin, Alice Kirkwood, Clara H. Knight, Willis Knight, Dorothy Lambert, Gertrude C. Maile, Edith Markham, Dorothy Marsden, Muriel Mettam, Mary W. Mould, Elsie Parker, Evelyn A. R. Percy-Richardson, Doris Read, Elsie M. Shearing, Frank Smith, Emily Thomas, Annice H. Wardle, Ivy G. Washburn, Florence C. West, Doris T. Wycherley.

SINGING.—Winifred F. M. Dingle, James Farrimons, Horace E. Rorke, Grace F. Thomas, Doris M. Veal, Dorothy A. Wright.

VIOLONCELLO.—Basil Hogarth.

ASSOCIATES IN MUSIC (A. Mus. T.C.L.).

George H. Boteler, Sidney Fourny, Frederick C. Gee, Bartholomew J. Hales, A.R.C.O., Constance M. Holt, Rev. Frederick H. Masters, Copeland E. Pearson, B.Sc., Robert M. Purnell, Arthur W. A. Roberts.

ASSOCIATES (A.T.C.L.).

PIANOFORTE.—Lucilla Ainsworth, Dorothy M. Arthur, David McK. Bartlett, Ethel E. J. Basinger, Beatrice A. Bates, Florence J. Bearnis, John O. Beynon, Mary Boyd, William J. Breakey, Muriel W. Brice, Ellaline V. Choate, Doris R. Clark, Edith O. J. Clarke, Horace Critchley, Fanny Cunliffe, Marjorie G. B. Currey, Olivia F. Davis, Alice E. Davy, Wilfrid G. Dean, Madeline M. Dent, Margaret O. Diaper, Doris M. Ede, Frances P. Evans, Winifred E. Evans, Dorothy L. Gaylard, Esme Giles, Nora Good, Ruby Grace, Mona Gradwell, Miriam A. Graves, Gwen Griffiths, Ethel L. Hall, Hubert Hamer, Amy Hayes, Annie W. Hoyle, Leonard Hughes, Robert Hughes, Phyllis A. Ivermeec, Kathleen Jones, Jessie Kitchen, Doris A. Knowles, Dorothy A. Lancaster, Ernestine B. Lee, Hilda D. Leonard, Mary E. Leonard, Marjorie G. Lightfoot, William H. McCready, Mona McKeown, Mildred C. Measures, Amy L. Middleton, TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC—continued.

Edith M. Norcross, Ada D. North, Jennie O'Connor, Elsie A. Oliver, Roland Orton, John E. Peet, Ethel Pennington, Hilda M. Perry, Hilda F. Pinchard, Arthur W. Place, Ethel V. Pye, George R. Read, Irene Redfearn, Frances M. Ridley, Norman Rhodes, Albert S. Rose, Elsie Rothwell, Dorothy M. Sharnan, Dorothy H. Shepherd, Alice J. Simpson, John Smith, Theresa G. Steer, William C. A. Stroug, Marjorie L. Sturrock, Mildred Sykes, Elizabeth A. Thomas, Hilda Tomlinson, Muriel Trethewey, Jenny Turner, Geraldine B. Vague, Caroline Vousden, Lily E. Walker, Winifred M. M. Webber, Eric Whiteside, Thomas E. Willacy, Hilda M. Williams, Hannah Wilson, Julia M. Wilson.

VIOLIN.—Doreen E. F. Cox.

SINGING.—Emily Bradford, Francis R. Mitchell, Olive M. Perrott, Annie Sherratt.

ORGAN.—Ernest E. Birtchnell, Montague S. Matthews.

ELOCUTION.—Muriel Fairhurst, Harry H. Hobson, Jessie M. Matthews, Kathleen Tyson.

CERTIFICATES.

THEORY OF MUSIC.—Frederick V. Curtis, Florence N. Daniels.

PIANOFORTE.—Lilian A. J. Abraham, Arthur J. Aston, Kathleen M. Cosgrove, Harold Cottam, Edith K. Dibble, Vera H. M. Dowling, Phyllis T. Green, Margery E. R. Joslyn, Stella I. Machin, Dorothy W. Mansfield, Kathleen Pasmore, Edith M. Peach (Hons.), Beryl Reynolds, Mary L. Roberts, Mrs. W. N. Smith, Louisa Sowerby, Daisy E. Tucker, Lillian Varley, Cecile R. Cecil-Williams, Winifred A. Wise, Elsie M. V. Wren.

VIOLIN.—Linda E. Fisher, Israel Katsoff.

SINGING.—Lilian Heath, Charles G. S. Oliver, Dorothy Peers (Hons.), Minnie E. Wright, Elsie A. Yates (Hons.).

ORGAN.—Muriel E. Harris.

EXAMINERS.—H. L. Palfour, Mus. B., Prof. J. C. Bridge, M.A., Mus. D., Prof. Sir Frederick Bridge, C.V.O., M.A., Mus. D., W. Creser, Mus. D., Edward d'Evry, Paul Edmonds, Miss S. Fennings, Dawson Freer, Fred Gostelow, Miss Morden Grey, Miss E. Medd-Hall, E. F. Horner, Mus. D., Cairns James, Charlton Keith, S. Myerscough, Mus. B., George Oldroyd, Mus. D., C. W. Pearce, M.A., Mus. D., Bassett Roe, Alec Rowley, E. Stanley Roper, B.A., Mus. B., Joseph Speaight, Anderson Tyrer, John Warriner, Mus. D., Norman Wilks, Miss Maud A. Winter.

The next Diploma Examinations will take place in April next at the College in London: last day of entry, March 12.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., Admission Cards to Concerts, and the Syllabuses of the Higher and Local Examinations, on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

A NEW ORGAN WORK

BY

S. KARG-ELERT.

CATHEDRAL WINDOWS

VITRAUX POLYCHROMES D'ANCIENNES CATHEDRALES).

Six Pieces on Gregorian Tunes:

1. KYRIE ELEISON.
2. AVE MARIA.
3. RESONET IN LAUDIBUS.
4. ADESTE FIDELES.
5. SALUTO ANGELICO.
6. LAUDA SION.

Price complete, 5s. net.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,

LONDON, W.1.

BROADWOOD
PIANOS

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

JUST PUBLISHED

OF GREAT IMPORTANCE TO ALL
TEACHERS AND PROFESSIONALS

HAND CULTURE

FINGER, HAND, AND ARM GYMNASTICS
AT THE PIANO

FOR

PIANISTS, VIOLINISTS, AND 'CELLISTS

GIVING

STRENGTH, FREEDOM, AND INDEPENDENCE,

BY

BLANCHE H. RENNIE

TEACHER OF PIANO AT THE BIRMINGHAM
'SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Price 5/- net.

A Press Review: "Study on modern lines, remembering that you can never play as your mind desires until your muscles are absolutely under control. To obtain this mastery, I know no book equal to that recently brought out by Bosworth & Co., Ltd."

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.,

8, HEDDON STREET, REGENT STREET, LONDON, W.1.

THE PERFECT FOOL

AN OPERA IN ONE ACT

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

In consequence of the expiration of the period for which the sole right of performing this work was reserved to The British National Opera Company, the Publishers are now in a position to arrange for performances to be given by other Companies.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

MARCH 1 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 271.)

A TALK WITH SIR ALEXANDER MACKENZIE

The resignation of Sir Alexander Mackenzie from the post of Principal of the Royal Academy of Music closes an unusually long period of office. How fruitful that long term has been for the Academy, and therefore for the musical life of the country, we tried to show in an article that appeared in the Musical Times of July, 1922, when dealing with the Centenary of the institution.

Sir Alexander has been Principal for thirty-six years, an exceptionally long term of office, as is said above. It is a short time, however, in which to take over an institution with a chequered past of sixty odd years and a doubtful future, and to turn it into a success both solid and brilliant. Yet, as everybody knows, that is the history of Sir Alexander's directorate in a sentence.

How he set about the task is best shown by a quotation from Mr. Frederick Corder's recently published History of the Royal Academy:

On February 22, 1888, occurred the most important event in all the history of the Academy: Alexander Campbell Mackenzie was elected Principal of the institution. Although to some extent a 'dark horse' in the musical profession, owing to his long residence in Italy, his quality as a musician was well known and only his personality unfamiliar. From the first day of his appointment this latter was unmistakably revealed. He assumed the reins of government with a firm hand and a grip that never relaxed, no matter what other calls there might be upon his energies. One can hardly, even at this distance of time, disclose the troubles and obstacles which he had to encounter; I personally, who came upon the scene in September of the same year, was an edified spectator of many a conflict and of his invariable triumph, and my admiration of his masterfulness and unswerving integrity grew and grew.

This passage opens the book's penultimate chapter, headed 'Success.' Many encomiums on the Mackenzie regime have been and will be written, but no testimony can be warmer, or carry more weight, than these few lines written by one who has seen its working from the inside, and who has himself been so long an honoured figure at the institution.

We are glad to be able to supplement our previous article with some matter from Sir Alexander himself, kindly given to us in an interview a few days ago.

Naturally he was disinclined to talk much about the Academy as he found it.

'The matter was pretty thoroughly discussed at the Centenary,' he said. 'I prefer not to go into the old story of financial difficulties, loss of support and patronage, and so forth. It is far more pleasant to refer to the fact that when I came in 1888 I found some excellent teachers at work, and I am glad to be able to add that they stayed with me for a good many years, and so did much to strengthen my hands at a difficult time. Looking back at those early days, I am inclined to regard as one of the most important steps forward the founding of the Associated Board of the R.A.M. and R.C.M., which took place in 1889, one year after I came here. It did much to resolve discord into harmony, and cleared the road to progress in many respects. The good feeling between the two schools has ever since remained undisturbed. As to the state of the Academy to-day, circumspice! You have only to look around and see what a hive the place is, buzzing with activity and swarming with pupils studying every conceivable branch of music under the most modern conditions. You will find nothing haphazard or go-as-you-please in our methods, despite the wide field covered. Everything is systematised, and directed by enthusiastic experts. The musical training that can be got here has no superior on the Continent. I don't say this rashly. The great Continental conservatoires have each their special merits, but I am convinced that for breadth of outlook, liberal scope, and enterprise, we more than hold our own with any teaching institution across the Channel. And we set some of them an example in keeping our students in touch with contemporary works. Judging by frequency of performance, I can't help thinking that we here know as much about modern French music, for instance, as the Parisians themselves.'

Sir Alexander was optimistic concerning the present outlook for musical education in this country.

'The importance of music and its benign influence on general education and character is now recognized as it was never before,' he said. 'Musical education is improved in all manner of ways, but, above all, in the fact that it begins in the right way and at the right end—that is, in the careful and thorough teaching of the children. The training of the ear and the development of the child's appreciation of music are two examples of modern departments that are yielding extraordinarily successful results. As to the all-round musical education of the young, I maintain that it is difficult to over-estimate the value of the work done during the past thirty-five years by the Associated Board, both at home and in the Dominions.'

We asked Sir Alexander for his views on the prospects of English music.

'The future of our music is just what the Nation chooses to make it,' he replied. 'This country is rich in fine natural talent, and the schools are doing their duty in the training of it. Are the public doing theirs in supporting it as it deserves? We need not worry about recognition of our music and musicians from outside; that will follow if we ourselves do our duty by it. Matters are improving in this respect, but there is still a lot of the old prejudice in favour of the foreigner merely because he is a foreigner. Of course we want to hear the best the Continent can send us, but . . .,' he paused. 'Such terms as "protection" and "free trade" have an ugly sound when applied to art,' he went on, 'but I can't help thinking that since the musical free trade we are supposed to enjoy at present is almost entirely on one side, we might do worse than put the protection screw on for a while, until a more reciprocal state of things comes about. For example, this country is ready with a warm reception for French music and musicians, but France knows, and apparently desires to know, next to nothing of ours. Our policy of the ever-open door is, of course, far better and more fruitful than Chauvinism, but I wish we could somehow arrive at a less one-sided state of things.'

'In this connection I am interested to learn that the Federation of Music Clubs has taken a first step in the way of mutual engagements, whereby a String Quartet from Paris will play some French music in London and the Philharmonic Quartet will give a British programme in Paris. With two countries so close together as France and England arrangements of this kind ought to be of constant occurrence. They would be of great benefit to both, politically as well as artistically. I should rejoice to see a development of this idea, for the recognition and acceptance of British music and musicians has been and always will be one of the fixed ideas of my life.'

We found Sir Alexander keenly interested in the educational and other possibilities of the gramophone, the pianola, and wireless telegraphy.

'The rising generation can hardly realise the importance and value of the scientific developments of to-day,' he said. 'Young people naturally take these miracles as a matter of course, yet when I was young the mere sending of a telegram was an event, and a rather expensive luxury. The application of science to the reproduction of music, as in the gramophone, the pianola, and wireless, has already proved its value in musical education, and will no doubt do so even more in the future. But a great responsibility lies on those whose task it is to choose the music sent out by the various mechanical processes for public consumption. The result may be a blessing or a curse. There must of necessity be all sorts of music to suit all sorts of tastes, and the last thing I should do would be to suggest anything in the way of rigid limitations. I have always been an eclectic, able and ready to enjoy the best of every period and style, from a symphony to a comic song and dance. If I draw a line at all it would be at "jazz," which has been planted on an easy-going public that didn't ask for it, and that as a whole doesn't want it. I have given a good deal of thought to the question of popular music, and I am convinced that the taste of the so-called masses is grossly underrated. There is too much superficial talk about catering for the 'man in the street.' Now that we have music broadcast daily to hundreds of thousands of people, it is time we thought of the man and woman in the home. As a body they don't want rubbish, and I am sure that many of them resent it as a reflection on their taste and intelligence.'

How will the rapidly growing facilities for reproducing and transmitting music affect the economic side of the musical profession? We reminded Sir Alexander that a good many jeremiads on this subject had lately been released. But he was disposed to take a cheerful view.

'Art and Science' he said 'have always gone hand in hand, and I cannot believe that the marvels of Science can ever be anything but a help to its sister, Music. The picture theatre has already opened up a large field of employment for our profession. Broadcasting must in the long run prove a powerful influence for good in spreading a desire for music. The programmes sent out are improving, and there is every sign that the B.B.C. is anxious to make them better still. This policy, if adhered to, must eventually be of the greatest service to the art, and therefore to the artist. Nothing will do away with the pleasure people take in the performance of music; hence there will always be a demand for teachers. People sometimes talk as if such institutions as the R.A.M. were turning out every year thousands of performers who would find it impossible to make a living. So far as we are concerned at the Academy I am sure that is a mistake. The majority of our pupils are future teachers, many of whom come from overseas, and return to continue the good work at home. I know that, spread over the years, the results have been splendid. Others of course come here because they are fond of music, and wish to take it up as a fascinating study, purely as amateurs. A relatively smaller proportion of our students aim at a professional career as concert soloists, and our trained orchestral players seem to find employment readily when they leave us.'

Sir Alexander expressed himself with vigour against the charge of being reactionary, that is so often levelled at those in control of training institutions.

'I have had the word thrown at me, partly because in examining would-be entrants I have asked them to play standard works by, say, Bach or Beethoven, rather than ultra-modern or impressionistic pieces. The latter are all right in their place, but if I want to find out at a short sitting whether an aspirant has musical ability I can't do it from hearing feather-dusting effects up and down the keyboard! As a busy man I have to look at such matters in a practical way. One can gauge a pupil's ability better in twenty bars of a Beethoven Sonata than in twenty minutes of vague atmospheric meanderings. The latter kind of music can, and does, of course, come later as a part of their training. As to any reactionary tendencies, here or elsewhere, it is quite evident that such reaction as there is at present is against the extreme modern school and in favour of a return to the saner methods that produced the great music of the past.

'A few years ago a view of this sort would have been scoffed at as "fossilised"; to-day it is held on all sides, and even in some quarters where one wouldn't expect to find it! Here, again, it is largely a matter of practical politics. We hear complaints of the prohibitive cost of orchestral concerts and rehearsals, and of the neglect of new orchestral music, yet young composers persist in writing works that call for all kinds of extra instruments, and of such complexity that their adequate rehearsal is a financial impossibility. Can we wonder that those responsible for such concerts so often prefer to stick to standard works?'

Reverting to the Academy, he said:

'I am proud of the fact that the Academy has been able to add yet one more link to the chain of 'home-bred' Principals. It guarantees a blend of progress and unbroken tradition that means much to a great training school such as this. I am sure its future welfare is safe in the hands of my friend McEwen, and I am no less certain that he will receive from his colleagues the loyal support they have always given me, and to which I have owed far more than I can express.

'Of the kindness I have received from all and sundry outside the Academy it is of course impossible to speak in detail. I should like, however, to make one special reference. Ever since I began work in London I have been greatly indebted to the house of Novello, and I gladly take this opportunity of acknowledging the helpful kindness of the Littleton family. My acquaintance with them dates from 1881, when I brought my first little Cantata, The Bride, from Italy, and was asked to stay with my late friend, Alfred Littleton. La belle dame sans merci was written at the Littleton home, Westwood House, Sydenham, in 1883, and from the year 1881 to the time of my taking office here (1888), when I was a bird of passage between Florence and London, I received from the family the generous hospitality and friendship without which I could hardly have accomplished that which friends are kind enough to give me credit for. The Novello Oratorio Concerts were founded in 1885, and I was appointed conductor. These concerts gave first performances of many important works. I single out for mention Liszt's St. Elisabeth, because its performance gave me and others of his English admirers an opportunity of renewing our friendship with the composer. He had repeatedly declined tempting offers to visit London, but he readily accepted the invitation of Henry Littleton to be present at the performance, and to stay at Westwood House. It was his last visit to England.

'I should like to end by acknowledging here, with grateful thanks, the many kind and affectionate letters I have received since my retirement was announced. I am still in the midst of work, so I cannot do more at present than express my deeply-felt thanks in this way.'

The above represents but a small part of a long and extremely interesting conversation. As so often happens in an interview, the best things cropped up casually, and were followed by an admonitory 'but that's not for publication, remember!' We have duly remembered, yet looking back on our two hours' chat we cannot but think of the rich material Sir Alexander has up his sleeve if ever he feels disposed to write his memoirs. Perhaps he will feel so disposed, for when reference was made to his coming leisure, he replied by saying that there were 'a good many things' that he wished to get done. His host of friends will wish him many years of happy ease in which to do them.

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS

BY WILLIAM WALLACE

VII.—THE DAWN OF MODERN CONDUCTING

(Concluded from February number, page 116.)

The practice of leaving the direction to the first violin aroused objections on all sides. It was ridiculous for a violinist to move the neck of his fiddle up and down while playing, as lute-players had done with theirs before him, or to stop playing and beat time with the bow. That smacked of Charlatanerie, as Mattheson said. One style of conducting was described as 'convulsive dumb-show,' another as 'pure caricature.' Mozart complained of bad rehearsing at Paris, and declared that if things went wrong he would take the violin from the 'leader' and conduct himself. This was in 1778. The beat with the bow had this advantage, that it was silent. It could not be used without damage if the prevailing fashion were followed of beating with the stick.

Says Quantz, Flute-Player in Ordinary to Frederick the Great:

The Concertmeister or Director is he who makes movements and gestures in the performance. Time, movement, fire, light, and shade, must be given partly with the bow, partly with the head, and partly with the whole body.

But, further:

The Kapellmeister [at the clavier] must conform with this observance, and particularly must his movement be still more pronounced, so that often with the head, the hands, and feet must he work, for it is frequently necessary to abandon the direction at the clavier, and with both hands to saw (durchsäbeln) the air.

This—shall we call it nuance?—out-Hamlets Hamlet. A pretty show they must have made of it, with the first violin giving one beat and the frenzied clavier-player calling to mind Pistol's 'All Hell shall stir for this!'

A curious light is thrown on musical conditions towards the close of the 18th century by Dr. Burney in his account of the Handel Commemoration performances in 1784, given in Westminster Abbey. There were 525 performers, comprising a chorus of 274 and an orchestra of 250, with one 'conductor.' The voices were 59 sopranos, 48 altos, against 83 tenors and 84 basses. These had to wrestle with 48 first and 47 second violins, 26 violas, 21 'cellos, and 15 double-basses. The wind section included 6 flutes, 26 oboes, 26 bassoons, 1 double-bassoon,* 12 trumpets, 12 horns, 6 trombones, and 4 drums.

A pair of the last were called the Tower drums, lent by the Ordnance from the Tower stores: they were captured by Marlborough at Malplaquet in 1709.

It will not do to challenge Burney's enthusiasm and good faith, but we are somewhat sceptical about the balance of tone being all that he describes. Even if the violins and oboes played the voice parts, the trebles and altos must have been overwhelmed by the solid phalanx of tenors and basses.

The 'conductor' was Joah Bates, Esq., a musician of considerable parts to have controlled from his seat at the organ this large body of chorus and orchestra, not a few of whom sat with their backs to him, and this with only one full rehearsal. Come, come, Dr. Burney!

He says that 'almost' every performer was in full view of the conductor, but in the plan of the platform and in the copper-plate of the view of the whole body, with the fabulous double-bassoon 'featuring' in a space almost as large as that given to the organ, it is quite clear that more than half the 'cellos and double-basses, as well as all the principal singers, could not possibly have seen the beat, if there had been one.

To be sure Burney does mention 'eminent and respectable professors of great experience,' whose duty seems to have been that of 'conveying signals to the several parts of that wide extended Orchestra,' whose 'parts were not the less useful for being silently performed.' This silently would appear to indicate that these professors acted as sub-conductors without batons, but this is contradicted by Burney's own words:

This Commemoration is not only the first instance of a band of such magnitude being assembled together, but of any band, at all numerous, performing in a similar situation, without the assistance of a Manu-ductor, to regulate the measure.

He dwells upon the point:

Foreigners, particularly the French, must be astonished at so numerous a band moving in such exact measure, without the assistance of a Coryphaeus to beat the time, either with a roll of paper, or a noisy baton, or truncheon. Rousseau says, that 'the more time is beaten, the less it is kept,' and, it is certain, that when the measure is broken, the fury of the musical-general, or director, increasing with the disobedience and confusion of his troops, he becomes more violent, and his strokes and gesticulations more ridiculous, in proportion to their disorder.

He says that 'the most sudden and surprising effect of this stupendous band, was, perhaps, produced by simultaneous tuning,' and we can well believe that it was so, especially when we are told that twelve oboes played a solo as one man, and that a bassoon solo was ... performed by twenty-four bassoons, of which the unity of effect was truly marvellous. The violoncellos were very judiciously ordered to play only the under part of the strain.*

Another performance on a large scale was that of Handel's Messiah, given in the Domkirche, at Berlin, in 1786. The chorus had 37 sopranos, 24 altos, 26 tenors, and 31 basses. The orchestra contained 38 first and 39 second violins, 18 violas, 23 'cellos, and 15 double-basses. There were 12 flutes, 12 oboes, 10 bassoons, 8 horns, 6 trumpets, 2 trombones, along with percussion, organ, and harp. The conductor, in our sense of the word, was Johann Adam Hiller, who at one time held the appointment of conductor of the Leipsic Gewandhaus Concerts, and from this we may assume that he was not content with one rehearsal only.

In this, as in the Abbey Commemoration, it is likely that the violins and oboes played voice parts and supported the 'perilously' weak trebles and altos.

Reference may be made to the 'kolossal' production, sixty years later, of Haydn's Creation, at Vienna, in 1843. This shows, in numbers at least, that chorus and orchestra were approaching the balance and proportion of modern times. There were 200 sopranos, 150 altos, 150 tenors, and 160 basses, in all 660. In the orchestra there were 59 first and 59 second violins, 40 violas, 41 'cellos, and 25 double-basses. With them were 13 flutes, 12 oboes, 12 clarinets, 12 bassoons and 4 double-bassoons, 1 ophicleide, 12 horns, 8 trumpets, 9 trombones, and 13 percussion, in all 320, with a first and a second conductor, chorus conductor, and leaders of the first and second violins. As is usual on the Continent, the chorus was placed in front of the orchestra, but with this odd variation that five first violins and seven 'cellos were separated from the rest of their respective forces by the tenors and basses.

The tyranny of the continuo held the clavier a permanent prisoner in the orchestra, and stood in the way of freedom in instrumentation. In one of the orchestral plans quoted by Schoenemann, a single double-bass was placed at the conductor's left, in front of singers and orchestra, grinding out the bass.<sup>30b</sup> In this plan the first violins were to the conductor's right. In another plan the conductor,

* The double-bassoon was made by Stanesby, junr. (or Stainsby) for Handel in 1727. It was played by F. Lampe in 1739 (see Cecil Forsyth: Orchestration, p. 247, n.). At the Abbey it was in the hands of Ashley, a bandsman in the Guards, who sat below the 'conductor,' with his back to him.

* Charles Burney, Mus. D., F.R.S.: An Account of the Musical Performances . . . in Commemoration of Handel, 1784. London, 1785, 4to. Pohl, in his Mozart und Haydn in London (Vienna, 1867), says (Pt. II., p. 137), that 'ladies in the audience were requested to come without hats, without feathers, and very small hoops, if any.'

at the clavier, has the 'cellos behind him. The first violins were behind the seconds, and the solo singers were to assist the viola when they were resting. We are not told what the viola thought about this.*

It is likely that arrangements had to be made to obtain the best results from the instrumentalists available.

The pitch was taken from the harpsichord—not our A, but C for 'cellos and violas, and G and D for the violins. No definite rule was laid down as to the players sitting or standing. Violinists were cautioned not to insert non-existent grace-notes, and not to leave them out when others were playing them.

As for nuances, from Mazzochi's introduction in 1640 of the crescendo and diminuendo marks, an interesting chapter might be written about their evolution.

Towards the end of the 18th century, as Schoenemann shows so completely, every writer on music seems to have felt it his duty to discuss at length the method of the Kapellmeister, and from the constant repetition of advice on all hands we may infer that there was ample need for it. Space will not permit of references to his voluminous researches, but his quotation from Junker (1782) on the Primary and Special Duties of the Kapellmeister is worthy of notice. One chapter is headed, 'Von der Politik des Kapellmeisters'—on Tact, in other words. It is strange to read that the conductor must not be abusive or insulting. Mattheson proceeds in the same strain. The conductor must not be behindhand with genuine praise; interruptions should be made gently and courteously; he should be sociable, companionable, and obliging.

Such hints were lost upon a compatriot who in our own day, and not so long ago, with true Teutonic want of tact so belittled, from the conductor's desk, the orchestra of the Paris Opéra, that the musicians in a body rose and left.†

Although he could be severe enough in criticising the 'Manu-ductor,' Burney remarked of a rehearsal by Hiller, already mentioned:

The instrumental parts went ill, but as this was the first rehearsal, they might have been disciplined into good order if M. Hiller had chosen to bounce and play the tyrant a little; for it is a melancholy reflection to make, that few composers are well treated by an orchestra till they have first used the performers roughly and made themselves formidable.‡

But perhaps Hiller was afraid to 'bounce' in presence of so 'formidable' a critic.

Before we leave Burney we may note what he says about music in Italy. At Turin he heard three separate orchestras in different galleries playing without a conductor. At Milan, in the Duomo, the choir consisted of one boy, three sopranos, two tenors, and two basses. The Maestro di Cappella beat time, and sometimes sang. In another place the conductor was so fussy that 'the violins especially are never suffered to sleep.'

Exhibitions of bad temper seem to have been the special privilege of the great. Lulli would smash a violin, pay its owner for the damage, and then carry him off to dine with him. Handel would brook no interruption by prima donnas or virtuosos. Gluck was insupportable: a true tyrant, who flew into a passion at the faintest glimmer of a mistake. It is related of him that on one occasion he crept under his desk and pinched the calf of the double-bass so that the player gave a yell and came to earth along with his instrument.

The description of Beethoven as a conductor is well-known, and need not be repeated here (see Grove, vol. i., p. 226). Reference, however, may be made to some performances of his works. When the C minor was given for the first time at the Paris Conservatoire, Habeneck, one of the most profound admirers of Beethoven, cut the rapid passages for the double-basses as too difficult. At Leipsic, in 1826, the Choral Symphony was performed from the band-parts alone, the conductor never having seen the score. We are told of performances of the C minor and the Pastoral which were 'infamous,' and there was a breakdown in a performance of the Choral Fantasia.

Although Berlioz was explicit in his instructions about the beat, he could not have been far behind Beethoven in excess of movement, for according to Seidl (quoted by Schoenemann), he leapt into the air, ducked down under the desk, threatened the bass-drum, wheedled the flute, dragged tone from the fiddles, and thrust at the double-basses. We can but faintly picture his fury when, at the first performance of his Messe des Morts, Habeneck the conductor, at a point where the beat was imperative, coolly pulled out his snuff-box and took a pinch.

The first reference to conducting in modern style, according to Schoenemann, appeared in 1807, when Gottfried Weber wrote:

I know of no more bootless strife than that over the instrument which is the most historical for producing polyphonic music—none more than that over the baton. That is my firm conviction.

But the stick did not come so easily or so quickly into its own. There was opposition. The banishment of the harpsichord left the uncertain and slipshod singers without a prop. They had depended wholly on the instrument to keep them in tune and time, and to give them their cues. Its disappearance merely hinted to them to study their work better. No doubt the stick was too mechanical in one hand—in another, an unruly * Schoenemann (op. cit.) quotes orchestral plans obtained from various sources, showing great diversities of arrangements. In his Dictionnaire (plate G, fig. 1), Rousseau gives the plan of the Dresden Opera under Hasse. There are two clavichins, one for the conductor and the other for the accompanist. Kling, in his Vollkommene Musik-Dirigent (pp. 271, et. seq.), gives modern plans. Volbach (Das Moderne Orchester, Leipsic, 1910) shows an arrangement with the bulk of strings to the right, and the brass at the back on the left. A. Lavignac, in his book on Wagner (London, 1898), shows the Bayreuth orchestra in section and in plan. Up to 1914, at Queen's Hall, there were no less than thirty varieties of planning, to suit the whims of the horde of foreign conductors.

† Michel Georges-Michel: Ballets Russes, in Les Œuvres Libres, vol. xiii., p. 291.

‡ Charles Burney: The Present State of Music in Germany, &c., London, 1775, 2nd ed., vol. ii., p. 76. See also The Present State of Music in France, &c., London, 1773, 2nd ed.

member, distracting enough to those who had yet to become accustomed to its use.*

The Choral Symphony seems to have been treated with some indignity, for in addition to the Leipsic performance there was another, described by Wagner (My Life, English translation, London, 1911).<sup>16</sup> He said that Pohlenz, who used a blue baton, started to conduct the first movement, but was ordered by the double-bass to sit down, and did not resume the beat till the choral part. What the rest of the performance was like we can surmise from this incident. When Spontini was to conduct, he asked Wagner to procure for him a stick of ebony with a fairly large knob of ivory at each end. This he gripped like a field-marshal's baton. He was very short-sighted, but would not wear glasses as he said he conducted with his eye!

In a summary of this kind, which might be extended indefinitely, it is hoped that the reader, accustomed to the finish and perfection of our orchestras, will have gained some idea of the conditions that prevailed while this most sacred Art was quietly stealing into the hearts of men. Rome was not built in a day: neither was Music. The contemporary criticisms that have been quoted, blistering in their opprobrium, present to us a picture of music which we to-day can but faintly envisage.

A ship without a navigator or compass will founder; there is no aspect of life that can dispense with leadership, no matter how insignificant or obscure the leader may be.

From small beginnings, the conductor has grown into his present dominant position. Witnessing, as we do, and experiencing his minute—we might well say, his ultra-microscopic introspection—we have to reckon also with the widened intelligence and enlarged technique of the players, and with the mechanical improvements in their instruments. So the question arises, If Mozart and Beethoven were to come to life to-day, would they recognise their own music as played by a modern orchestra? We who look back on the early efforts to obtain all that the composer meant and desired may congratulate ourselves that we have not to deal with a handful of men knowing 'something' of their instruments, but with highly-trained and expert forces who give us great thoughts, all with singleness of endeavour. They enable us to hear these thoughts in their opulence of sound, and to them are our thanks.

[With this issue Mr. William Wallace ends his valuable series of articles on the historical side of conducting. We are glad to be able to announce that he has acceded to our request for a second series dealing with the modern and practical side of the subject. Mr. Wallace is peculiarly well qualified to treat of conducting, partly as a result of his own practical experience, but even more because he has long enjoyed and made the most of his unique opportunities for observing the methods of many eminent conductors. We hope to begin the new series of articles during the summer.—EDITOR.]

LUDVIG VAN BEETHOVEN

BY ALEXANDER BRENT SMITH

PART I

For many years there have been grave questionings about Beethoven's position upon the hill of Parnassus. Until the beginning of this century he sat enthroned beside Shakespeare and Michael Angelo upon the highest peak. Then one day an eminent critic startled an unthinking world by declaring that the Violin Concerto showed some signs of wear. No one knew exactly what he meant, but all of us felt that we could hear within the palace walls the beating of the wings of the Demon of Revolution. This critic's words passed Russian-scandal-wise throughout the music-loving world. Beethoven's pre-eminence was questioned—not publicly, but, with true revolutionary tactics, in dark corners and secret places. For several years the murmuring and grumbling has grown in intensity, and now the younger generation, throwing discretion and secrecy to the winds, has set up its banners bearing the awful and hideous words, 'Beethoven is dull.' To-day, Beethoven's shame becomes their glory. One young man (probably a descendant of Sim Tappertit) announced that he would not cross the road to hear a work of Beethoven, even if he was paid. Another conspirator confessed that Beethoven's music drove him mad (his subsequent compositions have proved that his opinion of his mental condition was only too correct).

This accusation against Beethoven, though serious, does not mean that his case is hopeless. I have heard similar accusations made against Sir Walter Scott, and, 'curiouser and curiouser,' Jane Austen. How anyone can wade through the ephemeral rubbish that circulates through the libraries, and yet find Jane Austen dull, is to me incomprehensible. Perhaps those glaring yellow notices which booksellers affix to the best-sellers, notices bearing the persuasive but meaningless words 'two hundred and tenth thousand,' predispose the reader to an imaginary enjoyment. Why could not the same persuasive methods be applied to the classics? How I should like to see Pride and Prejudice surmounted by a yellow card bearing the words 'Three hundred and fiftieth thousand'; or Emma coaxing the traveller to take her with the words 'Just the thing for a long journey'; Persuasion might be labelled 'Very choice' or 'Sure to please.' But to return to Beethoven, the charge is made against him that he is dull, and we cannot ignore it.

Beethoven is awkwardly placed by reason of his two-fold appeal and his consequent two-fold rejection. He was a composer who was intended by Nature to work instinctively and emotionally, but who by diligent application attempted, not wholly successfully, to intellectualise himself; a Shakespeare turning himself into a Schopenhauer. Bach is not so unfortunate. He is an intellectual, and by his intellect he is judged. Chopin is not so unfortunate. He is an emotional composer, and by his emotion he is judged. Thus a definite section of the public admires whole-heartedly the very different music of these two single-minded composers. Beethoven, however, falls between two schools—the sophisticated, which considers (rightly or wrongly) that his emotional, instinctive music is rather threadbare, and the unsophisticated, which considers (rightly or wrongly) that his intellectual theses are long and unbeautiful meanderings. Thus both sections of the public, for opposite reasons, charge Beethoven with being dull. And the pity of it is that Beethoven, both as a would-be intellectual and as an emotional composer, has his undeniably dull moments. These are due almost entirely to his lack of mental discipline and concise thinking. His initial inspirations and his developments are magnificent, each principal melody is as full of character as a Shakespearean creation, yet his texture is rarely without some tangles and knots. His seams and joins are too evident. We can frequently count the stitches, and, on some occasions, can see the glint of a hasty safety-pin. Let us set down some of his failings. They are:

* For an account of The Baton in England, see the Musical Times for June 1, 1896, p. 372.

- (1.) Tonic and dominant obsessions;
- (2.) Prolixity;
- (3.) Trite or interminable Codas;
- (4.) Bad joins.

Let us now consider these failings in detail. Anyone who has tried to compose knows the difficulty of introducing a new theme. The simplest method (much used by late 18th century composers) is to work up to the dominant of the new key and sound a few bars of cautionary rhythm. Beethoven was always ready to accept this method—subject of course to his own use of it. For instance, in the Waldstein Sonata the second subject is due to appear in E major. To establish this, Beethoven begins preparing for it on the dominant for twelve bars. Still worse is the return of the first subject in the same movement. But nearly every sonata will furnish at least one example of this verbosity. While discussing his use of the dominant, I would mention another result of his lack of mental discipline—the sameness of his accompanying harmony. Bach has much greater harmonic variety, and this variety is due not to a determination to avoid the obvious, but to his contrapuntal training, which more than anything else helps to extend a composer's vocabulary. Beethoven's impatience as a young man with the rules and teaching of Albrechtsberger—for which he repented in later life in counterpoint and fugue—is chiefly responsible for his texture becoming undeniably thin. From his earliest work until his last, he founded nearly all his melodies upon the alternations of tonic and dominant. With this harmonic scheme, simple as it is, he worked miracles of beauty such as none others before or since have equalled.

What wonderful clarity he obtains in the first movement of the Septet! What immensity he suggests in the Introduction to the seventh Symphony! What contrasts of light and darkness he effects in the ninth Symphony by the juxtaposition of the minor ninth (dominant) and the major sixth (tonic). Perhaps if he had kept more colours on his palette, he would not have shown us the variety and strength of his Rembrandesque colouring. The tonic and dominant system is quite indefensible, but of all those who made use of it, he stands pre-eminent. That his second-rate imitators cheapened and vilified his simple philosophy is a misfortune as undeniable but as undamaging as that some bishops and pastors of the Church imitate but poorly the example of its Founder.

A second result of his lack of mental discipline is his habit of repeating and embellishing melodies without really increasing their interest. He let his mind—the most generative mind that music has ever known—dwell upon and brood over his themes so intently that he produced several alternative treatments. Then, lacking the necessary hardness of heart to reject his fancies, he gave a sample of all, to the disadvantage of the general scheme. There are but few enthusiasts who do not find the manifold repetitions in the Andante of the fifth Symphony a little wearying and tiresome. The discipline which a composer exercises over the children of his fancy must be as stern and judicious as that which a good parent exercises over his children. But the composer's parenthood is fraught with greater responsibility, for whereas a parent's over-indulgence may be nullified by the less-biassed and more wisely-judged treatment from aunts, uncles, and experienced schoolmasters, a composer's over-indulgence to the children of his fancy meets with no satisfactory corrective. This wise discipline Beethoven seemed incapable of administering, consequently the spoilt darlings of his fancy are liable to become as wearisome as the too loquacious spoilt darlings from whom we all occasionally suffer. This over-indulgence towards his themes is mainly responsible for those trite and interminable Codas which he tacked on to his greatest works. If we may deduce a man's character from his work, we may feel sure that nothing so ill-became his visits as his leave-taking; that his last remarks, trivial commonplaces, almost obliterated the splendid impression he had previously made. It is as though a philosopher, having transported us with the freshness and splendour of his thinking during the evening, had remarked on leaving that it was sad that he had to go, but that the best of friends must part. Many of his Codas are magnificent, but too frequently we are left with the impression that he had used up his best material and was spinning out platitudinous farewells. The Codas of the variations in the Septet; the first movement of the Sonata (Op. 26); the C minor Variations; the C minor Symphony; the D minor Symphony; all fall distinctly below the Beethoven high-water mark. We have only to compare our memories of Beethoven with those of other composers to realise how little his Codas have impressed us in comparison with the rest of his work. If we were asked which consecutive dozen bars of any work of Brahms we would be proudest to have written, we should almost certainly choose portions of his Codas, and probably the vote would go to the Coda of the D minor Violin Sonata (first movement).

For the fourth charge against Beethoven—bad or clumsy joins—we must hold his general character responsible rather than his lack of mental training. The untidiness of his dress finds a counterpart in his music. Very different is the dapper little Mozart, scrupulously neat in spite of his poverty. How clearly Beethoven's disregard of detail shows itself in the opening bars of the G major Concerto! One section ends, another section begins. Like men who have quarrelled, they meet but extend no connecting hand of friendship. No less clearly too his impatience with an ill-fitting garment is displayed in his sudden discontinuance of the development of the Sonata, Op. 109. He finds that his ideas do not fit: that the key changes have led him astray. Enraged, he flings the ill-fitting key aside, retakes the first subject, and is at his ease again.

But what do all these charges against Beethoven amount to? Little more than the obvious truth that in the setting of his thoughts he was the product of his period. In no way do these charges touch the quality of his work any more than the length of correspondence in Sir Charles Grandison, or the formality of the conversation in Pride and Prejudice in any way affect the real qualities of Richardson or Jane Austen. The real greatness of Beethoven's matter can be estimated by the difficulty, even the impossibility, of parodying it. A few bars of skilful parody will conjure up Wagner, Spohr, Mozart, or Elgar, but nothing short of a perfectly proportioned work of genius would give the impression of Beethoven. Each of his melodies is so individual, so unmannered, that though we might copy the style and setting of any chosen melody, it would no more suggest the original than a skilful turning of pentameters would produce the spirit of Milton. The greatness of these men lies in something beyond their words or their notes, and no one less great than they can produce anything to match their spirit.

PART II

That Beethoven was aware of his technical limitations is evident from his application of the severer forms of writing to the works of his later years, generally known as his third period. To many people the work of his last period is dry and un-Beethovenish. We can understand a friend of his asking him in his later years to write something in the style of his Septet, and we can equally sympathise with Beethoven's indignant refusal. To every man whose work is public property, statesman, painter, poet, composer, there are three motives which stimulate his will to achieve—the desire to astonish the many, the desire to serve mankind, and the desire to please himself. The first desire—the desire to astonish the many—is the first temptation of the great artist. It may be by a flashy, epigrammatic speech at the Union; by a brilliant concerto in the concert-room; or it may be by a spectacular and miraculous descent from a pinnacle of a temple. Everyone can find a ready instance. The second desire—the desire to serve mankind—is the noblest and best loved period in a man's career, whether it be the statesman exhausting his strength for his country's good; the composer straining his nerves for his fellows' happiness, or the preacher, fatigued but not disheartened, labouring for the spiritual progress of the world. The third period is the period of retirement from the public's gaze; when kings and councillors of the earth, retiring into solitude, devote their closing years to study and meditation in the inaccessible and desolate places of the earth. But it is not only kings and councillors of the earth who build themselves palaces in the unfrequented by-ways of the land. All men who reach the peaks of eminence in philosophy or art are unconsciously building themselves palaces of thought, separated from the dwellings of their fellow-men by leagues of thinking which no man but themselves is strong enough to traverse. In vastness, in dignity, in isolation, and in majesty, these palaces of thought are similar to those palaces of stone and marble of which we obtain teasingly brief glimpses as we pass them in the train. What treasures do these palaces conceal? Are the balustrades of the grand staircase one of the many rare examples of the work of Grinling Gibbons? Shall we find upstairs one of the many splendidly carved-oak bedsteads in which Queen Elizabeth died?

So also do these immense palaces of thought excite our curiosity and admiration, not because of their size only, but because their eternal remoteness and their peculiar architecture casts a spell upon us. Into these palaces of thought no one, not even a wife, a mother, or a child, can ever set a foot—unless we except those two remarkable women Elizabeth Barrett Browning and Madame Curie. The very sight of a volume bearing the words The Dynasts, King Lear, or Prometheus Unbound quickens our sluggish pulses; we are Lilliputians watching the passionate struggles of the giants of Broddingnag. We approach them half in fear, half in awe. Our judgments and our standards must be altered to focus them aright. The smallest creatures of these works are greater than the biggest we have known; a single phrase will choke our receptivity, used as we are to highly-diluted thoughts. How was it possible that anyone but the builders could inhabit such palaces of thought? Is it likely that Shakespeare's wife could accompany him as he soared with Ariel over the Island of Prospero, or watched Othello die? We can picture Shakespeare, deep in a chair before the open hearth, staring with unseeing eyes into the crackling fire of wood. His wife is bringing in an evening meal. She mistakes his silence for idleness or despondency, and tries to cheer him with desultory chatter about domestic trifles. 'You know, Will,' she says, 'I don't think that mutton will last till Saturday. Don't you think you had better go down to the butcher's and order a piece of stewing beef, or would you prefer a roast?' No answer. Again she plies him with her well-meaning questions, until slowly and reluctantly he draws his spirit back to earth again, as a sleeper unwillingly withdraws his spirit from a strange and entrancing dream.

Beethoven in his last works is the perfect example of a man isolated by physical infirmities and mental pre-occupations from his fellow-men. All these works have a common distinguishing feature, namely, a preference for counterpoint instead of the early Beethovenish harmony. Counterpoint, double-counterpoint, fugues, and imitations spring up in nearly every work. We should naturally expect Beethoven's fugues to be interesting, but they are interesting in a way different from what we should expect. I think that, knowing Beethoven's power of development, we should expect that he would carry us off our feet with the splendid, inexorable progress of his subject. But that is not what we find. His fugues are too sectional, too self-conscious, too inclined to sprawl, consequently they do not attain an irresistible momentum. Nor has Beethoven the fugue-writer's instinct for fixing upon prolific parent themes. A good fugue-subject in the hands of a good fugue-writer should produce several phrases of distinction and beauty capable of sustaining or monopolizing the musical attention.

Beethoven's contribution to the art of fugue was very different from what we should have anticipated, and yet it was the natural result of his musical training and habit of thinking. He brought to this form of composition a mind unused to the accepted fugal methods, and consequently he avoided those tricks and clichés which are a very present help to the troubled composer. Anyone who has attempted the composition of fugues knows only too well the difficulty of negotiating the entry of the third voice. Bach had a harmonic system which he was able to fit to any rhythm or style, and most composers since then have flattered him to the best of their ability. Not so Beethoven. Those patterned harmonic sequences are not to be found in his scheme. The necessary connections are made in his own manner; his episodes are widely irrelevant, but gloriously personal.

His fugal development did not come to him so easily as his symphonic developments. Frequently he has to fall back upon tricks to conceal his inability to think. His treatment of the fugue in Op. 106 is not justified by its effect, though Beethoven lengthily pleads its justification. However, nothing justifies the intellectual tricks of fugal-writing except the result. Inversions, diminutions, cancrizans exist only on paper; their beauty can be only accidental. Augmentation is different, but then augmentation is not a trick—it is as though the composer had got into top-gear and had gained greater pace with a slower pulse, an effect which Handel achieves with such marked success in the chorus, Let all the Angels of God.

Beethoven does not use these devices as a born fugue-writer does, but he uses them faut de mieux with a distinctly patchy effect. He himself appears to have felt his inability to hold the attention of his audience by his logic, so we find him in the 'Great' String Fugue interpolating delicious little bits of true Beethovenish music.

For the general public these works are not, and never will be, Beethoven. For them he lives eternally in the early and middle periods when Beethoven the singer predominated over Beethoven the philosopher. Probably this is a just view, the opinion of the people being, as frequently, the judgment of God. Of course it is doubtless true that some people do, and ever will, find him dull, just as some holiday-makers who ride in gaily-decked charabancs with a barrel of beer in their company, will find the Golden Valley in the Cotswolds dull compared with the excitements of foolish flirtations and the stimulation of alcohol. Before we value any criticism we must discover the worth of the critic. Bearing this in mind, we can regard the remark, 'I find Beethoven dull,' as a pitiable confession rather than as a valuable criticism.

Ad Libitum

By 'FESTE'

SHORT CUTS AND ROYAL ROADS

Is the young musician having things made too easy? When you and I were youngsters we took our instruction almost entirely as powder, to use a homely figure: there was little or no jam to help it down. To-day the jam is so plentiful and the dose of powder so tiny and so cunningly hidden, that children swallow it easily and encore it. The composers, publishers, and teachers who have compounded the deception pat backs, and proceed to compound some more.

Now, I am aware that this sort of thing is regarded as a triumph of educational methods. Nevertheless I am going to take the unpopular line and say that, carried to the present lengths, it is not a triumph but a surrender.

Take the very beginning of things—the learning of the staff. I have seen this not very terrible ordeal disguised as games, with complicated and expensive paraphernalia, the worst example being one in which huge wooden staves and notes were used, preferably on a lawn. The children built up the staff and overcame its mysteries by moving notes about on it. This, which I saw described in an American musical journal a few years ago, was an extreme case, but it is worth mentioning in order to show the lengths to which the 'make it easy' enthusiasts are ready to go.

Yet, after all, is the staff so desperately difficult a problem for an intelligent kiddie who is fond of music? You and I are average musicians, I hope. How many of us needed any help beyond a little bit of diligence and our memory? There were snags, of course. We began with the spaces, and got on like a house afire with the treble lot. F-A-C-E — why, it spells 'face!' Delightful! A-C-E-G was less attractive, but it was not unfriendly, for the letters made a kind of word that could be pronounced. But the lines E-G-B-D-F, G-B-D-F-A: here our infant intelligence was not met half-way. We had to get our little teeth into the job and memorise them, wondering why the grown-ups who invented music and made so brilliant a start with F-A-C-E did not carry on the good work by thinking of three other nice convenient words.

Now the point is that when you and I overcame this first obstacle we did far more than learn the notes on the lines. We took a good step forward in developing our mind, and an even bigger one in developing our character. Before we were many years older we found life was full of G-B-D-F-A's in school and out of it. Even in the matter of music alone there soon came a day when the elementary stage was left behind, and, both at the keyboard and at the desk, we were up against technical difficulties that could not be overcome without downright hard work. If we overcame them, as most of us may modestly claim to have done, the grit that helped us was the fruit of the tiny seed that began to germinate when we refused to be beaten by G-B-D-F-A. The best and kindest thing we can do for the child is to admit the difficulty of this first step, and encourage him to beat it.

I believe, too, that much of the great mass of music now put forth for teaching purposes is on mistaken lines. It under-rates the pupil's intelligence, and too often it is not childlike but merely babyish. If educational composers and writers will cast their minds back to their own childhood they will remember that when they were (say) ten they rather liked being treated as if they were twelve, but they hated anything in the way of games or lessons that seemed to suggest they were still only seven. Now, I think we shall find that any child old enough to read ordinary simple English, and sufficiently musical to learn and sing an average melody of about the degree of difficulty of Early one morning or The Blue-bell of Scotland, is well beyond the babyish stage. Yet a glance at some recent collections of songs for children shows that the writers of both words and music seem to be far from clear as to whether they are catering for prattling infants or twelve-year-olds. We have texts in nursery-rhyme style without the delightful inconsequence and associations of those rhymes, set to music quite unsuitable for infants to pick up. Sometimes it is not clear whether the songs are to be sung to or by children. A case of a bad misfit lies before me in the shape of a collection entitled Six Silly Songs for Sensible Children, 'Words and Music by Ernest Austin's friend Ernest Bryson, and Ernest Bryson's friend Ernest Austin.' The fact of the melodies being set forth in Tonic Sol-fa as well as in Staff Notation shows that the collection is not for infants. But what child old enough to read Tonic Sol-fa wants to sing such words as:

There was a little sparrow who sat upon a cat,
And pecked all its whiskers away—
Said the pussy to the birdlet, 'You pickey-peckey brat,
Do you think you're finding needles in the hay?'

And where is the humour, for child or grown-up, of this bar of the introduction?

Again, the cover contains a 'Prelude' explaining the value of various notes. Thus: 'Semibreve. An egg-shaped border with a space inside. We have not asked you to sing any, because they use up such a lot of breath.' Then the sensible child is told that a quaver is 'Son of a crotchet, with tail. (These are often mistaken for tadpoles.)'

The 'Prelude' ends:

All these notes above require rests, just as we do. When the semibreve is resting, he hangs a little black oblong blotch to the fourth line of the staff (or staff) to show that he's 'out.' The minim uses the same blotch, but in his case it sits on the top of the third line. The crotchet generally uses a pretty curly thing like this , and when the quaver and semiquaver are resting, they leave their tails behind them on a stick, and pointing to the left. . . . When everyone is resting for a whole bar, they borrow the blotch from the semibreve.

Is this an easy way of learning time-values? Regarded as humour, is it likely to appeal to the youngster old enough to be able to read Sol-fa? Will it amuse the parent? I fancy 'The Two Ernests' are hazy as to whether their knockabout turn is for sensible children or the parents. Such directions as 'With suppressed indignation,' 'Inquisitively, but don't overdo it,' 'With bravado, but don't let them think you're bluffing,' seem to have been written with an eye on the parent. The rhymes are infantile, the music fairly grown-up, and the dedication implies that the singers are of letter-writing age, seeing that they are asked to 'be sure and write to the composers, at the publisher's office, and say how much they like them'—the songs, not the composers, of course. I am a warm admirer of Mr. Austin's work as a composer of pianoforte music for young people of various ages, but I think he has made a bad shot here. He should stick to music, in which he shows a capital sense of humour and a real understanding of the young. When he leaves music for the written word he is out of his element. Sensible children have no use for silly songs. They enjoy nonsense, but nonsense is notoriously difficult to write, and the brand must be a long chalk better than this sample.

I began to speak of music written for teaching purposes, but these songs caught my eye and made me leave the track. Getting back, I want to put in a word for teaching-pieces of a less jammy character. Do present-day teachers ever make use of Clementi's Sonatinas? I expect not. Yet, at the risk of being greeted with derisive howls, I venture to say that they might do worse. You and I were brought up on that kind of fare. Did you find it as dry as up-to-date educationists say it is? Speaking for myself, I can honestly say that I enjoyed the best of the Sonatinas. They gave me in a very easy, sound, and pleasant form my first lessons in musical construction, and I am sure I profited more from them than the average child of to-day does from the overworked vein of programme music—the stacks of Dolly's Birthday, Pussy's Lullaby, The Tin Soldier's Tea Party, and so forth. Moreover, Clementi and his like wrote music that was the best of technical preparation for the classics, whereas much of the modern teaching music is a preparation for no school whatever. The need is for a lot more music of the type of Ernest Austin's Sonatinas on national airs. The majority of children are growing up firmly convinced that any music which has no fanciful title or programme is dry and exercisey. This means that when they come to the great things in music, either as listeners or players, they will have to make a drastic re-adjustment of their ideas. The 'pieces' that should have prepared them for their heritage have tended rather to make them blind to most of its beauty. The 'make it easy' method, with its absence of discipline and its shirking of mental and moral effort, ends by making things hard, and the short cut (not for the first time) proves to be the longest way.

The fact is, of course, there are no short cuts or royal roads to real musicianship, and the sooner the child has that hard truth driven into his young skull the better. A good teacher will get results more quickly than a bad one because he will see that no time is wasted. Time saved is time gained, and this is the nearest approach to a short cut that we need concern ourselves with.

But what of the adult who wishes to take up music from the start? His fingers are stiff, and his mind unapt to grasp a system of notation full of inconsistencies and complications. I am led to discuss his hard case because readers have lately sent me particulars of various systems for the use of would-be musicians in a hurry. Here, for example, is an advertisement an American friend clips from The Popular Science Monthly. It tells us all about 'The New Niagara Method' of learning the pianoforte. The title of the method is alarmingly strenuous, so I hasten to point out that it is merely derived from the address of the inventor—The Niagara School of Music, Niagara Falls, N.Y. The advertisement opens up a rosy prospect for would-be players who are not would-be practisers:

No matter how little you know about music—even though you 'have never touched a piano'—if you can just remember a tune, you can quickly learn to play by ear. I have perfected an entirely new and simple system. It shows you so many little tricks that it just comes natural to pick out on the piano any piece you can hum. Beginners and even those who could not learn by the old-fashioned method, grasp the Niagara idea readily, and follow through the entire course of twenty lessons quickly. Self-instruction—no teacher required. You learn many new styles of bass, syncopation, blues, fill-ins, breaks, and trick endings. It's all so easy—so interesting, that you'll be amazed.

We know all about those new styles of bass. They occur frequently in dance music, but unfortunately they give one the impression that they are there for the good reason that the perpetrator couldn't manage the old style of bass.

'No need to devote years of study to learn the piano nowadays,' goes on the encouraging Mr. Wright. 'No tiresome scales, no arpeggios to learn, no do-re-mi, no difficult lessons or meaningless exercises.' How is it done? Well, there's nothing new under the sun, even at Niagara Falls, N.Y. What is the following recipe but that of the 'vamping tutor' that has long been a familiar object of the seashore?

You learn a bass accompaniment that applies to the songs you play. Once learned, you have the secret for all time—your difficulties are over, and YOU BECOME MASTER OF THE PIANO.

—or, rather, a master of the piano so long as the songs you accompany happen to be so obliging as to fit your accompaniment! For Mr. Wright does not want you to be bothered by copies. If you can just remember a tune he says you can quickly learn to play 'by ear.' BE POPULAR IN EVERY CROWD, he goes on:

One who can sit down at any time without notes or music and reel off the latest jazz and popular song-hits that entertain folks, is always the centre of attraction. . . . Every lesson is so easy, so fascinating, that you just 'can't keep your hands off the piano.'

I once lived next door to some people who must have been students of the Niagara method, judging from the way they just couldn't keep their hands off the piano.

But we needn't cross the Atlantic for bright ideas in the way of dodging difficulties. I have received particulars also of two home-grown methods. Here is 'Naunton's National Music System.'

The advertisements of this system hold out promises so lavish that I sent for the preliminary lesson, known as Special No. 1. It consists of a book of music that you can play at once. No clefs, sharps, flats, or accidentals. No worry or drudgery whatever.' The music ranges from Yankee Doodle to well-known hymn-tunes, 'with brief instructions how to play them in one lesson.' We begin with a picture of the pianoforte keyboard, divided into bass and treble, with 'Lock of Piano' in the centre:

The diagram shows how we divide the piano in the centre, or where the lock is. The top half of the instrument is for the right hand, and the lower half for the left hand, leaving in the centre one white key (known as D in the old style of music).

The division of the keyboard into strictly-defined right- and left-hand sections, with poor D left as a sort of No Man's Land, is quaint. I like, too, the idea of the note being 'known as D in the old style of music,' a style which, old as it is, is not antiquated, and will be in use when Nauntionism is no more. Next we are shown how to read:

The black lines of our system correspond to the black keys of the piano keyboard, and the white spaces in our music correspond to the white keys. Therefore, in our system, when a note is printed on a line it means that the black key corresponding to that line must be struck. If we print a note between the lines it means the white key corresponding to that white space must be struck.

This is simplicity itself, and if music were never more than an affair of easy tunes of limited range, accompanied by an occasional chord, nothing more would be needed. But even so, the stave used in this system is so extensive as to be bothering to the eye. Twenty lines are used, a widish space in the middle showing the spot occupied by the note known as D in the old system. You take your measurements from him. Here is a facsimile of the opening phrase of one of the pieces:

Play slowly. Count 4 seconds or beats in every bar.

I gather that by the time the pupil has had the fifty lessons that make up the course he will be able to read and play from the ordinary notation as well as from the Nauntionian. As the pupil thus has to master the old system after all, in order to make use of the standard musical publications, it seems to me that he might as well have got on with it at the start.

A synopsis of the fifty lessons appears on the cover of Special No. 1. At the end of the third quarter's lessons appears the following:

At this stage of your progress you will be a most proficient and pleasing player, much in request at all social gatherings for your ability to play at sight pieces, accompaniments, &c., and from memory, being always able to entertain others. There are still greater heights of music however, and lessons 38 to 50 lead you into the highest paths of Musical expression.

After your fourth quarter's lessons:

Your playing is now of the truly brilliant order. You play with the full orchestral effect that you have noted as being a feature of the playing of the finest pianists. Your capacity is such that you can make the Piano as expressive as the voice, portraying the moods of the music, whether fantastic, capricious, defiant, sombre, or sad. You possess the power to sway the emotions of your hearers.

The lists of pieces of music mentioned in the synopsis introduces some composers whose names are new to me. The piece of resistance in the fiftieth lesson, for example, is a Rhapsodie Originale, by F. Hurstmonceux. Then there are also works with similarly high-flown titles (Sonata Appassionata, Sonata Romantique, &c.), by Felix Dubois, Giavoni Carino, José Martinez, Rupert Courtney, Claude Castlereagh, Paul Morowski, Lilian St. Clair, &c.

The last thing I want to do is to poke fun at anybody who brings the joy of music to a host of people who would otherwise be deprived of it. If Mr. Nauntion contented himself with claiming to enable hitherto untaught people to give a rough-and-ready performance of simple music, I should wish him luck. Clearly there is room for something of the sort. But when he claims that his system can make you 'a thorough musician,' or that it will enable you to play 'the most difficult of compositions,' he is talking nonsense.

As to the time-saving qualities of the system, it seems to me that everything taught in this first lesson could be acquired easily from the old notation, and almost as quickly—not quite, because the pupil with the old system would be put on to read, whereas Mr. Nauntion gives him nothing but familiar tunes, so that the playing is really 'by ear.' The amazing thing is that thousands of people take the course. A chartered accountant's certificate shows that in the quarter ended March 31, 1914, the number of lessons issued was 50,460! All our academies and colleges combined can't show such a roll as that! Nor such an income. Some of the testimonials are ridiculous, but here is one that somehow touches me:

SIXTY YEARS OF AGE, AND CAN PLAY

40 PIECES CORRECTLY

DEAR SIR,—I enclose stamps for that grand piece of music you so kindly sent me, and many thanks for the rest of the music sent to me. I am getting on grand. Sixty years of age, and I can play forty pieces of music perfectly. I remain, A MOST GRATEFUL PUPIL,

Yours truly,

(Signed) Mrs. E. AITKIN HUSSY.

Bless the old lady's heart! I like to think of her playing her forty tunes, and getting on grand. She has the root of the matter in her. I wish she had started on the old lines fifty years ago. If she gets all this pleasure from stumbling through the works of Hurstmonceux and Martinez, what would not the great masters have yielded up to her! Of all the testimonialisers, she is the only one I can sympathise with. Too many of the others are parents whose children 'play very nicely.' Were they mine, they would be smacked into wrestling with G-B-D-F-A, or forbidden the pianoforte.

I have also received a copy of 'Pianokode,' a method that claims to be 'Understood in an hour.' It requires no knowledge of music, and it 'uses no flats, sharps, staves, accidentals, minims, crochets, quavers, semiquavers, clefs, rests, dotted notes.

weakness of American-built organs is apt to lie in the ensemble. The ingenuity of builders in devising varieties of tone-colour, no doubt stimulated by the needs of the cinema theatre, is immense.

Dr. Noble has insisted on preserving at St. Thomas's the English tradition of solid diapason tone on the Great organ not enclosed in a Swell box. The crescendo possible from the rest of the organ enclosed in its several Swell boxes has an amazing effect, because it is a crescendo which really increases through the whole course of opening the box. It was wonderfully exemplified for me in the case of a French horn stop, which ranged from the velvety tone of its pianissimo to something like the blast of the orchestral instrument blown forte. All that I heard of the organ at St. Thomas's served to endorse the testimonial which Dr. Noble gave to its builder as a man who brings to his work the ideals and the personal qualifications of the artist.

My next contact was made with organists in bulk. I had the pleasure of meeting organists of many ranks and both sexes at a meeting of the Organists' Association, of which Dr. Noble is president. The members meet periodically for an informal dinner in one of the quiet restaurants (such restaurants still exist) at New York, and discussion of all sorts of matters of common interest takes place after dinner. Such Associations are on much the same lines as English ones, but in America they have probably an even greater usefulness. In America there is none of that tradition—which still obtains in the English provinces at any rate—by which the local organist is regarded as the natural leader of musical enterprise. So much of our musical life in this country has clustered round Cathedral establishments and the greater parish churches that it is difficult for us to realise conditions without their influence. Our organists have to be conductors of choral societies and sometimes of orchestras, teachers, lecturers, judges of competitive festivals, generally stimulators of every kind of amateur effort in music. It is because they have accepted that position and laboured in it often with the smallest of material rewards that we have any music at all outside the big towns. In America there is still probably much less of such amateur effort, largely because American urban life has not been built up round ecclesiastical settlements. It has grown principally round commercial enterprises, and it is not until commercial enterprises reach a certain stage of prosperity that their promoters have a thought of any kind for art. When they arrive at that stage, however, their thought takes a very practical turn, and from the proceeds arise the great orchestras, Boston, Chicago, Philadelphia, and others which are the pride of music in America. The organist, meantime, is just the organist—a man who plays an instrument at church or public hall or theatre. His position depends on his personal attainments as a performer; he has no hereditary title to prominence. Mr. Stokowski, the brilliant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, indeed, began his American career as organist of St. Bartholomew's, a fashionable Church on Park Avenue, New York, but he was an importation from England, and his early career at the R.C.M. and at St. James's Church, Piccadilly, had fostered his extraordinarily versatile proclivities. England produces from the organ-loft men like Henry J. Wood, Hugh P. Allen, and Walford Davies, the people who get things going and keep them going by the exercise of gifts by no means only musical. American music is certainly in need of men of that type, but it is doubtful whether they are to be expected to emerge from the organ-loft. America is producing, however, fine organ players, and it is to be noted that a fine player, like a good workman in any other profession, can earn a decent living from his organ appointment without having to supplement it by seeking all sorts of odd jobs. He can concentrate on his art, and there is a growing appreciation of good organ playing, which has been much stimulated lately by the visits of famous French organists, like MM. Dupré and Bonnet. Commercial firms compete in the erection of huge auditoriums for organ music. At Wannamaker's 'Department Store,' at New York, for example, weekly recitals with programmes of a high type are given by various American organists, and, when occasion offers, by foreign visitors.

I was asked repeatedly about English organists, who are outstanding amongst the younger men as recital-givers, &c. 'Why don't they come over and play here sometimes?' was a frequent question when I had named a few of our younger organists, who, in my opinion, are quite as able performers as their more peripatetic French contemporaries. Really something ought to be done about it. Why should a magnificent solo player like — (I forbear to mention the name I have in mind; the blank, indeed, might be filled up in several ways) for ever waste his powers in playing daily services and training choir-boys?

As to the interesting group of American organists whom I came across both at the National Association's gathering and elsewhere, I should not dream of singling out one for special mention were it not that his colleagues insisted on singling him out. 'Have you heard Lynnwood Farnam play?' was so frequent a question that I grew ashamed of having to answer it in the negative. One day, happening to meet Mr. Farnam at the house of a lady who delights in bringing the right people together (the great gift of New York hostesses), I told him that I had no hope of getting to his Monday night recitals since Mondays were devoted to the Metropolitan Opera House. He kindly invited me, therefore, to enjoy a private recital at the Church of the Holy Communion, and spent a morning playing to me Bach and Franck and other things. A beautifully finished execution, a certainty and decision of phrasing, that of the pedals exactly corresponding with the hands in fugue subjects and such passages, together with great resource in devising effects of tone-colour, were qualities which particularly impressed me. His organ is a splendid specimen of the work of Cassavant Brothers, of Quebec, and Mr. Farnam was as earnest in his praise of these builders as Dr. Noble was in regard to Skinner. Fortunately I was not tempted to make comparisons, because the buildings are so very different. The Church of the Holy Communion is a very humble edifice indeed as compared with St. Thomas's—it does not favour the effects of vanishing diminuendos, or the delicate wafting of sounds which we associate with 'Cathedral atmosphere.' It is a plain little 'down-town' Church, and it is rather a surprise to find it containing an instrument of such power and resource, and retaining the man, who of all the younger generation seems specially regarded as 'the hope of his side.'

NEW LIGHT ON EARLY TUDOR COMPOSERS

BY W. H. GRATTAN FLOOD

XXX.—RICHARD EDWARDS

In 1567, Dr. Thomas Twyne (Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Oxford, in 1564) wrote a lengthy and eulogistic epitaph on Richard Edwards, describing him as 'the flower of all our realm and Phoenix of our age.' His musical powers are thus alluded to:

Thy tender tunes and rimes wherein thou wontest to play,
Each princely dame of Court and town shall bear in mind alway.

But Edwards is immortalised by Shakespeare (Romeo and Juliet), who quotes his song, In Commendation of Musick; and he is equally immortalised by reason of the words and music of his lovely madrigal, commencing:

In going to my naked bed, as one that would have slept,
I heard a wife sing to her child, that long before had wept.

Prof. Wallace writes:

Edwards was by far the best poet that had graced the Court since the days of Cornish, and was his superior in both conception and expression. As lyricist, he was the highest achievement England had yet attained. His songs in manuscript, and those collected under his name in The Paradise of Dainty Devices, mellifluous and lilting as bird-music, were such as he sprinkled his plays with, and may generally have been intended for such entertainments. Both as lyricist and dramatist he added glory to the Chapel Royal as a centre of dramatic entertainment, and composed a number of plays or interludes which were acted by the Children before her Majesty.' (The Evolution of the English Drama up to Shakespeare, Berlin, 1912.)

Notwithstanding all this praise of Edwards, the biographical details are scanty until about the year 1560, when he was appointed by patent as Gentleman of the Chapel Royal (May 27, 1560)—the earliest ascertained fact in his career, according to Prof. Wallace. Fortunately, the present writer has succeeded in rescuing from oblivion a few interesting notices of this remarkable Tudor composer hitherto unpublished.

Richard Edwards was born near Yeovil, in Somersetshire, about the year 1522, and was sent to Corpus Christi College, Oxford, which he entered on May 11, 1540, and had the good fortune to be placed under Dr. George Etheridge, as tutor—Etheridge being regarded 'one of the most excellent vocal and instrumental musicians in England' (Pitts), being also an eminent physician and Greek Professor. After four years' study Edwards became a Fellow of Corpus Christi College on August 11, 1544, and was admitted B.A. on November 3 following. However, in 1547, on the foundation of Christ Church College, he took his Master's degree there, as is referred to by Dr. Thomas Twyne in his Epitaph of Master Edwards:

O happy house! O place of Corpus Christi, thou
That plantest first, and gavest the root to that so brave a bow.
And Christ Church, which enjoyedst the fruit more ripe at fill,
Plunge up a thousand sighs, for grief your trickling tears distil.

Curiously enough, in previous accounts of Edwards, there is a complete blank from 1547 to 1560, and the inference has been assumed that he did not join the Chapel Royal till 1560. This is not so, as will be seen; and as a fact he received livery as a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal at Queen Mary's Coronation in 1554.

From the Register of Oxford University it appears that Edwards was an Inceptor of Theology on February 6, 1545, and he was ordained a priest on taking his M.A. in 1547. He was appointed Perpetual Curate of St. George's, Botolph Lane and George Lane, London, on September 16, 1549, but resigned that post in 1552 on being presented to the Rectory of St. Helen's, Worcester. Yet it seems fairly certain that he was a Gentleman of the Chapel Royal under Edward VI., in 1552, for doubtless the name 'George Edwards of the Chappell,' to whom a fee was paid in 1552 (Stowe MSS., Brit. Mus., 571, f.36b) is a scribal error for Richard Edwards. In the official list of the Chapel Royal, for the Coronation of Queen Mary, on September 17, 1553, there were thirty-one suits of livery ordered, and among the Gentlemen Richard Edwards appears, with Richard Bowyer as Master of the Children. Probably owing to non-residence, he had to resign the Rectory of St. Helen's, Worcester, on July 12, 1555, as is stated in Bishop Pate's Register, and was succeeded by John Bullingham, who was deprived six months later.

At the accession of Queen Elizabeth, Edwards was given a Coronation livery, and he acted as Deputy-Master of the Children of the Chapel Royal from 1560 to July 26, 1561, when he succeeded Richard Bowyer as Master for life. On December 4, 1561, he received a commission empowering him to impress choristers for the Chapel Royal.

During Queen Mary's short rule Edwards composed a Mass and some Latin Motets, including Terrenum sitem regnum, the MS. of which is now at Peterhouse. He also composed O the silly man (madrigal), an organ version of which is in the Mulliner MS., No. 76, folio 77b. Dr. Fellowes (English Madrigal Composers) points out that in this madrigal occurs 'a very early example of the use of the chord of the major third and minor sixth,' the date of which is not later than 1558.

Between the years 1561 and 1563 Edwards and his boys delighted the Court with plays, including Appius and Virginus. These plays were highly praised by Barnaby Gooch in Eglogs, Epytaphes, and Sonettes, published on March 15, 1563, who, in commendation of 'Edwardes of the Chapell,' describes his plays as far surpassing Plautus and Terence, and not likely to be equalled by any future poet.

Edwardes was admitted a member of Lincoln's Inn, on November 25, 1564, and he produced his famous 'new tragical comedy,' entitled Damon and Pythias, for the delectation of the Court during the Christmas revels of 1564-65. Shortly afterwards, on February 2, 1565, the Chapel Royal boys, under Edwardes, produced a play said to be Misogonus, at Lincoln's Inn, receiving for it 53s. 4d. Exactly a year later he produced another play at the same place, for which he was paid 40s. Then followed, at Christ Church, Oxford, two more 'tragical comedies,' under the name of Palaemon and Arcyte, on September 2 and September 4, 1566, played by the scholars for the entertainment of Queen Elizabeth. This play vastly delighted the Queen, who sent for Edwardes, and 'gave him promise of reward,' but it is doubtful if the promise materialised, for the poet-musician sickened soon after, and died on October 31, 1566.

Edwardes contributed a setting of the metrical version of the Lord's Prayer to Day's Psalter in 1563, and he composed the music for Surrey's Ye happy dames. Even better known is his song When griping grief (quoted by Shakespeare), and also his famous Soul-knell. But among all his works the most delightful is the madrigal, In going to my naked bed, the words of which were published in his posthumous volume, The Paradise of Dainty Devices. By a fortunate circumstance Mr. H. Elliot Button, early in 1923, discovered manuscript copies (circa 1597) of the tenor and bass parts of this madrigal, thus permitting of a more accurate reconstruction of the composition than had previously been possible from the organ score in the Mulliner MS. (British Museum). This reconstructed vocal score was published in the Musical Times (July, 1923), and the changes are all for the better, bringing out clearly the old-world beauty of Edwardes's work.

Let me add that Dr. Etheridge, the tutor of Edwardes, described by Henry Davey as 'a stubborn Romanist, who was still alive in 1585,' was Regius Professor of Greek at Oxford and a sound musician. Another of his pupils was William Giffard, afterwards Archbishop of Rheims.

BUILT TO MUSIC

By MRS. FRANK LIEBICH

When Gareth came over the hills and down the slopes to the plain from whence, through the mist, he could see the spires and turrets of the enchanted city, he began to doubt whether he really saw Camelot or a vision. The old Seer endeavoured to reveal to him something of the magic and mystery of the wonderful place that had been built by fairy harpists to the music of their harps. But Gareth was angered. He was impatient of conundrums propounding that a city could be built to music and yet not built and at the same time built for ever.

A similar enchantment is thrown over any ordinary person who enters a concert-hall. With his feet planted on the floor of Queen's Hall at an orchestral concert or at home sitting in his arm-chair by the fire-side, after the first few beats of the conductor's baton the listener, be he 'in' or 'out,' can imagine himself to be like Gareth 'planted on the plain that broaden'd towards the base of Camelot.' His mind and spirit will have entered the enchanted city built, as the case may be, by classic, romantic, or modern enchanter. But unlike Gareth who was impatient of illusion the ordinary person is confronted with reality.

The modern French philosopher Bergson—whose theories approximate in so many ways to music—in his book on Laughter, says that Art is a more direct vision of reality. Artists, be they great painters, great musicians, or great poets, possess the power of seeing and realising more than we ordinary mortals see and realise. Consequently their vision, which they severally embody in their work, enables us to penetrate further into reality ourselves. This power belongs very especially to the musician. For subtler and swifter than words music expresses fundamental truths in its own language of sound in a more direct manner than any arrangement of pigments or consonants and vowels. It penetrates and insinuates itself into our hiddenest secrecies, and speaks to us of things that words would only desecrate. A chord, a phrase, certain intervals or progressions or grouping of chords, sometimes even a single note, are sufficient to set up an affinity with some particular vibrational force or rhythm of our being, and we are lost to the semblance of things around us and are in direct and intimate union with the music which has taken complete possession of our personality. But these thrilling contacts are not continuous. If they were, they would be too overpowering and satiety would set in. Like unto Gareth's experience does music affect us. It builds and yet what it builds is not built, and at the same time it is built for ever. The symphonies that our ears have assimilated repeatedly during a life-time, the beautiful trios, quartets, quintets, and other chamber music of our predilection, the most perfect songs which are cherished as belonging to the arcanum of our precious possessions, are all packed away in the storehouse of our memory. Our apprehension of this repertoire of favourite chefs-d'œuvre—and not always necessarily chefs-d'œuvre—our cognisance of them resembles visionary architecture. They are built to and of music much in the same way as atmospheric effects shape and unshape themselves before our gaze. Like shifting lights and shadows music seems tangible and at precisely the same moment intangible. So that it is built and not built; only on the palimpsest of our memory is it seemingly built for ever.

This slow and steady building and unbuilding of intangibility is also effected by each one of us at our own particular musical instrument. The first reading of a new piece will bring us into more or less close acquaintance with the music. Closer intimacy will result in its taking possession of us and we of it. Finally it is built into our memory. The idea, the composer's conception is reconstructed in our mind. But though the filmy sound-structure is apparently completely built within our brain, it needs the conjunction of keys or strings or vocal cords, as the case may be, to rebuild it concretely either for our own or for any listener's pleasure. Neither is it built within our memory for a life-time. Time has a blurring effect on all and sundry. And when memory plays us false we may well be inclined to borrow some of the words of Gareth's friend the Seer anent the 'Riddling of the Bards': 'Confusion and illusion . . . elusion . . . and evasion.' These are appropriate cognomens for the mental states that succeed one another in our endeavour to re-glimpse the delicate construction which is in ruins within our mind.

So far we have considered the listener to, and the executant of, music. But what of the creative musician? The well-known story of Mozart leaps to the memory. His delaying the writing of the Overture to Don Giovanni until the eve of the day of performance: his writing it at break-neck speed to the sound of his wife telling the story of Cinderella. The tale is so perfectly credible if we realise his succinct vision of the entire composition. Like an enchanted, spectral city the whole Prelude to the opera floated before the eyes of his mind. The vision was so vivid that Sophy's telling of the fairy-story could not dim it. Like an airdrawn city of spires and turrets it was built in his memory. Little by little the whole of it had been consigned to paper and handed over to the copyists. The next evening it filtered into the ears of hundreds of the good citizens of Prague. And ever since and still the airy fabric has been and is being built and rebuilt; while nothing is safer to prophesy than that the orchestras of the future will continue to shape and re-shape it.

Thus like the visionary city of Camelot and Gareth's impotence of its semblance and reality is the mixture of the real and the ideal in the art of music. In life it is the blurring effect of the real that causes our sight to be dimmed to the ideal. But at the same time we can take comfort from the modern philosophical axiom that reality is in the artist's work when ideality is in his mind and spirit, and it is by dint of ideality only that we regain contact with reality.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH WELSH MUSIC?

BY JEFFREY PULVER

My experiences during a recent visit to South Wales brought this question to my mind. To many it may seem absurd to ask it. The Welsh have, in the opinion of the general public, such a high reputation for musicianship that to the lay mind it is simply waste of time to look more closely into the matter. But the case of music in Wales is just one more example of the drugging effect that is produced by the constant repetition of a phrase. We have allowed ourselves to be completely obsessed by the enthusiastic findings of insufficiently-equipped critics. Wales is a nation of singers, they said; some of her choirs are among the finest in the world; vigour, volume, power, and enthusiasm are unequalled. All this is true; but it is not all the truth. There is something radically wrong with music in Wales, though it is a something that does not meet the eye at first glance. All my reading on the subject of the music of the Principality, and my own experience of it, tend to bring me to one conclusion, and this is the perhaps very startling though perfectly simple one of deciding that the only thing which is wrong with Welsh music is just—lack of knowledge. Criticism is useful only when it is constructive, and I shall endeavour, as briefly as may be, to justify my finding and to suggest a possible cure.

There will be no need for me to dwell upon the good points of Welsh music, since they are sufficiently well-known; indeed—and unfortunately for Wales—too well-known. The true musicians of that country need to be protected from their friends. The whole of Wales needs to have brought home the exact value of the fulsome praise that has been showered upon its music—especially its choral music. Had these one-sided critics shown the other side of the shield before Wales had become accustomed to praise, they might have done much good. As it was, musical Wales of the last century gradually grew up with the belief that enthusiasm and volume and large choirs produced the best music; that because no faults were mentioned none existed. It has been this early praise that has prevented self-criticism from exercising its beneficial functions. It was the national characteristic of devoting an unbounded enthusiasm upon any object that was loved which converted the art of music into a quasi-religious revival. But the whole-hearted fervour that raises thousands in a passionate religious renaissance is a necessary means to an end; while music, being an art, requires some carefully thought-out effects (capable of reproduction), some subtlety of colour and mood, some technical resource, some restraint, some discipline. Christopher Simpson, in 1665, said it was no felony to rob one's self, and thus I shall not feel conscience-stricken if I quote from a lecture I delivered at Swansea in January:

When one hears the marvellous spontaneity, the fervid enthusiasm, the intense love for the art, the magnificent dramatic properties, of the Welsh musicians, it seems a thousand pities that absence of artistic restraint, indifference to the importance of sight-reading, often ignorance of notation altogether, and a refusal to submit to any sort of discipline, should prevent so Heaven-endowed a nation of musicians from occupying the first place in the artistic scheme of Europe.

Choralism in Wales is a comparatively young art, and a consideration of the forces which brought it into being cannot find a place here. I can do no better than direct interested readers to John Graham's excellent little book, A Century of Welsh Music (Kegan Paul), where much information on this subject will be found. At present I wish to confine myself to placing a finger on a few of the most apparent shortcomings in Welsh music. Firstly, what effect has the unrestrained enthusiasm of the Welsh choristers upon their music? In case I am classed with the prejudiced writers, I had better answer the question by quoting J. S. Curwen, who said: 'The excitement and passion which make them sing so well, lead them to force their voices beyond the limits of sweetness'—in short, 'The characteristic defect of these Welsh choirs is the tendency to scream.' Sometimes the mass of tone produced by Welsh choirs is magnificent and occasionally awe-inspiring—but all this grandeur is lost because there is not, as a rule, sufficient contrast, nor any subtle gradation of tone or variety in colour. This is the first lesson that Wales must learn.

Secondly, the question of sight-reading. Alas, we have all gone back a long way from the proud position we held in this respect in Elizabethan England. We are finding examiners all over the country deploring the state of sight-reading, and making every effort to encourage its cultivation along sensible lines. But in Wales the state of affairs is worse. Forty years ago inquiry elicited the information that only from ten to thirty per cent. of the choristers could read, most of them being Tonic Sol-fa-ists. I have not been able to determine by actual figures how things stand to-day; but the fact remains that far too many choirs—I dare not even hint at what I think the percentage to be—are still forced to learn their new music by the dray-horse system of plodding wearily through it until all the singers who are not readers have learnt their parts by ear from the few that are. Once learned, the parts are ever after sung by ear. What wonder, then, that so many Welsh choralists can sing from memory? What effect other than a bad one can such mechanical and parrot-like repetition have upon a fine work? And this mechanical repetition will be necessary until all the members of a choir have learned to read.

But in order to read at sight it is first necessary to be in a position to read at all. 'How many Welsh singers,' I asked at Swansea, 'can place their hands upon their hearts and say they can read from any notation?' The conductors of the numerous choirs and choral societies which are so conspicuous a feature in the Principality, could answer that question. And thus three, four, five, or even six months of continual rehearsing remain necessary for the average Welsh choir to learn a new work of fair difficulty. It must be confessed that the results attained by these terribly inartistic means are frequently very fine. What would be the results, however, if each member of the choir could read his part intelligently from the start? I need not dwell upon the things that might be done with the work in question in the time thus saved.

The fourth point is the lack of interest in instrumental music in Wales. It may seem at first glance to be a far-fetched theory that an understanding of instrumental music can help in the correct interpretation of vocal music, but I am firmly convinced that the study of instrumental music necessitates a wider musical knowledge than does the vocalist's art. It has been said by many that among vocalists we find the least musically cultured of all musicians. It is a fact that the very ease with which pleasant sounds can be produced by a singer has often rendered him oblivious to the need for technical knowledge. Instrumental music compels the student to make himself acquainted with all the mechanical accessories that serve his art. He learns to fix in his mind the relative magnitude of the different intervals, and thus forms an almost unconscious appreciation of harmony. This state of affairs enables the instrumentalist to look upon the various intervals as comparative values and as links in a great chain of consonances. Furthermore, the player on an instrument is more generally compelled, if only for purely physical reasons, to cultivate the power of producing dynamic contrasts, both sudden and gradual. Singers brought up in or near such instrumental environment would very soon imitate the tone-gradation and dynamic stock-in-trade of the instrumentalist. All branches of an art must help one another. It is a curious thing that while violin teachers tell their pupils to imitate the human voice, teachers of singing tell their students to 'make it sound like a violin.' The cult of good instrumental music can do Wales a tremendous amount of good, and its adoption is one of the most insistent of the crying needs in Welsh music to-day.

Besides these considerations there are one or two more points that demand attention. The first is the danger of too national a programme. No one could be more willing than I to praise all national movements when they aim at securing the self-respect of a nation. But when applied to an art nationalism generally does a good deal of harm by bringing about a cramping insularity. Every country is entitled to its own idiom; indeed, its music would be lost in a general sameness if this were not so. But the fundamental principles of an art are universal, and the study of its history and technics must be carried beyond the confines of one's own borders. The musicians of Wales must follow the example now being set in England, and take up the study of our 16th and 17th century works; not necessarily for imitation but for inspiration, and as exercises in balance, restraint, and artistic imagination. The local Press, too, could do far more than is at present the case towards widening the outlook of the native musicians, by drawing their attention to past and present extra-Cambrian music. It can also impress upon Welsh musicians the fact that the fulsome flatterers of their choral work are not their friends so much as are those who with the best of motives expose their shortcomings. In the past the most severe critics of Welsh music have been Welshmen—and there are to-day still to be found in Wales patriotic nationals who are doing their best to instruct the masses. But they are in the minority, and consequently their work is all the more arduous. Wales has a great and glorious musical future; but before she enjoys it she will have to go through a very systematic course of training which must include vocal technique, an appreciation of dynamics, the power of self-restraint, and, above all, a fundamental knowledge of the physical material of which good music is made, and more instrumental practice.

It is a fallacy for Welshmen to think that the present choral methods are justified by age-old tradition and that having been in vogue so long they cannot be eradicated. The fact is that choralism as we know it in Wales is a comparatively very young growth, and it is by no means too late for the pupil to commence to learn. It is a matter for sincere regret that such wonderfully good material should exist and yet be debarred from its proper place in European music merely because it is neither correctly directed nor efficiently developed and used.

---

At Gresham College, on March 12, Prof. Sir Frederick Bridge began a series of four lectures on music, the first two of which were devoted to The Musical Companion and other publications of John Playford. Sir Frederick Bridge's own copy of The Musical Companion, which he has had on his shelves so long that it had almost passed out of his memory until his attention was accidentally called to it, was published by Playford 'at his shop in the Temple, near the church,' in 1673. Himself a composer as well as a publisher of music, Playford was intimate with the Laweses, Purcell, and all the well-known musicians of his time—the Commonwealth and the reign of Charles II. He had rendered us, said Sir Frederick, an inestimable service by preserving much music that would otherwise have been lost. 'I believe,' he added, 'that this Musical Companion is the book Pepys means when he speaks of "Mr. Playford's catches."' The illustrations—part-songs, rounds, and catches—were sung by Miss Coral Peachey, Mr. Herbert Thompson, and Mr. Graham Smart with full appreciation both of their musical and comic qualities. Some of them were based on the London Cryes which Sir Frederick Bridge has rescued for this generation. Others were by Henry Lawes, Saville, Orlando Gibbons, and Playford himself.

The third lecture treated of the relations of Handel and the Duke of Chandos, and the fourth described Attwood's studies with Mozart, with illustrations from original manuscripts in Sir Frederick's possession.

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from February number, page 134)

NO. 16, IN G SHARP MINOR, OP. 175

Allegro moderato; Skandinavisch; Introduction and Fugue

This is one of the most notable of the later Sonatas, not only because of its excellence, but also because it seems to stand apart from its fellows in regard to style and flavour—though it is not easy to make the difference clear to those who do not know the work. For one thing, it seems to be less Teutonic; it is several pages shorter than the average of the later Sonatas; and it is slighter in texture, especially as regards the Fugue. The title of the slow movement suggests that it was written after a visit to Northern Europe; and if so we have the key to the curiously poetic quality of the music as a whole—the kind of romanticism that we find in Grieg and Sibelius. One would describe it as a cold romanticism but for the danger of being misunderstood. Call it rather the poetry of a cold country, which, as we know, is easily distinguishable from that of a warm one. (For a homely example remember the difference between the folk-songs of Scotland and Southern England.)

The character of the Sonata is pretty well shown in its opening phrase—tuneful, yet with a touch of bleakness:

Ex. 1. ♩ = 120.

Save for a brief modulation to the relative major this first page sticks to G sharp minor, and a second theme that opens the next page is also in the same key. Insistence on one tonality is a peculiarity of the Sonata—the Skandinavisch and Fugue being also in G sharp minor. A partial exception is the two-page Introduction to the Fugue, which begins in E major, but in its second half settles down into the dominant of the key of the work. The result is less monotonous than might be expected, thanks to the liberal amount of modulation, sometimes to remote keys. But there is undoubtedly a monochrome effect which we may well imagine to be reminiscent of a visit to a comparatively sunless country. Is there any other modern Sonata in which the slow movement is in the same key as the first and last?

The mood of the opening is carried on and slightly accentuated by the remainder of the first subject section:

Ex. 2.

The triplet figuration is made much of in this page, with animated results—and incidentally with considerable demands on finger technique if the pace and legato are maintained. Some close imitative treatment of the opening figure of the first subject serves as a bridge to the second subject proper in B major—a characteristic little tune, broad and simple:

Ex. 3.

and so on for fifteen bars, with a harmonization plain, yet full of interesting touches.

A half-close on a dominant ninth of F sharp leads to the development section (the movement is in sonata form). It opens with Ex. 2 (now in B minor), but after a mere bar and a-half the composer suddenly drops it, switches off into a flourish in the dominant of D, and gives us the opening theme with a delightful flowing triplet tenor part:

Ex. 4.

The opening four notes of the theme are a prominent feature in the capital free section that follows. A new subject comes on the scene in the next page—a simple march-like tune of eight bars. A short bridge-passage brings us to the recapitulation portion, which follows custom, with the second subject in the tonic major (noted of course as A flat). The Coda is shorter than we expect from Rheinberger, but it is highly effective, with its energetic and pointed treatment of the Neapolitan sixth, the grindingly-built-up thirteenth that follows, and the fine series of big chords in the last seven bars. Note that the close gives us yet another of Rheinberger's fresh treatments of the plagal cadence. Composers in search of astonishing methods of ending a work might do worse than see what this 'academic' composer manages to accomplish by a resourceful use of the simplest of all cadences.

This truly delightful movement is on the short side, taking only about five minutes to play. The fact, with its tuneful character and its freedom from anything in the way of lengthy development, makes it a good choice for playing to people with whom the composer's name has somehow become a synonym for stodginess. The registration gives no trouble. If we have liberal resources a good deal may be done, but the few and simple changes of power indicated by the composer are all that are really necessary. A slightly quicker pace than that marked (crotchet = 120) may be adopted with advantage. As usual, the phrasing marks are almost all of the haphazard type, and must be ignored.

The Skandinavisch recalls the slow movement of the D major Sonata in its insistence on one short theme, but it is far superior because the theme is more attractive. Here is its opening :

A short, vigorous theme in A flat appears twice, and provides contrast, otherwise the only variety is supplied by slight changes of harmony and laying-out, and, above all, by some delightful examples of inverted pedal points. With all its simplicity and slightness, the piece abounds in felicitous touches. Note, for example, the interest of the bass, despite the fact of its consisting largely of tonic and dominant. The fall from dominant to tonic at the opening and at later repetitions of the passage is held back for a beat, with a curious hesitating effect. See, too, how the A flat section takes over the minor third of the preceding chord and treats it as an auxiliary note in the new key. Unexpected, too, yet simple and natural, are the resolutions in bars 8 and 9 of page 15. In fact, one cannot play many bars without meeting with some neat little stroke. With all its art, however, it is as unaffected as folk-song—which, indeed, seems to be its origin. The result is one of the best of all the slow movements, yet one of the shortest and easiest. There is no opening for solo stops nor for anything but the plainest of registration.

The Introduction to the Fugue is short and weighty, with a broad, simple theme, which is given twice to the pedal reed with imposing results. Its canonic treatment at the end of the first page provides a good opportunity for a powerful solo stop in the left hand as well as in the pedal part. Although ff is indicated at the start, we should reserve a good bit of power for the entry of the theme in D sharp major at bar 2 of line 4 on the second page. The Introduction may of course be omitted, but it provides so fine a contrast to the rest of the Sonata that it should be retained whenever time permits.

The Fugue, like the rest of the Sonata as a whole, is light in character. Its subject has none of the masculine energy of such subjects as those in F, B flat, and E flat. It suggests rather the dance or Scherzo :

The pace is marked dotted crotchet = 116, which is surely far too quick. At first sight one thinks the dotted crotchet is a misprint for a quaver, but this would be too slow. I suggest that from sixty to seventy dotted crotchets will meet the case.

The exposition over, new material comes on in the shape of an arpeggio figure in semiquavers, and the quicker motion thus set up is kept going until the closing section. This secondary material is less interesting than the average free part in Rheinberger's Fugues, and the work suffers accordingly. The fugal writing, too, is on the loose side. For example, the new material has barely started when the subject makes an isolated entry in the tenor which seems quite casual, and a few bars later the tenor and bass in turn deliver the first bar of the subject, and then leave the treble to give it in full. The bass immediately follows with an entry, but makes two shots at the opening phrase, in different keys, before settling down to an orthodox statement in D sharp minor. There is a good deal of such fragmentary treatment, and this—combined with the un-fugue-like character of the arpeggio passages and the freedom of the modulations—gives the movement a scherzo-like flavour. Rheinberger's standard as a fugue writer is so high that he may fall below it and still write a fugue well above the level reached by the average organ composer. The G sharp minor Fugue is a case in point. We should esteem it highly did we not unconsciously measure it by the scale of such achievements as the C sharp minor, B flat, F, E flat, and D minor Fugues—to mention only a few outstanding specimens.

It has the advantage, however, of winding up well. As we have seen repeatedly, the Coda is a strong feature with Rheinberger, and if this Fugue needed saving its Coda is equal to the occasion. It begins rather abruptly on page 22 with the simple march-like subject of the first movement, now in A flat, over a florid pedal part. A striking effect is the alternation of  $\frac{3}{4}$  and  $\frac{2}{4}$  time, though the signature remains unchanged. The rhythm will bother the player unless he holds fast to his two-in-a-bar. The first movement theme is worked with bold harmonization and growing interest until it comes to rest on a dominant pedal in A flat, over which the manual writing mounts finely to a shake on the leading-note. With the resolution the pedal harks back to the fugue subject :

Ex. 7.

and an imposing peroration ends with a characteristic and original cadence over a tonic pedal.

Only two registration marks are given—f at the start and ff at the Coda. After a good many experiments with this Fugue I feel that it makes the most of itself when treated lightly. The style should never be overlooked in settling registration, and there can be no dispute as to the style in this case. Moreover, much of the writing lies high, and is slender in texture. Such a passage as the following loses much by being played loudly :

Ex. 8.

I suggest, therefore, quiet 8-ft. and 4-ft. at the start, with very slight additions until the little bit of stretto on page 22, at which point the power may be increased to f, the Coda being played ff as marked. The light chamber music style may be accentuated by the soloing of the tenor entry of the subject on bar 5 of page 19, and a telling (but not loud) 8-ft. or 4-ft. pedal stop may be added for the bass entry at the end of the same page, and taken off at the end of bar 7 on page 20. Played at the smart pace it clearly demands the Fugue is difficult, but it well repays the trouble, especially if a little extra thought is spent over the registration. If we decide on a light treatment there are longish stretches where the hands may be on separate manuals of contrasted colour but equal power, e.g., the greater part of page 19. The fact of so much of the movement being out of the regular fugal style, and the liberal amount of pedalling on the short keys, make it particularly good for the student. The whole Sonata deserves to be well known, being unconventional and melodious.

NO. 17, FANTASIA SONATA IN B MAJOR, OP. 181

Fantasia (Moderato grave—Poco animato—Grave);
Intermezzo; Introduction and Fugue

Of the later Sonatas this appears to be the best known. Certainly it is one of the finest of the series, and could not well be left out of a leet of (say) half-a-dozen. It recalls the D flat work in its spaciousness, wealth of melodic invention, and harmonic richness. So far as melody is concerned—melody of the wide-ranging instrumental type—I cannot recall anything better in modern organ music than the opening of the first movement. It leads off thus :

Ex. 9.

and so on for about twenty bars more, with a harmonization and laying-out rich and sonorous, and entirely free from stodginess or commonplace. After two pages of this, a full close in the tonic is made, and contrast provided by a section consisting entirely of arpeggios over a plain bass. The interest may easily decline here. Much depends on the resonance of the building, the choice of stops, and (it may be necessary to add) perfect equality and legato in the playing. The effect aimed at is evidently that of legatissimo in pianoforte playing. We ought to hear the harmonic effect free from blur, and the top note of each group should come out as a simple tune. Generally it will be better to reduce the composer's f to mf; in a smallish building an open diapason is apt to make the passage sound heavy. A full close in C sharp and a couple of bars of soft chords lead to the second subject proper. (Note in the bridge-passage the crescendo mark  $\text{<}$ , the only one in all the Sonatas! Incredible as it may seem, Rheinberger's organ had no Swell pedal. Here he either remembered that other organs were better provided, or he wrote the bridge-passage in such a way that it could be played by the right hand alone, the mark being added to show that the stops were to be drawn as gradually as possible in a bar of slow time.)

The second subject has a good deal of pomp and circumstance:

Ex. 10. a tempo.

Not many of us can overcome the temptation to hang slightly on the last beat of the fourth bar—nor need we try.

A gradual decrecendo leads to a cadence in F sharp, and we then begin an important section, Poco animato. This starts with a theme given out in such a manner as to threaten a fugue, but instead we have free treatment, the treble taking up the tune skittishly, with a kind of handspring:

Ex. 11.

(It will be noticed that the theme is almost identical with the subject of the Fugue in the B minor Sonata.) A further subject appears at the end of page 8—a simple two-bar motive that at every appearance ends with Rheinberger's favourite  $\frac{6}{4}-\frac{5}{3}$  cadence. The animato sails along capitably for three pages, and then works up a climax that prepares the way for a return of the opening theme, tempo primo. The remainder of this fine big movement follows sonata form, and ends Grave with a final statement of the main theme.

Allusion has already been made to Rheinberger's excellence as a writer of variations. The Intermezzo gives us an example that many consider to be his best. The theme is a simple Beethovenish tune of eight bars:

Ex. 12.

The nine Variations are run into one another without break, and the theme is always apparent. The seventh, with its big chopstick chords, is a bit out of the picture when played ff as marked. Such indications are relative, and ff here is not the same as ff in the first movement. The eighth Variation gives us yet one more example of the composer's bad registration. The theme at the top is marked p, the inner part (consisting of detached pairs of demi-semiquavers staccato) is marked mf, and the bass pp. Played in this way the hopping inner part is an inflection. All three parts should be pretty well equal in power, the theme with (say) string tone, the hopping part with soft flute, and the pedal with soft 8-ft. and 16-ft.

Again, the ninth Variation gives us a decorative left-hand part marked f against the mf of the theme, and here again the call is for contrast in tone-colour rather than in power. The sudden burst at the end of this Variation is not effective, I think. A slight increase of the preceding f is enough, because the climax is mainly in the music itself—an unexpected chord of F flat, built up arpeggiando and paused on. The ending, pp, is quite in the Beethoven-Brahms manner.

The Introduction, like other movements of its type, is useful when the Fugue is played alone. Otherwise it is perhaps better to go straight from the slow movement to the Fugue. Dr. Bennett thinks that this Fugue was the last Rheinberger wrote for the organ. (The remaining Sonatas contain no Fugue.) As the Doctor says, it shows no falling-off, so we wonder why the composer dropped the form. Perhaps he felt that he had exhausted its possibilities in the way of new devices. The subject shows him returning to a type that led to some of his best examples—an opening consisting of a few emphatic, longish notes (suggestive of the quarters of a chime), followed by a series of quicker ones:

Ex. 13.

It is worked with great vigour for two and a-half pages, with entries so far afield as B flat and E flat. Then a sudden p starts a reference to the second subject of the first movement—a preparation for its delivery ff a moment later. From this point the first movement theme plays a prominent part, alternating with the fugal working—a plan the composer used with success in the B flat Fugue, and even as early as the A flat Fantasia Sonata. Rheinberger, as we know, is not lavish with canonic devices, but an excellent specimen occurs at the beginning of page 14, the treble and bass treating the subject in canon at the octave at a beat's distance, and the treble and alto following with a repetition. Note that in the first canon the top part leads off; in the second the lower.

An exciting sequential bridge-passage over a dominant pedal begins a few bars later, leading into a final statement of the first movement theme, now in B:

Ex. 14.

Why does Rheinberger give the maestoso theme in single notes only? I venture to suggest that we add the octave, or, better still, play the theme on a tuba, omitting the right-hand chords, and if the left-hand part is turgid on our particular organ, slightly modifying it. Of course, the soloing should not go on beyond the first bar in line 3 of this page. It may be resumed for the first two bars of the last line, the right hand going back to the Great at the last bar. This tuba delivery calls for discretion; the stop must be a big one, and the accompanying chords just right as to position, otherwise a fine passage will be spoilt. The last page is a worthy end to the Fugue, the subject being delivered by the pedals, with posane, the manuals providing a rich four-part background. Rheinberger may have written more immediately attractive Fugues than this, but I do not think he ever combined fugue and sonata form to better effect.

In the way of registration there is no need to do more than to warn players against the long stretches of ff indicated by the composer. Save when the pompous second subject is on, and of course in the closing section from the Maestoso, the best effect will be obtained by a variety of fortes.

(To be continued.)

BOUGHTON AND THE 'ALKESTIS'

BY RICHARD BINNS

In the respect paid to the recent London presentation of Rutland Boughton's Alkestis, the fact that the work was originally given at Glastonbury nearly eighteen months ago has been obscured. In the interval there has been a notable accumulation of critical opinion which seems worthy of some examination. Its general trend is to the effect that Boughton's music is undeniably beautiful but not quite big enough for its job—that, of course, depends upon the job—and not the biggest the composer could have given us. Passing from the general trend to details there is remarkably wide variance: one opinion is that the music is not expressive enough; another, that it is weak in characterisation; a third, that it 'does not rise to the situation'; a fourth, that it is 'extraordinarily moving'; another, that it 'establishes English opera for the first time since Purcell'; still another, that the music has a shapeless line that fails to coil itself into the clearly-outlined designs of the Greek drama—and so on. Those who are familiar with Boughton's theories and with his earlier practice will probably feel that a good deal of this, while containing some element of truth, falls rather wide of the main ground. Many of the apparent contradictions would appear to have their source in a persistent unwillingness to make that essential distinction between opera and music-drama which Wagner strove to establish and which Boughton, among others, has given almost a lifetime to correct and develop. Boughton calls his Alkestis a music-drama with an obviously specific intention, and to the present writer this work more than any other from the same hand demands assessment in the light of just this important differentiation.

So long ago as 1911 Boughton published his Essay on Choral Drama. He was hard at work on his theories in collaboration with the late R. R. Buckley, and this Essay was their declaration of faith. Music-drama as distinct from opera, Boughton contended, is a piece of symbolism, the only adequate expression of which is to be found in the continuous emotional mood of music. A 'religious' idea he postulated as the force-generative of Art. Music was to be used to enhance the emotional effect where necessary, but was not to impede action and dialogue; it was to provide atmosphere, but not merely to underline the drama as Debussy attempted to do in Pelléas. 'Whatever of scenic beauty, physical movement, song, trio, and chorus enter into the work will result not from the desire to keep the senses of the audience tickled, but from the necessity or expressing the religious idea naturally and completely.' With Wagner, Boughton claimed the need to subordinate physical and sensuous appeal—if the result was to attain that spiritual altitude which music demanded for its due development—was more perfectly understood than the 'equal necessity for the subordination of the intellectual appeal'; a disadvantage which led Wagner frequently more towards the ground of prose and the problem-play than to that of poetry and music-drama. It might, and probably would, be disputed to-day whether Wagner's success was chiefly that of subordinating stage realism to musical spiritualism; but that he found a way to carry on the thread of a 'spiritual play by means of music' cannot be questioned, and Boughton, it is clear, has thought it no shame to work on the basis that Wagner handed down.

Active minds will not need to be warned that this theoretical plan takes at least one fundamental factor for granted: it assumes that the nature of your music-drama subject is satisfactory to begin with—a point on which Wagner himself had something emphatic to say—and that you can see your musical way to make the combination of music, poetry, action, and the rest, into a logical and coherent whole. If we accept this assumption it is reasonable and natural to ask: How far must the nature of your music correspond with the nature of your subject? It must, we suppose, have sufficient of its prevailing spirit to prevent the two prime partners in the venture damaging each other au coup d'essai; but beyond that it is difficult to dogmatise; and there are endless complications. Whatever compromise the composer may feel compelled to make in the matter it is not easy to see more than two broad choices open in the method of application, if the result is to be an acceptable unity: either there must be the most subtle interpenetration of all three factors (poetic, musical, and dramatic); or the poetic-drama must be self-sufficient and the music in a very wide sense subsidiary—it will have a certain beauty of its own, but, while exercising its desired effect on ear and mind in relation to the other components, it will neither 'interrupt' nor draw a disproportionate attention upon itself.

Boughton challenged the gods themselves when he chose Alkestis as the subject of his music-drama. It is not one of the greatest of the Euripidean series, yet it is sufficiently identified with its type to make the musician's approach to it thorny from the outset and to guarantee almost unlimited scope for paradox in the result. The fact upon which Boughton laid such hopeful stress in his prose-writings—that Greek Tragedy was originally a religio-musical ritual—seems, indeed, at first glance, to put a most dangerous pitfall in the path of the music-drama composer should his first instinct be to attempt to replace the music, long lost, which formed part of the dramatic rite on the Greek dancing-floor, by something as nearly like it as could be made agreeable to the modern ear. For it is to be remembered that to the old Greeks orchestral music was unknown, harmony virtually non-existent, and that singing was mostly unisonal with flute accompaniment. The composer might, on the other hand, simply turn the thing into an opera, and write the best music he could draw out of himself, risking a direct competition in interest with the drama. In both cases, with Greek Tragedy as the subject, the vital rhythmical value of the original poetry would suffer beyond repair, and the net result in either case would be a more or less offensive hybrid, certainly not a coherent music-drama. Here, however, in Boughton's case, Prof. Murray came to the rescue. The merits of the Murray English translation of Alkestis contain in themselves a liberating force which Boughton has employed with no little discretion. The necessary selection having been made, here was a libretto in fruitful poetic English, with a minimum of action, leaving just enough space for music to play a useful and significant part yet sacrificing so little of the spirit of the original as to settle exactly what the function of that music must be. To what extent Boughton has made artistic capital out of this liberation the score of his music-drama bears abundant witness. 'Choral drama,' Boughton wrote in the Essay already mentioned, 'will complete a cycle by linking-on with the great Greek drama, succeeding where that failed for lack of the developed art of music' ('and for lack of the sense of the divinity of humanity which did not enter into Greek feeling until the drama began to degenerate at the hands of Euripides'). In the new Alkestis we get in place of a modal accompaniment a continuous web of music—the 'atmosphere' is set at once in the simple yet impressive diatonic dignity of the opening orchestral bars, nowhere obtrusive, rising at times not to the violence of operatic illustration or transformation but to a degree of calm sublimation which can only be described as 'feeling.' Its keynote of simplicity and quietude—which has not escaped the misjudgment that it indicates diminished stature—is not accidental but directly intentional. It is set against, and at times above, the emotional intensity of the poetry and the power of the tragedy in action. It is at once expressive and reflective, commentative and alleviative. It does not characterise; that is not its business. In particular illustration of this reticence and alleviation may be quoted, out of numerous instances, a few bars from the moving scene in which the Maid recounts to the Chorus how she witnessed the private preparations of Alkestis for approaching death (Ex. 2)—'Then came the tears, and she spoke all her thought,' the poignancy of it relieved by a bold stroke at the next words, 'O bed, whereon my laughing girlhood,' where the Alkestis theme (A) is introduced, pianissimo, to be transformed with striking effect at the end of the work when Admetus, wonderingly beholding the restored Alkestis, pays her a reverent homage (B):

Ex. 1. (A)

(B)

Ex. 2. Then came the tears

(A)

Ex. 3. (B)

Greek tragedy, as Mr. Sheppard has pointed out, is never completely dramatic, nor can it be completely understood if it is judged by the standard of modern dramatic criticism. On the Greek stage, in the words of Murray, beyond the acting and the dialogue there remains a residue which no one on the stage can personally feel, which can express itself only as music or 'yearning of the body,' and which finds its one instrument in the Chorus. The Greek Chorus is and always has been a trouble; Boughton has not escaped its problems, nor has he solved them. In the old essay on Choral drama he insisted that Wagner missed the significance of the most important factor of all in music-drama (that of the Chorus), and proceeded to set forth his own ideals of the functions and quality of the Chorus in the great music-drama to which, one imagines, he is still on his way. To my mind, those functions and qualities are precisely parallel with the main function and quality of Boughton's Alkestis music viewed as a whole; which is (again, to me) the most interesting and significant fact in the whole work. To quote Prof. Murray once more (and who better?):

The purpose of the Chorus is to express in music and movement . . . ultimate emotion, to translate the particular into the universal, increasing the elements of beauty . . . and reducing the element of crude pain.

Boughton would have the Chorus also 'help forward the story wherever the psychology of the crowd is needed in the development of the dramatic ideal.' Hence, no doubt, the employment of a folk-idiom (Ex. 4) in some of the choral passages of Alkestis, a usage not justified alone on theory, for it is probable that the music the Greeks actually used in their Tragedy was itself the offspring of extemporised folk-song.

Ex. 4. To tell us ei-ther of tears to shed

Ex. 5.

The Boughton-Murray Chorus theories, however, presuppose a sort of bi-planal music writing, and if the non-choral music is going to fulfil in its own nature the principal task of the 'sublimation' of the drama, the actual presence of the chorus personnel and its poetry in the work would seem to impose unnecessary handicaps. That such handicaps have beset Boughton is evident from the wide differences in quality revealed in the choral passages of Alkestis. A glance at Ex. 5 ('O dear on earth where all did love her') in comparison with Ex. 4 will sufficiently illuminate the point; Ex. 5 both looks and sounds like an extract from a mawkish hymn-tune:

Perhaps the root of the matter is that Euripides himself frequently found the Chorus rather a hindrance than a help; it was a convention which did not suit his method, and its forced acceptance probably explains why some of his treatment of the Chorus is so perfunctory.

THE EDUCATION COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON BRITISH MUSIC

The report by the Adult Education Committee on the Development of Adult Education through Music is, on the whole, distinctly encouraging, for it holds out the hope of solving at least the more urgent problems which beset us. It touches the musical life of the country at every point and, with few exceptions, the conclusions and recommendations of the committee are those which musicians have long been urging on the public and on the authorities. It remains to be seen whether the powers-that-be will act and conform to the committee's findings, or whether this document will end like so many others in the bottomless cupboards of some Government office.

The report surveys so vast a field that it is impossible to follow it step by step. Nor is it necessary to do so, for it often repeats sayings which are already familiar. All that should be said on the place of music in a liberal education has been admirably expressed in Sir Henry Hadow's address to the British Association. We know already that the Elizabethan age was remarkable for the importance then given to the musical education of every Englishman. The decay of music in England in the 19th century and the great revival at the turn of the century are events of which we ourselves have been witnesses. More important is the section describing the work which is being carried out in various schools and other institutions to teach the young idea the elements of musical art and musical appreciation. We have seen some remarkable experiments in London, of which the Bach Mass performance for school children at Central Hall is the most recent, and the performance of the Magic Flute by school boys in the Isle of Dogs the most memorable. But, apparently, these are trifles in comparison with the herculean labours of provincial teachers and lecturers, some of whom, we are told, supervise the music of no less than four hundred schools, conducting lectures and demonstrations to teachers besides. At Liverpool as many as fifty concerts have been given for children in a single year. We think the report is a little sanguine in its belief that 'a public musical institution should be the centre of musical entertainment and progress in the district.' We must not fall into the fallacy of believing that the school is everything. The importance of the school cannot be overrated. Yet the school is only a preparation. The musical life of the nation draws its sustenance from every family of music-lovers, amateurs no less than professionals, students, teachers, performers. Who can say how much the present revival owes to the accident of Elgar, self-taught in great part, yet towering above all his contemporaries, a source of encouragement and pride to all? Similarly we believe that the report exaggerates slightly when it suggests that a conductor should be not only an able musician with a good general education, but that his equipment should include also 'an interest in the general and social activities of his locality and some capacity for business organization.' This is surely expecting too much. Why, in the old days the Fellows of Trinity were only asked to swear to the Thirty-nine articles! The committee clearly has no faith in Mr. Arnold Bennett, or it would not expect conductors to take an interest in the social doings of the matadors of the five towns. Social sympathies are all very well—but mothers' meetings at Burslem!

The most important sections for us, however, are those which deal with the municipalisation of orchestras, with opera, and with competition festivals, for these embrace the whole of our musical activities. The committee is in favour of a municipal subsidy for orchestras, and in this, we imagine, they may count on the wholehearted support of all music-lovers. The question of a subsidy is not without some difficulties. It is simple enough in the case of provincial centres where one orchestra serves one town. It is more complex where the orchestra serves more than one town, and still more difficult in London, where concerts are given by more than one orchestra. If the L.C.C. were to grant a subsidy, to whom should it go—to the L.S.O., to the Queen's Hall Orchestra, or to the Philharmonic? The problem is not urgent, since we have not heard of any ardent wish on the part of the L.C.C. to accept the committee's recommendations. But it is worth while noting that at Bournemouth, where a municipal orchestra has existed for some years, the cost to the ratepayer has been no more than the fraction of a penny. So that as soon as the authorities are convinced that there is no reason to deny the theatre and the concert-hall the support given without hesitation to the art galleries, the fear of higher rates need not deter them from taking the logical and inevitable step which would place our orchestral players on an equal footing with Continental players.

The paragraphs devoted to opera are few, but sound on the whole. We are not satisfied that fully adequate performances of the greatest operas cannot be given at a profit. But the point is that great opera should not be expected to yield a profit. The only person entitled to a profit is the composer, who often—through some flaw in human affairs—gets little or nothing. How much did Bizet gain from Carmen, Wagner from Parsifal, Beethoven from Fidelio? The least we can do to show real appreciation of the works of genius we get scot free is to ensure that they will be presented to the public in such a way that their worth will be manifest. That is one of the reasons why, in our opinion, it is important that the theatre—drama and opera—should be taken out of the hands of timid speculators and placed on the same level as any other national treasure. Social workers and educators have long been telling us of the harm, moral and physical, due to the cinema, and the inane, wordless dramas it offers to its public. The remedy is in their hands. If they insist upon and obtain a subsidised opera, the public will not be long in finding out the difference between an artistic production and the slovenly sentimentalities of the cinema dumb-show. F. B.

MR. W. W. COBBETT ON THE NEED OF GENERAL CULTURE FOR MUSICIANS

At Trinity College of Music, on January 16, Mr. Cobbett addressed the students on this important topic. We are glad to be able to reproduce a substantial portion of his speech:

One of our Vice-Presidents, Sir W. Collins, at a delightful dinner given last month in this building, told us in the course of his speech that he had suggested to the authorities of London University that some subject connected with the sister arts should be included in the course for music students going up for their degree. All present were fully in sympathy with him, and I asked myself, 'Is London destined to become, after all, a modern Athens, assigning to all the arts an equal place?' The reply is doubtful at present. Hitherto the scholastic attitude towards music in this country has been profoundly discouraging. You boys and girls have, I take it, recently left school, and if you have been exceptionally lucky, if your headmaster has been sympathetic, if he was of the type represented by the late Sir John McClure, your musical proclivities have been encouraged, but I fear that the McClures of school-life are few and far between, and that music is rarely considered important enough in the eyes of the authorities to form part of the regular curriculum. Yet as an intellectual exercise, apart from all æsthetic considerations, nothing could surpass that glorious blend of the sciences and the humanities known as the art of music. Putting it tersely, general culture at your school was esteemed to be all important and the rest nowhere, but now it is the other way about. Unfettered, you are free to work, if you elect to do so, exclusively at your music. But here a new danger presents itself, against which it is the object of my address to warn you, the danger of allowing this exclusiveness to be carried to excess. I want to impress upon you that if you aspire to be an artist in the real sense of the word you must nourish the imaginative side of your nature in the way suggested by Sir William Collins, by calling in the aid of the sister arts.

How to encourage inspiration, that is the point I propose to discuss this afternoon. First of all, I wish you to bend your minds to the axiomatic truth that art is a form of self-expression. It is to your ego that you draw attention when you sing, play, or compose. Provided you are not a slavish imitator, yourself lurks in every note. 'Every man is perfectly individual and never occurs twice over,' said Count Tolstoi once in a conversation with a young student of music—a stupendous thought, though it need not cost you an attack of swelled head. But it should rouse your sense of responsibility. As artist you pass into the limelight, the observed of all observers. Will you not seek to appear to the best advantage, as an actor does when he appears upon the stage? See then that the ego which you unveil and reveal to the public is cultivated, enriched, stimulated by every means possible, to which end I can conceive none more helpful than companionship with the world's greatest writers. Read as well as make music, and be choice in the selection of what you read. Don't pore too much over newspapers. They are not for artists. Wonderful as they are, their editors are compelled by the world's conditions, so much changed since 1914, to concentrate upon the utilitarian side of life. John Citizen is their best customer, and they must give him what he wants—politics, finance, games, commercial intelligence, racing news, and the latest betting—especially the latest betting! For messages from the land of dreams, of which the artist is a native, he has little use, and so it happens that musical criticism is just now being cut down, even in one instance banished entirely from a newspaper's columns to make way—one would at least have hoped—for fuller news from the great world beyond in which every intelligent man is interested. But, no! the alternative columns are devoted to the adventures of a bull or the result of a race.

This kind of reading—reading without thinking—is not for you if you are searching for the path which leads to inspiration and high mastery. It is literature you need, of the kind in which imagination plays a part, which thrills, fills the mind with awe, evokes visions of beauty, and helps you besides to cultivate a sense of the humour which is nearly allied to beauty and is absent from most modern music. There is plenty of grotesquerie and bizarrerie of the Till Eulenspiegel and Petrushka type, and vastly clever it all is, but it is not the humour of the old masters. One thinks of genial Father Haydn with a smile, of Schönberg, the uncompromising intellectual with corrugated brow, and one need not be branded a reactionary if he prefers smiles to frowns.

My prescription is this. Absorb all the fine literature you can. It was Madame Schumann's advice to Leonard Borwick when he had completed his musical studies. Frequent picture galleries, and steep yourself in the sense of colour, take an intelligent interest in architecture as an education in form, admire the beauties of nature, and all will be reborn in terms of music. In homely language, you must take in if you wish to give out, though I warn you that if you read low-class literature, if literature is the word—shockers, novelettes, insipid love stories, and the like—such, too, will reappear and help to swell the list of weak sentimentalities, shop ballads, berceuses, and other faint tinklings, which flood the world with musical patter to the exclusion of better stuff. You may even develop the type of mind which finds its affinity in syncopated squealings.

I am an enemy of vagueness. It is up to me to help you with definite suggestions, and one of them is distinctly not that you should become bookworms bursting with erudition. I even think, though the suggestion may not commend itself to the austere, that the study of romantic literature will help you most. Now I happen to know of a modern publication which seems made for you. It is called the Outlines of Literature and Art, of which Messrs. Newnes have recently published twenty-five fortnightly numbers out of twenty-six, and as it already has a hundred thousand readers it needs no booming from me. There is a link between these Outlines and Trinity College, the literary editor being no less a person than Mr. John Drinkwater, who is a member of our corporation. But I beg you not to imagine that I am recommending this work for such a reason. I am recommending it because I have never in my life met with one more suited to awaken interest in literature and art in the minds of the young—and, I may add, of the old. We elders, if we are frank, get a lot out of elementary books such as these, in which there is a bibliography attached to each of the subjects treated.

On March 19, at Queen's Hall, Barclay's Bank Male-Voice Choir will give a concert on behalf of the National Children's Home and Orphanage. A capital programme is promised, including Deering's Cryes of London, folk-songs (specially arranged by Martin Shaw), &c., &c. Miss Jean Sterling Mackinlay is among the soloists who have promised to help.

At the musical festival at Southwark Cathedral on March 8, at 3 p.m., a fine programme is promised—motets by Byrd, Morley, Peter Phillips, Parry's Songs of Farewell, Vaughan Williams's Lord, Thou hast been our refuge, and a Beethoven string quartet.

Occasional Notes

Messrs. Novello ask us to insert the following :

Our attention has been drawn to an article in the Strand Magazine for February entitled 'Herr Kreisler Talks,' wherein appears a statement so untrue that we cannot allow it to go uncontradicted.

Speaking of Elgar's The Dream of Gerontius, Herr Kreisler says: 'I have been told that Elgar sold this sublime work for a trifling sum—twenty pounds, I think it was.'

In ordinary circumstances the details of a transaction between composer and publisher concern nobody but themselves. As, however, a definite and inaccurate statement about such a transaction has thus been made in a widely-circulated magazine, and the usual privacy broken, we feel we have no option but to make known facts usually treated as confidential: The sums received by Elgar in respect of The Dream of Gerontius turned the four-figure point some years ago, and the royalty payable to him (which was part of the consideration) is still running.

As Herr Kreisler's statement was admittedly based on hearsay, it is a matter for astonishment that he should have given it wide publicity without first making inquiry as to its truth.

160, Wardour Street, W.1.

February 29, 1924.

Although the news is now some weeks old, we record the fact that Sir Alexander Mackenzie is resigning from the post of Principal at the Royal Academy of Music. He will be succeeded by Mr. J. B. McEwen, who has long been identified with the Academy, first as student, and since as Professor of Composition.

Some composers of programme-music are no longer satisfied with a mere title; they go further, and preface their music with a few hundred words of letterpress. If they were as skilled in literary as in musical expression, nobody would object to their throwing in a little reading-matter. Unfortunately, they are composers first, and writers a very long way afterwards. A good example of the high-falutin occurs in a Suite for pianoforte recently published in America. The pieces are descriptive of life at Hollywood, California, where the films come from. Here is a bit from the foreword to June on the Boulevard:

June and the Joy of the Southland Summer—fragrant June 'neath the palms and the pines. The sweet-scented acacia [sic] flaunting her yellow plumes. Mañana forgotten in the poignant desire for the Spirit of Play. And now a bit of light music fluttering from the windows of the bungalow. But it is not the Boulevard; it is whither it wends its way. And where does it wind? Past the Life of the City, into the fields that are green with New Life . . .

and so on, with a liberal dose of capitals.

Twilight at Sycamore Nook moves the composer thus :

My California! My Hollywood! In my Nook I sit at Twilight. The waxing-moon steals over the hill of holly and sage, and sets alight my tall Tapers of Yucca. Under my Sycamores, the raucous tree-toad chants his Ave to the Night, and the gentle cricket lulls me to rest. Twilight at Sycamore Nook, and the Peace of a Summer Night!

But, like a true artist, he still has something in reserve for the final number, Easter Dawn in Hollywood Bowl. (It may be necessary to explain to some readers that the Bowl is a famous natural amphitheatre in which community concerts and other popular functions take place. One of the greatest of these is an early morning concert on Easter Day):

One gigantic Group Soul! My people! My America! Assembled there in the eternal unquenchable Spirit of Democracy—to celebrate the Smybol (sic) of Eternal Life. . . . It is dark. The curtains of fog enshroud the Bowl like a winding sheet, but for the moment, for, as it lifts, the Dawn stirs faintly above the Bowl's Eastern rim, and now the People praising God in Song! The great orchestra with its own tribute to The Dawn. . . . At its height the realisation that it is Day. The unconscious return to the Care-free Spirit of The Times. The crowd wheeling homeward for its Modern Holiday. Perhaps again to its madness! On Easter? Yes, on Easter, but in that Easter Dawn who knows but that some White Shaft of Light has crossed a Waiting Soul!

And the stream of flowery language slops over into the music. The player is bidden to play molto elevato, quieto (? quieto), con colore, cappella alla, grangusto, fervente e brillante (sic), and abbandonási (sic). Such a verbal welter suggests the Care-free Spirit wheeling homeward on Christmas rather than on Easter, and the Bowl seems typical of the flowing sort—a kind of Smybol, as it were.

Some interesting letters were received in answer to our invitation for suggestions as to how the Musical Times could be made more useful—we almost said 'even more useful,' but managed to pull up in time. All but a few of the suggestions, however, are impracticable for various reasons. Among the hopeful few is one that we should print regularly a list of forthcoming events. As our correspondent says, such a list is more helpful than a record of past happenings. There is, however, a difficulty in the case of a monthly journal. Particulars of approaching events are usually sent out at such a date that mention in our columns is not feasible. For example, in the first week of February we received several requests for preliminary notices of events fixed for the end of the month. Of course it couldn't be done. This sort of thing happens frequently, and we are tired of explaining to hurt correspondents that the omission is due to the exigencies of the calendar, and not the result of forgetfulness or discourtesy. However, we will do our best to keep readers advised of coming events, so far as a mere monthly journal may, and we ask their co-operation in keeping us properly posted.

Another reader wants us to do more for the amateur orchestras, 'not in reporting their performances,' he says, 'that would be too much [it would], but by means of an occasional article that would stimulate their activities, and inform them of some problems cultural and organizational.'

As the Musical Times, through its 'Amateurs' Exchange,' has been the means of bringing a good many new members to some of these societies, it is but fitting that we should continue to help them in the way indicated by our correspondent, and we gladly undertake to consider their special needs—even in regard to those organizational problems.

Once again we have to warn readers of the need for care when dictating titles of musical works to the uninitiated. An order has just been received by Messrs. Novello for Purcell's 'Full fat and five'—a title that makes some of us sigh for the happy, far-off days when the description fitted us like a glove. It is but small consolation to reflect that we still manage to retain two of the qualifications.

Another apology due :

Mr. ———, at one of his all-too-frequent recitals. . .
—Sunday Paper.

The notice in which the above appeared did even better by jollifying Max Reger into 'Max Roger,' and crowned a capital piece of work by saying that Max's Romantic Suite was 'scorned with consummate skill.' We thought so, too, when we read the chorus of adverse criticism the next day.

Supporters of the proposed visit of the Vienna Opera are using the Free Trade argument for all it is worth—and more. As this principle has been invoked, it may be worth while to draw attention to a side of it that seems to have been overlooked: (1.) The Viennese Opera enjoys a State subsidy; (2.) If it comes to Covent Garden for the summer season it can do so only by ousting the B.N.O.C.; (3.) The proposed visit has, we are credibly informed, financial backing in London to the extent of £60,000. The Viennese are thus protected by State subsidy, a monopoly of the London season, and a guarantee fund so lavish that a mere half of it would set the B.N.O.C. securely on its feet. Can this be called Free Trade, except by way of a joke? Miss I. A. R. Wylie (Daily Graphic, of February 19), Dame Ethel Smyth, Mr. Ernest Newman, the Church Times, the Observer (what an odd galley-crew!), are all crying out that to ban the visit is rank Protection. It may be so, but it seems to us that to allow it would be even ranker.

The Musician's Bookshelf

Ernest Reyer : sa vie et ses œuvres. Par Henri de Curzon.

[Paris: Perrin.]

Ernest Reyer was born on December 1, 1823, and the French, more pious than most men in the observance of anniversaries, have lately talked a good deal of him, even if they do not appear to have listened much to his music. The author of this memorial volume is one of the elder French critics. He has also written a book on Meyerbeer, and is not disposed to be at all severe in dealing with mid-19th-century French music. This made him the right man for a book on Reyer, who might have suffered under a more austere critic.

Yet Reyer (whose real name was Rey) was looked upon as a bold and intransigent composer in his young days—which were days when it was rather dashing to seek to go one better than Auber, Halévy, or Ambroise Thomas. Alone then days did Berlioz, the astounding Berlioz, give the public what he, rather than what they, wanted. To-day one would not guess from Reyer's music that he had not been complaisant enough. But his principal work, the opera Sigurd, was rejected by three successive directors of the Paris Opéra, and lay in obscurity for years. Paris at last accepted it in 1885, after it had made a success at Brussels.

Reyer was born at Marseilles. He owed his musical instruction chiefly to his aunt, Madame Farrenc, a pianist of some celebrity under Louis-Philippe. But his spontaneous musical aptitudes never had much discipline, and his technique was always defective. Reyer succeeded Berlioz in 1866 as musical critic of the Journal des Débats, and there was a good deal in common between those two musical southerners—due proportions being kept, for there can be no question who was the bigger man. Of the one and of the other it was said, 'A pity he has no talent—he has got only genius!' Saint-Saëns's dictum on Reyer's music was, 'What a profusion of ideas—if only he knew how to write!' Reyer could only retort, 'How well he can write—and yet without an idea in his head worth putting down!' Reyer deserved all his life to be treated with respect—the respect due to one of the sharpest tongues in Paris.

The oddest thing about Reyer's career is that he wrote his best opera (Sigurd) on the subject of Wagner's Twilight of the Gods. His librettists, Locle and Blau, went to the Nibelungenlied and found there a 'Death of Siegfried' much as Wagner had found it some twenty-five years before: Sigurd owed nothing, however, to Wagner's musical style. If Reyer had an affinity in German music it was rather Weber. Sigurd succeeded in France in the time when Wagner was still proscribed there. Until fairly recently it was to be heard now and then at the Paris Opéra, and doubtless it still survives in the French provinces. It would probably appear quaint in the eyes of an audience familiar with The Ring, but it had the pageantry and sort of tunes expected by a public brought up on Gounod and Meyerbeer. M. de Curzon says:

To judge Reyer aright we must go back to the period when the French school of musical composition, well nigh absent from the concert room, existed only in the opera house; a period when composers dare not enter the field of music-drama (the public would have never understood a thing); a period when it was the hardest work to obtain justice from the managers (as Reyer was always demanding) for Gluck and Weber—his masters—and for Berlioz, whose belated popularity was in part the fruit of his efforts. Thus we shall better appreciate the nobility of his independence, the beauty of his intransigence and contempt for fashion, the energy of his inspiration, which drank only at the purest springs of poesy, the proudness of that character which did not fear to suffer from probable misunderstandings.

M. de Curzon feels Reyer's music to have had a sense of natural beauties, and to have expressed them in a way rare in the French music of fifty years ago:

In the evolution of French dramatic music, Reyer represents the poetry of nature. At the same time action dominated his conceptions. He could not be other than a dramatic musician; he was that wholly, and not without an epic touch rare still in the French school.

After the success of Sigurd Reyer wrote Salummbô (Brussels, 1890), and then nothing more. His earlier works were Sakountala (Paris, 1858), La Statue (1861), and Erostrate (Baden, 1862; Paris, 1871). He died in 1909.

C.

The Art of Violin Playing. By Frank Thistleton.

[Strand Library, 7s. 6d.]

Mr. Thistleton's work contains some sound advice. It has also the merit of clearness, which in a technical work is particularly to be commended. And if we do not praise it without reservation it is only because, to our thinking, Mr. Thistleton does not quite realise how easily one man's meat may become another man's poison. Any violinist who has had the advantage—or disadvantage—of having studied under two teachers must have found some difference in their method, even though both may have been equally celebrated professors. Technically, it may be said that no two individuals play alike. Imitators never go the same distance in the way of imitation. There are at the present moment hundreds of players directly influenced by Kreisler; yet although they have not a distinct personality of their own, they are just as different from one another in the lower sphere as Kreisler is different from Kubelik or Ysaye in the higher. Even the position in which the fiddle should be held is not a thing for dogmas. The present author tells us that the violin is held by the chin or jaw-bone. Others will maintain that as soon as the jaw-bone is brought on the violin there is a loss of tone. Let us hasten to add that Mr. Thistleton on the whole is perfectly sound on what should not be done, and some of his twenty-four points contain truths that should be common-places of all students. Most of them can be summed up in the brief sentence: 'To your own self be true!' But they lose nothing by a little judicious dilution. We are not quite sure as to the meaning of No. 15:

Don't worship that which you understand unless you are certain that you have understanding.

Which might be misconstrued into: When in doubt as to your own judgment worship that which you do not understand. But sincerity cannot be appraised too highly, and there can be no two opinions as to the need for discrimination between art and technique.

F. B.

Dates. Par Jacques-Emile Blanche.

[Paris: Emile-Paul, fr. 6.75]

The brilliant painter Jacques-Emile Blanche, though not professing to be a musician in a strict sense, is justified in devoting many of these pages of criticism and memoirs to musical matters. He has had a good deal of experience of music and musicians, loves music deeply, and while his pages on music do not carry the weight of those he gives to his own art, his comments are readable and interesting as conveying the feelings of a more than ordinarily intelligent amateur.

M. Blanche is an old Bayreuthian, but when Parsifal comes to Paris he can observe with more pleasant malice than indignation the impertinences of the 20th-century babes. As for him, the old magic is still powerful. He is a trifle uncomfortable for the first few minutes at going to hear Parsifal as though it were just any opera, but he is quickly captivated again. He shuts his eyes, his nerves relax. He declares at the end of the first Act that it has seemed short to him, and emotion has left him almost speechless. Not too speechless, however, for him to inform himself in the interval how young Paris takes the mystery—remembering how in his youth he spent the intervals of Parsifal at Bayreuth among the cornfields, filled with yearnings and poetic exaltation.

Well, one answer from young Paris is that Parsifal might do very well if it were cut down to two hours, Gurnemann being suppressed altogether. Then, on another hand, the music is allowed to have its merits, but the poem is called 'Second Empire furniture—rococo—spurious unction—theatrical mysticism—pinchbeck.' And at last M. Blanche protests that the young men of a generation ago, assuredly no sillier than those of to-day, were 'less governed by caprice, less easily buffeted from left and from right, less at the mercy of a gust of wind.' To-day, he sighs, there are no established positions; and worshippers and iconoclasts seem alike bereft of reason.

Not that M. Blanche is in any way an old fogey. As an intimate of all the bright spirits of the Russian Ballet, he writes much of Diaghilev, Nijinski, and Stravinsky, and calls the Rite of Spring ballet 'the most successful work—the invention that has best hit the target—which we have been given to applaud since Wagner.' There is a good description of the first stormy production of that work at Paris.

Still, there is not enough classical music performed in France, says M. Blanche. 'We live in a modern and a most limited music—let us confess it once for all.' It is curious that he attributes to officers of the French Artillery and Engineers the practice of playing Beethoven patiently and regularly, regardless of fashion. M. Blanche, who knows England and can speak up for such a painter as Watts with generous admiration, ought not to have fallen into the cheap disparagement of Elgar on pp. 190 and 191, which appears to repeat without a personal impression the common French opinion of those who seem never to have listened to Elgar. Of the music he has heard on this side of the Channel, that of Percy Grainger interests him. C.

The Bel Canto, with particular reference to the singing of Mozart. By Herman Klein.

[Oxford University Press, 3s. 6d.]

Vocal Success, or, Thinking and Feeling in Speech and Song. By the Rev. Charles Gib.

[Reeves, 3s. 6d., cloth, 5s.]

Unaccompanied Song. By Herbert Bedford.

[Oxford University Press, 3s. 6d.]

Mr. Klein's book has an unusual defect: it is too short. This is no doubt due to the small compass allowed him by the series to which his work belongs. These Oxford Musical Essays are delightful to handle and read, but their size—a matter of fifty pages or so—is too small for this subject, though it is just right for the discussion of a musical byway such as unaccompanied song.

Mr. Klein takes as the basis of his book the lecture on the singing of Mozart, given by him last March. It would have stood far more amplification than it has received. The lecture had the advantage of being illustrated by the admirable singing of one of his pupils—Miss Leonie Zifado. Such illustrations are of course the best, because the most practical and understandable, form of exposition. In transferring his material from the lecture-room to the printed page, Mr. Klein should have filled the place of the sung examples by developing some of the more important practical points, backed up by music-type illustrations. However, it may be that his space was laid down for him, with a 'Thus far, and no farther. . . . ' If so, it must be said that he has filled it to good purpose.

No man can write of Mr. Klein's subject without a shake of the head and an 'Ichabod!' Mr. Klein shows that the tradition of Mozart singing has been broken, though not yet lost:

The voices of contemporary singers do not compare for beauty with those of the past; nor does their technical training, save in the rarest instances, nearly approach the same height of perfection.

And he goes on to point out that the vocal falling-off coincided with the period of neglect that overtook Mozart's operas a half-century ago; the tradition having been broken, we are left to-day with few voices fit to make the most of the present Mozart revival.

Mr. Klein himself is one of the few remaining links with the great period. As a youth he heard the Mozart operas sung with such principals as Patti, Nicolini, Tietjens, Nilsson, Trebelli-Bettini, &c. He had the further advantage of hearing from his teacher, Manuel Garcia, much about the singing of the earlier and perhaps even greater galaxy that included Malibran, Viardot-Garcia, and Pasta. On this subject, therefore, what Mr. Klein says 'goes.'

Some such stocktaking as he gives us is one of the chief musical needs of to-day. The standard of solo singing is lower than that of any other department in executive music, and the appalling lack of discrimination on the part of the public makes us pessimistic. In opera-house and concert-hall alike there has lately been some thoroughly bad singing, and it has been received with acclamation by musicians who would damn without reserve a corresponding inefficiency in an instrumental soloist.

There may be little call to-day for the type of music in which the great singers of the past excelled, but there is a sore need for the skill and beauty of tone that distinguished their feats. It is to be hoped that the increasing number of performances of Mozart's operas, the revival of the native ballad opera, and the signs of awakened interest in the early Verdi works, may bring relief from the present curse of screech, wobble, and out-of-tune singing. Apropos of the wobble, I am afraid Mr. Klein is unduly kind to our public when he says:

In alliance either with a strain of pure melody or a declamatory passage, a trembling voice, no matter how pleasing its quality per se, has always sounded disagreeable to the ears of an English audience.

Of the past I cannot speak, but I cannot admit that Mr. Klein's words apply to our audiences to-day. Only a few nights ago I heard almost the entire cast of Pagliacci at Covent Garden producing sounds that ought to have been disagreeable to the audience, but which were very much to its liking, judging from the frantic applause.

I wish the Carnegie Trust, or some other corporate fairy godmother, would send a copy of Mr. Klein's valuable and extremely interesting little book to all but a few of the B.N.O.C. soloists and to seventy-five per cent. of our concert singers. It would do them a power of good, except in a few cases that seem to be past praying for.

Mr. Gib was a well-known and successful voice trainer. It is a pity that his death prevented him from completing this book. The sketches for it have been put together by his friends, and the result is not always satisfactory. For example, the first person singular is used on some pages, the plural on others, with an occasional use of the impersonal 'one.' Moreover, there are some points that he would almost certainly have developed at greater length. But it is a practical and common-sense book, and it has particularly useful sections on muscular relaxation and breathing for health. If the chapter on 'the mixed voice' fails to make this difficult subject clear, it fails in common with most paper discussions of the matter. The author was aware of this, for, after describing the physiological process, he says :

How is one to learn this production? By imitation. Listen to the living voice of someone who is really using the mixed voice and try to imitate it.

Speaking of the control of the soft palate, Mr. Gib advocates the use of a hand-mirror, and recommends that pupils should inspect the working of one another's vocal anatomy. He says that :

It interests pupils to look down their own throats, and they delight to demonstrate the movements of the soft palate to a new pupil.

All the same, it is a delight that may easily be indulged in too often. It is significant that the fashionable physiological and psychological methods of teaching singing should coincide with an admittedly low standard of performance. Is it mere chance, or a case of cause and effect?

Mr. Bedford makes out an interesting case for unaccompanied song, but I cannot help thinking he is engaged in a fruitless task. Nobody denies the beauty of unaccompanied vocal melody, but there will be wide differences of opinion as to the choice of type. Unaccompanied plainchant, well-sung in a resonant building, is one of the most spellbinding things in music ; and unaccompanied folk-song has a charm of its own, as befits the secular sister. Both types can dispense with accompaniment—plain-song, because its modality and elusive rhythm hold us off from mentally fitting it out with harmony ; folk-song because the tunes themselves are so well able to stand as tunes. It seems to follow, then, that modern experiments in unaccompanied song should at least start by possessing plain-song's freedom from key association, or folk-song's melodic attractiveness. Unfortunately the examples given in Mr. Bedford's book are almost all of the vaguely-rambling and chromatic type, difficult to sing and full of harmonic implications. If Mr. Bedford's crusade leads to a keener realisation on everybody's part of the significance of the words sung, and of the importance of the singer achieving a pure vocal line, it will have been well worth while. It seems likely to do both things, and for that reason I hope he will persist. But composers of the old-new type must give us tunes. Tunes will help the cause along ; chromatic, meandering work will hinder it.

H. G.

The Immortal Nine: Beethoven's Symphonies fully Described and Analysed. (Vol. i., Symphonies 1 to 5.) By Edwin Evans, sen.

[W. Reeves, 10s. 6d.]

This work is principally an analysis of the Symphonies. It does not concern itself with their historical circumstances, and it does not compete with Grove's famous book in literary expatiations. Those who have awaited such a work on the Symphonies will like to know that the first volume, on the first five Symphonies, is of three hundred and eighty-one pages. It contains three hundred and twenty-six quotations in music-type, in short score, but often provided with indications of the instrumentation. There is a chapter given to each movement, and for each movement our author gives a 'rhythmical table' which accounts for the function of every bar in the symphonic proceedings. Thus a glance tells you where in the first movement of the Eroica the recapitulation starts—viz., bar 402. (This, however, is an unfortunate example to cite, since by a misprint the development section is represented as extending to bar 491.) The same tables give a rhythmical analysis of each subject and theme. Thus the reader can expeditiously find that in the first movement of the first Symphony the first subject (a) consists of '(4 + 2) 2.' It must be confessed that Mr. Evans's use of the word rhythm seems unsatisfactory. Rhythm he treats always as a question of so many bars, and does not avail himself of the word metre. Talking of words, we must quarrel with 'Durchführung,' which is persistently employed. Is there the least likelihood of 'Durchführung' being acclimatised here? Is there the least reason why it should be wanted?

Previous commentators whom Mr. Evans principally quotes, in his support or controversially, are Berlioz, Kretzschmar, and Grove. It need hardly be said that an intimate acquaintance with the Symphonies has gone to the making of this book. Yet, as the author observes, so much is there to say about them that a volume apiece would not be too much. Questions of orchestration, of harmony, and even of range of tonality, are treated somewhat incidentally. Mr. Evans is by no means dry. He possibly set out with the intention of being severe and pedagogic, but a good deal of human feeling after all comes through, evoked by a very sturdy passion for the great music. Only the style of writing is confused.

C.

Wireless Notes

BY 'ARIEL'

In this column will be discussed such aspects of wireless telegraphy as are of interest to musicians. Like most musical journalists who are beginning to deal with the subject, I am not yet clear as to the most profitable method. In the long run it will probably turn out to take the form of notes on forthcoming programmes, as suggested by 'Feste' last month. The mention of my colleague's name reminds me that I am instructed to begin by saying that his protest against the mixture of good and bad music sometimes sent out by the B.B.C. has been endorsed by a good many readers. I believe there will gradually be less and less cause for complaint in this respect. My own grumble at too mixed a programme is based mainly on the score of time-saving. As is the case with most writers, my home is one of my workshops, and the evening is a part of the working-day. A programme of (say) eight fourth-rate and two first-rate items is a hindrance, because I can't hear the two without fiddling around dodging the eight. When I see a programme of poor stuff, I don't complain bitterly. I am quite content to give my wireless a miss for an evening, and put in an hour or two improvising on my Corona instead. A programme that will not allow me to settle down either at work or wireless is the bugbear.

Some interesting experiments during the past month have to be recorded. I had my doubts about the possibility of transmitting the Southwark Cathedral Musical Service on February 9, and they proved to be only too well-founded. Southwark Cathedral is always a bit of a problem acoustically, and this fact, combined with difficulties due (I believe) to the distance of the Cathedral from the B.B.C. station, made the result a fiasco. I heard the whole performance—or, rather, I listened for it—from the preliminary Collect (the only really successful bit of transmitting) down to the end of the 'playing-out' piece—the Dorian Fugue. In this I heard no hint of pedal tone until the final cadence, at which point an apologetic reedy sound came through.

Clearly the organ is going to beat the wireless almost as badly as it beats the gramophone. I have lately listened to organ solos relayed from the concert-hall of the National Institute for the Blind, with and without a loud speaker, but in no case was the result satisfactory. The bass was generally weak, and the Swell terribly mouth-organy. A flute solo stop sometimes came out well, but generally the tone became too big and suggestive of a hoot.

Samson and Delilah was a very successful bit of opera broadcasting. Incidentally it raised a point in regard to verbal enunciation. At the opera house so few of the words get over the footlights that the singers have been pitched into on all sides. Yet the words were heard clearly by wireless, so they must have been sung clearly! It has been suggested that the acoustics of Covent Garden are to blame. I am inclined to think rather that the fault lies with the orchestral playing, partly because it is generally too loud, and even more because it so often lacks finish. Heard by wireless, the balance between singer and orchestra is as a rule far better than that heard in the more expensive parts of the house.

Act 3 of Parsifal probably made a good many wireless listeners switch off and yawn their way upstairs earlier than usual. It had that effect on me, at all events. The cause is worth getting at, because opera by wireless can be made successful only if the B.B.C. sticks to such works as are well-fitted to the process. Parsifal is not a good choice, I think. Those long stretches of recitative are trying, even in the opera-house. Heard by wireless they become terribly boring, because the low-pitched harmonies with which they abound don't get through clearly. The result lacks coherence and musical interest. Pagliacci came off well, though as I sat miles away, I ground my teeth to hear the audience rapturously applauding one of the worst performances of the Prologue I have ever heard—and that is saying a good deal. I don't think Mr. Langley took a single interval without a portamento, he wobbled throughout, and tone, rhythm, and everything else was sacrificed to mere sentimentalising. It is disquieting to think of the thousands of people who heard him, noted the applause, and read the favourable criticism in the Press on the following Monday. Need we be surprised if they think that continuous wobble and portamento are the marks of fine singing?

The 'high-low' programme arranged by Mr. Percy Scholes on February 18 was a good scheme. It was a capital idea to show a few hundred thousand people at a sitting that a programme can be first-rate in quality, and yet of a character that the so-called 'unmusical person' can enjoy. I was not persuaded that the elaborate business of a jury of experts and another of non-experts was necessary to the success of the experiment, and I think the encores were a mistake. Having got the many-headed safe at the other end of the wire, it seemed a pity not to fill up the extra bit of time by giving them a few more convincing proofs that 'good music' and 'dullness' are not interchangeable terms.

This programme, by the way, strengthened a view I have long held—that a good comic turn is not out of place in a programme of first-class music. The sooner such interludes are included at Queen's Hall the better—especially for the box-office. Mr. John Henry, the funny man on this occasion, was a delight, and nobody enjoyed the Bach and Chopin pianoforte pieces a bit the less for having chuckled a few minutes before at this genuinely comic Yorkshireman. The whole evening was a success, with Mr. Scholes in his familiar rôle as Listener's Guide, Mr. Maurice Cole as pianist (at his best in clean, brilliant work like the Bach Gigue), and Mr. George Parker singing capitably. As John Henry said from time to time, 'That's t' stoof!'

The first of the B.B.C.'s own symphony concerts takes place too late for notice in this number. Next month I hope to discuss the scheme in general.

Gramophone Notes

BY 'DISCUS'

COLUMBIA

The Planets are being released, one by one. Here is 'Mars,' on a 12-in. d.-s., and drawing-rooms that in years past echoed to the songs of 'Claribel' will now resound with that terrible rhythm of 'The Bringer of War.' (We are getting on.) I find 'Mars' almost as afflictively enjoyable at home as at Queen's Hall—a surprise, this, because it depends so much on drum and brass effects that usually dodge the gramophone. A fine record, provided you are in the right mood for such pitiless music.

More often the gramophonist will turn to a 12-in. d.-s. of the Léner Quartet playing the Andante Cantabile of Mozart's No. 12 in G, and the Andante from the Debussy Quartet. This is a fine record of delightful playing.

A new departure in the way of 10-in. d.-s. is one with a pianoforte solo on one side and a violin on the other. The performers are two of the brothers Cherniavsky. Jan plays Borodin's Au Couvent, a pianoforte piece of no great moment, in which a bell effect is a prominent feature; Leo gives us a transcription of Paderewski's Minuet. The movement loses in the process, and from being a simple engaging affair becomes a self-conscious display piece. I wish Leo had devoted his admirable playing to a more suitable choice.

(Continued on page 248.)

Oe humble souls, that seek the Lord

EASTER ANTHEM

Words by PHILIP DODDRIDGE

Music by H. A. CHAMBERS

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

Andante con espress. mp

SOPRANO
Ye hum - ble souls, ye hum - ble souls, that

ALTO
Ye hum - ble souls, that

TENOR
Ye hum - ble souls, that..

BASS
Ye hum - ble souls, . . that

ORGAN
mp Andante con espress. ♩ = 88

mf cres.
seek the Lord, Chase all your fears, all . . . your fears, chase

mf cres.
seek . . . the Lord, Chase all your fears..

mf cres.
seek . . . the Lord, Chase all your fears, all your

mf cres.
seek, that seek the Lord, Chase

mf cres.

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited all your fears a - way; And bow with plea-sure down . . . to . . .

 a - way; And bow with plea-sure down . . .
 fears a - way; And bow with plea-sure down to all your fears a - way; And bow with plea - sure see The place where Je - sus lay, the place where to see The place where Je - sus . . . lay, to see the place, the see The place where Je - sus lay, . . . the place where Je - sus down to see The place, the place where Je - - sus lay, the Je - sus lay. Thus low the place where Je - sus lay. Thus low the lay, to see the place where Je - sus lay. Thus low the place where Je - sus lay. Thus low the Lord of life was brought, Such wonders love can do;

Lord of life was brought, Such wonders love can do;

Lord of life was brought, Such wonders love can do;

Lord of life was brought, Such wonders love can do;

Thus cold in death that bosom lay Which throbbed and

Thus cold in death that bosom lay Which throbbed and

Thus cold in death that bosom lay Which throbbed and

Thus cold in death that bosom lay Which throbbed and ad lib.

senza Ped.

bled for you. Then bled for you.

bled for you.

bled for you.

bled for you.

mf cres. molto

Ped.

Allegro moderato

raise your eyes, and tune your songs; . . . The Sa-viour lives, cres.

Then raise your eyes, . . . and tune your songs; The Sa-viour lives, . . . the cres.

Then raise your eyes, . . . and tune your songs; The f

Then raise your eyes, and tune your songs; The Sa-viour f

Allegro moderato. ♩ = 116

f cres. f

lives a - gain!

Sa - viour lives a - gain!

Sa - viour lives a - gain! Not all the bolts and bars of lives a - gain!

Not all the bolts, the bolts and bars of death The f cres. f

Not all the bolts and bars of death, not . . . all the bars The f cres. f death, not all the . . . bars of death The f cres. f

Not all the bars The f cres. f

poco rall.

Con - queror could de - tain :

poco rall.

Con - queror could de - tain :

poco rall.

Con - queror could de - tain :

poco rall.

Con - queror could de - tain :

poco rall.

High o'er th'an - gel - ic, th'an - gel - ic bands

He rears His once . .

High o'er th'an - gel - ic, th'an - gel - ic bands He rears His once . . dis -

High o'er th'an - gel - ic, th'an - gel - ic bands

His

High o'er th'an - gel - ic, th'an - gel - ic bands

His once dis - dis - hon - oured head ;

hon - oured head ;

once dis - hon - oured head ;

And through un - num - bered years He

hon - oured head ;

And through un - num - bered years He reigns, Who dwelt a - mong the

He reigns, Who dwelt a - mong the reigns, He reigns, Who dwelt a - mong the

He reigns, Who dwelt a - mong the dead, a - mong the dead. Ye hum - ble dead, a - mong the dead.

dead, a - mong the dead.

dead, a - mong the dead.

dead, a - mong the dead.

Tempo 1mo.  $\text{♩} = 88$ souls, ye hum - ble souls, that seek the Lord, Chase all your fears.

Ye hum - ble souls, that seek the Lord,

Ye hum - ble souls, that seek the Lord, Chase

Ye hum - ble souls, that seek, that seek the Lord, all . . your fears, chase all your fears a - way; ye hum-ble

Chase all your fears . . a - way; ye hum-ble

all your fears, all your fears a - way; ye hum-ble

Chase all your fears a - way; ye hum-ble

Poco meno mosso pp morendo

souls, chase all your fears . . a - way. . .

souls, chase all your fears a - way. . .

souls, chase all . . your fears a - way. . .

souls, chase all . . your fears a - way. . .

Poco meno mosso pp morendo

(Continued from page 240.)

The New World Symphony has been recorded on five 12-in. d.-s., played by the Hallé Orchestra under Hamilton Harty. It is a fine piece of work. I am glad to notice again an improvement in the drum tone, the Scherzo as a result coming off well. Mr. Harty's interpretation is notable for the amount of instrumental detail that is given prominence—not unduly, I hasten to add. Especially telling are the brass passages as a whole. I gather that there are no cuts.

From the New World Symphony it is a natural step to negro 'spirituals.' Here are two, sung by Edna Thomas (10-in. d.-s.), and very appealing things she makes of them.

H.M.V.

A hearty word of praise to the Company for giving us a big chamber work uncut. Here, on four 12-in. d.-s., is Brahms's C minor Quartet, a fine reproduction of a performance by the Catterall Quartet. Now that the recording of chamber music is improving rapidly, especially in the matter of the bass, it is to be hoped that the recording companies will give us no more snippets of fine music. Seeing that big orchestral works have long been reproduced in full it seems absurd to continue the policy of issuing double-sided records containing movements from different works, and both 'cut.'

Successful in every way is a record of Heifetz playing Kreisler's version of Dvorák's Slavonic Dance No. 2, in E minor. Of Wilhelm Backhaus's two solos, the Liebesträume and Dohnányi's paraphrase of a Délibes Waltz, the second is the better—a brilliant bit of work (12-in. d.-s.).

The Ballet Music from Prince Igor, conducted by Albert Coates, is most successful when the chorus is silent. The singers have nothing of moment to contribute, and the not very clear medley of voices simply makes us wish to hear the orchestra (12-in. d.-s.).

What is the loudest vocal record so far issued? A new one of Ruffo, singing 'Oh, de verd anni miei' from Ernani, must surely come near to that doubtful distinction. Unfortunately, he commits so many vocal sins that the result is doubly distressing. I defy hearers to be sure of what notes he is actually singing at times. A friend who was on hand when I gave this record its first (and last) trip stopped his ears, and when the uproar was ceased, asked, 'Why in the world do people pay quite a large number of shillings to be blared at like that?' And I could find no answer.

VOCALION

A pleasant orchestral record is a 10-in. d.-s., the Valse Lente and Marche Russe from Luigini's Ballet Russe Suite, played by the Regent Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Percy E. Fletcher.

I am glad to find the Company following up the Holst Folk-Song Suite for military band, with a similar work by Vaughan Williams. Parts 1 and 2 are issued on a 12-in. d.-s. Part 1 gives us a couple of march-like treatments of some Somerset tunes, and Part 2 an Intermezzo on My Bonny Boy. It is not clear whether this record gives us the Suite complete. This title 'Intermezzo' implies a final movement yet to come. I hope so, for the second part is in too quiet and grey a style to make a satisfactory conclusion to a Suite.

Sasha Culbertson's sensitive playing of the Romance from Wieniawski's D minor Concerto is well recorded on a 12-in. d.-s., with a Sarasate Spanish Dance as a good second.

Again the Liszt Liebesträume! Lionel Tertis, still on the hunt for transcription material, has found it. (The trouble with some of us is to lose it.) I prefer his performance (recorded on the other side of this 12-in.) of his own very attractive Rêverie.

The third and fourth movements of Beethoven's Quartet in B flat, Op. 18, No. 6, played by the L.S.Q., have been issued, and so complete an enjoyable set. (The first two movements came out in January.)

There are some vocal records of varying degrees of excellence, the performance being usually better than the material—Evelyn Scotney in Je suis Titania (not so clear and brilliant as to justify the issue of yet one more record of an overworked item); Rosa Raisa in Yradlier's The Dove, a serenade sung in Spanish; Hardy Williamson in Onaway! awake, beloved, and Blumenthal's An Evening Song (not warm enough in the former); and Malcolm McEachern in James's The Showman and Fisher's The Tavern Song.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

At the recent examination for Fellowship the Turpin Prize was awarded to C. E. Jarvis.

The Choir-Training Examination for the Ch.M. Diploma will take place on Wednesday, May 14. On Monday and Tuesday, May 12 and 13, lectures will be given at the College on Choir-Training (afternoon and evening of each day). The lectures will be free to members.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

A 'CRITICISM' OF THE R.C.O. CHOIR-TRAINING EXAMINATIONS

The choir-training examinations arranged by the R.C.O. may not be perfect, but if no more is to be said against them than Dr. F. H. Wood manages to spread over two columns of the Music Teacher (February), the Council has no reason to be ashamed of its efforts. The only real criticism in the article is on the score of the examinations not being compulsory. The Council feels as strongly as Dr. Wood on this, but after long and repeated discussions on the point it did not feel justified in making the test compulsory—at all events, not yet.

Dr. Wood apparently forgets that there are many organists who are organists only, both at churches, cinemas, and concert-halls. There are others who work for the College diplomas mainly with a view to fit themselves for teaching. It would be an anomaly if a player wishing for a diploma as organist pure and simple could not obtain it at the Royal College of Organists, of all places. Dr. Wood may reply that the R.C.O. diplomates have to work a paper. True; but such a test of musicianship is necessary for a player, and few, if any, solo examinations omit something of the kind.

Having made his one real point, Dr. Wood proceeds to quibble. He objects to the use of the abbreviation 'Ch.M.' on the ground that 'it runs the risk of being variously interpreted.' It is, he suggests, in danger of being read as a contraction of 'chairman,' 'choirman,' or even as 'churchman.' There would not be much in this reductio ad absurdum, even if the words were usually printed as Chair Man, Choir Man, and Church Man, which they are not. He adds, 'Other readings, more ludicrous, suggest themselves.' No doubt. I have even heard of somebody waggishly interpreting 'Mus. Bac.' as 'Mustard and Bacon,' but did the Universities or the degree-holders worry?

Such childish objections may be urged against all alphabetical distinctions of the kind, but they will continue to be used, and it is obvious that with every fresh set that has to be devised the 'risk' increases. The King's College authorities did not hesitate to adopt A.K.C. for their Associates, despite the fact that King's Counsel had already given the last two letters a good innings. It would be easy to multiply cases. Dr. Wood says, however, that his chief objection to 'Ch.M.' is that 'it implies the right of the College to a specific and proprietary use of the word choirmaster.' This is staggering! Dr. Wood has been an organist for a good many years, but we have not yet found him objecting to the R.C.O. diplomas on the ground that the initials implied the right of the College to a proprietary use of the word organist. Do the initials N.U.T. imply that nobody is a teacher unless he belongs to the Union? After all, corporate bodies must have a title, and there is surely something to be said in favour of one that indicates clearly the nature and profession of such a body. Dr. Wood apparently thinks otherwise. We agree with him that 'Ch.M.' is unsightly, but so are most labels of the sort. Utility, not euphony or grace, must settle the choice.

Dr. Wood goes on to say:

I have been a parish church choirmaster for over twenty years, and the R.C.O. can neither take away my claim to that distinction nor add to it.

'Who deniges of it, Betsy?' The R.C.O. is merely making what Dr. Wood himself describes as 'an honest attempt' to remedy a defect in its syllabus. He should welcome its efforts, instead of quibbling about initials, and getting on the high horse to tell the R.C.O. how well he has managed to get along without it.

In a concluding paragraph, Dr. Wood pays a tribute to the high standard of the College diplomas, adding that the institution has no need to fear 'frank, honest criticism of some of its methods.' This, from a writer who fills about fifty lines in poking inexpensive fun at 'Ch.M.,' and then dismisses the syllabus (which he admits is 'practical and interesting') in twenty, is the one really humorous touch in the article, and none the less effective for being unconscious.

H. G.

MEMORIALS TO PAST ORGANISTS OF ST. PETER'S, BROCKLEY

A ceremony of particular interest to organists has been arranged to take place on Sunday, March 2, at 7.30, at St. Peter's Church, Brockley. It will consist of the unveiling and dedication of new organ-cases in memory of former organists, four in number. On the erection of the Church in 1866, W. F. Dennant, an amateur of some attainments, and a member of a well-known local family, was appointed organist. He was succeeded in 1875 by William Hodge, who, although only a lad of fourteen, surprised the congregation by his remarkable execution. It has been stated that a deputation was sent to the Vicar at the time protesting against Hodge's performances of certain voluntaries, which were considered unsuitable for use in a place of worship. They were compositions by—Bach! After leaving St. Peter's, Hodge became organist of St. Marylebone, an assistant to Stainer, and his death in 1895 at the early age of thirty-three, cut short the career of one of the most promising young musicians of his day. (His work at Marylebone is commemorated by a tablet in that Church.) Hodge was succeeded in 1878 at St. Peter's by Henry Gadsby, whose contributions to Church music are well-known. In 1883 Dr. C. J. Frost was appointed, and remained there until his death in 1918. Dr. Frost was followed by Mr. G. H. Heath Gracie, who still holds the post of organist and choirmaster. Sir Frederick Bridge will perform the ceremony of unveiling, and an important part of the commemoration will be the performance of Brahms's Requiem by St. Peter's Special Services Choir, Mr. Heath Gracie conducting, with Mr. Arthur Baynon at the organ. Miss Gwladys Naish and Mr. Graham Smart will be the soloists. The Mayor and Borough Council of Deptford will be present, also representatives of musical institutions and members of the families of those whose names and services are to be commemorated. The new oak cases have been designed and executed by Messrs. Hammer & Sons, in conjunction with Mr. A. Lloyd Edwards, churchwarden since 1880. The organ (three manuals, fifty-four stops) was rebuilt by Messrs. Lewis in 1910, and has been recently overhauled and improved by Mr. J. H. Gauss.

SEVENTY YEARS OF SERVICE

From time to time we report remarkable cases of long service on the part of organists. The following is one of outstanding interest. Mary Kempe was appointed to St. Andrew's, Biggleswade, in 1853, and remained there till 1862, when she took up the post of organist at St. Swithin's, Sandy, where she is still in office. She

MARY KEMPE

ORGANIST OF ST. ANDREW'S, BIGGLESWADE, BEDS, 1853-62.
ST. SWITHIN'S, SANDY, 1862-19—has thus done seventy years of continuous service. She was a pupil of Turle, and had her lessons in the Song School at Westminster. The correspondent who kindly sends us these particulars tells us that she is still as keen as ever about her duties, and that among works recently played by her were Bach's D minor Toccata and Fugue. We are glad to be able to give a portrait of this wonderful old lady.

WAGNER AT HIGH PAVEMENT CHAPEL, NOTTINGHAM

Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson writes pointing out the inaccuracy of the Press reports to the effect that Tannhäuser and other Wagner operas have been performed at High Pavement Chapel. The simple fact is that a few brief extracts have been given in connection with a series of addresses on 'The Religion of Wagner's Operas.' The programmes have been arranged by Mr. Dobson, jointly with the Church Council, and the congregation has found no cause of offence. Unfortunately the wide publicity given to exaggerated reports in the daily Press has led to a good deal of strong and unfair criticism from outside.

LONDON SOCIETY OF ORGANISTS

An excellent year's work with a considerably increased membership was reported at the Annual General Meeting held at St. Peter's Mission House, Victoria, on January 26. The President for 1923, Sir Frederick Bridge, was in the chair. The five new members of Council elected to fill places vacated by rotation were Dr. F. Abernethy, Messrs. E. T. Cook (Southwark Cathedral), G. D. Cunningham, Albert Orton, and F. W. Belchamber, with Dr. John E. Borland as President for 1924.

R.C.O. EXAMINERS' REPORT

Erratum in the Fellowship Paper-Work Report, February Musical Times, page 155:

'Fugue.—There is the same old difficulty in making the free parts interesting and relevant. If candidates would try to state one or two definite ideas on figures in the counter-subject, they would then have material capable of development in the free parts, beside that afforded by the subject.'

In the second sentence, for 'on' read 'or.'

WIDOR SYMPHONY RECITALS

Believing as we do that Widor's Symphonies (the later ones especially) are unduly neglected, we are glad to note that the ten are to be played in the Wannamaker Auditorium, New York, at a series of three recitals given by Marcel Dupré, Charles M. Courboin, and Lynnwood Farnam. Something of the kind in London would attract organists from far and near, and lead many players to give certain hackneyed movements from the early Symphonies a rest, in favour of some from the second and finer series.

CHRIST CHURCH, WESTMINSTER BRIDGE ROAD

The organ at this Church, originally built in 1875 by the late T. C. Lewis, has been entirely reconstructed and enlarged by Henry Willis & Sons and Messrs. Lewis. It is now an instrument of four manuals, forty-eight speaking stops, and twenty-two couplers. It is to be opened on March 5, at 3.0.

A SONATA IMPROVISATION BY MR. WOLSTENHOLME

Mr. W. Wolstenholme is giving a recital at Westminster Cathedral on March 13, at 6.30, and by special request will improvise a Sonata in three movements on themes provided by Dr. Alcock, Mr. J. Stuart Archer, and the Rev. Vernon Russell.

A good many British organists have lately taken up work in Canada. The following advertisement, which appears in a Toronto paper, shows that there is still room for one more. But he must be a genuine all-rounder:

A GREAT CHANCE.—WANTED.—Pipe organist, who can also fill the position of auto mechanic, or steno, and typist, or bldg. custodian or handy mechanic or undertaker; a good steady position. —.

Barclay's Bank Male-Voice Choir will provide the music at St. Michael's, Cornhill, on March 6, at 6 p.m., the occasion being the first of a series of Lenten services arranged for business people employed in the parish. The choir will sing Brahms's Alto Rhapsody (soloist, Miss Margaret Champneys) and S. S. Wesley's Motet, At that dread hour. Dr. Harold Darke will be at the organ.

Ernest Austin's narrative tone-poem for organ, The Pilgrim's Progress, will be played by Mr. N. Victor Edwards at St. Matthew's, Croydon, on three Wednesday evenings in Lent, at 8 p.m., Parts I-IV, on March 19, V-VIII, on April 2, and IX-XII on April 16. The composer is adding drum and percussion parts for the occasion.

A paper on 'Hymn Tunes and their Story' was given by Mr. C. E. Blyton Dobson before the members and friends of the Sherwood Wesley Guild, Nottingham, on January 18. A large attendance listened with great interest to the history of many well-known tunes, and joined in singing some of them.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have lately erected organs at Berriew Parish Church (two manuals, thirteen stops), and St. John's, Crawshawbooth (two manuals, twenty-two stops).

Recitals will be given at St. Paul's, Portman Square, at 3 o'clock, on March 8 (Mr. Stanley Curtis), March 15 (Mr. H. F. Ellingford), March 29 (Mr. Herbert Walton), and April 5 (Mr. H. Goss-Custard).

ORGAN RECITALS

Mr. K. Pearce Hosken, Oaklands Congregational Church, Uxbridge Road—Four Sketches, Schumann; Choral No. 3, Franck.

Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Pastoral Sonata, Rheinberger; Fugue on the Magnificat, Bach. Free Trade Hall, Manchester—Allegretto in E flat, Wolstenholme; Finale in B flat, Franck; Intermezzo on the 'Londonderry Air,' Stanford; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.

Mr. Ralph W. Palmer, London Road Congregational Church, Kettering—Choral, Boëllmann; 'Chant de Mai,' Jongen; Scherzo, Bairstow; Finale in B flat, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Richard B. Hamilton, St. John the Divine, Liverpool—Sonata No. 6, Mendelssohn; Allegretto, Vierne; 'Euroclydon,' Hathaway.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Two Choral Preludes, Reger; Allegro (Sonata No. 5), Bach; Allegro in F, Gade; Sonata in E minor, Tombelle.

Mr. R. J. Pitcher, St. Paul's, Bath—Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fugue in B minor, Bach; 'A May Idyll,' Pitcher; Finale (Symphony No. 1), Vierne.

Mr. Allan Brown, City Temple—Fantasia on the hymn-tune 'Hanover,' Lemare; Prelude in E flat, Bach; Sonata No. 1, Mendelssohn; Fantasia in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Voluntary in D minor, Orlando Gibbons; Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Symphony in E minor, F. W. Holloway; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. Eric Brough, St. Gabriel's, Bounds Green—Introduction and Passacaglia, Rheinberger; Chorale Preludes, 'Sleepers, wake' and 'In Thee is Gladness,' Bach; Psalm-Prelude No. 1, Howells; Allegro (Symphony No. 6), Widor.

Mr. H. E. Wall, St. Matthew's, West Kensington—Two Preludes on 'In dulci júbilo,' Bach; Fantasy on Two Carols, West; Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger; Légende and Scherzetto, Vierne; Scherzo, Grace.

Dr. C. F. Waters, St. Mary's, Guildford—Pastorale (Sonata No. 12), Rheinberger; 'Evening Song,' Bairstow; Prelude on 'Croft's 136th,' Parry.

Mr. Philip Miles, St. Alban the Martyr, Westcliff—Psalm-Prelude No. 3, Howells; Intermezzo and Fugue (Sonata No. 11), Rheinberger; Passacaglia in C minor, Bach.

Mr. Arthur G. Gibbey, All Hallows, Bromley—Cornelius March, Mendelssohn; Variations on an Original Theme, Stuart Archer; First three movements (Sonata No. 2), Mendelssohn.

Mr. C. H. Trevor, St. Michael-at-the-North-Gate, Oxford—Fantasia in C minor, Bach; Pastorale, Maleingreau; Scherzo in B minor, Healey Willan; Prelude on 'London New,' Grace; Introduction and Allegro, Stanley; Rhapsody on Christmas Themes, Gigout.

Mr. Frederick Gostelow, St. Margaret's, Westminster—Overture in E flat, Faulkes; Sonata in A minor, Borowski; Toccata ('The Doric') and 'Fiddle' Fugue in D minor, Bach.

Mr. H. C. Warrilow, St. Saviour's, Clapham—Andantino, Wolstenholme; Triumphal March on 'Now thank we all our God,' Karg-Elert; Siciliano and Presto (Concerto No. 5), Händel; Overture in C, Hollins.

Mr. C. Hylton Stewart, St. Mary Redcliffe—Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Choral No. 3, Franck; Allegretto in F, Stanford; Cradle Song, Grace.

Mr. W. J. Lancaster, Bolton Parish Church—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Grande Pièce Symphonique, Franck; Romance and Scherzo (Symphony No. 4), Schumann; Air from Suite in D, Bach; Cantabile, Jongen.

Mr. John Pulein, St. Mary's Cathedral, Glasgow—Sonata No. 4, Rheinberger; Scherzetto, Vierne; Meditation in Ancient Tonality, Grace; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Rhapsody on Christmas Themes, Gigout.

Mr. Paul Rochard, St. Mary's, Stretton-cum-Wetmoor—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Prelude to the 'Cloud Messengers,' Holst; Fantasia on two English Airs, Guilmant; Variations, Bonnet.

Mr. J. Albert Sowerbutts, St. Lawrence Jewry—Fantasy on 'Babylon's Streams,' W. H. Harris; Scherzo in E, Vierne; 'Triptyche sur la prose de Fête Dieu,' Emile Bourdon; Toccata di Concerto, Bossi.

Dr. Harold Darke, St. James's, Muswell Hill—Fantasia in F minor, Mozart; Rhapsody No. 2, Herbert Howells; Three Chorale Preludes and Fugue in E flat, Bach; Pastorale, Franck; Arabesque and Carillon, Vierne.

APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Lancelot Appleby, organist and choirmaster, St. Michael and All Angels, Bradford.

Mr. William A. Gardner, organist and musical director, St. Paul's, Covent Garden.

Mr. Ernest A. Harris, organist and choirmaster, Christ Church, South Hackney.

Mr. Stanley Lucas, organist and choirmaster, Congregational Church, South Croydon.

Mr. J. Macrae, organist and choirmaster, St. Ninian's, Glasgow.

Mr. Wallace L. Payne, organist and choirmaster, Melbourne Wesleyan Church, York.

Letters to the Editor

WELSH MUSIC AT WEMBLEY

SIR,—May I invite suggestions from those among your readers interested in a matter of some musical importance to Wales?

As announced in the Press last December, the National Council of Music has been asked, and has undertaken to organize, a Welsh Week of Music at the Empire Exhibition to be held this year at Wembley Park, London. The actual week is not yet fixed; it will probably be the first in July or the last in August, so that it may not be too near the National Eisteddfod week.

Concerts will be organized every day. The Band of the Welsh Guards will play daily, and the now-forming Welsh Symphony Orchestra will also play, probably daily.

But the main feature of a Welsh Week of Music must necessarily be choral, and it is here that the Council wants most help from all concerned. It is proposed to invite representative Welsh choirs to provide the choral part of the programme for each day from Monday to Friday. On Saturday it is hoped to organize a great Festival Choral Concert in the Stadium. For this final concert the Council intends to secure contingents from all choirs in Wales who wish to be represented. The choral representatives from each choir will be appointed by ballot by their colleagues in the choir—the soprano delegate by sopranos, the alto delegate by the altos, and so on. The number of delegates to be sent by each choir must depend to some extent upon the number of choirs offering.

At this moment the Council particularly wishes to receive, at an early date:

(a) Provisional offers from choirs to send representatives for the Great Choral Concert on the Saturday; and—

(b) Any constructive suggestions, especially with regard to a wide and representative choice of works to be performed, and to the difficult matter of raising local funds to send choral delegates from every part of Wales, however remote.

The Council is ready to proceed immediately, but it wishes to make this eventful week as completely satisfying as possible to the heart and mind of the whole country. Clearly it is a great opportunity.

Of course the Choir assembled on the final day of the week will necessarily be vast. The Stadium, I understand, is capable of holding 150,000 people.

All provisional offers to send singers, and all suggestions, should be sent to the Secretary, National Council of Music, The Music House, Aberystwyth.—Yours, &c.,

The Music House,
University College of Wales,
Aberystwyth.
February, 1924.

WALFORD DAVIES
(Chairman, National Council of Music for Wales).

THE RE-STANDARDISATION OF THE SMALL ORCHESTRA

SIR,—If asked to write a piece for small orchestra, I can scarcely imagine making a more tasteful selection of wind, or one more comprehensive of tone-colour, than that suggested by your writer in the February Musical Times. But two things occur to me in reading the article:

(1.) We could not have a very miscellaneous programme with the orchestra suggested; Symphonies by, e.g., Beethoven, would be cut clean out. The answer to that no doubt is, that they must find a place in programmes specially arranged; but to my mind that is not the best way of orchestrally educating the public.

(2.) While there is a specified number of wind and percussion suggested, the strings are always thrown in as 'in proportion.' What is 'in proportion'? I know for a long time it has been two or even more strings to one wind, but is this desirable? The idea has always been that the strings are the mainstay of the orchestra; but should it not rather be that the orchestra consists of three bands—wood, brass, and strings, a trinity in unity?

I venture to suggest an orchestra which, though no more effective than the one to which I have referred, would, in my opinion, be more all-round:

- 2 Flutes (2nd change Piccolo); 2 Oboes (2nd change Cor Anglais);
- 2 Clarinets; 1 Bass Clarinet; 2 Bassoons (2nd change Contra-Fagotto);
- 2 Horns; 1 Trumpet, 1 Cornet (act as 2nd Trumpet); 2 Tenor and 1 Bass-Trombones;
- 1 Timpani; 1 Kitchen;
- 4 First Violins, 4 Seconds, 3 Violas, 3 'Cellos, 4 Bases.

It will be noticed that the above band numbers thirty-six in all; but it has been my experience that to the number of wind I have specified, there is usually double the number of strings, which would bring the total to considerably over fifty.—Yours, &c.,

F. W. ANDREWS.

5, Scotch Street,
Whitehaven.

THE CONDUCTOR AND HIS FORE-RUNNERS

SIR,—Mr. Wallace does not seem to understand the difficulty attaching to the position which he takes up. It is this, that the 'writers from the 12th to the 17th centuries, or even later,' to which he refers, all lived after the golden age of plainsong and during its decadence, so that the statements of even the earlier writers of this period have to be accepted with much discrimination as to whether they were not referring to the decadent plainsong of their own day, and the statements of the later writers are quite worthless with regard to genuine plainsong.

As to Sequentia, I would again remind Mr. Wallace that sequences had their origin in the 9th century, and therefore it cannot be maintained that the statements of writers of the 17th century onwards as to their origin are necessarily conclusive. However, I do not deny that the word 'Sequentia' was originally applied to the notes without the words. My point was that the distinction which Mr. Wallace drew between Sequentia and Prosa was not correct, for when the words came to be applied to the tunes the two words were used side by side for the resulting combination (see P. Wagner, Introduction to the Gregorian Melodies, Plainsong and Mediaeval Music Society).

It is probable that the word 'Sequentia' had nothing to do with the sense of 'following,' and was the equivalent of the Byzantine musical term 'Akolouthia.'—Yours, &c.,

Rustington,
nr. Littlehampton.

E. G. P. WYATT.

SIR,—By your courtesy I am afforded the opportunity of seeing the proof of Mr. Wyatt's letter.

In your January number he said that my distinction between Sequence and Prose was not correct. He did not give his references. I gave mine. He now admits my point.

As for his last sentence, sequentia is the literal translation of akolouthia (ἀκολουθία) in its meaning of 'following,' but Latin renderings of Greek words were not always trustworthy, particularly if the latter had a secondary meaning. Witness numerous passages in the Vulgate which distort the sense of the Septuagint. Perhaps if Mr. Wyatt had supplied the text containing the word, some light might have been shed upon the matter.—Yours, &c.,

February, 1924.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

'ON NEGLECTED WORKS'

SIR,—Mr. Sorabji, in the February issue, says:

'The solo Cantatas of Bach are ignored. . . . Miss Carrie Tubb, almost the only English soprano who has any idea of how to sing Bach, and the necessary voice and technique . . .'

He has just saved himself by that 'almost'! But even then one fails to grasp why Carrie Tubb should have been picked out as the only soprano worthy of mention as a singer of Bach, when almost every Bach-lover's thoughts fly at once to Dorothy Silk, as the one really satisfying exponent of true Bach style among our sopranos. When it is remembered how she has worked to bring to our notice the lovely old gems of Bach, Purcell, Schütz, and others, it seems only fair to make some protest at the omission of her name from the paragraph from which I quote.

Again, when Mr. Sorabji speaks of the 'necessary voice' to sing Bach, does he mean that he thinks it requires a powerful voice to sing the Cantatas? If so, surely he is mistaken. The Bach solo Cantatas are pure chamber music, where the voice is of no greater importance (save in the fact that it has words to express as well as melody to sing) than any of the accompanying instruments, and Miss Silk is one of the few singers who have grasped this. If (as we must imagine) Mr. Sorabji has not been so fortunate as to hear any of Miss Silk's concerts of old music, and has not heard her sing, for instance, Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten, then he has missed a most delightful treat.—Yours, &c.,

Stanwix, Ember Lane, Esher. PHYLLIS M. STORDY.

February, 1924.

THE VIENNA STATE OPERA COMPANY, ETC.

SIR,—If you can possibly find room, will you be so good as to excuplate me from the following misprints in my article? :

Read 'bianca' for 'blanca,' p. 128, col. 1, l. 36.

„ 'violin' for 'pianoforte,' p. 128, col. 2, l. 35.

„ 'no' for 'mere,' p. 129, col. 2, l. 38.

Apopos the proposed visit of the Vienna State Opera Company, my Telegraph letter was concerned with the attitude of the Musicians' Union towards the orchestra of the Company. Exclusion—not postponement—was demanded. The ground of the discussion has since been shifted. Indeed, I have, with many others, been wondering why the visit of the Company in question could not be arranged between itself and the B.N.O.C. so as not to clash with the latter.

But presumably neither side will be worse off for the publicity given to the discussion, and as effective publicity is that which is most remotely pertinent, and must concern itself with anything but actual merit, let us hope everyone will be satisfied.—Yours, &c.,

KAIKHOSRU SORABJI.

February 1, 1924.

'FESTE' AND THE '48'

SIR,—I always enjoy 'Feste's' entertaining articles, but I am afraid I do not agree with his suggestion that the C's in bar 7 of the G major Prelude (Book 2 of the '48') should be sharpened. To my mind the harmony of that bar is distinctly that of A minor, and leads naturally to the chord of E minor on which the first two figures in bar 8 are based. If the C's are sharpened, thus bringing bar 7 into A major, the E minor chord sounds quite out of place. It would be nearly as sensible to suggest that the F's in bar 14 should be sharpened on account of the previous D major harmony. It would be interesting if you, Sir, as an acknowledged authority on Bach, would give us your opinion on this point.—Yours, &c.,

H. TAYLOR.

51, St. Annes Road,
Manchester.

January, 1924.

[We disclaim any authority, and incline to 'Feste's' view. The point, surely, is not that the harmony of bar 7 is A minor, but that from bar 4 down to the double bar the key is clearly D major. The opening bars give the subject in G, and it is then repeated freely in D. Mr. Taylor thinks that the chords of E minor and A major do not go well side by side. But what of this very ordinary progression?

This happens to be the harmonic scheme from bar 6 to the start of bar 9. Bar 14 is beside the point, as the F natural is merely part of a chromatic discord. We may add that we have had a good many letters on this subject, and all the writers are quite sure that 'Feste' is wrong. Nevertheless . . . Editor.]

A CORRECTION

SIR,—In the February issue of the Musical Times, under 'Music in the Provinces,' reference is made to a performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio by the Huddersfield Glee and Madrigal Society, as being the first performance of that work at Huddersfield.

May I point out that this statement is incorrect, as the work was performed on January 8, 1921, in Holy Trinity Church, by the Choir?

The performance was arranged by the Huddersfield Organists' Association, in aid of the Westminster Abbey Restoration Fund, and was conducted by Mr. J. F. Sykes, with Dr. T. E. Pearson (organist and choirmaster) at the organ.

The committee of the above Association will be obliged if you will kindly insert this correction.—Yours, &c.,

33, Storths Road, Birkby.

H. ARMITAGE

February, 1924.

(Hon. Secretary).

'BRITISH PLAYERS AND SINGERS'

SIR,—We are from time to time treated to an instalment of the series of articles under the above title. Already ten of these have appeared, yet, if my memory is correct, not one has been devoted to any of our British pianists. Why is this? What of Lamond, Howard-Jones, Leonard Borwick—to mention only a few whose playing and fine musicianship are widely known and appreciated outside the mother country?

It would seem that pianists do not appeal to concert-goers and the musical public in general so much as do singers, yet I venture to state that no series of articles, however fine, could be complete without including some of our splendid British pianists, whose playing often equals, and sometimes surpasses, that of many famous foreign virtuosi. I hope that in the near future we may be treated to some such articles.—Yours, &c.,

C. H. C.

Davos, Switzerland.

December, 1923.

[The series opened with an article on Harold Samuel. The series will run on indefinitely, and the claims of our fine native pianists will not be overlooked.—Editor.]

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS

SIR,—The articles of Mr. Harvey Grace being so admirable it seems a pity that one small detail should be singled out for criticism, and yet I feel I cannot allow the point in Ex. 3, page 35, of your January number, to pass without comment. I feel it is right against the spirit of Rheinberger to play the G sharp before the double-bar, as part of the Allegro agitato movement. The end of the episode is, as Mr. Grace points out, 'of the throbbing, ominous type,' but to me it also has that psychological factor, 'a little hesitancy,' which, properly managed, gives its proper setting to that final crash on the first chord after the double bar. In my humble opinion this surprise loses its point if the G sharp or (A flat) is made the first note of the phrase. I may be wrong, but I like the Sonata so much that I hope I shall never hear it played as suggested.—Yours, &c.,

G. H. JONES.

'The Limes,' Pensnett.

[Mr. Harvey Grace writes: 'The point is best settled, I think, by playing the movement as a whole, and observing what phrasing of the theme emerges as being most natural and vital. There can be little doubt as to the theme beginning with the G sharp. The opening leap and its inversion are prominent features throughout, and the subject would be robbed of much of its vigour if it began without the take-off from the ninth below. The phrasing marks in the sonatas are so illogical that one hesitates to refer to any of them as evidence, but if Mr. Jones will look at bar II, on page 6, he will see the theme (now in B minor) phrased in the way I suggest as being the most natural and effective. If this phrasing be adopted, it must of course be used at the beginning of the Agitato.']

THE DOH-MINOR: A WARNING

SIR,—Your correspondent, Dr. Shinn, will surely agree that, as custodian of the Tonic Sol-fa method and notation, the Tonic Sol-fa College, after having written to the publishers of the series of school songs, &c., in question, had a right to warn school-teachers and others that it does not recognise the Doh-minor notation. It is undoubtedly the duty of the College to guard its notation from being made to appear ridiculous, for that is what really happens when simple diatonic scale-sounds are represented by chromatically altered notes. In these days when sight-singing is so much neglected it is discouraging indeed to find on foot a kind of conspiracy to complicate the notation, and thus make it more difficult for the learner. No sensible Staff-Notationist would agree to simple diatonic scale-sounds being represented by notes qualified by accidentals. For instance, your correspondent does not write the minor version of the single chant he quotes thus:

although the above is an exact Staff translation of his Doh-minor Sol-fa version, which he declares to be 'the musical and logical representation of the minor.' He, however, writes it as follows:

and this is an exact Staff translation of his Lah-minor Sol-fa version which he characterises, on account of its being linked up to the key of C, as 'opposed to musical feeling and common-sense.' Probably it did not occur to him that the shoe was capable of being put on the other foot. No, Sir, the Staff is a Lah-minor and not a Doh-minor notation, and the reason why the Doh-minorists do not attempt to tinker with it as they do the Sol-fa will probably be found in the last paragraph of the 'Warning.'

Your correspondent refers to the mental effects of the different notes of the scale. This is important. The same note changes its mental effect according to its surroundings. The note A, for instance, if bounded by a major third above and a minor third below and occupying a prominent place in the composition, will give the mental effect of Doh; but if bounded by a minor third above and a major third below, and having equal prominence, will give the effect of Lah. From what your correspondent says under this head I rather suspect he has mistaken pitch for mental effect.

In conclusion, allow me to add that the Tonic Sol-fa College since its inception has taught many hundreds of students—young, middle-aged, and old—sight-singing from both notations, ear-training, and harmony, with the greatest success on the Lah-minor method.

Your lady correspondent will no doubt have gleaned the answer to her query from what I have said in the course of this letter.—Yours, &c.,

WALTER HARRISON.

26, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

February, 1924.

THE DOH-MINOR: A REMINDER

SIR,—Several communications have lately appeared in the Press under the signature of Mr. Walter Harrison (presumably written on behalf of the Tonic Sol-fa College), inveighing against the use of the Doh-minor notation in our new series of school songs. These letters have been couched in terms likely to cause us some inconvenience, if not damage, and we therefore feel it incumbent upon us to state some of our reasons for publishing in this form:

- (1.) To supply the need of the modern music teacher, who uses Sol-fa as a means of teaching pitch relations, and not merely as a device for the teaching of Sight-Singing.
- (2.) It is actually used in hundreds of schools where Aural-Training and Sight-Singing are linked with the pupils' instrumental work.
- (3.) It is in use at many of our large Musical Institutions, e.g., the Royal Academy of Music, the Tobias Matthay Pianoforte School, and the London Academy of Music, to name only three of the London Schools.
- (4.) The Staff Sight-Singing College advocates the use of the Doh-minor in principle, as may be seen in its Sight-Singing Manual.
- (5.) Messrs. Curwen have published a Sight-Singing book, written by Dr. Somerville, which gives the method as an alternative to the Lah Mode.

One imagines that Mr. Harrison's object in broadcasting a 'Warning' may have been the intimidation of music publishers. But we should like to remind him that it is the publishers' work to meet any legitimate demands—particularly when these are supported by a body of eminent musicians who realise the requirements of musical education as it is to-day.

N.B.—It may interest readers to know that we have no intention of withdrawing our Lah-minor Mode publications so long as they are in demand; we are even including them as an alternative to the Doh-minor method, in our new series of school songs.—Yours, &c.,

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LTD.

WHERE IS THAT CRITIC NOW?

SIR,—One of the F.R.C.O. test-pieces for July is the Andante in F from the sixth Quartet by Mozart. This piece was played at the Tonic Sol-fa Jubilee Service on July 7, 1891, at St. Paul's Cathedral, and in one of the daily papers on the following day was described as 'of the nature of a maundering improvisation.' Bach's well-known B minor Fugue, also played at the service, was said to be 'one of the most insipid compositions we ever remember to have heard—funereal in the extreme.'

On reading such criticisms, we can only feel sorrow for the critic and sympathy with Mozart and Bach, and perhaps with the organist, who on this occasion happened to be—5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Yours, &c.,
February, 1924. HERBERT HODGE.

Sharps and Flats

To describe a touring company that devotes its efforts almost entirely to performing translations of foreign operas as a 'British National Opera Company' is an abuse of language.—H. V. Higgins.

The sudden illness of Mr. Walter Hyde made it impossible for the British National Opera Company to perform The Magic Flute on Saturday afternoon.—Daily Paper.

It is inferred that Mr. Hyde was engaged at home on a one-man rendering of this well-known malady.—Punch.

Mr. ———, who is in charge of new music schemes at Messrs. ———'s restaurants, said, with each tune the entire decorative scheme would be altered. If the orchestra were playing Parsifal the setting would be G hic—and so on.—Musical Paper.

To indicate that the diners were taking it in the right spirit?—Punch.

I am constantly asked by the habitués of Covent Garden, 'When are you going to give us real grand opera again?' Well, we must try.—H. V. Higgins.

I do not believe in the star system. I am proud to say that I have never been to hear Melba, and never heard Caruso.—Edmund Dulac.

HANDEL OPERA IN LONDON.—At the 'Old Vic.' . . . Elijah was performed last week as an opera.—The People.

Experts from William Tell (Rossini).—Programme in Radio Times.

During the playing of the Overture you could have heard a pin drop.—Daily Graphic.

My love dwells in the North Lane (Elgar).—Broadcasting Programme.

I am convinced that there is more real musicality, in the sense of originality, verve, expressive lilt, and tonal stimulus in such delightful things as The Kitten on the Keys than in a vast quantity of platitudinary and pedestrian musical peregrinations of such flat-footed musical pedants as Brahms.—Leigh Henry.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Vocalist (advanced student) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. N. London district.—C., Perran House, 1066, Albion Road, N.16.

Bass singer wishes to meet tenor (for quartet); also recital pianist-accompanist. Croydon district.—N. K., 'Aysgarth,' Shirley Road, Addiscombe, Surrey.

Tenor (age twenty-four) wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice. S.W. London district.—M. W. H., c/o Musical Times.

Peel Orchestra. Good amateur instrumentalists required. Excellent musical library.—Hon. secretary, G. E. BARBER, 19, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

Pianist and violinist, with good library, wish to meet advanced 'cellist for trio practice. N. London district.—C. H., c/o Musical Times.

Pianist wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist desiring a good accompanist for mutual practice (good reader).—C. E. ROBINS, 73, Oakfield Road, Cannon Hill, Birmingham.

Violinist wishes to meet another violinist for mutual practice, Kensington district.—E. MIKHAILOFF, 79c, Harcourt Terrace, S.W.10.

Good wood-wind players required in the W. Middlesex Musical Society. All information may be obtained from the hon. secretary, Mr. J. H. CUDDINGTON, 21, Selby Road, Ealing, W.5.

Trombone players (1st, 2nd, and 3rd) required for a performance of The Messiah at Southend-on-Sea, on March 25. Offers of voluntary service from experienced players are solicited.—CONDUCTOR, 97, Tintern Avenue, Westcliff-on-Sea.

Harvist Orchestral Society (Kilburn and Brondesbury district) has vacancies for all instruments.—Hon. secretary, C. F. LEWIS, 156, Fernhead Road, W.9. Rehearsals, Tuesdays, at 8, Salisbury Road Council School (two minutes Queen's Park Station).

Experienced pianist wishes to join string quartet or dance orchestra.—A. E. P., Windermere, Hall Lane, Upminster. Accompanist (lady) wishes to meet vocalist or instrumentalist for mutual practice; or another pianist for duets. Croydon-Purley district.—T. C., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist (gentleman) wishes to practise with organist or pianist. N. London District.—H. J. A. J., c/o Musical Times.

Accompanist (lady) wishes to meet violinist, 'cellist, or vocalist for mutual practice. Good music, Blackheath (S.E.) district preferred.—L. T., c/o Musical Times.

Viola player seeks vacancy in good string quartet, which could make use of advertiser's extensive library. South London preferred.—A. J., c/o Musical Times.

Violist-violinist wishes to meet string players, or pianist, for ensemble practice. Clapham Junction district preferred.—VIOLA, 6, Hauberk Road, S.W.11.

Violinist (young gentleman) wishes to meet or correspond with musical friends. Distance no object.—GEORGE BURL, 5, Marlsford Street, Shiel Road, Liverpool.

First violinist wanted to join ladies' trio. Meet for practice fortnightly, Acoc's Green, Birmingham.—X. Y. Z., c/o Musical Times.

Sixty Years Ago

From the Musical Times of March, 1864:

BRADFORD.—Prize singing in the Temperance Hall has this week been introduced as a kind of variation to the monotony of the amusements in this town. The competition took place on Tuesday evening, February 9, before gentlemen considered competent judges, and a large audience. The prize for the best sentimental solo was awarded to Mr. Sutcliffe, who sang the Stirrup-cup (Arditi). Mr. Mullen gained the prize for the best comic song. The prize for the best glee was taken by Messrs. Sutcliffe, Rushworth, Wilson, and Akam.

CHELLENHAM.—On Monday, February 22, the second of a series of quartet concerts was given by Mr. H. Blagrove and Mr. M. von Holst, at Hale's Music-Room.

TE DEUM LAUDAMUS in E flat.—Composed and dedicated to MILES CHARLES SETON, Esq., by BENJAMIN CONGREVE. Price 3s. * * * An attempt is made in this Te Deum to combine with the solemn (but somewhat tedious) style of the Church of England Composer the more melodious and interesting character of Mozart, Haydn, &c., (not imitating either of them in particular, but merging (to the best of the author's ability) the beauties of both into one. London: Novello & Co., 69, Dean Street, and 35, Poultry.

KEBLE'S EVENING HYMN, Sun of my Soul. Set to Music for use in Divine Service by JOHN CROWDY. Novello & Co. Price 3d., postage extra.

* * * The universal condemnation by Church Musicians of the tune Hursley has prompted the composition of the above music, in which an earnest effort has been made to embody the devotional spirit of the words.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES

Lecturing on 'The Couperin Dynasty,' on January 26, Mr. William Wallace said that the Couperin family, which had been overshadowed by the Bach family, afforded us an example of the persistence of musical ability in two or more generations. Couperin le Grand published his first book of pieces for the clavier before Bach's first book of the Forty-eight, and Bach copied Couperin's agrémens or ornamentations almost exactly. The question of heredity was discussed, and the opinion expressed that musical aptitude was due more to environment and continuity of vocation than to the inheritance of mental characteristics. Miss Nellie Chaplin played Les Bergeries on the harpsichord. This was the piece that Bach copied into the album of his second wife, and it became so popular that it was played on a carillon. It is known that Bach corresponded with Couperin, but his letters disappeared, having been used as the covers of jam-pots. Reference was made to the fanciful titles bestowed by Couperin on his pieces, and Miss Chaplin demonstrated this in Les Tricoteuses, which has a cue at a point to indicate a dropped stitch. Other works played were Gavotte, Bavolet Flottant, Carillon de Cythère, and La Grande Menestrandise, the burlesque of the Corporation of Minstrels. The Church where the Couperin family presided at the organ for a hundred and seventy-two years in unbroken line, was struck by a shell on Good Friday, 1918, and the organ damaged. It has been restored to its 16th-century state.

On February 2, Mr. William Wallace lectured on 'The Influence of Mechanical Improvements in Musical Instruments upon Composition.' He spoke of the incongruous assortment of instruments, as in Monteverde's Orfeo, which made up the early orchestras. There was no standardised group, and composers had to rely upon such instruments as were at hand. The evolution of the violin was referred to, and the displacement of the plucked string by the bowed string. Tourte did not adapt the old bow, but created an entirely new kind, in which he reversed the curve of the stick. Instances were given of the extremes resorted to by amateurs of the double-bass, in which mere size, and not tone, appeared to be the end in view. The use of cannon and bombs as 'instruments of concussion' was popular. While composers had the means for expression, they were not always successful with their players, who protested that passages were too difficult. Improvements in wood-wind began to force the pitch upwards, but tension was the factor in the construction of, and the writing of music for, the violin. While in 1734 the 'pull' of the four strings of a violin was sixty-three lbs., it had risen to ninety lbs. with the high English pitch. This affected technique, and also phrase-writing. The characteristics of keyboard instruments were indicated, as well as points in their construction. The claims of Gordon and Boehm as regards the application of keys to the wood-wind were referred to, and the scope afforded to the composer by the substitution of valves for crooks in the horns and trumpets. It was mentioned that in Fidelio there were twenty-four changes of crooks, and in the Overture the trumpet was limited to C (fifty-eight times), E (a hundred and sixty-two times), and G (only seven times). Through the kindness of the Æolian Company, gramophone records were played, showing the timbre of the various wood-wind instruments.

GERVASE ELWES FUND FOR MUSICIANS

The following are the names of the candidates who have received grants from the Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians:

ANNE BALLANTINE (Glasgow), a further grant of £25.

JOHN HUNT, one year's pianoforte tuition under a well-known professor.

WILLIAM KENNEDY, £50.

J. B. LONGMIRE, a further grant of one term's tuition at the Royal College of Music.

BERTHA STEVENTON, one year's tuition at the Royal College of Music.

E. KENDAL TAYLOR, a further grant of £20.

In addition, grants to the total amount of £90 have been made to four well-known professional musicians from the Gervase Elwes Samaritan Fund. The offices of the Fund have been removed to 5, John Street, Bedford Row, W.C.1.

'PARSIFAL' AT COVENT GARDEN

Two performances of Parsifal were given by the British National Opera Company during its last week at Covent Garden, this being the fifth of the Wagnerian operas of the season. The production might almost have been a challenge to some of the Company's critics. 'Have they told us our Cavalleria is ragged? Have they scoffed because we sent to Naples for a Rigoletto? We will show them that we can produce at a moment's notice the most difficult opera of the whole repertory; and they will have to admit (unless they are hopelessly biassed against us) that we can do it as well as it is likely to be done anywhere!'

Why is Parsifal particularly hard to do? Some factors incline to render it easy. The quasi-religious nature of the work lifts it above criticism in the minds of some people. They do not scan it detachedly, any more than they (being exceptionally devout) criticise a church service. On the other hand, most people who know Parsifal learnt to know it at uncommonly good performances. We trudged off to Bayreuth, we climbed the sacred hill. Those performances were unquestionably good. (Think of the orchestra alone—the weight of the strings.) We came back with all our impressions gilded, as it were, with the idealising associations of holiday-making, the idealising, too, of youth. What sort of Parsifal can—in Bow Street, where we make our way just as though we were going to buy a pair of boots or hear Madame Butterfly—compete with the remembered Parsifals of bygone Augusts?

The British National Opera Company certainly gave us a good measure of Parsifal—four-and-a-half hours of it, with short intervals and not many 'cuts.' But here again they came into conflict with irrational sentiments. Our feeling was that Parsifal ought not to be cut. The feeling was not based on severely musical grounds, and certainly not on considerations of the mystical practices of Parsifal's peculiar heroes. It was an irrational sentiment of piety towards the will of Wagner, author of so many of our musical pleasures that there is a positive satisfaction in making some little sacrifice. Are five hours in a seat at the opera more than is comfortable for the weak flesh? Well, let the flesh be mortified a little if the old master wished it of us.

It came to this—that we wanted Parsifal given under pure festival conditions. On second thoughts, would not all opera be preferable thus? If we had four times as little opera, and four times as much trouble were spent over it, and it were to cost four times as much? The B.N.O.C. has already been told—and it is most true—that it did extraordinarily well that afternoon. If we may parade a grievance for sheer cavilling's sake, our grievance was (when the Company could do so much apparently with such comparative ease) the lack of the ha'porth of tar which can proverbially spoil a ship. It was more than a ha'porth this time, as a matter of fact. It was possibly enough to have doubled the prices of our stalls. But we fancy there are, for such a special work of fame as Parsifal, money-boxes to be drawn upon for doubled prices, for the quite superlative Parsifal which the B.N.O.C. proved that afternoon that it is capable of giving us.

The enriching of the orchestra was the principal thing to be desired. The next was the drilling of the choruses to the point of carrying you on the magical wings of song beyond the possibility of questioning the action—what it means, and so on. What is much less important is the traffic of the stage, which, if the music is made good enough, matters very little indeed.

The B.N.O.C. has gone back to the old scenery, both here and in the rest of Wagner, and for this we cannot be grateful enough. We did not know how much we liked it until we saw, a season or two ago, what the young bloods thought the right thing for Wagnerian scenery (Mr. Oliver Bernard's stalactites and staircases, I mean). The old sets are not to be very actively admired (the church in Parsifal is decidedly good, the garden scene bad), but they are inoffensive enough.

The details of Parsifal need some looking into. Mr. Walter Hyde, whose Parsifal has not within my experience been excelled or indeed in some points equalled, wore in Acts 1 and 2 a deplorable wig and inexplicable white stockings. Wagner or no Wagner, the ridiculous business with the swan in Act I should be modified in England. The Germans, great goose-eaters though they are, apparently see nothing grotesque in a squad of stretcher-bearers being summoned to carry off the martyred bird on a bier. The holy dove at the end of Act 3 were better away.

Our luck is great in having such a Parsifal. And no whit less in our Gurnemanz, Mr. Norman Allin, who was better than ever before. His singing was superb. And he was not just a type of Old Manhood—he was an individual old man, very finely defined. With him, Gurnemanz's music is not too long, and we well could have done with the missing pages. The Titireul was Mr. Philip Bertram, the Kundry, Miss Gladys Ancrum (excellent). Mr. Robert Parker was Amfortas, and was a surprise. He has so often barked his way through Wagnerian operas that we had imagined him to possess no soft, sustained notes. He proved the contrary that day—only, it is true, to be accused, in some ungrateful quarters, of lack of power. We hope he took no notice. His Amfortas was the best thing of his we have known. Mr. Frederick Collier was a sturdy Klingsor. The conductor was Mr. Goossens.

Have some of the above modifications of rapture appeared ungenerous? This Parsifal was, by an absolute standard, very considerable. Achieved in those particular circumstances, it was prodigiously good, and could probably not have been excelled by any opera-house in Europe. C.

DAME ETHEL SMYTH'S MASS AT BIRMINGHAM

BIRMINGHAM, February 8

Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass in D was sung here last night by the Birmingham Festival Choral Society, under Dr. Adrian C. Boult. Mr. Grew has already reminded the readers of the Musical Times of the vicissitudes of this Mass—its pompous but solitary performance at the Albert Hall under Barnby a generation ago, and then its utter neglect by the composer's ungrateful countrymen, who, at this date, look as though they must have been a singularly unimaginative, 'stuffy' generation not to have cared to make some rather special fuss, if only out of a spirit of gallantry, over the dashing, earnest, gifted young woman. How were they to know she was not to be a second Beethoven?

The Mass corresponds, in point of time, in Ethel Smyth's career to the second Symphony in Beethoven's, or The Flying Dutchman in Wagner's. Certainly the composer's life-work has not borne out all that a sanguine prophet might have expected from it. But is not the snubbing received by Miss Smyth in the early 1890's possibly somewhat to blame even for this? The recently published Confessions of the composer declare frankly how particularly dependent she was on recognition, how she craved for the encouragement of notoriety and success. If this striking, this highly remarkable Mass of the young Englishwoman had, instead of being cold-shouldered, been a little more than duly appreciated—if it had been frankly flattered, lionised—it would have been all to the good. As it was, Ethel Smyth felt the snub severely. It directed her to spend the best part of her life in writing in the grand operatic form, which has always been an alien here. It was not until she conquered her countrymen with her admirable volumes of reminiscences—of which we all hope there are many more to come: we would willingly sacrifice a few germinant operas for the sake of more of that captivating prose—that she retrieved herself from a career manquée.

This Mass, then, of the exceptional Englishwoman who had been stimulating and the least bit scandalizing the solemn Leipsic of the strictest Brahmsian cult and rigorous middle-class conventionality, is the work of a student who after that, you would have said, might be spreading her wings for flight to any height. It is a feather in Birmingham's cap to have revived it, and the satisfaction is all the greater in that we listen by no means wholly out of a personal and historical interest.

This music, which promised more than ever resulted, has decidedly an absolute claim. The composer herself has said that she has never done anything better—a singular avowal, as though Beethoven had not gone beyond the D major Symphony or Wagner beyond the Dutchman. She probably exaggerates. We fancy there are sprightly pages in The Boatswain's Mate that are more highly characteristic.

Nevertheless as a whole this work perhaps stands firmer than any other. It has, to start with, the unifying factor of the liturgical text. Then there is an unmistakably genuine impulse. Ethel Smyth, we are made instantly to feel, did not write her Mass on any perfunctory ground. If this was in a way a student's work it was also more—it was the work of the mature student who was already beginning to look at life for herself. She was feeling her feet, she was steadying her voice, and although her ambition was inordinate—she was essaying something of a scope which wanted the technique of the mature Beethoven—she truly moves us and even awes us with her peremptory hammering at the gates of heaven.

As Mr. Grew has quite lately gone into the musical detail exhaustively, it need only be said that everyone was convinced last night that the work had not had due justice in the past, and should now surely bloom freely again in a St. Martin's Summer. It is fairly difficult, and should be challenged by all superior choral societies. Last night Dr. Boult's forces gave us the characteristic vigour of the Mass, but did not on many points say the last word. Miss Suddaby, Miss Balfour, Mr. Tudor Davies, and Mr. A. Cranmer sang the solos. At the end everyone joined in lionising Dame Ethel, and it made a pleasing scene. Those who pursue the graceless task of musical criticism have to thank the composer for her declared scheme for elaborately avoiding the reading of their elucubrations. This gives us a freer hand, and calms our apprehensions of hurting tender sensibilities. Would that all composers might follow her excellent example! C.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

A students' organ recital was given in Duke's Hall on Monday afternoon, February 4, at which, in addition to an excellent selection of organ music, a number of instrumental and vocal items were interspersed between the pieces for solo organ. Bach was represented by his great Toccata in F (played by Miss Edna Howard), the Passacaglia (Mr. Owen Franklin), and a Prelude and Fugue in G major (Mr. Claude Allen). Works by modern composers included Matin Provençal, Bonnet (Mr. Douglas Easton), the first movement from Widor's sixth Symphony (Mr. Eric Brough), the first movement from Vienne's third Symphony (Mr. Ifor Jones), and Dupré's Prelude and Fugue in B major (Mr. Arthur Thomsett). All these works received creditable and some of them brilliant performances. Of the other pieces the violin part in Mackenzie's Benedictus was admirably played by Miss Winifred Bowlby, the Bach-Gounod Ave Maria was heard with organ and sixteen 'cellos (Mr. Douglas Cameron taking the solo 'cello part), and the first movement of Rheinberger's Suite for violin, 'cello, and organ was also played. Songs by Dvorák and Hamilton Harty, and an Old English Air, arranged by F. Corder, completed the programme.

In addition to the above a chamber concert was given on Monday afternoon, February 18.

On Wednesday afternoons Dr. H. W. Richards has given a course of lectures upon 'Bach's Forty-eight Preludes and Fugues,' discussing them historically and analytically. Illustrations were played by Miss Betty Humby, Miss McLean, and Mr. Harry Isaacs.

The Baume (Manx) Scholarship (any branch of music) has been awarded to Norah K. Moore (a native of Douglas). The adjudicators were Messrs. Frederick Keel, Stewart Macpherson, and Thomas B. Knott.

The Charles Oldham Scholarship (violin) has been awarded to John R. Hamilton (a native of London), Michael Yager being highly commended, and Cyril Hellier commended. The adjudicators were Miss Else M. Nye, Mr. Charles Woodhouse, and Mr. H. Wessely (chairman).

ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC

Concerts and opera performances have been given recently at the rate of two or three each week, the fixtures for the first half of the Easter term having comprised three opera performances, two Patron's Fund rehearsals, two orchestral concerts, three chamber concerts, two recitals, and three informal concerts—that is, fifteen events within a space of just over four weeks.

Detailed comment on such an array of concerts is obviously impossible, but from programmes containing over a hundred items certain features of interest deserve mention. The orchestral concerts included Beethoven's seventh Symphony and the Brahms Violin Concerto (Miss Marie Wilson); at the chamber concerts performances were given of Franck's Pianoforte Quintet, with Miss Marie Wilson and Mr. Cornelius Fisher as first violin and pianoforte, and Mendelssohn's E flat String Quartet, with Miss Mabel Weller leading; the informal concerts brought forward works by College composers, among them being a fanciful little Vocal Quartet by Barbara Pulvermacher; Misses Carlowitz Ames (harp) and Muriel Nixon (soprano) showed talent and promise of a high order at their joint recital; Messrs. Andrew Fenner, Conrad Eden, Harold Sykes, and Herbert Rudling proved the College to be well provided with fine organists in the making. The first two Patron's Fund rehearsals of the term were devoted to conductors and executive artists, and at one rehearsal the College had the pleasure of welcoming young artists from the Royal Academy of Music, the chief items of the occasion being Delius's Pianoforte Concerto and Dvorák's Violin Concerto, played (under Dr. Adrian C. Boulton's direction) by Miss Vera Scrivener and Mr. Alfred Cave respectively, both performers showing a fine discrimination and sense of style.

The Opera Class has already three performances to its credit this term, and has produced the two short English operas which were tried last term. The first of these, by Dr. Charles Wood, is a setting of the 'Family Circle' scene from Martin Chuzzlewit, and proved to be a remarkably skilful and vivacious affair, heartily enjoyed by audience and performers alike. The warmth and sparkle of the music, and its subtle characterisation of such oddities as Pecksniff, Spottletoe, and Mrs. Ned, more than balanced the absence of dramatic incident. The other work, The Blue Peter, by A. P. Herbert and C. Armstrong Gibbs, was a miniature comic opera for four characters, in a mediæval setting. It tells an amusing little story by means of attractive musical numbers and witty dialogue, and, as would be expected of the author, the renowned 'A. P. H.' of Punch, the lyrics are models of grace and dexterity.

The performances were undertaken by several casts of students, and were conducted by students, in pursuance of the present policy of the Royal College, which aims at producing native works with its own resources in its own theatre.

Two public lectures on 'English Composers of the Tudor Period' will be given by Sir Henry Hadow (Vice-Chancellor of the University of Sheffield) at the Royal College of Music (Prince Consort Road, South Kensington, S.W.), at 5 p.m., on Wednesdays, February 27 and March 26. The chair will be taken by Sir Hugh Allen.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC

In addition to a number of students' concerts, two professors' violin and pianoforte recitals were given at the College during the past month by Messrs. A. J. Slocombe and Joseph Speaight, and Miss Eveline Davy and Mr. F. Bilbe. These recitals were, as might have been expected, artistic treats and were much appreciated by the students, and the general public present by invitation.

Three further scholarship appointments have to be added to the list recently published, viz.: University Scholarship (which provides a three years' course of complete musical preparation for the B. Mus. degree of London University), to Helen A. Horgan; Pianoforte Scholarship to Lily S. Walker; and a Viola Scholarship to Eric C. Coleridge.

E

Also the award of six Exhibitions in instrumental and vocal musical subjects in each of the following Dominions, &c.: Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, and India, together with five theory of music and five elocution Exhibitions in various of these countries.

A novel and what is likely to prove a most instructive and useful method for advancing at least a correct and artistic performance of the pieces of music set for the College pupils' pianoforte examinations is being adopted by the Trinity authorities. It consists in having gramophone records made of the performances of this music by specially appointed artists.

The following awards of Exhibitions in connection with the College instrumental, vocal, and elocution Local Examinations have just been made: Senior Division—Charles J. Lockett (Manchester), Phyllis C. Grover (London), Ellen A. Jenkins (Chatham), Joy B. Hart (Brighton), Doris Aldred (Nottingham), Robert E. S. Strong (London), Marie Hartley (Southampton), Irene C. Graves (Bedford), Dorothy M. Treece (Nottingham). Intermediate Division—Constance P. Ellingford (Liverpool), Ethel I. Thurston, (Norwich), Margaret Harris (Bristol), Margaret D. Scott (Leeds), Edith M. Bennett (Norwich), Eileen T. Charlesworth (Leeds), Florence M. Brereton (Whitehaven), Doris Whitnell (Bristol), Fred. H. Naylor (Manchester). Junior Division—Norla S. Spencer (Nottingham), Betty Ramsey (Birkenhead), Mary King (Belfast), Raymond H. Fennell (Sleaford), Ethel C. Neville (Nottingham), Maud A. Hammond (London), Edith M. S. Brennen (Belfast), Joan M. Fraser (Pembroke Dock), Doreen Stordy (Wimbledon).

Exhibitions awarded in connection with the Local Examinations in the theory of music: Senior Division, Charles Smith (Driffild). Adv. Intermediate Division, Alice Ackers (Driffild). Intermediate Division, Herbert L. Smith (Hastings). Adv. Junior Division, Grace M. A. Benjamin (Chatham). Junior Division, George H. Dodd.

London Concerts

PHILHARMONIC CONCERT

Dr. R. Vaughan Williams conducted, at the Royal Philharmonic Society's Concert on January 24, the newly-scored version of his famous song-cycle On Wenlock Edge, which Mr. John Booth sang. This music is not the latest Vaughan Williams. The composer was long in working out for himself the admirably spare and quintessential idiom of his recent works, and On Wenlock Edge shows, by comparison, some indecisions of style and effect. Nevertheless the beauties of the work are rare and attaching, and the scoring enhanced them. Melancholy these songs certainly are, but it is the manly melancholy which faces a bleak world with sturdiness and stoicism, like the great poet of Wenlock Edge on whom the composer has here drawn.

The classic economy of Housman's lyrics and the open-air feeling in Vaughan Williams's music together made a novelty, not only in name, but also in effect at a concert which otherwise contained nothing later than the luxurious Strauss.

This composer's Don Juan, Brahms's C minor Symphony, and a Concerto of Handel were conducted by a newcomer, Wilhelm Furtwängler, whom, to judge by the demonstration when he first came in, the Philharmonic audience had, on the strength of his position at Berlin as Nikisch's successor, beforehand decided to be a superior master. It would possibly have been a little more dignified to have waited to hear what he could do. But he had already won many hearts by proposing to conduct only such works as could be heard in perfect ease, without any of the challenging uncertainties of the unfamiliar. In restricting himself to such well-known ground (as also a few days later at his L.S.O. concert) the newcomer evaded one of the principal difficulties of the London conductor, whose rehearsal time hardly goes beyond that needed for the learning of the mere notes. Furtwängler decidedly made a good impression. We should not say that spontaneity was his characteristic. His admirable performances never gave us the illusion of the simple unsealing of a fountain and the natural release and outpouring of the music, which is the effect of another and perhaps higher form of the art. Diligent and sympathetic thought, he made clear, had dictated everything he did. There was no doubt about his single-eyed devotion. He took Strauss with a sublime seriousness. Here he had a great advantage over the conductors who do not believe in what they are playing. Nor had he any reluctance in confiding to us the warmth of his heart. Those who follow his lines will have a busy time writing espressivos in their scores. He was inclined to pull the Symphony about—from the most conscientious motives, we were sure—that it should look its best on such an important night. Strauss's music—that gay, barocco temple—was very finely played, though we have grown so used to hearing performers scamper through it that the solemnity of the first bars and the long lingering in the patchouli of Donna Anna's music seemed ingenuous. There were indications that Furtwängler has a future with Londoners. He will never go far wrong here so long as he sticks to Symphonies in C minor. C.

QUEEN'S HALL SYMPHONY CONCERTS

Sir Henry Wood's symphony concert at Queen's Hall, on January 26, opened with some Purcell served up with modern improvements. We are so proud of our age that we cannot believe the benighted men of old would not have jumped to avail themselves of all our toys, if possible. But the age of Plato was assuredly clever enough to have invented such annoying little ingenuities as telephones and daily papers—and, cleverer still, would assuredly have suppressed them the moment they were invented. Sul ponticello was not beyond the resources of Purcell's period. Probably he simply did not like it. Is he to blame?

There followed Brahms's Serenade in A, a crepuscular Serenade. We had had its fellow in D a few weeks before. It is as well to hear now and then these unfamiliar minor works of the masters. It gives us ground for an answer when indignant persons like Mr. Sorabji accuse us of always liking the wrong thing—the familiar as opposed to the unfamiliar. We know what to say now if ever we are reproached for preferring the 'hackneyed' symphonies of Brahms to the 'delicious, neglected' serenades. Ravel's Spanish Rhapsody was in the programme, and the soloist was Moiseiwitsch.

A fortnight later there was a jolly Haydn Symphony, which reminded us how much we miss by not having more Haydn. Later there came Lord Berners's brilliant squib, the Spanish Phantasy. Between whiles was another tribute to the Unjustly Ignored—otherwise put, we persistent and plucky Londoners made another valiant effort to swallow some Max Reger and feel the better for it. You know how, when indispensed, you feel ungrateful at not being able to assure an inquiring friend that you are much better. It is embarrassing to have again failed with Reger (this time it was a Romantic Suite, Op. 125—descriptive, with the night revels of aerial beings and a sunrise), and to be quite unable to answer with a glad affirmative the stern inquiry of the Regerians—Messrs. Langford, Sorabji, Turner & Co.—whom we can vividly hear saying with impatience, 'Come, come, if that doesn't change your complexion—if you haven't taken a different course after that—well, you must be in a pretty poor, not to say hopeless, way.' (It didn't do.)

M. Emil Sauer played the solo with delicious grace, superficial yet adequate, in Schuman's Pianoforte Concerto, not now or ever likely to be a neglected work, and for the very best of reasons. C.

'THE APOSTLES' AT THE PEOPLE'S PALACE

If the performance of The Apostles given at the People's Palace fell short of our expectations, it had nevertheless some encouraging features. Perfection in a work of this kind is not to be had at present, especially with an amateur orchestra. The Apostles and The Kingdom are so much apart from all other modern music, so infinitely above anything that has been written in recent years, that it will be some time before musicians and the public at large realise their significance. Given with no greater display of advertisement than is usual in the case of Elijah or The Messiah, viewed from the angle of the average oratorio, they have been so far measured by common standards. They have been compared to Gerontius and found wanting—for the same reason that Paradise Lost is put above Paradise Regained—for lack of a human, dramatic theme. As a matter of fact, the drama in The Apostles exists as it exists in The Messiah and in Gerontius. But it is the drama of the spirit, not of matter: the tragedy is all in the soul of the people following without quite understanding the Passion. They are not the thing for lovers of the cinema and of the Grand Guignol. There you get action out of all proportion to the words, spoken or shown, which ought to ennoble it. Here the action is merely a symbol, and the stage is left to the prophet and the musician, whose presentation and commentary lift the whole into a higher sphere. Besides this, there is the technical difficulty. Elgar's partiality for melodic fifths does not make it easier for the players to weigh the worth of each phrase. The harmonic fifths (though not in sequence) in the scene in the Temple form a veritable pons asinorum of choral singing, and will probably not be sung in tune, and confidently, until the music has become part of the singers.

To crown all, the conductor, Mr. Frank Idle, had other difficulties to overcome, for the railway strike must have seriously interfered with the work of preparation and rehearsal, and the orchestra did not always follow his lead with the alertness he had a right to expect. If only faith can move mountains, genuine enthusiasm can often move an audience. The enthusiasm of the conductor and his choir made itself felt with telling effect now and again, and the audience through them got some idea of the magnitude of The Apostles. The soloists also deserve some praise. Miss Stiles-Allen did justice to the rare beauty of the music, and if the alto part is too heavy for Miss Dyllys-Jones there was intelligence and penetration in her reading. Of the others the best was unquestionably the bass, Mr. Joseph Farrington. Mr. David Evans and Mr. Arthur Rose were adequate, and Mr. John Adams, the tenor, would have been more convincing had he been a trifle less strenuous. When shall we have in London not one but a dozen performances worthy of this music? B. V.

LANGHAM CHORAL SOCIETY

The Langham Choral Society brought back to light, at its Queen's Hall concert, a little-known Ode for chorus and orchestra, The Cloud Messenger, of Gustav Holst. The work, dated 1912, shows the composer already full of the ideas out of which he was to create famous music; but not yet fully able to set them down in the most telling order and form.

The Ode (on a Sanscrit text) is addressed to the cloud by an exiled husband who bids it, in terms of elaborate Oriental imagery, convey messages of endearment to his wife. The imagery is, in the poem, a succession of rapid flashes which do not delay unduly the main burden of the sense and the statement of the message. But the music occupies itself in detail with offshoots of the theme, and the essential impetuous movement is obstructed. Yet if this objection rules out The Cloud Messenger as a consummate achievement, the music abounds in beauties. In general it is allied to the composer's Rig Veda Hymns, but it often looks ahead to the style of The Hymn of Jesus. It most assuredly deserves to be known, the more as the works of this composer's maturity, all so highly prized, are so far from numerous.

If the Langham Choral Society distinguished itself by rediscovering the work, the singers must be reproached for not having waited before rushing to Queen's Hall platform with it until they had learnt the notes. For all the efforts of the conductor (Mr. Hugh Marleyn) it was a sorry show. A new Hymn to the Moon by a Swedish composer, Count A. R. Wachtmeister, invoked the attention of that orb in tones suitably wan, no doubt, for the purpose, but not in any way succeeding in arresting a public not directly concerned with lunar oraisons. C.

WILLIAM MURDOCH

All Chopin's characteristics are to be found in the Berceuse. There is the exquisite sweetness, the ability to construct a small melody, the beautiful pianoforte-writing, the lack of harmonic invention and of construction, the ubiquitous dance rhythm, the charm that is permanent, and the poor central ideas that are not; finally there is that indefinable quality which makes it possible for a pianist to succeed by merely playing the notes, but to make real music only by a kind of creative technique. The piece is thus a good test for a Chopin player. Mr. William Murdoch, in his Chopin recital at Wigmore Hall, on February 2, passed the test, but not with honours, for he has not the creative technique which Chopin demands. Chopin wrote excellent music for performance, and, definitely, it needs performance. The Berceuse, lacking this performance, was not an elusive and wistful thing under Mr. Murdoch, nor was the relation of the variations on the melody made clear. The last few bars especially wanted the repose that alone can make them musically significant. The great quality of Mr. Murdoch's playing I find to be the solidity of the texture of the sounds he makes: his hands seem to play with a perfect ensemble; the music, as it were, rolls across them like a ball; and this with his firm and moderately flexible touch makes the sound that issues from his playing warm, even, and solid. A pianist of the muscular type, he tends to be bull-like, for his technique is not brilliant, as the twelfth Study in Op. 25 showed. But though he will never be a subtle player he has certainly lost a large proportion of the carelessness which was so noticeable when I last heard him. His outstanding performances in this recital were the twenty-first and twenty-third Preludes (the sixth was too slow, and the 'dropping water' had lost its magic), the Op. 25, Nos. 1 and 3 Studies, and particularly the Barcarolle (Op. 60). With a little more musical play with the figure, this would have been a perfect performance of the piece, and in it you have the exact measure of Mr. Murdoch's ability as a pianist. I was disappointed by his rendering of the Ballade in A flat. He missed the construction, and further showed by his phrasing that he was not clear about its musical significance. H. J. F.

ZOLTÁN KODÁLY, FEBRUARY 5 AND 13

Within little more than a week we have had two of Kodály's chamber works, and on the last day of the month the Hungarian String Quartet is to introduce a third. We have also had a group of his songs. Before that we knew him chiefly by one of his String Quartets and his Serenade for two violins and viola. He is no longer a stranger.

The two works played at the Contemporary Music Centre and the first of the Léner Quartet concerts follow each other in his opus-list, but were introduced to us in reversed order. The later in date is the unaccompanied 'Cello Sonata which made such a stir at Salzburg last August. It is modern in the sense that the composer has followed the prevailing tendency to explore to the utmost the expressive idiosyncrasies of an instrument, and develop its individual musical idiom, but not in the sense of being subversive in either form or harmony. It is, in fact, refreshingly straightforward in both, and the only hard nuts it offers to crack are reserved for the performer. Miss Beatrice Harrison, who played it for the Contemporary Music Centre, was happiest in the lyrical slow movement, which is full of poetry not unmixed with a tinge of the dramatic quality in which the first movement is so strong. Here, and in the exuberant, dance-like Finale, we could have wished for an even stronger accentuation than she gave, but it was a first performance, and the immense executive difficulties would naturally occupy the foreground of any player's attention on such an occasion. These Miss Harrison appeared to overcome with the greatest ease, and when she repeats the work doubtless she will give a stronger impression of its power, which is remarkable in a work written for an unaccompanied stringed instrument.

The Duo for violin and 'cello, which was played by Jeno Léner and Imre Hartman (of the Léner Quartet), is a much less arresting work. As in the Serenade, the opportunity for instrumental conversation tempts the composer to meander round subjects which are not always of sufficient interest to animate the dialogue. At other times the conversational character is dropped, and the 'cello is occupied with a pedal accompaniment, by which it ceases to be an equal partner, and the interest becomes lop-sided. This is not to say that the music is poor. A great deal of it is very good, but somehow it does not convince us, as the 'Cello Sonata does, that it has found its right vehicle of expression or its right form, which, when you come to think of it, is much the same thing. At the same time, even its weaknesses must have contributed materially to the composer's experience, and thereby paved the way for the better work which was to follow. It was well played, as were also the Quartets by Tchaikovsky and Mozart, which completed the Léner programme. That of the Contemporary Music Centre included Delius's String Quartet and Goossens's recent Fantasy Sextet, played by the Kutchner Quartet with the necessary reinforcements. Another concert called me away, but I am assured on all sides that these performances were excellent, and that the concert as a whole was the best the Centre has so far given. E. E.

THE SNOW STRING QUARTET

The concert given by the Snow String Quartet at Æolian Hall on February 3, was notable mainly for the performance of Mr. Thomas F. Dunhill's Pleasantries. This is a well-turned Suite of four movements—balanced, finished, eminently pleasing. Mr. Dunhill does not aim at plucking bright honour from the pale-faced moon, nor does he challenge all that has been held good and honourable in the past—symmetry, charm of melody and harmony, flowing rhythms, common-sense. His aim, as the title and the medium employed imply, is a more modest one. And, perhaps, it takes greater courage nowadays to write pleasantries for two violins and a viola than to write police-court news for two double-basses and a trombone. In the first case everything must be done in accordance with well-established standards. In the second the composer is unassailable, for he does not address his contemporaries, but awaits, in great modesty, the verdict of posterity. To Mr. Dunhill then is due considerable credit. He asked for an immediate judgment, and he got it—entirely in his favour. His music flows evenly and gracefully, and wins through by its native freshness and directness. The performance given by Miss Jessie Snow, Mr. Kenneth Skeaping, and Mr. Ernest Tomlinson was, perhaps, adequate. But one felt now and again as if the leader's style were less trenchant and vigorous than that of her colleagues. F. B.

BRITISH PIANISTS

During the last few weeks British pianists have been busy challenging the foreigner on his own ground, which is in the neighbourhood of Oxford Circus.

Miss Winifred MacBride made a bid for position with five recitals, and after hearing the first of them at Wigmore Hall on February 5, we shall always regard her name with greater respect than before. Mr. Howard-Jones gave no surprise with his six-fold programmes, and after hearing his first two recitals (Wigmore Hall, February 6 and 13) we regard his name with the same respect as before. Of the less frequent pianists Miss Beatrice Snell, February 12, must be singled out with a word of praise for her intensely musical playing.

Mr. Leslie England, too, won a high place among our pianists with his recital at Queen's Hall on February 6. It was not that he had the Queen's Hall Orchestra and Sir Henry Wood to give him a good setting; others have done that, and lost esteem with their Emperor or Rachmaninov. Mr. Leslie England used his accessories to give us a C minor Pianoforte Concerto of Delius (perhaps the most beautiful ever written), and he played it with the same intimate care that he gave to the more familiar music in his programme. His quality as a pianist came through all the camouflage of orchestrated dignities and highly-coloured, comparatively unknown music; in fact, he played with expression and intelligence, and with close regard for tone-colour. He was the same in César Franck's highly-symphonic poem Les Djinns, for pianoforte and orchestra. (Considering what a djinn is, was ever programme music more reticent?)

SOME SINGERS OF THE MONTH

Again a concert by Miss Dorothy Silk was one of the principal pleasures of the month. It was a concert of old music—the Elizabethans and Purcell, Schütz, Bach, and Christian Ritter—with Mr. Léon Goossens, the oboist, Dr. Harold Darke, and the Philharmonic Quartet doing beautiful things instrumentally, and a young bass, Mr. Stuart Robertson, showing promise in some duets. Miss Silk is actually improving. Her beautiful voice is growing bigger—and not by any forcing process. The gain in volume has meant no loss in quality. The lower notes in particular are fuller. There is the same soaring tone on high notes, but their control is firmer, and Miss Silk is now caring as scrupulously after the tail as the head of the phrases. They are finished with a wide throat, and this makes for a more polished style. Miss Silk's diction, too, was more definite than hitherto. Of course it was not of these details we were thinking on that evening of February II, but of the simply lovely tone and sweet, spiritual expression of the singing.

Dame Clara Butt, back home after far travels, gave a concert at the Albert Hall with Eugène Ysaë. One piece of her singing at least was perfect—Sigurd Lie's Snow. She sang it in a half-voice of peculiar purity. Dame Clara delights us most when she aims least at the 'grand' contralto effects of her notoriety. In Dvorák's Biblical Songs her phrasing was not good, but the clearness of her diction must be praised.

Madame Lily Zehner gave a concert at Queen's Hall with some interesting music, including a group of John Ireland's songs and Mahler's Kindertotenlieder, which are beautiful in their way, though over-lavish with pathos. The singer, however, had not quite the gifts for so large a hall. She proved to be a conscientious but not a very exceptional interpreter, and her voice had not the quality to create a physical thrill. She showed the fault, common in Germany, of over-preoccupation with individual words to the damage of consecutive sense. Her breath control was not good. Sir Henry Wood's orchestra and Mr. Harold Craxton accompanied.

Miss Joyce Bannerman sang at Æolian Hall, and gave us genuine pleasure. Here was a light, bright soprano voice already well employed. She did not attempt to force, and her contentment with her natural resources was justified. She can now safely work for more intensity.

A Russian baritone, Nikolai Nadejin, made a good impression at Æolian Hall. His voice, resting on a firm chest-wall, had solidity and was uniformly rich in quality. And the possession of a big dramatic organ did not betray him into over-assertiveness. When the moments of climax came they had decisive effect. His programme was mainly Russian.

Mr. Gilbert Bailey gave another concert, and it was pleasant to observe that he had improved in various ways since his first appearance. He showed both ambition and taste by essaying Vaughan Williams's cycle The House of Life. The performance, though not that of a fully mature artist, had breadth and distinction. The singer might now strive after more variety of tone-colour. We were conscious after a few songs of some monotony, for all the pleasant warmth of the voice and the friendly personality of the singer.

Miss Barbara Samuel worked a big voice for all it was worth at her concert at Æolian Hall, but there was more impetuosity than sense of style in her performance. Sometimes she actually forced a note upwards after a clean and adequate attack, being not content to let well alone. At present she is too concerned with mere volume. She attempted some songs of a florid nature, but her voice was too unwieldy. In the fullness of time Miss Samuel may learn to sing such music as Che farò, and the effect should be sumptuous.

Mr. Clive Carey gave an evening of tastefully chosen English songs at Æolian Hall. The merit of his singing lay in his artistic sense. Apart from this his voice, lacking resonance and colour, would not carry him far. But he largely made up by singing beautiful songs as though he thoroughly loved their beauties, and that is preferable, at least, to the singing which is nothing but a fatuous display of physical gifts, all contemptuous of pure music. Two of the songs were from the singer's own pen.

Madame Suzanne de Livet, at Wigmore Hall, sang an exemplary programme, having regard to the quality and size of her voice. And in her performance there was hardly a fault of taste or technique. We listened throughout to the music without the distraction of any eccentricity in the singer. The quality of tone was engaging, the diction well-nigh perfect. It was a display of art on a small scale, but, within its limits, it was such as we all too seldom meet with.

Mr. Mischa Leon sang at the same hall. He has talent, but his performance was singularly unbalanced. At moments we felt that he ought to be a tenor of the first order. Then he would be incomprehensibly thrown out of gear, and there would be a spell of mediocrity. His singing of a group of English songs was simply amateurish. Not only was his pronunciation defective, but he also sang them without real breath control—a surprising collapse after some of his fine renderings of French and Spanish songs, which were given as though singing had no secrets for him. He possesses rare gifts, notably the command of a wide range of colour. But this is not to say he uses them judiciously.

Miss Bessie Kerr sang at one of the Chappell concerts at Queen's Hall, and displayed a mezzo-soprano voice of considerable beauty. But some of her open vowels must be criticised. Her 'ah's' were 'aw's'—and she seemed rather proud of the distortion!

Miss Dorothy Helmrich gave a pleasant concert. She sings well, but if she would characterise her diction more vividly she would be still better. A few bright /s/ and /f/s would have made a difference to the interest of her phrases. Miss Helmrich gets well on top of her high notes, and her phrasing is artistic. Her programme was excellent, and very often she thoroughly charmed with her serenity of expression and sensitive musical feeling.

Miss Dorothy Moulton gave a concert with the assistance of Mr. Louis Fleury, the flautist, and introduced a new and poetic little Idyll of Cyril Scott. Her programme was, as usual, intelligently planned, but at present her vocal technique is not calculated to give pleasure. Apparently tensed throat-muscles pinch the tone and cause at once restricted volume and a wavering line. Miss Moulton achieves a good deal, in the face, as it were, of an unsuitable method.

The visit of the baritone, Umberto Urbano, to Covent Garden, where he sang as Rigoletto to the Duke of Mr. Joseph Hislop, made an enchanting evening for the connoisseur of fine singing. His performance was distinguished to a degree, and at times in its ease and polish recalled that of Sammarco. All the arts of good singing were in Mr. Urbano's voice—the swimming legato, mesa di voce, the gift of the accumulation and the shutting-off of tone at the least possible notice. He covered, spread, and warmed his voice with the utmost skill and grace. Never (need one say?) did he force. His low notes were inconsiderable—any below E flat were suggested more than sung. The singer showed his sense by never exploiting changes of register. His sudden alterations from the lyric to the dramatic style proved his technical virtuosity. It was fascinating to observe how he could set his voice glowing, or, as it were, flaming by a degree more of intensity of breath. His government was absolute, save for some faulty intonation in the second scene and in the third Act.

Madame Elvira de Hidalgo, another newcomer, was the Gilda. She was not so good. True, her 'Caro nome' was beautiful, but there was usually too much 'dental' quality on the narrower vowels, and this hardness was often carried well into the higher regions, though when she was not trying to over-sing her quality was satisfying. She should have taken a lesson from Rigoletto. When he was going beyond the normal in intensity, he used all the deeper cavities of resonance. Gilda was too apt to depend exclusively on the forward vibrations.

Mr. Browning Mummery is a young tenor who ought, if things go well, to count much in the doings of the British National Opera Company. He follows Italian lines, and his voice is already reasonably well controlled. He has the knack of seeming almost casual in his delivery, and in the impassioned moments of Madame Butterfly he swept along the orchestral stream as though he realised the relationship between his own well-strung voice and the tone of the strings. Mr. Mummery might make up for his lack of low tones by a sharper wording—occasionally even by a quasi-parlando effect—and obtain more distinction for his middle voice by slightly darkening it. The higher tones would then gradually develop a braveness they just miss as things are. Mr. Mummery has not yet the power to thrill. But he is on the right lines, and should become a leading tenor.

Miss Blanche Scandina, who sang the Queen of Night in The Magic Flute one afternoon, was said never to have sung publicly before. This was not difficult to believe. If she is wise she will wait a while before singing publicly again. Her coloratura singing was reasonably good and in tune, but she had no notion of a legato or of effecting dramatic distinctions. She was out of tune whenever any considerable physical effort was required.

Miss Winifred Kennard on this occasion sang Pamina. On high notes she was apt to be sharp. Still, she should be an acquisition to the Company, for her voice is of good quality, and she sings with dramatic feeling. H. J. K.

Competition Festival Record

We give below a list of forthcoming Competitive Festivals in order of date. We regret that considerations of space make it impossible to give more than the dates, and name and address of the hon. secretaries. Many of the syllabuses contain features on which we should have been glad to comment. The list makes no pretence to be complete; it includes only Festivals of which particulars have been received.

ELIZABETHAN FESTIVAL, at Kingsway Hall.—February 29 and March 1-5. Mr. Alan May, Bonham Road, Brixton.

CLARE (SUFFOLK).—March 1. Mrs. B. M. Proby, Hundon, Clare.

BEDFORDSHIRE.—March 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7. Capt. D. V. Gedge, 95, Ashburnham Road, Bedford.

SOUTH-EAST LONDON.—March 7, 10, 11, 13. Miss Helen Ridley, 34, Emperor's Gate, S.W.7.

LOUGHBOROUGH.—March 21 and 22. Mr. Owen Parry, 14, Cattle Market, Loughborough.

ENFIELD.—March 22. Miss Ethel Woods, County School, Holly Walk, Enfield.

LEEDS.—March 22, 26, 27, 28, 29. Mr. Herbert S. Coghill, Festival Offices, Pearl Buildings, East Parade, Leeds.

LONDON.—March 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31 and April 1, 2, 3, 4, and 5. Mr. T. Lester Jones, 130, Belgrave Road, E.11.

LONDONDERRY FEIS.—March 25, 26, 27, and 28. Mrs. A. M'C. Stewart, Holly Lodge, Northland Road, Londonderry.

NORTH NOTTS, at Retford.—April 1-3. Mr. A. Peatfield, 'Hallcroft,' Retford.

HASTINGS.—April 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, 8, and 9. Mr. John Lockey, Festival Office, c/o Borough Association, Hastings.

BELFAST.—April 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, and 12. Mrs. James Harper, Purdysburn, Belfast.

NORTH LINCOLNSHIRE, at Brigg.—April 8 and 9. Mr. Algernon R. Haynes, Bigby Road, Brigg.

GLASGOW.—April 26-May 10. Mr. D. Glen MacKemmie, Festival Office, Hope Street, Glasgow.

SOUTHERN COUNTIES, at Torquay.—April 28, 29, 30, May 1, 2, 3. Mr. D. Conniff, 1, Exwick Road, Exeter.

MARY WAKEFIELD (WESTMORLAND) FESTIVAL, at Kendal.—April 30 and May 1 and 2. Hon. Secretary (festival), Burneside, Kendal.

WEST LOTHIAN, at Linlithgow.—May 1 and 2. Mrs. Mackenzie, Long Croft, Linlithgow.

MIDLAND, at Birmingham.—May 10-24. Mr. George J. Bowker, Queen's College, Paradise Street, Birmingham.

FEIS CEOL, at Dublin.—May 12-17. Hon. Secretaries, 37, Molesworth Street, Dublin.

STIRLINGSHIRE, at Falkirk.—May 12-17. Mr. Alexander Callander, 97, High Street, Falkirk.

PEOPLE'S PALACE.—May 13, 14, 16, 20, 21, 23, 24. Rev. C. J. Beresford, 392, Commercial Road, E.1.

SUFFOLK, at Ipswich.—May 16 and 17. Mr. Frederick W. Bray, 1, Foxhall Road, Ipswich.

KENSINGTON, at Kensington Town Hall.—May 15, 16, 17, and June 14. Miss Mary Fletcher, 13, Ladbroke Terrace, W.11.

GALASHIELS.—May 19-24. Mr. J. M. Duthy, Burgh School House, Galashiels.

EMPIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL, at Crystal Palace.—May 19-24. Mr. Cyril Jenkins, Crystal Palace, S.E. 19.

LEAGUE OF ARTS, at the Guildhouse, Eccleston Square.—May 30 and 31. Mr. A. O. Gibbon, 160, Hammersmith Road, W.6.

LEAMINGTON AND COUNTY, at Leamington Spa.—June 19, 20, 21. Mrs. Dickinson, Town Hall, Leamington.

TAUNTON AND WEST SOMERSET, at Taunton.—June 25 and 26. Mr. N. T. Welchman, 12, Gladstone Street, Taunton.

The valuable report of the Adult Education Committee on 'The Development of Adult Education through Music' is discussed on page 233 of this issue. The Committee's pronouncements on Competition Festivals calls for separate notice, and will be considered next month.

Music in the Provinces

ABERGAVERN.—Mr. Watcyn Watcyns (vocalist) and Miss Valentine Orde (cello) gave a joint recital on January 17, giving songs by Cyril Scott, Brahms, and Charles Wood, and cello music by Bantock, Somervell, and Fauré.

ABERYSTWYTH.—The College Orchestral Union, conducted by Sir Walford Davies, provided the programme on January 25, playing Holst's Fugal Concerto for oboe, flute, and strings, Bach's Aria in D, and Schubert's Symphony in C.—At the College Orchestral Union's concert on February 15, Handel's Largo was played in memory of the late Prof. Abel G. Jones. The Choir sang Bach's Passion Chorale, and Brahms's Sextet in B flat was played. The Orchestra played the Magic Flute Overture, and was conducted by Dr. de Lloyd.—Mr. W. J. Bumford Griffiths, conductor of Aberpennar Orchestral Society, has been appointed conductor of the proposed Welsh National Orchestra, under Sir Walford Davies, and has commenced his duties with the University Orchestra.—Gwenllian, a new Welsh opera by Dr. de Lloyd, was produced at the Coliseum on January 5, acted and sung by a band of students, the Angharad Choir, which was formed four years ago, and has previously performed two operas by Prof. Lloyd Williams. The libretto of Gwenllian was written by Eurwedd, and corrected and revised by Mr. T. Gwynn Jones. The music represents three types, all cleverly interwoven. These are the 12th century contrapuntal type, folk-melodies with modern harmonies, and leitmotif.

BARRY.—The Male Choir's twenty-first anniversary concert, on February 10, took the form of a reunion, past members being invited to join present members to sing familiar pieces from the repertoire. The choir thus numbered a hundred and fifty voices, and Mr. D. J. Thomas, conductor, and his deputy, Mr. E. L. Powell, received a tribute for the work they have done since the inauguration of the Society.

BIRMINGHAM AND DISTRICT.—At the Sunday concert on January 20, the City Orchestra played the Pastoral Symphony. It was capably given, though a touch of monotony crept into the performance. A selection for orchestra from Boughton's The Immortal Hour was also in the programme. Presented in this way, the music has very little of the elusive beauty which is its chief characteristic when heard in its original form. Madame Parkes-Darby showed a good sense of style in a performance of Beethoven's Ah! Perfido. The following Sunday, Miss Florence Hale sang Liszt's Loreley.—Strauss's The Valley was given by Mr. Samuel Saul at the concert on January 28. Mr. Saul's voice gains in quality, and he has the gift of presenting each song as a whole.—Conducted by Mr. Eugène Goossens, the City Orchestra gave its fifth symphony concert of the season on January 30. An unhackneyed programme of modern music drew only a fair audience. Arnold Bax's Symphony in E flat, with its deeply serious note and harmonic innovations, proved an interesting work. Each of its three movements reveals a fresh side of the composer's temperament, and in the last, the questionings of the earlier parts seem to be resolved. The conductor's own Sinfonietta is a lightsome work of genuine quality. Romantic in feeling, and with a touch of humour, it proved one of the most popular items of the evening. The 'Fair Music' from Stravinsky's Petrouchka, Ravel's Rhapsodie Espagnole, and Sinigaglia's Overture, La Baruffe Chiosotte, were also included in the programme. The orchestral players did creditably in unfamiliar music.—Mr. Frederick Dawson was the pianist at another Sunday concert, and played a Liszt Concerto and some solos with fine taste and skill.—With Mr. Appleby Matthews in charge, the City Orchestra gave a performance of the Ninth Symphony on February 13. The City of Birmingham Choir sang the choral music.—At the Mid-day concerts a programme of chamber music always brings an increased audience. The Mary Abbott Trio played the Dumky Trio of Dvorák and Ireland's Phantasy Trio on January 24. On another occasion the Glazounov Quintet was played by Mr. Frank Venton, Miss Elsie Stell, Miss Marjorie Hinley, Mr. Harry Stanier, and Mr. Herbert Stephens. A Pavane for strings by Frank Martin was also given.—A recital by Miss Evelyn Stevenson included a group of delightful old Italian songs.—Miss Lily Thorrington drew on Grañaños, de Falla, and Medtner for her recital on January 25. Mr. John Goss, with Mr. North at the pianoforte, sang some Wolf songs very finely.—With Zacharewitsch as partner, Miss Marie Fromm gave a varied programme which included Bach's D minor Chaconne, Brahms's Variations on a theme by Paganini, and pieces by Palmgren and Liapounov.—The English Trio played the Beethoven Trio, Op. 70, at a concert on February 1. A dour, unwieldy duet for violin and 'cello, by Zoltán Kodály, was also given, and Mr. Charles Hedges sang Bantock's Ferishda's Fancies very finely. His singing of Bach's I know that my Redeemer liveth was one of the loveliest things we have had from a local singer this season.—With Miss Ella Ivimey as accompanist, Miss Anne Lowe gave a vocal recital, and was assisted in duets for contralto and mezzo voice by Miss Edith Bartlett. Though rather immature on the technical side, Miss Lowe has a beautiful organ and promises to become an unusually interesting singer.—The Arthur Hyth String Quartet, if not impeccable in the matter of intonation, yet attained a good ensemble at its chamber concert, when Mozart's E flat Quartet and pieces by Julius Harrison and J. B. McEwen were played.—Mr. Hofmann gave a recital in the Town Hall on February 11, and Dame Clara Butt and Ysaye were the artists at another concert in the same 'celebrity' series.—At a Max Mossel concert M. Emil Sauer gave a somewhat hackneyed programme. His fleet, delicate technique was delightful nevertheless in some 18th-century music—the Gavotte and Variations of Rameau.—The Léner Quartet was heard for the first time at Birmingham at the last of the Classical series. Schubert's Death and the Maiden Quartet and Borodin's D major Quartet were exquisitely presented, and in reply to a demand for an encore the players gave Tchaikovsky's Andante Cantabile. Miss Katharine Goodson was the solo pianist.—Of the choral music of the month, a performance of Ethel Smyth's Mass, given by the Festal Choral Society and the City Orchestra, was the outstanding event. Dr. Adrian C. Boulton conducted, and the soloists were Mesdames Elsie Suddaby and Margaret Balfour, and Messrs. Tudor Davies and Arthur Cranmer. A creditable performance was obtained, and at the close the composer was warmly cheered.—The Birmingham Choral Union, with Miss Mary Foster as soloist, gave a performance of The Music-Makers on February 2.

BLACKBURN.—The Blackburn Ladies' Choir gave a concert on February 4 in aid of Workshops for the Blind. The choir sang admirably in small choral works by Richard Edwards, Morley, Buck, &c., and gave the first performance of a setting, for female-voice choir and baritone solo, of Dryden's Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, by Wolstenholme. Mr. John Buckley was the soloist, and the composer was at the pianoforte. The work was encored. Mr. F. Duckworth was the conductor.

BRISTOL.—On January 25 Christian Carpenter and Jan Hurst played Paderewski's Polish Fantasia on two pianofortes, and the first-named, whose recital it was, played other music, including a Suite in old style and Variations on an Original Theme by herself.—Under the auspices of the West of England Musical Education Society, Prof. Tobias Matthey gave a lecture-demonstration on 'Rhythm and Interpretation,' illustrated at the pianoforte.—On January 28 the Symphony Orchestra played the Eroica Symphony and Leonore Overture (No. 3), Wagner's A Faust Overture, and Liszt's Les Préludes. Miss Florence Austral sang, and Mr. Maurice Alexander conducted.—At the Philharmonic Society's concert on February 2 the principal works performed were Elgar's Enigma Variations, Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in D minor, Holst's Beni-Mora Suite, and the Handel-Elgar Overture. Miss Myra Hess was the soloist in the Concerto, and also played La Maja et le Rossignol and Triana, by Albeniz. The choir sang Now praise, my soul (Bach), Armstrong Gibbs's Tears, and Bennett's All creatures now are merry-minded. Mr. Arnold Barter conducted.—At the Clifton Chamber concert on February 5 the programme included Glazounov's Star Quartet and Schumann's Pianoforte Quintet in E major. Miss Winifred Davey played pianoforte music, and with Mr. Albert Morgan, Brahms's Violin Sonata in D minor.—An effort is being made to revive the activities of the Children's Music Society, and on February 9 the Amateur Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Maurice Alexander, played Beethoven's Seventh Symphony to a juvenile audience. Dr. Beachcroft, of Clifton College, gave explanations and descriptions.—At the Symphony concert on February 15 Sir Thomas Beecham was the conductor. Debussy's L'Après-Midi d'un Faune and Fêtes, Mozart's Symphony in D major, the Overture and 'Venusberg' music from Tannhäuser, Bizet's Prelude to The Fair Maid of Perth and the 'Dances Polovstiennes' from Prince Igor were the chief orchestral pieces. The singer was Madame de Hidalgo.

CARDIFF.—The concert at the Capitol on January 27 was given by the Grenadier Guards Band.—In the absence through illness of Mr. T. E. Aylward, Sir Walford Davies conducted the Musical Society at Park Hall on February 8. The choir sang Sleepers, wake, the Birmingham Quartet played chamber music, and the singers were Miss Elsie Suddaby and Mr. John Adams.—The Rosé Quartet played Debussy's Quartet and Beethoven's Op. 18, No. 5, at the High School for Girls on February 11, under the auspices of the Chamber Music Society.

CREDITON.—The Male Choir, now in its second year, gave its second concert on February 13, conducted by Mr. J. Branthwaite. The twenty-two voices were well-balanced, and the programme included On the Ramparts (Saintis), Löh's Slumber Song, and an Evening Pastoral by Wilfrid Shaw.

DUNDEE.—The Choral Union (conductor, Mr. Charles M. Cowe) was assisted by the Scottish Orchestra at its annual concert in Caird Hall on February 6. The programme consisted of the Overture to The Flying Dutchman, David Stephen's new work, Sir Patrick Spens (conducted by the composer), and King Olaf. Miss Caroline Hatchard, Mr. John Booth, and Mr. Robert Burnett were the soloists.

EDINBURGH.—A recital of modern pianoforte and violin sonatas was given on January 15, in the Methven Simpson Concert Room, by Mr. Ramsay Geikie and Mr. Waldo Channon. Bax's Sonata in A, John Ireland's second Sonata, and some pieces by David Stephens, were the chief items.—On January 17 Miss Jessie Crombie and Miss Lisa Herd gave a joint song-recital in Drumsheugh Gardens, the songs representing Clough-Leigher, Hageman (At the Well), and Henschel.—At Prof. Tovey's concert, on January 20, in Synod Hall, the Edinburgh String Quartet played Haydn's Op. 76, No. 3, and the Allegro in C minor from Schubert's Unfinished Quartet. Prof. Tovey collaborated with two of the string players in Beethoven's Pianoforte Trio in B flat.—The third Powell Classical Concert in Usher Hall, on January 19, was the occasion of a visit from Bratza, Dushko Yovanovitch (a Serbian pianist), and the De Reszke Singers, an American male combination singing, among other items, negro spirituals. —At the Nelson Hall concert, Brahms's 'Cello Sonata in F' was played by Mr. Bernard Beers and Prof. Tovey. —On January 24, in Freemasons' Hall, the Edith Robinson Quartet played Dr. Ernest Walker's Fantasia, the Fugue from Max Reger's Quartet in E minor, and Brahms's Pianoforte Quartet in G minor, Mr. Philip Halstead collaborating as pianist in the latter. —M. Mylnarski was the conductor at the Paterson Orchestral Concert on January 28, when the Scottish Orchestra played Liadov's The Enchanted Lake, Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in C, and César Franck's Variations Symphoniques, with Miss Youra Muller as soloist. —With M. Emil Sauer as pianist the Scottish Orchestra played Chopin's Concerto in E minor on January 21, and also played Berlioz's Carnaval Romain Overture, Reger's Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Mozart, and Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet. M. Mylnarski conducted. —M. Emil Sauer gave a pianoforte recital at the third of the Mossel Subscription Concerts in Usher Hall on February 2. —In Synod Hall on February 3, the Reid Orchestra played Beethoven's seventh Symphony, Der Freischütz Overture, and Mozart's Pianoforte Concerto in A major. Prof. Tovey was the conductor and also the pianist, the baton being taken for the Concerto by Mr. Francis M. Collinson. —Mr. Josef Hofmann gave a pianoforte recital on February 9, playing Debussy's Soirée en Granade and Brahms's G minor Rhapsody. —Prof. Tovey opened the eighth season of the Reid Orchestral Concerts, on February 9, with Beethoven's Choral Fantasia and Missa Solemnis, given with the aid of the Choral Union and local soloists. —Another Beethoven programme was given on February 10, Prof. Tovey being the soloist in the Pianoforte Trio in D, and also giving pianoforte solos. The Septet was played by Messrs. Watt Jupp, James Fairbairn, B. Beers, T. C. Miller, E. Proud, W. Worsley, and G. F. Worsley. —At the Paterson Orchestral Concert on February 11, M. Mylnarski was the conductor. Ravel's Le Tombeau de Couperin, the Theme and Variations from Tchaikovsky's Suite in G, and Rachmaninov's Pianoforte Concerto in C minor were the chief works. Mr. Nicolas Orloff was the pianist, and played solo music by Scriabin. —Mr. Orloff gave a recital in the Music Hall on February 13, and included Vivaldi's Concerto in D minor, transcribed by Zadora, and Brahms's Paganini Variations.

EXETER.—Byrd's Fantasia for string sextet, Spohr's String Quartet, Op. 4, No. 2, and Stanford's Songs of the Fleet were the principal works performed at the January meeting of the Chamber Music Club. —Mr. Albert Sammons gave a recital on February 1, assisted by Miss Jenny Hyman and Miss Doreen Kendall. A Concerto by Mozart (in G) and a Handel Sonata were the chief items.

GLASGOW.—After an absence of seven years, M. Mylnarski returned to conduct the Scottish Orchestra on January 19. Bantock's Prelude, The Song of Songs, Ravel's La Valse, Rimsky-Korsakov's Scheherazade, and Tchaikovsky's fourth Symphony comprised the bulk of the programme. —On January 29 the Scottish Orchestra played Debussy's Iberia (the second of the Images), Beethoven's seventh Symphony, and with Miss Youra Muller, Mozart's Concerto in C major and Franck's Variations Symphoniques. —At the popular concert on February 2 the Scottish Orchestra played the From the New World Symphony, Mendelssohn's Violin Concerto, the Overture to The Flying Dutchman, and the Casse Noisette Suite. M. Elkan Kosman was the solo violinist. —M. Victor Labunski, a Polish pianist, was the soloist in Tchaikovsky's Concerto in B flat minor, played with the Scottish Orchestra on February 1. Other works played were Haydn's Symphony in C, Saint-Saëns's Suite, Le Carnaval des Animaux, and Borodin's In Mid-Asia. M. Mylnarski conducted. —Scriabin's Symphony in C, The Divine Poem, was played by the Scottish Orchestra on February 12, also under M. Mylnarski.

LIVERPOOL.—Miss Betty Dallas and Mr. George Hill collaborated, with Mr. John Tobin at the pianoforte, in a song recital at Rushworth Hall on January 22, including Vaughan Williams's Mystical Songs, and songs by Holst, Hugo Wolf, and Delius. —At the Vickers concert on February 2 the singers were Miss Florence Austral, Mr. Frank Titterton, and Mr. Herbert Langley, and Mr. Herbert Brough was violinist. —Mr. Josef Hofmann gave a pianoforte recital on February 2. —At Crane Hall, on February 6, M. Vladimir Cernikov included in a pianoforte recital Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition. Mr. Harry Hoppewell sang. —The Léner Quartet visited Philharmonic Hall on February 9, and played Borodin's Quartet in D and Schubert's Death and the Maiden. —At Birkenhead Town Hall, on January 26, Oxtan and Cloughton Orchestral Society played the Delius Pianoforte Concerto, with Mr. John Tobin as soloist, and the Leonora No. 3 Overture. —At the Mossel concert on January 26, M. Emil Sauer gave a pianoforte recital, playing music by Schumann, Beethoven, Rameau, and Mendelssohn. —The Vickers concert on January 26 was provided by Miss Rosina Buckman and party. —At the Bon Marché, on February 12, Miss Kathleen Lafla gave a song recital representing Pergolesi, Martini, Scarlatti, Marcello, Mozart, and Gluck. Dr. J. E. Wallace collaborated at the pianoforte. —Mr. Eugène Goossens was the conductor at the Philharmonic concert on February 12, and Mr. Dinh Gilly the singer. The orchestral works included Beethoven's eighth Symphony, Goossens's Sinfonietta, and Schumann's Overture, Scherzo, and Finale, Bax's Motet Mater ora filium was sung unaccompanied by the choir. —A violin and pianoforte recital given in Crane Hall on February 13 included a Violin Sonata by Biber, played by Miss May Lambie and Miss Muriel Marsh. —Verdi's Requiem was performed in Philharmonic Hall on February 16 by the Welsh Choral Union, conducted by Mr. T. Hopkin Evans. There was a full orchestra, and the principal singers were Miss Stiles-Allen, Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Sydney Coltham, and Mr. Norman Allin. —Mr. Harold Samuel gave a Bach recital at the Bon Marché on February 15.

MANCHESTER.—On January 22, the Brodsky Quartet played the austere A minor of Beethoven, and in the convalescent's thanksgiving adagio scaled emotional heights probably unique in quartet-playing in this country to-day. —Miss Olga Haley's recital, on January 29, included some Hebridean songs, and well-known examples of Schubert, Schumann, and Strauss. Debussy's Fantoches and Respighi's Crepuscolo, in juxtaposition with Tchaikovsky's O could I once again be free, naturally fell short of their full effect. What an artist, if only her phrasing powers matched her voice! —Apart from the performance of Bantock's Omar (Parts 1 and 2) on January 31, and quite the finest reading yet given here by Mr. Hamilton Harty of any symphonic work of the classical period (Beethoven, No. 7, on February 7), the Hallé concerts, since my last message, have been notable more for interesting music of the second class, of which more later. The Omar performance was really compensation for that fiasco of the 1921-22 season, when, through the hold-up of orchestral parts, Harty played the accompaniments on the pianoforte, whilst Bantock conducted, and when, pour comble de malheur, Mullings was taken ill on the platform and obliged to retire. On January 31 everything conspired to obliterate those nightmarish memories. In George Parker we have discovered a new 'Philosopher' of exceptional gifts; Mullings seemed to have acquired a newly-won lyrical eloquence in the part of Omar, and Miss Phyllis Lett sang her 'Beloved' music as richly as afiretime. Harty and his choral forces were thoroughly imbued with the Omarian spirit, and in a few respects the choral singing displayed qualities not hitherto revealed in this Choir. Hearing both Parts 1 and 2 renewed the old feeling of revolt against the unwisdom of isolating Part 1 in choral performances. Granted that the composer's pictorialism does not find such scope in the second part, yet his singular power for argument in music (again strikingly exemplified in his settings of Browning) is here developed to the utmost, and when Mullings and Parker vie with Bantock in underlining the poignancy or irony of Omar's philosophy of life and creation, the advantage of embodying Parts 1 and 2 in an evening scheme is felt with convincing force. The mental stimulus of those shattering, anarchistic chords of the closing pages of Part 2 does not desert one in a hurry, when hurled forth with such superb defiance as on this occasion.—Amongst the novelties heard during the month, first place must be given to Moeran's Rhapsody, on January 24, only heard hitherto, I believe, at Bournemouth. Its style is generally reminiscent of Delius, and although devoid of any definite strength or marked characteristics, he contrives to maintain and rivet the listener's attention. Its scoring is clear and free from miscalculated effects.—Busoni's illness kept him away from the February 7 concert, Fransella, the London Symphony flautist, appearing in Mozart's G major Flute Concerto, and later in a recently-written Flute Rhapsody with pianoforte accompaniment.—Harty's excursions into the lesser-known and appreciated Mozart territory resulted in a performance on February 14 of the Echo Nocturne for strings and horns, written for these instruments much as Di Lasso constructed his famous Echo madrigal. An ordinary orchestral platform is not a fitting setting for such a work; we miss any sense of height or distance. Despite this it proved much more generally acceptable than did the Flute Concerto. Harty's Pianoforte Concerto, also played on this date by Miss Myra Hess, we had heard a year ago, played by the composer. The impression strengthens that it is rather an orchestral rhapsody with a singularly attractive pianoforte part than a concerto on normal lines. The slow middle portion, with its suggestion of a distant carillon on a hot, drowsy summer's day was immensely impressive. This work dates from 1922, and was written during a summer holiday at Fiesole, in Italy.—Elgar's Enigma Variations received their tenth Hallé performance on this occasion. They were exquisitely played, and the pianissimo entry of the noble 'Nimrod' was amongst the impressive moments this season. Happy the Jaeger whose memory is enshrined for all time in music of such moving nobility.—Apart from Omar, already mentioned, the most noteworthy choral music was heard on February 6, when a recital was given by the following three choirs, all conducted by Mr. Alfred Higson: Sale and District Musical Society, Manchester Co-operative Wholesale Male-Voice Society, and Warrington Male-Voice Choral Union. The programme contributed by these choirs was really an epitome of the best stuff heard in recent years at the Lancashire competitive festivals in female-, male-, and mixed-voice composition.—The important chamber music of the period under review has included the visits of the Hungarian Quartet and of the Viennese Rosé Quartet (this to Blackpool) on February 11 and 12, followed on the 13th by the Catterall players, associated in the Strauss Pianoforte Quartet with Miss Lucy Pierce, and in the Schubert great String Quintet with Mr. Stuart Krussen. The String Quartet of the evening was the too rarely heard Nováček in E flat, given by these Catterall players with outstanding brilliance.—The Harty chamber concert a week earlier found him associated with one of the numerous younger quartets of the Manchester school—the Voorsanger, Grime, McCordall, Chapman, Beethoven's Ghost Trio, and Quartets by Schubert (A minor) and Dvořák (A) made up the programme.—At the Mid-day series, Beethoven's Hammerklavier B flat Sonata was given one of its rare Manchester performances on February 5, by Mr. Frank Merrick, and on February 12 the Edith Robinson Quartet played the second of the Rasoumovsky Quartets.—The Manchester 2ZY Wireless Orchestra made its début on the concert-platform on February 14, under Mr. Dan Godfrey, jun. H. C.

NEWCASTLE.—The first concert of Gosforth and District Choral Society on January 21, comprised Hiawatha's Wedding-Feast, Elgar's Weary Wind of the West, and Madrigals by Orlando Gibbons.—On January 20 the Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Edward Clark, played Chopin's Pianoforte Concerto, with Mr. Edgar Bainton as soloist, Haydn's fourth Symphony, and Stravinsky's Firebird.

NEWTOWN (MONTGOMERYSHIRE).—A Music Club has been formed under the auspices of the Recreation Society, and will hold fortnightly meetings. Newtown has already a Choral Society and an Orchestra.

NOTTINGHAM.—The William Woolley Choral Society was heard to great advantage on February 14, in a fine programme that included Madrigals by Benet, Weelkes, and John Ward, along with works by Cornelius, Elgar, Bantock, Bach, and Brahms.

OXFORD.—The Bach Choir, with orchestra, performed Berlioz's Faust on January 30, the soloists being Miss Bertha Steventon, Mr. Archibald Winter, Mr. Gordon Brown, and Mr. Reginald Jaques.—On January 27 the Elizabethan Singers sang Dr. Ernest Walker's Five Songs from England's Helicon and Gibbons's Cryes of London.—The music played during the week beginning February 11, at the performance of Hamlet by the University Dramatic Society, was particularly interesting. The Overture was a Fantasia by Byrd, scored for string orchestra, and another Fantasia was used as entr'acte. Incidental music included that composed by Henry and William Lawes and others for Milton's Comus, notably a March by Giles Farnaby and the Almain by William Lawes.

PLYMOUTH.—An orchestra has been formed in the Royal Dockyard, and, conducted by the Rev. G. F. Harrison Smith, gave a concert on February 14. Music by Gounod, Coleridge-Taylor (Dream Dances), &c., was played.

PORTSMOUTH.—On February 7 the Philharmonic Society performed Vaughan Williams's Sea Symphony, the principal singers being Miss Dorothy Silk and Mr. Clive Carey. The orchestra also played a Canadian Boat Song, by E. T. Sweeting, conducted by the composer, and Holst's Country Song and Marching Song.—At the first of the children's concerts, on February 9, arranged by a municipal committee, the Royal Marine Band, conducted by Lieut. R. P. O'Donnell, played Ansell's Children's Overture and Children's Suite, Elgar's Wand of Youth and Slumber Song, and music by Schumann. The conductor gave explanatory remarks. The same band gave a Wagner programme in the evening.—On January 16, North End Choral Society, which has hitherto been confined to light opera, performed The Ancient Mariner, conducted by Mr. Ernest Birch, assisted by an efficient orchestra. The principals were Miss Doris Montrase, Mr. Archibald Winter, and Mr. David Walters. The Society has decided to perform The Golden Legend in May.—A vocal and pianoforte recital was given at Mikado Hall on January 12, by Miss Dorothy Godwin-Foster and Mr. Reginald Paul. The singer was heard in several of her own songs, and others by Quilter, Grieg, and Cornelius.—The spring series of Saturday concerts opened on January 19, when the band of the Royal Marines, conducted by Lieut. R. P. O'Donnell, played Saint-Saëns's Phæton Symphonic-Poem, Dvořák's Carnetial Overture, and German's Welsh Rhapsody.

RHOS.—The Male Choir, conducted by Mr. Dan Lovett, at the annual concert on February 6 sang Lovatt's Hereward the Wake and Dr. Protheroe's Nidaros.

SEATON.—A new Choral Society was formed on February 1 for Seaton and District, Mr. W. C. Walton, conductor of Axminster Choral Society, being appointed conductor.

SHREWSBURY.—The Philharmonic Society gave its first concert this season on January 24. The work performed was Berlioz's Faust, the principals being Miss José Fearon, Mr. Gwynne Davies, and Mr. Charles Knowles. There was a very large audience. Mr. F. G. Rowland conducted.

SIDMOUTH.—The committee of ladies who engineer the winter chamber concerts secured the Marie Motto Quartet on January 17, and Quartets by Brahms (C minor), Debussy (G minor), and Haydn (G major) were played.

SWANSEA.—Sir Walford Davies is opening the University College Music Society's season (a series of nine lecture-concerts) with a programme of four lectures on 'The Foundations of Music.' At the first of these, on January 29, the illustrations played by the lecturer and Miss Sybil Eaton were Violin Sonatas by Bach (E major), Mozart (C major), Brahms (E minor), and Beethoven (Kreutzer).

TORQUAY.—The Winter Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Ernest W. Goss, included in the programmes for the week ending January 19, a Suite Moderne, by F. Rosse, Haydn's Symphony in D, Elgar's Chansons de Nuit and de Matin, a Suite, Woodland Pictures, by Percy Fletcher, and Coleridge-Taylor's Four Characteristic Waltzes. During the week ending January 26 Coleridge-Taylor's Suite de Concert, the Fingal's Cave Overture, Foulds's Keltic Suite, Grieg's Violin Sonata in C minor and Elegiac Melodies, and Mozart's Symphony in B flat were played.—Mr. Ernest W. Goss's Orchestra played the Polonaise from Tchaikovsky's Eugène Onegin, a Violin Concerto by F. Seitz (with Mr. R. G. Foster as soloist), and a Suite, Fantasia Ballet, by Pares-Popy, on January 30. Subsequent programmes during the week included a Suite of three pieces by Reginald Somervell, a Suite, My Lady Dragon-fly, by H. Finck, and Weber's Quartet in B flat. On January 27 a MS. work by J. G. Sparrowe, Orchestral Introduction to a Psalm Cantata, and the Fingal's Cave Overture were played. The programme on February 6 included Roger Quilter's Suite, As You Like It, some movements from Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony, and a Suite, Mascarade, by Lacombe. Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Trio in D minor, a Suite Archaique, by Gabriel Marie, and Tchaikovsky's Capriccio Italien were played on February 9, Mr. Goss being the pianist.

WESTERN-SUPER-MARE.—The Choral Society made a praiseworthy and ambitious effort in Knightstone Pavilion on February 5 in performing The Dream of Gerontius. The choir numbered a hundred and fifty voices and the Bristol Symphony Orchestra collaborated, playing before the oratorio Ethel Smyth's Overture to The Wreckers. Dr. G. J. Cooper conducted, and the principals were Miss Margaret Balfour, Mr. Seymour Dossor, and Mr. Frederick Taylor.

WIVELISCOMBE.—The Male Choir of thirty-two voices sang at the annual concert on February 12, Mendelssohn's To the Sons of Art. Mr. A. J. L. Braybrooks conducted.

IRELAND

Mr. John Coates visited Belfast on January 18, and attracted an overflowing audience to Ulster Hall. In a programme selected from ancient and modern sources, his vocalism was a sheer delight, and he was vehemently applauded for some excerpts from Dowland and Morley. Mr. H. F. Ellingford, organist to the Liverpool Corporation (formerly organist of St. George's, Belfast), contributed some Bach selections and Wagner transcriptions. Mr. Berkeley Mason was the pianist.—At Ulster Hall, on February 1, the outstanding attraction was Mr. Robert Radford. The other artists included Miss Amy Neill, Mr. Frank Mummery, Miss Dora Labette, Miss Muriel Brunskill, and Signor Lenghi Cellini (replacing Mr. Tudor Davies). In view of the proceeds of the concert being devoted to Railway charities, it is pleasant to add that there was a full house.—On the following night the Hall was again well-filled at the Popular concert, to which Mr. John Goss, a pleasing baritone, contributed some Elizabethan numbers, including Thomas Campion's I care not for these ladies (1601).—On February 6, an excellent concert was given for the benefit of Nazareth Lodge Boys' Home, Belfast, the artists including Madame Hunter, Miss Molly O'Callaghan, Mr. J. C. Jenkins, Mr. Hugh Carson, and Miss Anita Loretto.—The concert of the Philharmonic Society, also at Ulster Hall, on February 8, was notable for a fine performance of Mozart's Requiem Mass, under the baton of Mr. E. Godfrey Brown. Among the artists were Miss Margaret Harrison, Miss Victoria Gordon, Mr. Fred Hughes, Mr. Sterling Mortimer, Mr. Ernest Stoneley, and Mr. George Smith, with Mr. J. H. MacBratney as accompanist.

Miss Youra Muller gave a pianoforte recital at the Theatre Royal, Dublin, on January 21, under the auspices of the Royal Dublin Society. She displayed a fine, though arid, technique.—On January 28, Dr. Larchet's String and Wind Orchestra played under the same auspices, to a very large audience, and the Catterall Quartet was similarly heard on February 4.—On February 11, M. Leff Pouishnov was heard in a pianoforte programme, winning much approval.—Dr. George H. P. Hewson gave two interesting organ recitals on the fine Willis organ in St. Patrick's Cathedral on January 29 and 31, in aid of the Choir Superannuation Fund.—Miss Petita O'Hara gave a violin recital at Engineers' Hall, Dublin, on January 31 (with Miss Rhoda Coghill as accompanist). She was heard in the Bruch Concerto in G minor, and the Bach Sonata. Mr. Joseph O'Neill contributed vocal solos.—The Irish Army Band (No. 1), under Col. Fritz Brase, gave a fine concert at the Theatre Royal, on February 3, with songs by Mr. Michael Gallagher.—Elgar's beautiful Quintet, Op. 84, had its first performance at Dublin on February 6, at St. Ultan's Chamber Music Concert, at Engineers' Hall, and was much appreciated by a large audience.—Much interest centred in the joint recital by Dame Clara Butt and M. Ysaye at the Theatre Royal on February 9. The old songs still thrilled the audience, and Ysaye recalled old triumphs in his Veracini and Vieuxtemps excerpts, as well as in his own transcriptions. Mr. Ivor Newton was an admirable accompanist.—The same artists were announced to appear at Ulster Hall, Belfast, on February 11, but the bereavement of M. Ysaye (his wife died two days previously) necessitated the substitution of Melsa and Miss Adela Verne.—Mr. Joseph O'Mara's popular Opera Company opened a three weeks' season at the Gaiety Theatre on February 11, with Carmen. A novelty announced for February 15 was the first production of The Apostle of St. Otmar, of which details will be furnished next month.

The Rev. Charles R. Milligan, a former pupil of Dr. Grattan Flood, has been appointed minor canon of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin.

Messrs. Pigott & Co., music publishers, of Dublin, celebrated their Centenary at the Scala Restaurant, on January 23.

The syllabus of the Feis Ceoil announces that the adjudicators for the competitions to be held at Dublin from May 12 to 17, are Dr. Percy Hull, Miss Denne Parker, Mr. Dan Price, Mr. W. H. Read, and Mr. Lloyd Powell. An additional competition, viz., the Fitzgerald Cup, for advanced organ playing, has been endowed by Mr. Desmond Fitzgerald.

Musical Notes from Abroad

GERMANY

BETTER CONDITIONS OF MUSICAL LIFE

There is a slow but steady awaking of musical life in Germany. Performing artists who have been honouring wealthier places with their presence, will no doubt come back so soon as Germany's ability to pay them is proved. Lately, however, even the cleverest agents cannot afford to give the public enough of those foreign artists who rank above music. Though we never forget that performing artists of high rank add to musical life only the brilliant façade, whereas the background of musical culture is of far greater importance, yet most unhappily also the essential part of musical practice depends to a certain extent upon material circumstances. We are therefore glad to notice signs of an enterprise more artistic in its aims being maintained in such centres as Berlin, Frankfurt, and Cologne.

'PIERROT LUNAIRE' AND 'SACRÉ DU PRINTEMPS'

A clear symptom of this enterprise is the performance of two works which may be considered as representing modern spirit in the proper sense of the word, but from two different standpoints. Pierrot Lunaire, having travelled all over Europe, has returned to Berlin, whence it started. The work need not be discussed here. I firmly believe that if we accept the verses we must perforce accept the music, for it happens to be the natural expression of all that is romantically grotesque in the poem; but, as music always does, it goes outside the bounds of literary matter. Thus, without containing either beautiful or simply characteristic music, it is a work of historical importance. The performance, for which Marie Gutheil-Schroder had been called from the Vienna Staatsoper, was excellent. Dr. Fritz Stiedry, a conductor of high sensibility, gave it the stamp of his own personality, and Artur Schnabel, the well-known pianist, showed the fullest freedom of improvisation.

Still more revolutionary seemed the programme with which Wilhelm Furtwängler surprised the peaceful subscribers of the Philharmonic Concerts. Stravinsky's Sacré du Printemps is, for people accustomed only to Beethoven and Brahms, something like an offence. Such courage would be deserving of more praise if it had not given back with the left hand what it had taken with the right. Poor Stravinsky was surrounded by representative examples of Handel and Brahms, which seemed to protest violently against his neighbourhood—as did some of the hearers, who sensed an encroachment on their privileges in this music of undiscussed character and importance.

YOUNG GERMAN COMPOSERS

The first concert of the German section of the International Society for Contemporary Music was wholly devoted to works for small orchestra or chamber music works by young composers, three of whom were Germans, the fourth being Arthur Bliss.

The programme opened with a so-called Divertimento by Ernst Krenek, of Vienna, who had for years lived at Berlin. Recently married to a daughter of Mahler, he has returned to Vienna. Such a work by Krenek, who has gained a reputation as a strong advocate of obstinate polyphony, will never be so entertaining as its title promises. The Divertimento, however, reveals him as seeking to reconcile opposed idioms. On the whole the mixture of contrasts is not convincing. The following item, Frauentanz, for soprano voice with chamber music accompaniment, was much more impressive. A young, nearly unknown composer, Kurt Weill, has herein expressed, with poetic feeling, the substance of some mediæval verses. The music may not reveal much inventive power, but it avoids shapelessness, and in it the composer invests his ideas with a form of his own. Max Butting, who came next, proved rather disappointing. He has not yet got rid of academic methods, which are imperfectly concealed by some modern moments. As already stated, the last item, Rout, was by Arthur Bliss. It proved to be the real divertimenti of the evening, and was applauded as the work of a composer who is not in the least problematic, and yet knows how to express the intelligent gaiety of his nature.

The Novembergruppe, a Society of modern painters, is making concessions to music. Some masterly songs by Philipp Jarnach and a Quartet by Kurt Weill, were the real attraction of a recent evening. ADOLF WEISSMANN.

NEW YORK

With two performances nearly every day in two opera houses and the three principal concert halls, besides numerous less important musical happenings in less important places, New York may truly be said to be deluged with music in mid-winter.

The Metropolitan Opera Company gives extra matinées for various charities, and extra evenings sometimes for charity and sometimes to commemorate certain events. An important one belonging to the latter class was a celebration of Antonio Scotti's 'silver wedding' with this organization. It is said that no great artist has ever before sung for twenty-five consecutive years in any opera-house in the world. The work chosen was Tosca, its hundred and twenty-ninth performance at the Metropolitan, and (the exact figures are wanting) about the hundred and fifteenth time that Scotti had appeared on that stage in his famous rôle of Scarpia—the part has belonged exclusively to him for more than a decade. The fifteen (or more) Floria Toscas who have appeared with him include Eames, Ternina, Fremstadt, Destinn, Farrar, and the present representative, Marie Jeritza.

On the following evening the Metropolitan produced two novelties—La Habañera, with text (French) and music by Raoul Laparra, and I Compagnacci, an Italian comedy by Primo Riccitelli. If Mr. Gatti-Casazza thought the events of the evening devoted to Mr. Scotti too frivolous for the dignity of the Metropolitan Opera House he could have offered nothing better as an antidote than the gloom of La Habañera. Laparra, though a Frenchman, lived in Spain for some time on account of his health, and laid the scene of his opera there. Was it his ill-health or his material surroundings that made his fancy turn to the describing of fraternal jealousy, murder, a spook, and death and damnation? The story has not the elements of good tragedy. It is unwholesome and rather sickening. The best scene is in the first Act—and the best music also, for it is effective and has some power, though little originality. The opera decreases in interest as it progresses. It was well that La Habañera was first on the programme and followed by I Compagnacci. The comedy put us in good humour and kept us laughing till the end. It is a 15th-century story relating to the excommunication of Savonarola, and it attempts to decide whether the act was justifiable or not by having monks walk through a fire unburned! Just before the test is to be made, rain comes and puts out the fire. Though the music is trivial, the story is intensely amusing. A love scene between Miss Rethberg and Mr. Gigli afforded some very good singing. It is always a pleasure to hear such beautiful voices as this soprano and tenor possess, and nothing can be totally uninteresting on the stage when we have such great comedians as Mr. Didur and Mr. Bada to caper before us.

The orchestra appearing at the Manhattan is the State Symphony, organized last Fall especially for Mr. Stransky. Concerts are being given by this new combination at the Metropolitan Opera House and at Carnegie Hall, and although time for rehearsals has been limited, the work of the players shows how excellently they are being drilled by Mr. Stransky.

In the concert-halls so much music of all kinds has been given lately that it would take a volume even to mention the performances. The unique events have been two 'one-man' affairs—composer and performer being the same to the exclusion of all others except the orchestra. The first was a Paderewski concert given by the New York Symphony Society, when his Symphony in B minor was played, followed by his Concerto in A minor. Both compositions have been heard before. The Symphony was first given at Boston and New York in 1909, and a few years later was heard in London. It is inordinately long—an hour and ten minutes is the time occupied in its performance. The theme is Poland, and as it was written in some of that country's saddest days, much of the music is in the minor key and is rather depressing. Much finer as a composition is the Concerto, which was superbly played by Paderewski, but which would not be very attractive in the hands of a mediocre pianist.

The Philadelphia Orchestra gave a concert devoted exclusively to the works of Josef Hofmann. It began with the second Concerto, played before a private audience about twenty years ago, and which had its first public performance at Petrograd in 1911. First performances in America have just taken place at Philadelphia and New York. There is no trace of modernism in its writing. It is old fashioned, with tuneful themes well wrought, and magnificently played by the composer. A group of solos was then given, which had been heard here before. Then followed a number for orchestra alone, The Haunted Castle, and another called Chromaticon, a dialogue for pianoforte and orchestra. Both are skilfully written, but that is about all there is to say. Paderewski and Hofmann will both go down into history as much greater pianists than composers.

The musical catastrophe of the winter has been the collapse of the Wagnerian Opera Company. When, not many months ago, the first season was announced, considerable interest was felt in the venture, as many music-lovers had heard so little Wagner since 1917, and good-sized audiences flocked to hear the Ring, Die Meistersinger, and other operas we had been deprived of for so long. Such shortcomings as a poor orchestra and totally inadequate scenery were forgiven, for the voices were good, and the interpretations were fairly good also. This year the State Symphony Orchestra, engaged for the Wagnerian Opera Company, was quite satisfactory, the other conditions remaining unchanged—good voices and poor scenery. The announcement in the prospectus of four Mozart operas, with a sprinkling of such inferior music as that of d'Albert, Halévy, Offenbach, Smetana, &c., seems to have been a fatal mistake; but perhaps one of the strongest reasons of the failure of the Company this year was the utter impossibility of the self-satisfied German mind to understand American standards. Although the opening performance —Die Meistersinger—was quite a good one, it did not arouse great enthusiasm, as the opera had been superbly revived by the Metropolitan Company six weeks before. On the second night, Rienzi was produced to a half-empty house, and from that moment the Company was doomed. Nobody wanted to hear or see such a deadly dull affair, even if the great master did write it. Rhinegold, on the third day, could not possibly be received as it was in 1923, when it had not been heard for seven years. It was no better given, and it fell flat. The Company struggled along with thin audiences, giving one Mozart opera, d'Albert's Toten Augen, and the impossible Evangelist of Kienzl. For two weeks and one day it survived, and then came bankruptcy.

Many of the singers belonging to the Wagnerian Company had fine voices, and among those who specially distinguished themselves were Adolph Schoepflin, Robert Hutt, Heinrich Knotte, Desidor Zador, Elsa Alsen, Otilie Metzger, Elsa Gentner-Fischer, and Lorentz Hoellischer.

The fashion of changing conductors in the winter continues. Mr. Van Hoogstraten departs from the Philharmonic, and Mengelberg comes to take his place, showing his strong personality by giving at his first concert such hackneyed works as Beethoven's Fifth, Strauss's Don Juan, and the Tannhäuser Overture, and arousing his large audience to a tremendous pitch of enthusiasm. Few conductors have this power, and such as have are apt to overstep the bounds and become merely sensational. Mengelberg does this sometimes, but on this occasion he did not. If he would always keep his balance he might easily aspire to the title of the best conductor in the world.

Mr. Damrosch is a conductor of the placid type, a method that is sometimes very satisfactory, but in the case of the interminable Beethoven Cycle of seven concerts becomes wearisome, more especially so as Mr. Damrosch delved into the archives and raked up unknown or forgotten compositions of Beethoven which had better have remained there. To be obliged to listen to Rienzi does not add to our admiration for Wagner, and to be obliged to listen to Wellington's Victory decreases our reverence for Beethoven's name. Mr. Damrosch has departed to Florida for his winter vacation, and Bruno Walter has again come to take his place for a few weeks. Let us hope that the name of Beethoven will not appear on any of his programmes.

Orchestral novelties that deserve mention have been very scarce. Stravinsky has given us Le Rossignol, played by the New York Symphony Society, and that delightful comedy Renard, presented by the International Composers' Guild; also Le Sacré du Printemps, played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Pierre Monteux, who conducted this remarkable composition when it was first produced at Paris in 1913 by Diaghilev. On that occasion it received five performances at Paris, and was given in London in July of the same year, M. Monteux still conducting. When it was first produced at Paris and London in 1913 it was received with a mixture of hisses and cheers, but when heard at Paris in concert form in 1914 it received only cheers and applause, and was pronounced to be Stravinsky's greatest work. Its first American performance was by the Philadelphia Orchestra, under Leopold Stokowski, at Philadelphia, in March, 1922, and its first New York performance comes nearly two years later. It was welcomed at New York by a large and attentive audience, which applauded vigorously for several minutes at the end. Why a hearing has been so long denied us is hard to explain; and as we listen to these pounding rhythms we are reminded that there are some who would prefer to hear it first with the Ballet, in spite of Stravinsky's assertion that the 'Ballet and not the music is the accompaniment.' It may be so to him, and to others who have heard repeated performances of this wonderful composition, but to many of us who have learnt to love Petrushka in concert form after seeing the Ballet many times, it seems as if Le Sacré du Printemps could be better understood in concert form if we had previously seen it in Ballet form. The energetic force of this Stravinsky work is beyond question, and it is exciting and masterful in its grip on our emotions; but music has an intellectual as well as an emotional side, and some of us cannot help feeling that the Ballet would better reveal this than so many printed words of description.

The list of pianoforte, violin, and vocal recitals is already a formidable one—somewhere in the neighbourhood of two hundred and fifty. Samuel Dushkin (violin) has apparently a promising future, and Delia Reinhardt, in the rôle of Sieglinde, at the Metropolitan, has made a most favourable impression. Among our old favourites, Kreisler and Heifetz have lately returned to New York, and Backhaus has come once more to America.

M. H. FLINT.

ROME

The principal opera season opened at the Costanzi on Boxing Night, with a revival of peculiar artistic and historic interest—the Vestale of Gaspare Spontini. This work, in which critics are wont to see the fountain springs of Lohengrin, of Mosé, of Norma, and of Africana, to say nothing of the motive transported bodily from the Finale of the second Act to Barbière, was given for the first time at Paris on December 15, 1807. Nearly forty-eight years ago Mancinelli attempted to revive the work at the old Apollo Theatre at Rome, and was hooted for his pains. What may be called the modern triumph of Vestale is the merit of Edoardo Vitale, who directed the work at the Costanzi. He revived the opera at the Scala in 1908, and later transported it to the Opera of Parigi, for the great representation given for the benefit of the victims of the Calabrian earthquake. Spontini himself, with no lack of vanity, claimed to have made a revolution with Vestale, and said to Wagner, 'After Gluck, I alone have made a great revolution with my Vestale, by the introduction of the retarded sixth in the harmony and the big drum in the orchestra.' Wagner held the opera in high esteem, and on Spontini's death wrote an article—recalling the performance of the work at the Hoftheater at Dresden, in 1844, when he himself was Kapellmeister of the theatre—which thus concludes: 'This meeting at Dresden, although it furnished some ridiculous incidents, raised in me a sympathy mixed almost with terror for this man, whose equal I was never to meet.'

It is interesting to see what impression this more than centenarian work made on a modern public. Adriano Belli, the competent critic of the Corriere, says:

'The irreparable damage of time has fallen on certain pages, which perhaps, were precisely those which most pleased our distant ancestors—e.g., the triumphal march of the first Act, and the Finale of the second. The recitatives, which in 1807 doubtless were considered of a splendid force, to-day, notwithstanding cuts, are simply wearying, and the Funeral March which so moved our forefathers, and has come down to us as "celebrated," seems extremely empty and arid. But as a recompense for this, those pages which at that time were coldly received and declared incomprehensible, seem to-day to have marvellous potency and vitality. We may cite the matutinal hymn of the Vestals, the air of Julia, "In nome degli Dei" in the first Act, the Evening Hymn, the duet between Julia and Licinio, and the scene of the Vestals' confession in the second Act.'

Immediately after Vestale came a representation of Boito's Mephistophele, followed by a work new to Rome, although it was a triumphant success eighteen years ago at Berlin, the Quattro Rusteghi of Wolf-Ferrari—a comic-opera founded on the well-known comedy of Goldoni. This work was received with unbounded enthusiasm, although some critics have hinted that the composer imitated the comic-opera of the old school, disregarding the new manner introduced by Verdi in Falstaff, and in our own time continued by Puccini in his Gianni Schicchi and by Riccitelli in his Compagnacci.

The first representation of Salome at the Costanzi, on February 2, under the direction of Richard Strauss, threatened to have a tragical dénouement, but fortunately terminated in a splendid triumph both for the distinguished visitor and for the artists who admirably interpreted his opera. The work was preceded by a very badly prepared edition of Riccitelli's Compagnacci, an opera which received its première last year, but which it was impossible to enjoy, owing to sketchy preparation and the evident incapability of the company. Its inclusion now was, of course, due to the fact that it had been found necessary to adjoin something to Salome in order to give the public a reasonably lengthy spectacle for its money, something like the classic association of Pagliacci and Cavaliere—but it is to be questioned whether much is really gained by such 'matrimony.' Would not the public prefer to see one opera, even short, provided that it is presented with every possible preparation, rather than be obliged to suffer the presentation of one badly prepared work in order to occupy the three hours which has become a ritual?

The entry of Richard Strauss was greeted with a warm and lengthy ovation, after which Salome began its melodious career. Shortly after the duet between John and Salome, however, a lamp borne by a super began to leak, and lighted oil fell on one of the ballerine, creating a moment of panic on the stage. The prima donna lost her nerve, and endeavoured to jump into the orchestra, but was fortunately withheld by the vigorous hand of the manager, who appeared in the nick of time. Cries of 'fire' were raised in the theatre, but the orchestra came to the rescue with the Marcia reale, and it was soon found possible to quell the incipient terror. After an interval devoted to the restoration of the prima donna, the scene was opened afresh. Making allowances for the previous excitement, the execution was excellent, and the success of the first order.

During his visit to Rome, Strauss directed two concerts at the Augusteum, the first including Beethoven's Leonora No. 3, and the Burlesque for pianoforte and orchestra, Le Bourgeois Gentilhomme, and his own Alpine Symphony. The second concert included Beethoven's C major Symphony.

At the Philharmonic Society, a concert of Italian music was followed by a visit from Walter Gieseking, who played a programme comprising three Sonatas of Scarlatti, Beethoven's Sonata in C minor, Schubert's Fantasy in C major, Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 14, and some minor compositions of Debussy. Also at the same hall, a notable novelty has been the début of a new Trio—new in the sense of association—comprising Alfred Casella, Mario Corti, and Gilbert Crepax. This combination has given two concerts, the first including Brahms's Trio in B major, Ravel's Trio in tre tempi, and Pizetti's Sonata in F for 'cello and pianoforte. The last-named work, heard for the first time at Rome, was received with great appreciation. The second concert provided Schumann's Trio in D minor and Beethoven's in D major, and, as representative of modern works, Franco Alfani's Sonata in D for violin and pianoforte.

At the Augusteum the sudden refusal of Carl Muck to fulfil his contract and give a concert has occasioned legal action. His place had to be filled at the last moment by Molinari, the official director of the Augusteum, who conducted Handel's Concerto Grosso in D minor, Haydn's Symphony in D major, a Suite from Stravinsky's Petrushka, and a new work by Tommasini entitled Tuscan Landscapes, described as a 'rhapsody on popular themes.' On the first Sunday in January, Mascagni directed a concert at the Augusteum, in which his own composition, Looking at the Santa Theresa of Bernini, written for the Augusteum, and there produced last year, was repeated.

The Amici della Musica has the merit of having invited to Rome Dr. Landshoff, the director of the Bach Society of Munich, accompanied by Frau Landshoff and Fräulein Debueser (vocalists), who gave an interesting concert devoted to examples of Italian bel canto, of which Dr. Landshoff is a noted student, and of which he has edited several volumes in the Peters edition.

The Accademia Sta. Cecilia has had as visitors the well-known Poulet Quartet, which is recognised for its authoritative interpretations of Debussy and Chausson. The Quartet gave four concerts, devoted chiefly to the works of these composers, and of other representatives of the modern school.

LEONARD PEYTON.

TORONTO

The momentary scarcity of news, due to the Christmas season and its attractions, leaves me space to draw attention to a concert which has left an impression of the deepest sort. Although sometimes spoken of as the 'leading centre of choral activity in the North American Continent,' Toronto found that there is a lesson or two yet to be learnt when the Ukrainian National Chorus sang here last month. This vital little body of forty-five men and women, under the inspiring direction of Alexander Koshetz, shows perfectly amazing vocal technique and clarity of diction, besides revealing an intensity of emotional fervour which is nothing less than startling to our placid Anglo-Saxon temperament. Humming is a fine art with these Ukrainians. They have developed such definite string tone-colour that they can at a moment's notice reproduce the most realistic effect of orchestral accompaniment. Their national part-songs, of which Ulianka cut the silken grass (Stupnitsky) and The wind is whispering on the house (Lyssenko) are outstanding examples, would well repay more than casual study.

Luigi von Kunits is steadily establishing his New Symphony Orchestra. At the fifth, sixth, and seventh 'Twilight' concerts he presented the Ride of the Valkyries, the Euryanthe Overture, Tchaikovsky's Pathetic Symphony, and a grateful novelty of colourful impressions—Louis Victor Saar's From the Mountain Kingdom of the Great North-West. As visiting artists, Boris Hambourg ('cello) played the Tchaikovsky Variations, Mr. Frank Biachford (violin) the Max Bruch Concerto, and Miss Nellye Gill sang 'Elsa's Dream' from Lohengrin.

Edward Johnson, our one worthy Canadian tenor, is becoming as popular in his own country as he was in Italy, where the name of Eduardo di Giovanni was universal even when Caruso reigned. His splendid programme, ranging from famous tenor arias to groups of old Italian, British, and French folk-songs, drew a packed and keenly enthusiastic house. Of equal merit was the pure vocalism of Freida Hempel in a Jenny Lind costume recital. This inimitable artist undoubtedly possesses the most beautiful voice, tonally, heard here for many a year. Dame Clara Butt and party were well received on her return visit, and Anna Pavlova, with her accomplished ballet, satisfied (as no other organization can) our craving for something of deeper significance than the bare rhythm of modern dancing.

The Symphony Orchestra recently presented two works by Toronto composers—W. O. Forsyth's bright and colourful Romanza, which was first performed at Leipzig under Jarro, in 1889, and a violently ultra-modern Concerto (No. 2), by Colin McPhee, with the composer at the pianoforte. Convincing readings were given of the Peer Gynt Suite, Beethoven's Leonore No. 3 and Symphony (No. 5), the Tannhäuser Overture, and Liszt's Les Préludes. Mr. Lionel Bilton played the Liszt-Popper Hungarian Rhapsody.

Paderewski returned on January 7, and was heard in a splendid programme which included the Bach G minor Fantasia and Fugue. Incidentally he drew an audience over five hundred in excess of the capacity of the hall, which is three thousand. Mark Hambourg, who had not been heard here for many years, seems somewhat to have changed his tactics, his well-remembered boisterousness having given place to a calmer and more convincing style of playing. He took the greatest care with the Beethoven C major Sonata, Op. 2, No. 3. Moritz Rosenthal, who is almost unknown at Toronto, gave one of the most thoroughly enjoyable recitals of the year. His miraculous technique does not for a moment hamper him either as musician or as artist. He played the Beethoven Appassionata as we seldom hear it done—with unquestionable authority.

The Chamber Music Society arranged a folk-song and dance evening, and the programme included some early harpsichord music. Mr. Murray Davey, of the Hambourg Conservatory, sang groups of old British and Basque melodies; a class of dancers from the Regal Road School interspersed sets of four-, six-, and eight-part figures; and Madame Mabel Prestwich Harrison chose representative works of Lulli, Rameau, and Couperin (fls).

The last of Mr. J. Campbell McInnes's 'Nine o'Clock' recitals was devoted to a paper on 'Modern Song,' with musical examples. Vaughan Williams's cycle of sonnets by Rossetti, The House of Life, was followed by groups of songs by contemporary Canadian composers—Dr. Healey Willan (Keats's sonnet To Sleep), Dr. Ernest MacMillan, and Mr. Leo Smith.

The Oratorio Society (Dr. Edward Broome) produced The Messiah at its annual concert, using a local orchestra and soloists, with the exception of the bass, Mr. Fred Patton, who came from New York. At the time of writing the Canadian Operatic Society, under the direction of Messrs. George and Reginald Stewart, is giving a successful week of The Geisha at the Princess's.

Alberto Salvi, harp, Claud Biggs, pianoforte (Hart House Sunday Evening Concerts), and Madame Gwladys Jones-Morgan, a prominent Welsh soprano, have been heard in recital. H. C. F.

VIENNA

ZEMLINSKY'S 'DER ZWERG'

For the story of Der Zwerg, M. Zemlinsky has gone, not for the first time, to Oscar Wilde. It is a free adaptation of The Birthday of the Infanta, with a princess eighteen years old—for operatic purposes—and a dwarf of 'perhaps twenty years—perhaps as old as the sun.' Wilde's little Infanta becomes a hysterical young Strindbergian female, and the temptation becomes a morbid Freudian affair. Happily the music catches none of the hysteria. What Zemlinsky has set to music is not the story of the cruel Infanta, but the drama of the poor hunchback. To one leitmotif of the princess the dwarf has three. The music is that of a highly-cultured musician who has mastered his craft. Zemlinsky's score is not 'modern'—not the sort that Arnold Schönberg (his brother-in-law) would write. It may be intellectual rather than elemental in places, but its subtle, lyric beauty and high artistic taste are admirable. Zemlinsky's treatment of themes is as excellent as his command of orchestral colouring.

The performance, under Karl Alwin, and with Aagaard-Oestvig and Maria Rajdl in the leading rôles, was highly satisfactory. But the outward circumstances which accompanied the première, and chiefly the passive resistance practices of the Staatsoper management, were truly humiliating. 'Nemo propheta in patria' is nowhere more true than in Austria.

COMPOSERS

The first Symphony of Eduard Erdman, which was heard recently, suggests a more modern Richard Strauss of the early days. Rugged, virile force, rather than polished smoothness, is as evident in Erdman's music as it is in his pianoforte playing. By way of contrast we had an exhibition of Henri Marteau as a dilettante composer in a number of instrumental, vocal, and chamber works. The strikingly unoriginal and sentimental Schildlieder—which Heinrich Rehkemper sang excellently, with the composer interpreting the viola obbligato part—were a forceful example of 'Virtuosenmusik': a variant of the ill-fated 'Kapellmeister-musik.'

The second of the monthly concerts given by the Vienna group of the I.S.C.M. proved encouraging in its outward aspect. Attendance was so large that many visitors had to be turned away. The programme included four interesting songs from Paul Hindemith's Op. 16, a new Sonata for oboe and pianoforte by Hugo Kauder, who, along with Egon Kornauth, counts among the most sincere and moderately modern of the younger Vienna composers (Kornauth's latest work, a melodious Pianoforte Trio, was heard on another occasion); four posthumous and hitherto unheard duets for female voices, by Max Reger; and a number of pianoforte pieces from Zoltán Kodály's Op. 3. These, though of earlier date, revealed more of the present-day Kodály than his Violoncello Sonata, Op. 4, which Friedrich Buxbaum had previously performed in connection with Tibor Szatmari, a Hungarian pianist. It is a grateful and rhapsodical piece, but still entangled in the Debussyian idiom. The slow movement from Kodály's Sonata for violoncello solo, very well played by Joachim Stutschewsky, from Zurich, repeated the success which it had had at the last Salzburg Festival. Krenek's Salzburg Quartet was again played by the Amar-Hindemith Quartet, with a fluency and a balance of dynamic effect which rendered this difficult work lucid to an astonishing degree.

CONDUCTORS AND SOLOISTS

Paul von Klenau and Rudolf Nilius have been alternately filling the place of Ferdinand Löwe with the Konzertverein during the latter's illness. One of the few novelties promised for this year's series has been a Merry Serenade by the Reger pupil, Josef Haas, which proved solid but colourless and uninspired music of the cumbersome German sort. Another competitor for Löwe's place seems to be Erich Kleiber, a Viennese conductor now prominently engaged with the Berlin Opera, whose all-Beethoven début programme compelled admiration, especially for the delicate dynamic shadings in the Allegretto movement of the Seventh.

Knapppertsbusch, from Munich, is one of the two conductors chosen to divide between themselves the inheritance of Wilhelm Furtwängler, who is but a rare guest at Vienna this season. The majority of the recent orchestral concerts were directed by several hitherto unknown conductors, and, be it said, with great success. Frank Waller, an American, conducted Mahler's fourth Symphony to the satisfaction of the composer's widow, and created a splendid impression with Vaughan Williams's interestingly archaic Fantasy on a theme of Tallis, for two string orchestras. His record also included a rather Straussian Habañera, by Louis Aubert, the Frenchman, and a number of works similarly new to Vienna. A two days' Tchaikovsky Festival, with an interesting and far from hackneyed programme, was conducted by Dr. S. Rumschisky, the learned and dignified Russian artist domiciled in London, who on this occasion intensified the excellent impression created here last year. His success was such as to result in an invitation for him to replace Franz Schalk as conductor of a subscription concert—an unusual honour. Eugen Pabst, from Hamburg, introduced a new Konzertstück for pianoforte and orchestra, written especially for and marvellously played by Paul Wittgenstein, a remarkable one-armed pianist for whom Franz Schmidt has composed Variations on a theme of Beethoven, and for whom Erich Wolfgang Korngold is now writing a Pianoforte Concerto for one hand alone, with orchestra.

Walter Gieseking, the marvellous German pianist, had a series of triumphs in Marx's mastodontic Romantic Pianoforte Concerto, in the Emperor Concerto, and in his own recital. His novelty was an amusing Viennese Rhapsody by Castelnuovo-Tedesco, in the three movements of which the same theme appears in three different and witty disguises—as a parodistic Biedermeyer Waltz, as a humorous Serenade, and as a weird Fox-trot labelled Memento mori. The last-named apparently cloaks a sarcasm against what was once considered 'the dying city.' More than usual success fell to Rudolf Serkin, the one time child-prodigy and now a pianist of excellent qualities. Philip Scharf, a young American violinist, attracted attention for his small but beautiful tone and a more than ordinarily developed musicianly style, and Rudolf Kolisch broke the tiresome routine of hackneyed violin programmes by a performance of Weber's Four Pieces, and of the Cinema Fantasy on themes from Milhaud's Le beauf sur le toit—a clever but too extended parody on contemporary 'movie' music with its cloyingly sentimental strains and trashy dance rhythms, and on the virtuoso style of its exponents.

The survival of the virtuoso mannerism even in our musically advanced era was forcibly demonstrated by Jan Kubelik who, after an absence of several years, returned to Vienna matured in age but not in style. The Beethoven Concerto is even to-day as far removed from his purely technical—and not always infallibly finished—playing as ever it was. An almost sensational success, however, was achieved by Eddy Brown, the American violinist, who gave an unusually virile and sonorous reading of the Mendelssohn Concerto. A similarly enthusiastic and deserved reception was accorded to Emanuel Feuermann, a stupendous young 'cellist who left Vienna several years ago as a mere boy, but now showed himself a finished master in the Haydn Concerto, under Knapppertsbusch.

KORNGOLD'S NEW QUARTET

Korngold is also at work upon a new opera for which Hans Müller (anonymous collaborator in Die tote Stadt and librettist of Violanta) is writing the book. Korngold's latest work to have its first performance was his String Quartet, Op. 16, written for and played for the first time by the Rosé Quartet. It proved a fortunate experience, for, unless all signs fail, it marks Korngold's departure from his former methods of playing on superficial, all-too grateful melodies to the detriment of sincerity and depth. The new Quartet steers clear of out-of-place sentimentalism, and sacrifices daintiness for earnestness and dignity. Merely the last movement of the four is, perhaps, a relapse into some of the old, exaggerated exuberance which marred Korngold's recent chamber music and vocal compositions. The Quartet abounds in persistent sevenths, which are distinctly the composer's own, and—in the second and best movement—in some original chromatics. The third movement, which treats the theme in the manner of a Fugato accompanied by many pizzicato effects, is of a rugged and unique humour heretofore unknown in this composer.

PAUL BECHERT.

Obituary.

We regret to record the following deaths:

MADAME CONSTANCE YOUNGER (Mrs. H. F. Delevigne) at the age of sixty-nine. Well-known for many years as an excellent teacher of singing, she began her musical career at the Royal Academy of Music in the 'seventies under Sir John Goss, Walter Macfarren, Wallworth, Signor Gilardoni, &c., going later to Germany and France. In 1880 she was appointed pianoforte professor at the Guildhall School of Music, a position she resigned in 1889, a year or two after her marriage. She returned there, however, in 1906, as professor of singing, remaining until 1914, from which time up to the date of her death she devoted herself to private tuition.

SAMUEL CORBETT, of Parkstone, Dorset, aged seventy-one. He was a native of Wellington, Shropshire. Despite the handicap of blindness almost from birth, he early obtained the Fellowship diploma of the R.C.O., and later took the degree of Mus. Doc., at Cambridge. His chief appointments were at St. Mary's, Bridgenorth; All Saints', Derby; Holy Trinity, Bournemouth; and Nantwich.

Answers to Correspondents

Questions must be of general musical interest. They must be stated simply and briefly, and if several are sent, each must be written on a separate slip. We cannot undertake to reply by post.

Q.—Please arrange the following Beethoven Sonatas in order of difficulty: Op. 2, Nos. 1 and 2; Op. 13; Op. 27, No. 2; Op. 57; Op. 90.—L.F.T.

A.—Commencing with the simplest, the following order would probably agree with the experience of most players: Op. 2, No. 1; Op. 2, No. 2; Op. 13; Op. 90; Op. 27, No. 2; Op. 57.

Q.—Please give an analysis of Chopin's Nocturne in B major, Op. 32, No. 1.—NEMO.

A.—Broadly speaking, this work falls into two parts, followed by a Coda. The first part, mainly in the key of the tonic, comes to a perfect close in that key at bar 20. In the second part the predominating keys are the dominant (F sharp), D sharp minor, and G sharp minor. At bar 62 an interrupted cadence leads into the Coda.

The movement opens with an eight-bar sentence consisting of two four-bar phrases. The first of these is really a two-bar phrase repeated, and the second, after a modulation to D sharp minor, ends with a perfect close in the tonic. A four-bar phrase on a dominant pedal—again a two-bar phrase repeated—leads to a repetition of the first eight bars. The second part opens with a new subject in the key of the dominant (F sharp). Note that bars 25 and 26 are a repetition of bars 21 and 22 in the relative minor key (D sharp). A full close in G sharp minor occurs at bar 30, and then we meet with the phrase on the dominant pedal which occurs in the first part (bars 8-12), only now in the key of G sharp minor. A perfect cadence in B major at bar 41 is followed by a repetition of the whole of the foregoing material from bar 21. The Coda, which is of a dramatic character, is suitably ushered in by the interrupted cadence (pp) at bar 62. This chord, though identical on the pianoforte with the last inversion of the dominant 7th in C is, as the notation indicates (E sharp, not F natural), the last inversion of the augmented 6th (German 6th) in the key of B. This chord occurs on the flattened 6th of the key, and contains a major 3rd, perfect 5th, and augmented 6th—in the present example: G natural, B, D natural, E sharp. It resolves—in B minor—at bar 67. The tonic major is not definitely reached till the final bar. The last two chords constitute a plagal cadence, with the minor 3rd (G natural) of the subdominant chord. Observe that the first six quavers of the passage commencing in bar 65 are identical in outline with the demisemiquaver groups in bars 63 and 64.

[An analysis of this kind is outside the scope of the column, and we shall not repeat the offence.—Editor.]

Q.—Will you kindly clear up the following difficulty for me? The fingering of the third bar of the trill in Tartini's Trillo del diavolo (Peters edition) seems quite impossible, nor can I devise another. One finger plays A on the G string, second and third fingers are trilling, so that there is only one finger left (the fourth) for D, D, F.—H. J. S.

A.—The solution is quite simple. Play A and F in the first position; move on to the second at D and F; return to the first at the next A and F. The trill will then be played with second and third fingers on A and F; first and second on D and F. No other fingering is possible. The figure 3 on D means the second position.

Q.—Please give me titles, &c., of one or two of the best books on 'Musical Appreciation.'—F. N.

A.—We know nothing better in its way than W. J. Foxell's Elements of Musical Appreciation, recently published by Novello (2s. 6d.). Owing to its thoughtful discussion of various æsthetic problems it demands more from the reader than do most books of the kind, and we count that a point in its favour. Too often the tendency is to spoon-feed the reader. Excellent, too, in their different ways are A Musical Pilgrim's Progress, by J. D. M. Rorke (Milford 4s. 6d.), and On Listening to Music, by E. Markham Lee (Kegan Paul, 2s. 6d.); and there are others. If you have a gramophone, you will find Percy Scholes's Learning to Listen by Means of the Gramophone useful, despite the fact of its being designed primarily for school use. Mr. Scholes's Complete Book of the Great Musicians is also a school book that may well be used by not far-advanced grown-ups.

Q.—Who is the greatest composer, not according to public opinion, but as agreed by experts?—F. T.

A.—Ask us another! Experts agree on this point no more than on anything else. How can they? There can be no comparison, and therefore no decision concerning composers who work in widely different fields. For example, Chopin left an amount of music small in bulk, and almost all written for the pianoforte. Yet his work is so original, so fine in workmanship, and so perfectly adapted to its medium, that you cannot call him other than one of the great composers, although the term 'great' is usually reserved for such as have produced orchestral and choral works on a large scale. The only approach to agreement is in regard to a group of (say) the six greatest. A gathering of experts would probably give us Bach, Handel, Mozart, Beethoven, Wagner—and would then proceed to quarrel as to the sixth place. But what does it matter, anyway?

Q.—(1.) How should 'Alleluia' be sung? Please give key-words for second and fourth syllables. (2.) Last Sunday my boys sang in tune until the last hymn (295 A. & M.), when they sharpened. Can you explain, and suggest a remedy?

A.—(1.) We know nothing against the ordinary English pronunciation 'Ah-lee-loo-ya.'

(2.) Sharpening arises from a variety of causes, and without knowing the cause we cannot suggest a cure. Here it was probably due to the 'lie' of the tune (O quanta qualia)—rather low, with a climax at the end of the second line that would tempt boys to force the tone, especially boys with open-air and liberty five minutes ahead of them, as was the case with yours. The best all-round remedy against out-of-tune singing is a careful training of the ear with the point in view. We have even heard of boys being trained to sing in and out of tune at will—a daring step, but, we understand, justified by results.

Q.—Is it possible to obtain gramophone records from a lending library? In country districts such a facility would be a boon, as a would-be-purchaser has no means of trying over?—H. I.

A.—We inquired of H.M.V., and were told that there are no libraries of the kind. We understand, however, the difficulties of country clients are met, so far as possible, by full replies to inquiries in regard to any particular record.

Q.—I understand that many beautiful new songs had developed from folk-songs being wrongly remembered. Can you give me an example?—F. E. A.

A.—A song of the kind would be an accident, and beautiful new songs are rarely born that way. We think you have not quite grasped the proposition. Surely it was this: Folk-songs, being handed down orally, are liable to tricks of memory on the singer's part. As a result, a song may have many variants. Often a variant, arrived at through slips of memory (or, more likely, through deliberate modifications) is much more beautiful than the original.

Q.—(I.) Please give me biographical notes on Balfour Gardiner and his music, suitable for a lecture-recital.—W. W. J.

A.—Too big a question for this column. Turn up Grove for biography. A complete discussion of Balfour Gardiner's pianoforte music, by Miss Katharine Eggar, appeared in the Music Teacher of December, 1923. This, with an examination of News from Whydah, Cargoes, Evening, An old song resung, and others of his choral works, will give you ample material.

Q.—We have a gramophone in our school, and I want the children to hear the best examples of (a) Violin playing; (b) String Quartet; (c) Vocal Solos, irrespective of nationality of singers or character of the music.—H. A.

A.—We cannot guarantee to name the best of anything, but the following are so good that they will be hard to beat: (a) Heifetz, Rondo in G, Mozart-Kreisler (H.M.V.); (b) Haydn's E flat Quartet, played by the English String Quartet (Columbia, on two records); (c) Soprano: Galli-Curci, in Una voce poco fa (H.M.V.); Contralto: Leila Megane, in Agnus Dei, Bizet; Tenor: Caruso, Ombra mai fu (H.M.V.); Bass: Malcolm McEachern in The Calf of Gold and Wi a hundred pipers (Æolian Vocalion).

Miscellaneous.

Another member of the gifted Harrison family is to make her first appearance at Æolian Hall, on Tuesday afternoon March 11. This is Miss Monica Harrison, who is a singer, and who will be associated at this concert with her sister, Miss Margaret Harrison.

Miss Harriet Cohen is giving a Bach evening at Wigmore Hall on March 26, when she will have the assistance of a small orchestra, conducted by Mr. Julius Harrison, in the D minor Concerto for clavier. Her solos will comprise the Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; and a group of Organ Chorales arranged by Busoni, Reger, Walter Rummel, and Harriet Cohen.

Dr. C. H. Moody has been presented with a cheque for £100 at a meeting held to commemorate the conferring on him of the Doctor's degree. The Bishop of Ripon made the presentation, and many eulogies of Dr. Moody's work were delivered. The cheque itself was unusual, in that it was handsomely illuminated, drawn up on vellum, and framed.

Purcell's Dido and Aeneas will be performed by the Bermondsey Settlement Musical Society at Rotherhithe Town Hall on February 28 and 29 and March 1, at 8. Tickets (2s., 1s., 6d.) may be obtained from the Secretary, Bermondsey Settlement, S.E.6. Rotherhithe Town Hall sounds a long way off, but it is easily reached by Tram 68 from Waterloo, and Tram 70 and Bus 47 from London Bridge. All these pass the door.

The Novello Choir will give a programme of part-songs and madrigals on April 10, at 8, at Bishopsgate Institute. The soloist will be Miss Dorothy Robson.

CONTENTS.

PAGE.

A Talk with Sir Alexander Mackenzie	209
The Conductor and his Fore-runners. VII.—The Dawn of Modern Conducting. By William Wallace ( concluded )	211
Ludwig van Beethoven. By Alexander Brent Smith	214
Ad Libitum. By 'Feste'	217
Some New York Organists and their Organs. By H. C. Colles	221
New Light on Early Tudor Composers.—XXX. Richard Edwards. By W. H. Grattan Flood	223
Built to Music. By Mrs. Frank Liebich	224
What is Wrong with Welsh Music? By Jeffrey Pulver	225
Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas. By Harvey Grace	227
Boughton and Alkestis . By Richard Binns	231
Education Committee's Report on British Music	233
Mr. W. W. Cobbett, on the Need of General Culture for Musicians	234
Occasional Notes	235
The Musician's Bookshelf	236
Wireless Notes. By 'Ariel'	239
Gramophone Notes. By 'Discus'	240
Church and Organ Music	248
Royal College of Organists	248
A 'Criticism' of the R.C.O. Choir-Training Examinations	248
Seventy Years of Service	249
Letters to the Editor	251
Sharps and Flats	254
The Amateurs' Exchange	254
Sixty Years Ago	254
Royal Institution Lectures	255
Gervase Elwes Fund for Musicians	255
Parsifal at Covent Garden	255
Dame Ethel Smyth's Mass at Birmingham	256
Royal Academy of Music	256
Royal College of Music	257
Trinity College of Music	257
London Concerts	257
Competition Festival Record	261
Music in the Provinces	261
Music in Ireland	265
Musical Notes from Abroad	265
Obituary	270
Answers to Correspondents	270
Miscellaneous	271

MUSIC.

'Ye humble souls, that seek the Lord.' Easter Anthem. By H. A. CHAMBERS ... 241
 EXTRA SUPPLEMENT given with this Number:
 'Why seek ye the living among the dead?' Easter Anthem. By Alfred Hollins.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

To ensure insertion in their proper positions, Advertisements for the next issue should reach the Office, 160, Wardour Street, London, W.1, not later than THURSDAY, MARCH 20 (FIRST POST).

THE MUSICAL TIMES

CHARGES FOR ADVERTISEMENTS:—

	£	s.	d.
Two Lines	...	0	3 0
Three Lines	...	0	3 4
For every additional Line	...	0	0 10
One inch (displayed)	...	0	10 0
Half a Column	...	2	0 0
A Column	...	4	0 0
A Page	...	7	10 0

Special Pages (Cover, &c.) by arrangement.
 A remittance should be sent with every Advertisement.

DURING THE LAST MONTH.

Published by NOVELLO &amp; CO., LIMITED.

CHAMBERS, H. A.—"Ye humble souls, that seek the Lord." Easter Anthem. (No. 973, The Musical Times.) 2d.

CLARKE, HAMILTON.—"To the Audience." Humorous Part-song, arranged for T.T.B.B. (No. 592, "The Orpheus.") 4d.

DAVENPORT, F. W.—Stabat Mater. Unaccompanied Quartet for S.S.A.A. (No. 487, Novello's Trios, Quartets, &c., for female voices.) 4d.

DUCKWORTH, F.—"The sweetest Name on earth." Anthem. 4d.

JOHNSON, J. ST. A.—Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis in F. 8d.

SCHOOL SONGS. Published in two forms. A. Voice Parts in Staff and Tonic Sol-fa Notations, with Piano-forte Accompaniment (8vo). B. Voice Parts only, in Tonic Sol-fa Notation. A. B.

No. 1249. "Phyllis is my only Joy."
Composed by J. W. HOBBS;
"The March of the Cameron Men." Air by MARY M.
CAMPBELL. Unaccompanied
Trios for S.A.B. 2d. —

No. 1373. "My lady wind." Two-part Song: Composed by ADAM
CARSE 4d. —

SCHOOL MUSIC REVIEW, No. 381, contains the following music in both notations.—"Or let the merry bells ring round." Air from "L'Allegro." Music by Handel. "The Lame Fox." "Fly, Little Birdie," and "Round our Schoolroom." Game Songs, composed by W. B. OLDS. 2d.

TONIC SOL-FA PUBLICATIONS:

G. RATHBONE.—"The Pied Piper of Hamelin." Cantata for Soprano, Solo, and Chorus (mainly in two parts). 1s.

TONIC SOL-FA SERIES:

No. 2444. Dirge. Part-song for T.T.B.B.
ETHEL BOYCE 2d.

WHEELKES, THOMAS.—"Ha, ha! this world doth pass." Arranged for Men's Voices, by JOHN E. WEST. (No. 594, "The Orpheus.") 4d.

PUBLISHED FOR

THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

KOUNTZ, R.—"The Village Blacksmith." Cantata for Soprano and Alto Chorus. $1.00 (4s.).

LEMARE, E. H.—Organ Transcriptions:—

- "All through the night." 50 cents (2s.).
(Old Welsh Melody).
- "Believe me, if all those endearing young charms."
(THOMAS MOORE). 50 cents. (2s.).
- "My pretty Jane." 50 cents (2s.).
- "When Johnny comes marching home." 50 cents
(2s.).
- "When you and I were young, Maggie." 50 cents
(2s.).

LINDSAY, S. B.—Communion Service in F.

EDITED BY

CYRIL W. MILLER

THE OFFICE OF "TENEBRÆ"

AND

DIRECTIONS FOR SINGING

"THE PASSION"

FOR USE IN THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

WILL BE PUBLISHED MARCH 13.

THE DAY DRAWS ON WITH GOLDEN LIGHT.

ANTHEM FOR EASTER

BY

GEOFFREY SHAW.

PRICE THREEPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

TRINITY COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

CHORAL EXHIBITIONS

FOR ALTO, TENOR, AND BASS,

each of £50 per annum, tenable for not more than three years, are offered for Open Competition.

Candidates should send in their applications before March 15th, 1924, to The Dean of Chapel.

ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER WANTED for Ferme Park Baptist Church, Hornsey, N.8. Organ shortly to be re-constructed. Salary up to £80 for competent man. Apply, giving full details, to the Deacon's Secretary, Mr. Sidney J. Shortland, 18, Albany Road, Stroud Green, N.4.

ORGANIST.—WANTED a thoroughly qualified ORGANIST and CHOIRMASTER for St. Mark's Church (Dundela), Belfast. Applications, stating qualifications and salary required, should be made before March 15, to the Hon. Secretary of the Select Vestry, Clonallon, Strandtown, Belfast.

PARISH CHURCH, HALIFAX.—WANTED, ORGANIST, who must reside in Halifax, and who will also act as Choirmaster for Halifax Parish Church. Salary at the rate of £150 per annum. Applications in the first instance, and copies of testimonials, to be sent in writing, addressed to The Right Reverend Bishop Frodsham, D.D., The Vicarage, Halifax, not later than March 4th, 1924. Particulars of the duties will be sent on application.

LADY L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., would be pleased to BUY small TEACHING CONNECTION (Pianoforte or Singing), in London or within easy distance. "X. Y. Z." c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

SPLENDID One-Manual PIPE ORGAN, with Pedals, 246 Pipes, 6 Stops, hand and electric blower, fitted up in oak, with glass folding-doors. £110. Apply, 24, Ordeil Road, Bow, E.3.

The “APOLLO” PEDAL REED ORGAN

Delightful alike to the performer and hearer, the “APOLLO” has reached a standard of perfection in pipe-like beauty of tone, artistic construction and all-round reliability which has elicited the warmest praise from many of the world's leading Organists.

INSTALLED IN THE STUDIO OR HOME

it provides an ever-ready medium for study and practice of the most intricate music written for the pipe organ.

MODELS SPECIALLY VOICED FOR CHURCH USE.

Convenient terms of monthly or quarterly payment arranged.

Illustrated Booklet and Specification from

RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, LTD.

(DESIGNERS AND BUILDERS)

11-17, ISLINGTON - - - - - LIVERPOOL

London Showrooms: The Chappell Piano Co., Ltd., 50, New Bond Street, W.1.

NOVELLO'S HYMNS AND TUNES

FOR

SUNDAY SCHOOL ANNIVERSARY SERVICES.

PUBLISHED IN BOTH NOTATIONS COMBINED.

Five Sets, each containing Ten Hymns and Tunes, price 6d. each set; Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

The following may be had separately, price 1½d. each.

	Words by	Music by
1. COME, CHILDREN, ON AND FORWARD ...	... F. BEVAN ...	... G. C. MARTIN
2. FOR THE FRESHNESS OF THE MORNING (Flower Service)	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE...	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
3. I LOVE TO HEAR THE STORY ...	... EMILY H. MILLER ...	... F. GLAY
4. COME, O COME, IN PIOUS LAYS ...	... G. WITHER ...	... J. STAINER
5. { THINE FOR EVER! GOD OF LOVE... NOW THE DAYLIGHT GOES AWAY ...	... MARY F. MAUDE ... ... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... W. C. HARVEY ... J. ADCOCK
6. JESU, WHOM THY CHILDREN LOVE ...	... J. F. WHEELER ...	... H. E. BUTTON
7. SWEETLY O'ER THE MEADOWS FAIR ... (Flower Service)	... F. A. CHALLINOR ...	... F. A. CHALLINOR
8. WOULD YOU GAIN THE BEST IN LIFE ...	... H. R. PALMER ...	... C. J. MAY
9. ON OUR WAY REJOICING ...	... J. S. B. MONSELL ...	... W. B. GILBERT
10. AGAIN THE MORN OF GLADNESS ...	... J. ELLERTON ...	... J. STAINER
11. THE ANGEL'S SONG ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
12. FORWARD, CHRISTIAN CHILDREN ...	... HELEN W. SELBY ...	... A. MOFFAT
13. THE GOLDEN SHORE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
14. SAVIOUR, BLESSED SAVIOUR ...	... G. THRING ...	... JOHN E. WEST
15. ENTER WITH THANKSGIVING ...	... W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... F. H. COWEN
16. MAN SHALL NOT LIVE BY BREAD ALONE	... W. H. DRAPER ...	... J. V. ROBERTS
17. STARS, THAT ON YOUR WONDROUS WAY	... J. BOGUE ...	... J. STAINER
18. THE DAY IS PAST AND OVER ...	... J. M. NEALE ...	... J. BARNBY
19. WE MARCH, WE MARCH TO VICTORY ...	... G. MOULTRIE ...	... J. BARNBY
20. HARK! HARK! THE ORGAN LOUDLY PEALS	... G. THRING ...	... G. J. BENNETT
21. O WHAT CAN LITTLE HANDS DO ...	... G. W. HINSDALE ...	... H. E. BUTTON
22. THE ROSEATE HUES OF EARLY DAWN...	... C. F. ALEXANDER ...	... A. SULLIVAN
23. LORD, THY CHILDREN GUIDE AND KEEP	... W. W. HOW ...	... A. S. COOPER
24. { THE BEAUTIFUL LAND ... JESUS, TENDER SHEPHERD, HEAR ME...	... E. OXENFORD ... ... M. L. DUNCAN ...	... J. STAINER ... H. PARKER
25. THE BOYS AND GIRLS OF ENGLAND ...	... J. COMPSTON ...	... J. STAINER
26. THE CITY OF LIGHT ...	... F. ADLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
27. { GOD IS IN HEAVEN! CAN HE HEAR ... GENTLE JESUS, MEEK AND MILD...	... A. GILBERT ... ... C. WESLEY ...	... H. E. BUTTON ... J. STAINER
28. HE DWELLS AMONG THE LILIES (Flower Service)	W. ST. HILL BOURNE	... Lady EUAN-SMITH
29. THE CROWN IS WAITING ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
30. RAISE YOUR STANDARD, BROTHERS ...	... G. SPILLER ...	... E. J. TROUP
31. FLOWERS (Flower Service) ...	... F. R. HAVERGAL ...	... A. RANDEGGER
32. THE GOOD SHEPHERD...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
33. ABOVE THE CLEAR BLUE SKY ...	... M. BOURDILLON ...	... H. E. CRIMP
34. WHEN LOVE DRAWS NEAR ...	... L. WHITEHEAD ...	... E. J. TROUP
35. COME SING WITH HOLY GLADNESS ...	... J. J. DANIELL ...	... G. W. TORRANCE
36. WE WILL PRAISE THEE ...	... E. OXENFORD ...	... J. STAINER
37. WHAT CAN I GIVE JESUS (Flower Service)...	... A. C. BENSON ...	... A. M. GOODHART
38. COME, PRAISE OUR LORD AND SAVIOUR	... W. W. HOW ...	... H. A. CHAMBERS
39. NOW THE DAY IS OVER ...	... S. BARING-GOULD ...	... F. W. BLUNT
40. WE THANK THEE LORD FOR THIS FAIR EARTH	G. E. L. COTTON	... W. C. HARVEY
41. THE LESSON OF LOVE ...	... ..	... J. BARNBY
42. COME, FRIENDS, THE WORLD WANTS MENDING	... ..	... E. J. TROUP
43. CREATOR, GOD, AND LORD ...	... MARY BRADFORD WHITING ...	... J. H. MAUNDER
44. O GOD, WE COME BEFORE THEE (Flower Service)	J. GIBSON ...	... Tune—"ELLACOMBE"

(To be continued.)

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC FOR LENT.

THE BENEDICTE

SET TO MUSIC BY THE FOLLOWING COMPOSERS.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Edited by EDWARD ELGAR and IVOR ATKINS. 4s.; paper boards, 5s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. Vocal Parts, 1s. 6d. each. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s. Choruses only, Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 19s. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. Matthew.) J. S. BACH. Abridged, as used at St. Paul's Cathedral, 2s. 6d.; paper boards, 3s. 6d. Book of Words, with Music to the Chorales, 8d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (According to St. John.) J. S. BACH. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

*THE PASSION OF CHRIST. G. F. HANDEL. 4s.; paper boards, 6s.; cloth, gilt, 7s. 6d. Words only, 16s. per 100. Abridged edition for Church use, 1s. 6d. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

*THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) J. HAYDN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. (The Seven Words of Our Saviour on the Cross.) CH. GOUNOD. 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD ("Der Tod Jesu"). C. H. GRAUN. 3s.; paper boards, 4s.; cloth, gilt, 6s. Choruses only, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION OF OUR LORD. H. SCHÜTZ. 1s. 6d.

*PASSION MUSIC (from the Oratorio "St. Peter"). By JULIUS BENEDICT. 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.

*OUT OF DARKNESS. (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. GEORGE HENSCHEL (Op. 30). 4s.

*OUT OF DARKNESS (De Profundis). (Psalm cxxx.) For Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Composed by CH. GOUNOD. English or Latin words. 1s. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, &c., as sung at St. Paul's Cathedral, preceding Bach's Passion on Tuesday in Holy Week. Arranged by J. STAINER. 4d. Tonic Sol-fa, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by J. BARNBY. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. Set to the well-known Ancient Chant, as arranged and harmonized by VINCENT NOVELLO. Price 3d.; Ditto, Latin words, 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. (Chant Setting.) The music composed by EDGAR PETTMAN. Price, 2d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by GREGORIO ALLEGRI. As used at St. Paul's Cathedral Lenten Services. Edited by GEORGE C. MARTIN. 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. The music composed by G. P. DA PALESTRINA. Edited by W. BARCLAY SQUIRE. Latin and English words 6d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 4d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS, in F sharp minor. The music composed by F. E. GLADSTONE. Latin words. 8d.

MISERERE MEI, DEUS. A simple Unison Arrangement with Organ Accompaniment, 2d.

Orchestral Parts of the works marked * can be had.

ADLAM, F. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
BAIRSTOW, E. C. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... ..	4d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BENNETT, G. J. (in D, Unison) ... ..	4d.
BEST, W. T. (in C). (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
BLAIR, H. (in G) ... ..	2d.
BRIDGE, J. F., JAMES TURLE, and HAYES... ..	2d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in E, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUNNETT, ED. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. E. (in D)... ..	2d.
BUTTON, H. E. (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
COBB, G. F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (Chant in G) ... ..	3d.
COULDREY, H. R. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)... ..	3d.
ELLIOTT, J. W. (in G)... ..	6d.
ELLIOTT, M. B. (in G)... ..	2d.
ELLIOTT, R. B. (in G) ... ..	2d.
EYRE, A. J. (in E flat) ... ..	3d.
EYRE, A. J. (No. 2, in F) ... ..	2d.
FOSTER, M. B. (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	6d.
FOST, P. H. (in D) ... ..	3d.
GADSBY, H. (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GALE, C. R. (in D) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in C, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
GLADSTONE, F. E. (in G, Unison)... ..	2d.
GODFREY, A. E. (in C)... ..	4d.
GODFREY, A. E. (No. 2, in G) ... ..	4d.
H. B. C. (Three Chants) ... ..	2d.
HERVEY, F. A. J. (in A flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
HOYTE, W. S. (in D) ... ..	2d.
HUGHES, W. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
ILIFFE, F. (No. 1, in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
LEMARE, E. H. (in B flat) ... ..	4d.
LOYD, C. H. (in E flat, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
LUCAS, P. T. (in A flat, Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
MACPHERSON, C. (in F, rhythmic setting) ... ..	6d.
MARTIN, G. C. (No. 1, in F; No. 2, in E flat; No. 3, in G) each ... ..	6d.
MATTHEWS, T. R. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
MERBECKE (arranged by GEORGE C. MARTIN) ... ..	3d.
MILLER, C. E. (second setting) (in G, Chant Form) ... ..	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (No. 1, in C; No. 2, set to Double Chants) ... ..	3d.
PETTMAN, E. (in E flat) ... ..	2d.
PULLEIN, J. (in E flat) ... ..	1d.
ROBERTS, J. V. (in B flat) ... ..	6d.
SLATER, W. (in F) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, B. (in A flat) ... ..	2d.
SMITH, CHAS. W. (in C). s.a.t.b. also simplified for s.a.t.b. ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., and B. BLAXLAND (in F, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., R. DE LACY, A. GIBBS, and F. CHAMPNEYS ... ..	2d.
STAINER, J., W. WINN, and F. WALKER ... ..	2d.
Ditto (Welsh words). (Sol-fa, 1d.) ... ..	1d.
STAINER, J., J. TURLE, and H. S. IRONS ... ..	3d.
STAINER, J. (in D, Chant Form) ... ..	2d.
STEWART, C. H. (on the plan of the Paragraph Psalter) ... ..	4d.
BARNBY, J. ... ..	2d.
FOSTER, J. ... ..	2d.
SMITH, M. (two settings) ... ..	1d.
TURLE, J. (two settings) ... ..	2d.
WICKES, C. A. (two settings) ... ..	2d.
TOZER, F. (in G) ... ..	3d.
TOZER, F. (in A). Short and simple ... ..	3d.
WEST, J. E. (in G) ... ..	6d.
WEST, J. E. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WESTBURY, G. H. (in C) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, H. (in D) (Shortened Form) ... ..	2d.
WOOD, W. G. (in D) ... ..	2d.
WRIGLEY, G. F. (in G, Quadruple Chant) ... ..	2d.

THE REPROACHES

SET TO MUSIC BY

DYKES, J. B. ... ..	4d.
GOUNOD, CH. ... ..	3d.
HOYTE, W. S. ... ..	6d.
PALESTRINA (together with the proper plain-chant melodies) (Edited by W. S. Vale) ... ..	6d.
SPENCE, H. (for singing in Unison or Harmony) ... ..	2d.
WILLAN, HEALEY (Double Choir) (unaccompanied) ... ..	4d.

THE STORY OF THE CROSS

THE WORDS BY E. MONRO

SET TO MUSIC BY

BUNNETT, ED. ... ..	3d.
BUTTON, H. ELLIOT... ..	3d.
FOSTER, MYLES B. (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
ROBERTS, J. VARLEY (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
SOMERVELL, ARTHUR (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.
STAINER, JOHN (Sol-fa, 2d.) ... ..	4d.

Words only, 2s. per 100.

Large Type Edition, 3s. per 100.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

CANTATAS FOR LENT.

THE CROSS OF CHRIST

WORDS SELECTED FROM THE HOLY SCRIPTURES, INTERSPERSED WITH APPROPRIATE HYMNS, BY

W. MAURICE ADAMS

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

Tonic Sol-fa Edition, 8d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

THE STORY OF CALVARY

FOR TENOR AND BASS SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

ROSE DAFFORNE BETJEMANN

THE MUSIC BY

THOMAS ADAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

CHRIST LAY IN DEATH'S DARK PRISON

(CHRIST LAG IN TODESBANDEN)

CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY JOHN E. WEST.

ENGLISH WORDS BY PAUL ENGLAND.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

WATCH YE, PRAY YE

(WACHET, BETET)

A CANTATA

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

EDITED BY E. H. THORNE.

ENGLISH VERSION BY CLAUDE AVELING.

THE MUSIC BY

J. S. BACH.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

PASSION MUSIC

(ST. PETER)

(S A.T.B. SOLI.) SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SERVICES

THE MUSIC BY

J. BENEDICT.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Words only (per 100), 6s. 6d.

THE ATONEMENT

(Op. 53.)

A SACRED CANTATA FOR S.M.-S.A.T.B. SOLI

WORDS BY

ALICE PARSONS

THE MUSIC BY

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS.

Vocal Score:

Paper cover, 5s. 6d.; Paper boards, 6s. 6d.; Cloth, 7s. 6d.
Vocal parts, 2s. 6d. each. Words only, 8d., or 33s. 4d. per 100.
String parts, 28s. 6d.

AT THE FOOT OF THE CROSS

(STABAT MATER)

FOR SOLI, CHORUS, AND ORCHESTRA

THE ENGLISH ADAPTATION BY F. J. W. CROWE

THE ACCOMPANIMENTS ARRANGED FOR THE ORGAN
BY H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

THE MUSIC BY

ANTON DVOŘÁK.

(Op. 58.)

Vocal Score, paper cover, 4s.; Paper boards, 5s.; Cloth, gilt, 6s.
Tonic Sol-fa, 2s. 6d. Words only, 6s. 6d. per 100.
Vocal Parts, 1s. each.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

A SHORT SACRED CANTATA

FOR LENTEN OR EASTER SERVICES
OR FOR GENERAL USE

THE WORDS WRITTEN BY

MARY BRADFORD WHITING

(AFTER METASTASIO).

FOR SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BASS SOLI, AND CHORUS,
WITH ACCOMPANIMENT FOR ORGAN OR SMALL ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSIC BY

PERCY E. FLETCHER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.

Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

Full Score and Wind parts, MS. String parts, 12s.

IS IT NOTHING TO YOU?

AN EASY CANTATA

FOR USE DURING THE SEASON OF LENT, AND ON GOOD FRIDAY, SPECIALLY ADAPTED FOR COUNTRY CHOIRS

THE MUSIC BY

E. V. HALL.

Price One Shilling.

Tonic Sol-fa, 4d. Words, with Music to the Hymns, price 3d.

CANTATAS FOR LENT—continued.

THE PASSION OF CHRIST

EDITED BY E. PROUT.

THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION BY J. TROUTBECK.

ABRIDGED EDITION FOR CHURCH USE BY J. B. POWELL.

THE MUSIC BY

G. F. HANDEL.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.
Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.

OLIVET TO CALVARY

FOR

TENOR AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS
INTERSPERSED WITH HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE
CONGREGATION.THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY SHAPCOTT WENSLEY

THE MUSIC BY

J. H. MAUNDER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. Words only, 12s. 6d. per 100.
String Parts, 15s. 6d. Wind Parts, 19s. 9d. Full Score, MS.

THE DARKEST HOUR

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI
AND CHORUS

WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

HAROLD MOORE.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100. String parts, 9s. 6d.
Wind parts and Full Score, MS.

VIA DOLOROSA

A DEVOTION

FOR BARITONE SOLO AND CHORUS
SUITABLE FOR THE SEASONS OF LENT AND PASSIONTIDE
(THE WORDS DERIVED MAINLY FROM ANCIENT SOURCES)

THE MUSIC BY

E. CUTHBERT NUNN.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

STABAT MATER

FOR FEMALE VOICES

ENGLISH VERSION BY W. G. ROTHERY.

THE MUSIC BY

GIOVANNI BATTISTA PERGOLESI.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.

THE PASSION

A MEDITATION ON THE SUFFERINGS OF CHRIST,

FOR TWO SOLO VOICES (TENOR AND BASS) AND CHORUS

TOGETHER WITH

HYMNS TO BE SUNG BY THE CHOIR AND CONGREGATION

THE MUSIC BY

J. VARLEY ROBERTS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper Boards, 3s. 6d. Words, with Hymn Tunes, price 3d.
Words only, 1½d

THE CRUCIFIXION

A MEDITATION

ON THE

SACRED PASSION OF THE HOLY REDEEMER

THE WORDS SELECTED AND WRITTEN BY

W. J. SPARROW-SIMPSON

THE MUSIC BY

JOHN STAINER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s.
Words only, with Hymn Tunes, 3d. Tonic Sol-fa, 3d.
Words, complete, 12s. 6d. per 100. Words of Hymns, 6s. 6d. per 100.IN THE DESERT AND IN THE GARDEN

FOR

SOPRANO, TENOR, AND BARITONE SOLI AND CHORUS

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND SELECTED BY
VIOLET CRAIGIE HALKETT

THE MUSIC BY

FERRIS TOZER.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d.
Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.
Parts for Strings and Timpani may be had on hire.

GETHSEMANE

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. String Parts, 15s.
Wind Parts and Full Score, MS. Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

LAST NIGHT AT BETHANY

THE WORDS WRITTEN AND COMPILED BY
JOSEPH BENNETT

THE MUSIC BY

C. LEE WILLIAMS.

Price Two Shillings and Sixpence.
Paper boards, 3s. 6d. Tonic Sol-fa, 1s. 6d.
String Parts, 12s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. Full Score, MS.
Words only, 9s. 6d. per 100.

NOVELLO'S ANTHEM BOOK.

BOOK 1.			BOOK 8 (continued).
ADVENT	O King and Desire of all Nations ...	Stainer	WHITSUN	Spirit of mercy, truth, and love ...	Selly
CHRISTMAS	Arise, shine, for Thy Light is come ...	Elvey	HARVEST	Bchohd, I have given you every herb ...	Harris
LENT	Lord, for Thy tender mercies' sake ...	Parry	GENERAL	All people that on earth do dwell ...	West
	Enter not into judgment ...	Attwood		Through the day Thy love has spared us ...	Naylor
	O ye that love the Lord... ..	Coleridge-Taylor		The King shall rejoice ...	Goss
EASTER	O give thanks ...	Goss		Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace ...	Calkin
WHITSUN	Come, Holy Ghost ...	Attwood
HARVEST	The Lord is loving unto every man ...	Garrett	ADVENT	Blessed is He Who cometh ...	Gounod
GENERAL	O love the Lord ...	Sullivan	CHRISTMAS	Sing, O Heavens ...	Gaul
	The day Thou gavest, Lord ...	Woodward	LENT	O bountiful Jesu! ...	Stainer
	Blessed are they that dwell ...	Tours		O Lord, correct me ...	Coward
	Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace ...	Lee Williams		By the waters of Babylon ...	Coleridge-Taylor
BOOK 2.				The strife is o'er ...	Stearns
ADVENT	Hosanna in the highest ...	Stainer	WHITSUN	Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God ...	Stainer
CHRISTMAS	Sing and rejoice ...	Barnby	HARVEST	Great is the Lord... ..	Marchant
LENT	O Saviour of the world ...	Goss	GENERAL	Lead, kindly Light ...	Pughe-Evans
	Teach me, O Lord ...	Attwood		O Lord, my trust is in Thy mercy ...	King Hall
	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate ...	Gounod		Hymn of Peace ...	Calcott
EASTER	Christ is risen ...	Elvey		How dear are Thy counsels ...	Crotch
HARVEST	Great is the Lord ...	Stearns
GENERAL	What are these? ...	West	ADVENT	God shall wipe away all tears ...	Field
	O how amiable ...	Sullivan	CHRISTMAS	Sing, O Heavens ...	Maunder
	O taste and see ...	Macfarren	LENT	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate ...	Elgar
	The Lord is my Shepherd ...	Fisher		Hear the voice and prayer ...	Hopkins
	God that madest earth and heaven ...			By Babylon's wave ...	Gounod
BOOK 3.				Unto the Paschal Victim bring ...	West
ADVENT	Far from their home ...	Woodward	WHITSUN	Our Blest Redeemer ...	Vine Hall
CHRISTMAS	Four Christmas Carols ...	Various	HARVEST	Great is the Lord ...	Sydenham
LENT	Turn Thy face from my sins ...	Sullivan	GENERAL	Blessed be the Lord my Strength ...	Mapham
	O Lord, my God ...	Wesley		Abide with me ...	Atkins
	Jesu, Word of God Incarnate ...	Mozart		O how amiable ...	Maunder
EASTER	Break forth into joy ...	Barnby		The Lord is exalted ...	West
HARVEST	O Lord, how manifold ...	Barnby
GENERAL	Seek ye the Lord... ..	Roberts
	I was glad ...	Elvey	ADVENT	The night is far spent ...	Stearns
	The radiant morn ...	Woodward	CHRISTMAS	Nazareth ...	Gounod
	O praise God in His holiness ...	Weldon	LENT	God so loved the world ...	Moore
	Doth not wisdom cry ...	Haking		I came not to call the righteous ...	Vincent
BOOK 4.				Wash me thoroughly ...	Wesley
ADVENT	Arise, O Jerusalem ...	King	EASTER	Alleluia! now is Christ risen ...	Adams
CHRISTMAS	Let us now go even unto Bethlehem ...	Hopkins	WHITSUN	Holy Spirit, come, O come ...	Martin
LENT	In Thee, O Lord ...	Tours	HARVEST	The earth is the Lord's ...	Hollins
	Comfort, O Lord, the soul of Thy servant ...	Crotch, arr. by Goss	GENERAL	Saviour, Thy children keep ...	Sullivan
	God so loved the world ...	Stainer		The day is past and over ...	Marks
EASTER	Christ our Passover ...	Goss		Jesu, priceless Treasure ...	Roberts
WHITSUN	Praised be the Lord daily ...	Calkin		O worship the Lord ...	Hollins
HARVEST	Ye shall dwell in the land ...	Stainer
GENERAL	O how amiable are Thy dwellings ...	Barnby	ADVENT	Rejoice greatly ...	Woodward
	O taste and see how gracious the Lord is ...	Goss	CHRISTMAS	Hark! what mean those holy voices ...	Sullivan
	Thine, O Lord, is the greatness ...	Kent	LENT	Give ear, O Lord ...	Pattison
	O give thanks unto the Lord... ..	Elvey		Come now, and let us reason ...	Brian
BOOK 5.				Is it nothing to you ...	Foster
ADVENT	The Great Day of the Lord ...	Martin	EASTER	Christ is risen ...	Roberts
CHRISTMAS	It came upon the midnight clear ...	Stainer	WHITSUN	I will not leave you comfortless ...	Stearns
LENT	Incline Thine ear... ..	Hinmel	HARVEST	Father of mercies ...	West
	Lead me, Lord ...	Wesley	GENERAL	Praise ye the Lord ...	Button
	Rend your hearts... ..	Calkin		Save us, O Lord, while waking ...	Martin
EASTER	Awake up, my glory ...	Barnby		Come, weary pilgrims ...	Towse
WHITSUN	O for a closer walk with God ...	Foster		Comes, at times ...	Woodward
HARVEST	The eyes of all wait on Thee, O Lord ...	Stainer	ADVENT	Prepare ye the way of the Lord ...	Gounod
GENERAL	I am Alpha and Omega ...	Richardson	CHRISTMAS	In a stable lowly ...	King
	O how amiable are Thy dwellings ...	Hiles	LENT	Hear me when I call ...	King Hall
	Blessed are the merciful ...	Sullivan		Come, ye sin-defiled and weary ...	Stainer
	I will sing of Thy Power, O God ...			In Thee, O Lord ...	Coleridge-Taylor
BOOK 6.				As it began to dawn ...	Foster
ADVENT	Hearken unto Me, My people ...	Sullivan	WHITSUN	God is a Spirit ...	Bennett
CHRISTMAS	O Zion, that bringest good tidings ...	Stainer	HARVEST	O God, who is like unto Thee ...	Adams
LENT	Turn Thy face from my sins ...	Attwood	GENERAL	Nearer, my God, to Thee ...	Gounod
	O Saving Victim, slain for us! ...	Stainer		Lord, I have loved the habitation ...	Towse
	There is a green hill far away... ..	Gounod		Send out Thy light ...	Wesley
EASTER	Now is Christ risen from the dead ...	West		O God, Whose nature ...
WHITSUN	O Holy Ghost, into our minds... ..	Macfarren	ADVENT	The night is far spent ...	Foster
HARVEST	Praise the Lord, O Jerusalem... ..	Maunder	CHRISTMAS	Glory to God in the highest ...	Bayley
GENERAL	Sweet is Thy mercy, Lord ...	Barnby	LENT	The path of the just ...	Roberts
	I will lift up mine eyes ...	Clarke-Wildfeld		Come, and let us return ...	Jackson
	Rejoice in the Lord, O ye righteous ...	Elvey		O Saviour of the world ...	Moore
	I will always give thanks unto the Lord ...	Calkin		Who shall roll us away the stone? ...	Torrance
BOOK 7.				If I do not away ...	Adams
ADVENT	It is high time to awake out of sleep ...	Barnby	WHITSUN	The woods and every sweet-smelling tree ...	West
CHRISTMAS	Come, ye lofty ...	Button	HARVEST	The Lord is my Light ...	Sydenham
LENT	Bow down Thine ear ...	Attwood	GENERAL	Evening and morning ...	Oakeley
	Come unto Him ...	Gounod		Holiest, breathe an evening blessing ...	Martin
	The Lord is nigh unto them ...	Cummings		Let the righteous be glad ...	R. F. Lloyd
EASTER	Open to me the gates ...	Adlam
WHITSUN	When God of old came down from heaven ...	Vine Hall	ADVENT	Awake, awake, put on strength ...	Button
HARVEST	Look on the fields ...	Macpherson	CHRISTMAS	See, amid the winter's snow ...	West
GENERAL	Weary of earth and laden with my sin ...	Towse	LENT	There is a green hill far away ...	Somers
	Sing praises unto the Lord ...	Crickshank		Weary of earth ...	Vine Hall
	Deliver me, O Lord ...	Stainer		Come, and let us return ...	Goss
	Blessed are the poor in spirit ...	Hiles		Come, ye saints ...	Button
BOOK 8.				If ye love Me ...	Stearns
ADVENT	Day of Wrath! O day of mourning ...	Stainer	WHITSUN	The eyes of all wait on Thee ...	Goss
CHRISTMAS	Like silver lamps in a distant shrine ...	Barnby	HARVEST	Bread of Heaven ...	Adams
LENT	Cast thy burden upon the Lord ...	Mondelsohn	GENERAL	Blessing, glory, wisdom, and thank ...	Roberts
	Seek ye the Lord... ..	Evadley		Thy word is a lantern ...	Young
EASTER	The sacrifice of God ...	Wareing		Hymn to the Trinity ...	Tchaikovsky
	This is the day ...	Vine Hall

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

TONIC SOL-FA, ONE SHILLING EACH BOOK.

PENITENCE PARDON AND PEACE J. H. MAUNDER.

The Musical Times, 1-1-99: "An admirable example of a commendable class of Church music. Consists of writing of that melodious and effective nature for which the composer is so widely famed."

Musical Opinion, 1-2-98: "A fine Church composition."
Musical News, 15-1-98: "We have no hesitation in cordially recommending it."

Musical Standard, 5-3-98: "Deserves considerable popularity."
Organist and Choirmaster, 15-2-98: "For the music we have nothing but praise."

Birmingham Post, 5-3-98: "The music is of a high artistic value."
Liverpool Courier, 2-8-98: "A work of great merit in every respect."

Manchester Courier, 9-3-98: "It will doubtless be used in many quires and places where they sing."
Newcastle Leader, 23-2-98: "A well-written work."

Western Morning News, 25-3-98: "A good composition. Striking and original."

Chester Chronicle, 16-4-98: "A beautiful work, very tuneful, and exceedingly effective."

Lichfield Mercury, 4-2-98: "Extremely effective, containing some really beautiful music."
Journal of the Incorporated Society of Musicians, 1-2-98: "A well-written work. We can strongly recommend it."

Price Two Shillings.

Paper boards, 3s.; Tonic Sol-fa, 1s, 4d.; Words, 4s. per 100.

Band parts may be hired or purchased from Messrs. Goodwin & Tabb, 34, Percy Street, W.1.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FOR LENT AND PASSION WEEK. "REX SÆCULORUM."

CHORALE

By J. CRÜGER, S.J.

Arranged for Mixed Voices, with independent Accompaniment for Organ, by THEODOR L. CLEMENS.

Price Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

SONG, SUITABLE FOR LENTEN SEASON.

A devotional setting of the well-known words

When I Survey the Wondrous Cross

FOR SOPRANO OR TENOR, BY

A. H. FILLINGHAM, A.R.C.M.

Price Two Shillings.

Sung by Madame Goodall, &c.

"An agreeable and well varied song."—Yorkshire Post, &c.

W. WEEKES & Co., 14, HANOVER STREET, W.

A SHORT AND EASY COMMUNION SERVICE IN E FLAT

(Including Ninefold Kyrie, Benedictus qui venit, and Agnus Dei).

COMPOSED BY

BASIL HARWOOD.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

Voice Part only, for Congregational use, 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LTD.

PART-SONGS INCLUDED IN SYLLABUS
OF
THE EMPIRE MUSICAL FESTIVAL,
CRYSTAL PALACE, MAY, 1924.

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION (MALE VOICES).

R. VAUGHAN WILLIAMS (arr.). O.N. Sol-fa
"Down among the dead men" (T.T.B.B.)... 6d. 3d.

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION (FEMALE VOICES).

CHRIS. M. EDMUNDS.
"To primroses filled with morning dew" (3v.) 6d. 3d.

CHAMPIONSHIP SECTION (CHILDREN'S CHOIRS).

CYRIL JENKINS.
"Lady Moon" Both Notations (combined) 4d.

ARNE.
"By dimpled brook and fountain brim" ... 4d. —

PART SONGS.

* SIX SONGS FROM SHAKESPEARE.

GEOFFREY SHAW.

1. What shall he have that kill'd the deer (S.A.T.B.) ... 4d.
2. When icicles hang by the wall (S.A.T.B.) ... 14d.
3. Over hill, over dale (S.A.) ... 2d.
4. Ye spotted snakes (S.A.T.B.) ... 4d.
5. Hey Robin, jolly Robin (T.B.) ... 4d.
6. When that I was and a little tiny boy (S.A.T.B.) ... 4d.

COMPLETE, TWO SHILLINGS NET.

* EDWARD ELGAR.

"From the Bavarian Highlands" (Choral Suite)

S.A.T.B. Nos. 1 to 6.

Complete O.N., 4s.; Sol-fa, 1s. 3d.

* Band Parts may be had on hire.

DEPT. I., JOSEPH WILLIAMS, LIMITED,
32, GREAT PORTLAND STREET, LONDON, W.1.

NEW PUBLICATIONS

By T. TERTIUS NOBLE.

816. NIGHT. S.A.T.B.
817. TO MY LOVE. T.T.B.B.
818. WHEN I AM DEAD, MY DEAREST. S.A.T.B.
819. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. S.A.T.B.
820. SAVE, LORD, OR WE PERISH. T.T.B.B.
821. BUT NOW, THUS SAITH THE LORD. S.A.T.B.

Price Fourpence each

822. MAGNIFICAT AND NUNC DIMITTIS IN B FLAT.
Price Sixpence.

BANKS & SON, MUSIC PUBLISHERS, YORK.

NEW EASTER ANTHEM.

FULL THROUGHOUT. EASY. JUBILANT. TREBLE COMPASS UP TO F

"THE STRIFE IS O'ER."

By H. ERNEST NICHOL, MUS. BAC., OXON.

O.N. and Sol-fa in one copy. Price 4d.

Specimen Free to any Choirmaster.

Specimens of Five Easter Anthems, 1s.

H. E. NICHOL, 23, CHARLOTTE STREET, HULL.

THE CHANT COMMUNION SERVICE WITH EUCHARISTIC HYMNS.

The Creed and Gloria in Excelsis, arranged in verses and pointed both for Anglican and Gregorian chanting.

Suitable for Mission, Village, and Parish Choirs, or for a Congregation without the aid of a Choir.

ARRANGED BY THE REV. C. W. A. BROOKE, M.A.

PRICE SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

STRING QUARTETS AND QUINTETS.

- AUSTIN, E.—Variations on the Tune—"The Vicar of Bray" (Op. 35).
Score, 9s.; Parts (5), 9s.
- CARSE, A.—Variations on Tune—"Barbara Allen."
Score, 2s. 3d.; Parts (4), 6s.
- DAVIS, J. D.—"Song of Evening." Score, 4s.; Parts (5), 4s.
- DOLMETSCH, A.—"Suite of Four Pieces." Parts (4) 2s. 8d.
- DUNHILL, T. F.—"The Chiddingfold Suite" (Op. 60).
Score, 7s. 6d.; Parts (5), 5s. 9d.
- ELGAR, E.—Elegy for Strings (Op. 58).
Score, 2s. 6d.; Parts (5), 1s. 8d.
- FARNABY, G.—"Suite of Seven Pieces." Parts (5), 3s. 4d.
- FLETCHER, PERCY E.—Two Bagatelles 1. Valsette, 2. Pizzicato.
Parts (5), 5s.
- HANDEL.—"Two Bourrées." Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
- "Six Pieces from the Water Music. 1. Bourrée in F. 2. Air in F. 3. Minuet in F. 4. Hornpipe in F. 5. Aria in G. 6. Allegro in D. Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
- MENDELSSOHN.—"War March ("Athalie"). Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
- PARRY, C. H. H.—Suite in F. Lady Radnor's Suite.
Score, 7s.; Parts (5), 7s. 6d.
- PITT, PERCY.—Air de Ballet. Score, 3s.; Parts (5), 3s. 4d.
- PURCELL.—Suite from Dramatic Music. Edited by A. Coates.
Score, 1s. 6d.; Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
- Two Suites from "The Gordian Knot Untied." Edited by G. Holst. No. 1. Score, 4s.; Parts (4), 2s. 8d. No. 2. Score, 4s.; Parts (4), 2s. 8d.
- RAMEAU, J. P.—Gavotte in D. Arranged for String Quintet by B. Tours. Parts (5), 2s. 4d.
- REED, W. H.—Suite for String Orchestra. Parts (5), 9s. 9d.

* Pianoforte Part is obtainable.

PIANOFORTE SOLOS.

- |  |  |
|--|--|
| ARENSKY, A. Prelude in F minor (Op. 42, No. 1) ... .. s. d. 3 0                        | HUMMEL, J. N. Rondo in E flat (Op. 11) (Klindworth) ... .. s. d. 3 0 |
| — Romance in A flat (Op. 42, No. 2) ... .. 3 0   | — Rondo in B minor (Op. 109) (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0                 |
| BACH, Bourrée in C ... .. 2 3  | — Lange, G. Two Hungarian Dances (Op. 266):                          |
| — Gavotte in B minor from Violin Sonata (Saint-Saëns) ... .. 2 0                       | 1. Isteni Czárdás ... .. 2 3   |
| BEETHOVEN, Andante in F (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0  | 2. Rozsabokar Czárdás ... .. 2 3                                     |
| — Two Rondos (Op. 51, No. 1 in C, No. 2 in G) (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0                  | MENDELSSOHN, Perpetuum mobile (Op. 119) ... .. 3 0                   |
| — No. 1, 2s. 3d.; No. 2 ... .. 3 0   | — Prelude and Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0               |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Valse de la Reine ... .. 2 3                                      | — Scherzo in G minor from Octet (Op. 20) (Klhl) ... .. 3 0           |
| DALCROZE, J. J. Four Characteristic Dances ... .. 3 0                                  | RUBINSTEIN, Barcarolle (Op. 30) ... .. 2 3                           |
| ELGAR, E. Chanson de Nuit ... .. 2 3   | — Melody in F ... .. 1 6   |
| — Chanson de Matin ... .. 2 3  | SAINT-SAËNS, Gavotte in C minor ... .. 2 3                           |
| ESIPOFF, S. Ballade, G minor ... .. 3 0  | — Mazurka in G minor ... .. 3 0                                      |
| — Cantique d'Amour ... .. 3 0  | SCHUBERT, Impromptu in B flat (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0                |
| FLETCHER, PERCY E. Valse Lyrique ("Smile of Spring") ... .. 2 3                        | SCHUMANN, Arabesque in C major (Op. 18) ... .. 1 6                   |
| HANDEL, Aria con Variazioni ("The Harmonious Blacksmith") (Klindworth) ... .. 2 3      | — Three Romances (Op. 28) ... .. 1                                   |
| — Fugue in E minor (Klindworth) ... .. 2 3   | SCOTT-BAKER, H. Pantomime ... .. 3                                   |
| HAYDN, Andante con Variations in F minor (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0                       | STRELEZKI, Miniature ... .. 2 3                                      |
| HENSELT, A. Si oiseau j'étais, A toi je volerais! (Op. 2, No. 5) (Pachmann) ... .. 2 3 | — Valse Impromptu ... .. 2   |
| — Wiegenlied (Op. 45) (Chanson de Berceau) (Pachmann) ... .. 2 3                       | TSCHAIKOWSKY, Marche Militaire ... .. 3                              |
| HOFMANN, H. From Golden Days (Op. 34, No. 3) ... .. 1 6                                | — Valse Scherzo in A major ... .. 3 0                                |
| — Pack (Op. 37, No. 9) ... .. 2 3  | WEBER, Rondo brillant (E flat) (Op. 62) (Klindworth) ... .. 3 0      |
|  | WEST, A. H. Toccata ... .. 3 0                                       |

SONGS.

- | SOPRANO.                                      |       | TENOR.   |       |
|---|-------|--|-------|
|   | s. d. |  | s. d. |
| DVORÁK, Invocation ... ..                     | 2 0   | FARRAR, E. O Mistress Mine ... ..                | 2 0   |
| ELGAR, E. Oh soft was the song ... ..         | 2 0   | MACKENZIE, A. C. While my lady sleepeth ... ..   | 1 6   |
| FARRAR, E. Brittany ... ..                    | 1 6   | PARRY, C. H. H. The Maiden ... ..                | 1 6   |
| MACKENZIE, A. C. Cross and Crown ... ..       | 2 0   | SOMERVILLE, R. Invocation to the Dawn ... ..     | 2 0   |
| PURCELL, Evening Hymn ... ..                  | 2 0   | WAGNER, Walter's Prize Song ... ..               | 2 0   |
| CONTRALTO.                                    |       | BASS.  |       |
|   | s. d. |  | s. d. |
| COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Soul's Expression ... .. | 4 0   | BENEDICT, Rage thou angry storm ... ..           | 2 0   |
| DVORÁK, Inflammatus ... ..                    | 2 0   | GREENE, Dr. M. Like the young God of wine ... .. | 2 0   |
| ELGAR, E. A child asleep ... ..               | 2 0   | HARTY, HAMILTON, Homeward ... ..                 | 2 0   |
| GLUCK, Thou art gone, alas, for ever ... ..   | 2 0   | PARRY, C. H. H. God breaketh the battle ... ..   | 2 0   |
| PARRY, C. H. H. Ballad of Mabelmeth ... ..    | 2 0   | SMYTH, E. M. Chrysis ... ..                      | 2 0   |

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

COMPETITION FESTIVAL MUSIC

PUBLISHED BY NOVELLO & CO., LTD.

MIXED VOICES.

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Awake, awake ... .. 4d.	GERMAN, E. Chase, The ... .. 4d.
Grass of Parnassus ... .. 4d.	London Town ... .. 6d.
On Himalay... .. 4d.	My bonnie lass, she smileth ... .. 4d.
BRAHMS. Dirge of Darthula, The (Op. 42, No. 3) ... .. 6d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR. Evening Star, The ... .. 2d.	PARRY, C. H. H. Music, when soft voices die ... .. 3d.
Lee Shore, The ... .. 4d.	My delight and thy delight ... .. 4d.
CORNELIUS. P. O death! thou art the tranquil night (Op. 11, No. 1) ... .. 6d.	There rolls the deep ... .. 3d.
ELGAR, E. After many a dusty mile (arr.) ... .. 4d.	Sweet day, so cool... .. 3d.
Death on the hills ... .. 8d.
Feasting I watch (arr.) ... .. 4d.	STANFORD, C. V. Corydon, arise ... .. 4d.
Go, song of mine ... .. 8d.	Phœbe ... .. 4d.
Shower, The ... .. 6d.	WEST, JOHN E. Woodmen, shepherds, come away ... .. 4d.
FLETCHER, PERCY E. Folly's Song ... .. 4d.	WILLIAMS, C. LEE. Song of the Pedlar ... .. 4d.
GARDINER, H. BALFOUR. Cargoes ... .. 1d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Fain would I change that note ... .. 3d.
Old song resung, An ... .. 6d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Full fathom five ... .. 3d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS.

BATESON. Hark! hear you not... .. 4d.	MORLEY. Arise, awake, you silly shepherds ... .. 4d.
BENET. All creatures now are merry-minded ... .. 4d.	Shoot, false love, I care not ... .. 4d.
BYRD. I joy not in no earthly bliss ... .. 4d.	TOMKINS. Oyes! has any found a lad... .. 2d.
This sweet and merry month of May... .. 4d.	Weep no more ... .. 2d.
FARMER. I thought my love, that I should overtake you ... .. 4d.	WHEELKES. As Vesta was from Latmos' Hill descending ... .. 4d.
GIBBONS, ORLANDO. Ah! dere heart ... .. 2d.	Lady, your eye ... .. 4d.
I tremble not at noise of war ... .. 4d.	WILBYE. Adieu, sweet Amarillis ... .. 3d.
MARSTON. Nymphs and shepherds ... .. 4d.	Alas! what hope of speeding ... .. 3d.
	Lady Oriana, The... .. 4d.

MALE VOICES (T.T.B.B.).

BANTOCK, GRANVILLE. Festival Song ... .. 6d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. Sailor's Return, The ... .. 6d.
Give a rouse ... .. 4d.	Vision of Belshazzah, The ... .. 4d.
CARSE, A. The tide rises, the tide falls ... .. 3d.	GERMAN, E. Ol'peaceful night ... .. 4d.
CORNELIUS, P. Rider's Song, The ... .. 6d.	Sleeping ... .. 4d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Hymn before Action ... .. 4d.	LLOYD, C. H. Wet sheet and a flowing sea ... .. 4d.
DUNHILL, T. F. Full fathom five ... .. 4d.	SCHUMANN. Night March, The (Op. 62, No. 1) ... .. 4d.
It was a lover and his lass ... .. 4d.	Song of Freedom (Op. 62, No. 2) ... .. 1.
Who is Sylvia? ... .. 4d.
ELGAR, E. Reveille, The ... .. 8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Bushes and briars (Folk-Song) ... .. 3d.
Wanderer, The ... .. 4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. Down in yon summer vale ... .. 3d.
Zut! zut! zut! ... .. 4d.

FEMALE VOICES.

ATKINS, IVOR. Sea Song, A. (s.a.) ... .. 4d.	FLETCHER, PERCY E. *Dream, baby. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.
BERLIOZ. Ophelia. (s.a.)... .. 4d.	*Oh the merry May. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.
BOUGHTON, RUTLAND. Piper's Song. (s.s.a.)... .. 3d.	GERMAN, E. Beauteous morn. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.
BRAHMS. *Barcarolle (Op. 44, No. 3). (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 2d.	O lovely May. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.
Gardener, The (Op. 17, No. 3). (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	HOLST, G. *Splendour falls, The. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.
*Now all the roses (Op. 44, No. 7). (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.	*Sweet and low. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.
COLERIDGE-TAYLOR, S. Encinctured with a twine of leaves. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	SHAW, GEOFFREY. Three Hymns from Pan's Anniversary:—
From the green heart of the waters. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	Of Pan we sing. (s.s.a.)... .. 6d.
DAVIES, H. WALFORD. Lamb, The. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	Pan is our all. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.
Shepherd, The. (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	If yet Pan's orgies. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.
ELGAR, E. Christmas greeting, A. (s.a.) ... .. 8d.	WILLIAMS, R. VAUGHAN. Sound sleep. (s.s.a.) ... .. 6d.
My love dwelt in a northern land (arr.). (s.s.a.) ... .. 4d.	WOOD, CHARLES. La Fileuse. (s.a.) ... .. 4d.

ELIZABETHAN MADRIGALS (ARRANGED).

*BATESON. Nightingale, The. (s.s.a.) ... .. 2d.	*GI' BONS, ORLANDO. The silver swan. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 2d.
*BYRDE. Looke downe, O Lord. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 3d.	MORLEY. *My bonny lass she smileth. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 4d.
*EDWARDS. In going to my lonely bed (s.s.a.a.)... .. 3d.	*Now is the month of maying. (s.s.a.a.) ... .. 3d.
	WHEELKES. *Nightingale, The. (s.s.a.) ... .. 3d.

<sup>3</sup> Unaccompanied.

UNISON SONG FOR MASSES VOICES.

Words by WHITTIER. WORSHIP. PRICE TWOPENCE. Music by GEOFFREY SHAW.

Specimens of every kind of music will be forwarded on application. To ensure a satisfactory selection, the Syllabus of the last Festival should accompany the request.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

THESE 12 VOLUMES

CARRIAGE PAID TO YOUR ADDRESS FOR

10/-

IN PAPER OR GILT
CLOTH EDITIONS.

Send for Complete List of Contents, Post Free, To-Day, and see Instalment Purchase Terms Given Below.

YOUR LAST CHANCE!

This wonderful offer closes on April 15th, 1924.

The . . . ORGAN LOFT

12 SUPERB VOLUMES

Comprising 2,280 Pages and 360 Compositions by the Leading Organist-Composers.

Some of the Composers:

ARCHER, J. STUART
BELLERBY, E. J.
BLAIR, Dr. H.
BOTTING, D. H.
CRACKEL, H.
D'EVRY, E.
DIGGLE, ROLAND
DRIFFIELD, T.
DRIFFILL, W.
DUNCAN, EDMONDSTOUNE.
ELLINGFORD, HERBERT
FARJEON, HARRY FAULKES, W.
FERRARI, GUSTAVE
FRICKER, H. A.
GOSS-CUSTARD, R.
GRAY, ALAN
GOSTELOW, F.
HAIGH, Dr. T.
HALSEY, E.
HARRISON, JULIUS
HOLLINS, ALFRED
JENKINS, CYRIL
MANSFIELD, PURCELL J.
MEALE, J. A.
NUNN, E. CUTHBERT
NOBLE, T. TERTIUS
PALMER, Dr. C. CHARLTON
ROWLEY, ALEC
TOZER, FERRIS
VINCENT, CHARLES
WHITE, L. MEADOWS
WIEGAND, AUG.
WOLSTENHOLME, W.
YON, PIETRO
Etc. Etc. Etc.

Look At These Names

They are all names to conjure with in the sphere of modern organ music. They are the names of men who have composed some of the finest organ music extant—

And the fruits of their genius is at your disposal for 2/6 per week!

"THE ORGAN LOFT" is an absolutely unique collection of the best works of modern composers. It is a "Library" of organ music in the widest and most comprehensive sense. Within its twelve volumes there is a wondrous store of organ music fascinating in its variety, its diversity of styles, and its ever-changing appeal. There is music here to please all tastes and charm the most captious critics.

In "THE ORGAN LOFT" the choice of pieces is almost endless. To the organist who would do justice to his post by playing music of a consistently high standard "THE ORGAN LOFT" is a necessity.

In each volume there are approximately 100 pages of music, comprising 30 compositions, And They Are All Good. Whether you are a church organist, a recitalist, or a cinema organist, you will find in "THE ORGAN LOFT" music to suit all needs, no matter what the occasion may be.

Though produced at enormous cost, we have determined to bring this splendid range of organ music within the reach of all by means of the instalment terms of payment GIVEN BELOW. This is an absolutely new idea in music selling. We provide the organist to whom these great works have hitherto been unattainable with an unexampled opportunity for enjoying them, and we practically loan him the capital to enable him to do so.

By sending 10/- with order you will receive the entire set of twelve volumes, carriage paid, and you pay the balance by the monthly instalments shown below:

TERMS.

PAPER EDITION—

Cash with Order ... £5 5 0 (carriage paid).
Instalment System ... 10/- with Order and
10 Monthly Instalments of 10/- each.

CLOTH EDITION—

Cash with Order ... £7 7 0 (carriage paid).
Instalment System ... 10/- with Order and
10 Monthly Instalments of 14/6 each.

SEND YOUR ORDER WITH FIRST INSTALMENT TO-DAY.

If you already possess some of the volumes of this Series, we shall be pleased to specially quote Instalment Terms for the remaining Volumes.

PAXTON'S, LONDON: 22, HIGH STREET,
NEW OXFORD STREET, W.C.1.

IMPORTANT.—When ordering please mention Offer No. 17.

RECENT PUBLICATIONS

CHAMBER MUSIC.

FOR TRIO—PIANO, VIOLIN, AND 'CELLO. PRICE 1s. 6d. EACH.
SUITABLE FOR HOME, CINEMA, OR CONCERT USE.

In this admirable Anthology of Chamber Music the most charming portions of lengthy works have been detached, and are presented in a concise, well-edited form.

ANDANTE, No. 68001 (m-md) ... Reissiger

A melodious movement of sentimental character in which the violin and 'cello parts alternate and blend with telling effect.

VIVACE, No. 68002 (md) ... Raff

A spirited work appealing mostly by its rhythm, which is strongly marked and jovial.

SERENADE, No. 68004 (mc) Sterndale Bennett

A dainty pizzicato movement

ALLEGRETTO, No. 68003 (m-md) ... Raff

An attractive excerpt in a flowing and melodious style.

VIOLIN MUSIC.

			s.	d.
BEES' WEDDING ... ..	Mendelssohn	65062	( md )	1 0
BERCEUSE ... ..	Ilynsky	65063	( mc )	0 9
CHANT SANS PAROLES ... ..	Pachulski	65065	( mc )	0 9
MARIONNETTES ESPAGNOLES ... ..	Cui	65058	( m )	0 9
O STAR OF EVE ... ..	Wagner	65059	( m )	0 9
SERENADE ... ..	J. Stuart Archer	60207	( m )	1 6
THREE IRISH FOLK-TUNES ... ..	arr. by H. Tolhurst	15141	( mc-m )	2 6

Contents: Gentle Maiden. I shall leave this country. Mary Asthore.

KAYSER'S 36 STUDIES and KREUTZER'S 40 STUDIES.

Two new editions of these famous works. Price, each, 2s. 6d.

ORGAN MUSIC.

CAPRICE ... ..	J. Stuart Archer	57333	( m )	1 1
CARILLON ... ..	Purcell J. Mansfield	57338	( m )	2 1
CRADLE SONG ... ..	Purcell J. Mansfield	57339	( m )	1 1
EIGHT SHORT PIECES ... ..	J. Stuart Archer	22163	( mc-m )	3 1
With easy progressive pedal obbligatos.
INTERMEZZO ... ..	J. Stuart Archer	57334	( mc )	1 1
LONDONDERRY AIR ... ..	arr. J. Stuart Archer	63007	( mc )	1 1
MELODY IN D ... ..	Dr. H. D. Wetton	57337	( mc )	1 1
SERENADE ... ..	J. Stuart Archer	57335	( m )	1 1
STORM FANTASY on Dykes' "Melita" ... ..	Paul Vergolet	57340	( m )	2 1

PIANO MUSIC.

FOR RECREATION OR EDUCATION.

CHANSON ITALIENNE ( Serenade )	...	...	...	...	R. Drigo	50657 ( m )	2	1
IN ARCADY	...	...	...	...	...	Lewis Anthony	15118 ( md )	2	1
Four Visions of Fantasy Land. Contents: 1. Pan's Ball to the Flowers. 2. The Spirit of the Silent Pool. 3. Moonbeams. 4. Hail, King Puck!
MY LADY'S MOODS	...	...	...	...	H. E. Gibson-Butler	15119 ( m-md )	2	1
Contents: 1. Plaisanterie. 2. Badinage. 3. Pensée d'Amour. 4. Coquetterie. 5. Envie de Danser.
MYTHS AND MELODIES	...	...	...	...	H. E. Gibson-Butler	15147 ( md )	2	6
A charming Suite of Four Pieces.
NIGHT	...	...	...	...	...	Geoffrey Kaye	50655 ( m )	2	0
Tone-Picture.
OLD KING COLE	...	...	...	...	...	Ernest Newton	15146 ( rc-c )	2	1
And other Nursery Songs arranged as easy Pianoforte Duets.
TENTH STAR FOLIO. No. 33017. Paper, 3s.; Paper Boards, 4s.; Cloth Boards, 5s.
240 Pages of well-varied, popular, and carefully-edited Pianoforte Music.
Useful to the Amateur, Student, or Professional.
THE WATER BABIES	...	...	...	...	...	Edric Cundell ( mc-m )	each	2	6
Charles Kingsley's Popular Fairy-Tale, set to music, in two books.
VILLAGE PICTURES	...	...	...	...	...	Robert Clayton	15145 ( c )	2	0
Nine short and easy pieces.

GRADING: E=Easy; M=Moderate; D=Difficult.

Of all Music Dealers, or, if offer No. 17 is mentioned, post free from:

PAXTON'S: 22, HIGH STREET, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.C.1.

Send for Complete Catalogues: Piano, C. 301; Instrumental, C. 401; Organ, C. 501, post free.

ALBUMS FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE FIVE SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH. CLOTH, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE EACH.

No.	No. 1.	No.	No. 5.
1. Interlude ... ..	... Th. Dubois	1. Jour de Noces ... ..	... J. Stuart Archer
2. Chanson de Matin ... ..	... Edward Elgar	2. Festival Prelude on "Ein feste Burg" ... ..	... W. Faulkes
3. Fantasia on the old melody "Urbs Beata" ... ..	... W. Faulkes	3. Legend ... ..	... Harvey Grace
4. There is a green hill far away ... ..	... Ch. Gounod	4. Allegretto Pastorale ... ..	... H. M. Higgs
5. Marche Triomphale ... ..	... Alexandre Guilmant	5. Benediction Nuptiale ... ..	... Alfred Hollins
6. Ave Maria ... ..	... A. Henselt	6. Sursum Corda ... ..	... John N. Ireland
7. Grand Chœur No. 2. ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	7. Alla Marcia ... ..	... John N. Ireland
8. Andantino in D flat ... ..	... Edwin H. Lemare	8. Adagio Cantabile ... ..	... Edwin H. Lemare
9. Chanson Triste ... ..	... P. Tschaikowsky	9. Fanfare ... ..	... J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to "Lohengrin," Act I. ... ..	... R. Wagner	10. Intermezzo ... ..	... B. Luard-Selby
11. Romanza ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	11. Easter Morn ... ..	... John E. West
12. Allegretto in E flat ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	12. Finale in B flat ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme
No. 2.	No. 3.	No. 6.	No. 7 (Funeral Music).
1. Chanson de Nuit ... ..	... Edward Elgar	1. Nocturne ... ..	... Thomas F. Dunhill
2. Alla Marcia ... ..	... Myles B. Foster	2. Postludium ... ..	... William Faulkes
3. Minuetto ... ..	... Alexandre Guilmant	3. Andante Tranquillo ... ..	... H. M. Higgs
4. Lied ... ..	... H. Hofmann	4. In Springtime ... ..	... Alfred Hollins
5. Barcarolle ... ..	... H. Hofmann	5. Madrigal ... ..	... Edwin H. Lemare
6. Spring Song ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	6. Triumphal March ... ..	... J. Lemmens
7. The Curfew ... ..	... Edward J. Horsman	7. Allegro in B flat ... ..	... F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy
8. Pastorale in E ... ..	... Edwin H. Lemare	8. Choral Prelude on "Rockingham" ... ..	... C. Hubert H. Parry
9. Ave Maria d'Arcadelt ... ..	... Franz Liszt	9. Præludium Pastorale ... ..	... J. Stainer
10. Cantique d'Amour ... ..	... Theo. Wendi	10. Romance in F minor ... ..	... Tschaikowsky
11. The Seraph's Strain ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	11. Romance in A flat ... ..	... H. Sandiford Turner
12. Le Carillon ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	12. Festal Commemoration ... ..	... John E. West
No. 4.	No. 8 (Christmas Music).	No. 9 (Christmas Music).	No. 10 (Christmas Music).
1. Arietta ... ..	... S. Coleridge-Taylor	1. Chorale Prelude, "In dulci jubilo" ... ..	... J. S. Bach
2. Souvenir de Printemps ... ..	... Joseph Holbrooke	2. Pastoral Symphony ("Christmas Oratorio") ... ..	... J. S. Bach
3. Andante in D ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	3. Quem Vidistis, Pastores ... ..	... W. T. Best
4. Pavane in A ... ..	... Bernard Johnson	4. Venite in Bethlehem ... ..	... W. T. Best
5. Harmonies du Soir ... ..	... Sigfrid Karg-Elert	5. December—Christmas Morn ... ..	... Frederic H. Cowen
6. An Eton Memorial March ... ..	... C. H. Lloyd	6. Fantasia on Old Christmas Carols ... ..	... William Faulkes
7. Allegro alla Marcia ... ..	... R. L. Peace	7. For unto us a Child is born ("Messiah") ... ..	... Handel
8. Visione ... ..	... J. Rheinberger	8. Pastorelle ... ..	... Theodore Kullak
9. Chant sans Paroles ... ..	... P. Tschaikowsky	9. Chorus of Shepherds ... ..	... J. Lemmens
10. Prelude to Act III. ("Die Meistersinger") ... ..	... R. Wagner	10. Christmas Pastorale ... ..	... Gustav Merkel
11. Allegro Pomposo ... ..	... John E. West	11. A Christmas Pastoral ... ..	... B. Luard-Selby
12. Canzona ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	12. Fantasy on Two Christmas Carols ("The First Nowell" and "Good King Wenceslas.") ... ..	... John E. West

SHORT PRELUDES FOR THE ORGAN

PRICE ONE SHILLING AND SIXPENCE EACH BOOK.

These Short Preludes are intended for use chiefly as Introductory Voluntaries to Divine Service, more especially in those churches where the time allowed for such is, of necessity, somewhat limited.

No.	Book I.	No.	Book IV.
1. Andante Grazioso ... ..	... Thomas Adams	1. "Elevation"—Andante e Legato ... ..	... Thomas Adams
2. Andante ... ..	... W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Religioso ... ..	... Myles B. Foster
3. Largamente ... ..	... George J. Bennett	3. "Simplicity"—Andante ... ..	... Barry M. Gilholy
4. Andante Religioso ... ..	... Myles B. Foster	4. Largamente ... ..	... R. G. Hailing
5. Andantino ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	5. "Dialogue"—Andante Grazioso ... ..	... Charles H. Lloyd
6. Adagio Cantabile ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	6. Andantino ... ..	... Arthur W. Marchant
7. Larghetto ... ..	... Charles J. May	7. Con Moto Moderato ... ..	... William Sewell
8. Andante con Moto ... ..	... John E. West	8. Andante Amabile ... ..	... William Sewell
9. Andantino quasi Allegretto ... ..	... John E. West	9. Andante ... ..	... Clement M. Spurling
10. Andante ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Sostenuto ... ..	... F. Cunningham Woods
Book II.	Book III.	Book V.	Book VI.
1. Andante con Moto ... ..	... Thomas Adams	1. "Invocation"—Andante Grazioso ... ..	... Thomas Adams
2. Con Moto ... ..	... W. G. Alcock	2. Andante con Moto ... ..	... Percy E. Fletcher
3. Moderato ... ..	... H. A. Chambers	3. Poco Adagio ... ..	... Myles B. Foster
4. Marziale, poco Lento ... ..	... Myles B. Foster	4. Andante Espresso ... ..	... Ignace Gibsons
5. Moderato ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	5. Adagio ... ..	... Alfred Hollins
6. Andantino ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	6. Poco Lento ... ..	... Charles H. Lloyd
7. Adagio ... ..	... Charles J. May	7. Andante Dolente ... ..	... Arthur W. Marchant
8. "Hymnus"—Andante e Sostenuto ... ..	... John E. West	8. Andantino con Tenerezza ... ..	... William Sewell
9. Andante Serioso ... ..	... John E. West	9. Andante con Moto ... ..	... Clement M. Spurling
10. Adagio ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	10. Adagio Molto ... ..	... F. Cunningham Woods
Book III.	Book IV.	Book V.	Book VI.
1. Moderato e Legato ... ..	... Thomas Adams	1. Dolente ... ..	... Edmund T. Chipp
2. Moderato ... ..	... W. G. Alcock	2. Andante Sostenuto ... ..	... Myles B. Foster
3. Andante con Moto ... ..	... George J. Bennett	3. Andantino ... ..	... R. G. Hailing
4. Andante ... ..	... H. A. Chambers	4. Con Moto ... ..	... Alfred Hollins
5. Grazioso molto Espresso ... ..	... Myles B. Foster	5. "Communion"—Cantabile ... ..	... J. Lemmens
6. "Song without Words"—Con Moto ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	6. Andante Religioso ... ..	... Arthur W. Marchant
7. Andante ... ..	... Alfred Hollins	7. Lento ... ..	... Charles J. May
8. Andante Dolente ... ..	... John E. West	8. Larghetto ... ..	... Albert Robins
9. Andante Pastorale ... ..	... John E. West	9. Adagio e Mesto ... ..	... William Sewell
10. Adagio ... ..	... W. Wolstenholme	10. Andante Affettuoso ... ..	... William Sewell

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

PUBLISHED BY THE H. W. GRAY CO., NEW YORK.

THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC SERIES.

BY

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

- VOL. 1. THE APPRECIATION OF MUSIC.
 .. 2. GREAT MODERN COMPOSERS.
 .. 3. SHORT STUDIES OF GREAT MASTERPIECES.
 .. 4. MUSIC AS A HUMANITY.
 .. 5. A GUIDE TO MUSIC.

Cloth, Six Shillings per Volume.

THE PRINCIPLES OF PIANO PRACTICE.

BY

JAMES FRISKIN.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

THE ORCHESTRAL INSTRUMENTS AND WHAT THEY DO.

(ILLUSTRATED).

DANIEL GREGORY MASON.

Cloth, Four Shillings.

Selling Agents: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited, London.

ORCHESTRAL WORKS. SELECTED LIST.

S. COLERIDGE-TAYLOR.

BALLADE IN A MINOR.

Full Score, 11s. 6d. String Parts, 6s. 9d. Wind Parts, 15s. 8d.

EDWARD ELGAR.

FALSTAFF. Symphonic Study.

Full Score, 52s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

WAND OF YOUTH. Suite No. 1.

Full Score, 21s. String Parts, 7s. 6d. Wind Parts, 17s. 8d.

WAND OF YOUTH. Suite No. 2.

Full Score, 21s. String Parts, 10s. 6d. Wind Parts, 23s. 4d.

EDWARD GERMAN.

HAMLET. Symphonic Poem.

Full Score, MS. String Parts, 9s. 9d. Wind Parts, 19s.

ARTHUR HERVEY.

YOUTH. Concert Overture.

Full Score, 16s. String Parts, 9s. Wind Parts, 22s.

J. HOLBROOKE.

BYRON.

Full Score, 21s. String Parts, 8s. 2d. Wind Parts, MS.

GUSTAV HOLST.

THE BALLET from "The Perfect Fool."

Full Score, 15s. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

FUGAL OVERTURE.

Full Score, 7s. 6d. Orchestral Parts on hire only.

A. C. MACKENZIE.

LA BELLE DAME.

Full Score, 11s. 6d. String Parts, 8s. 3d. Wind Parts, 17s. 2d.

HAMISH MACCUNN.

LAND OF THE MOUNTAIN AND THE FLOOD.

Full Score, 16s. String Parts, 6s. Wind Parts, 11s. 6d.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

No. 98.—NOVELLO'S MUSIC PRIMERS.

ELEMENTS

OF

MUSICAL APPRECIATION.

BY

W. J. FOXELL,

M.A., Mus. Bac., Lond.

PRICE TWO SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE.

London: NOVELLO &amp; COMPANY, Limited.

OF IMPORTANCE TO TEACHERS.

New Edition of

THE ELEMENTS OF PIANO TECHNIQUE

arranged upon a Rhythmic Basis.

Revised Edition containing new Polyphonic Section.

By DR. RALPH H. BELLAIRS.

Strongly recommended by the highest authorities.

Price 2s. 6d. net. Of all Musicsellers.

Complete Lists Post Free.

ENOCH &amp; SONS LD., 58, Great Marlborough Street, W.1.

THE SINGER'S ART.

A. J. LARKCOM, F.R.A.M.

MANUAL FOR SINGERS AND TEACHERS.

Recommended for Study for the L.R.A.M. Teacher's Diploma.

Price One Shilling and Sixpence

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

AN EVENING HYMN ON A GROUND

("NOW THAT THE SUN")

WORDS BY

DR. WILLIAM FULLER

MELODY AND BASS BY

HENRY PURCELL

EDITED AND AN ACCOMPANIMENT WRITTEN BY

HARVEY GRACE.

TWO KEYS

Price ... Two Shillings each.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

The Pied Piper of Hamelin

BY

ROBERT BROWNING.

SET TO MUSIC FOR CHILDREN'S VOICES

BY

GEORGE RATHBONE

Composer of "VOGELWIED," "SINGING LEAVES," "ORPHEUS," and other popular works for Children's Voices.)

Price, Staff Notation, Two Shillings. Tonic Sol-fa, One Shilling.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

PRICE SIXTEEN SHILLINGS NET.

IN TWO VOLUMES, CLOTH GILT.

FREDERICK CHOPIN

AS A MAN AND MUSICIAN

BY

FREDERICK NIECKS

WITH A PORTRAIT ETCHED BY H. R. ROBERTSON, AND FACSIMILES OF THE COMPOSER'S MS.

EXTRACTS FROM PREFACE.

My guiding principle has been to place before the reader the facts collected by me as well as the conclusions at which I arrived. This will enable him to see the subject in all its bearings, with all its pros and cons, and to draw his own conclusions, should mine not obtain his approval.

My researches had for their object the whole life of Chopin and his historical, political, artistic, social, and personal surroundings, but they were chiefly directed to the least known and most interesting period of his career—his life in France, and his visits to Germany and Great Britain.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

SEVENTH AND REVISED EDITION.

A HANDBOOK OF EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC

CONTAINING 600 QUESTIONS WITH ANSWERS

BY
ERNEST A. DICKS,

Fellow of the Royal College of Organists.

PREFACE TO THE SEVENTH EDITION.

Through the kindness of Dr. E. H. Turpin the seventh edition of the Handbook of Examinations in Music includes the latest type of Papers set by Trinity College of Music, London, in their scheme of Local Examinations in Musical Knowledge.

The work will also be found to have been considerably enlarged by the addition of fifty specimen questions, with answers. They have been designed for the most part after the manner of those set in the Theory Paper for the L.R.A.M. Diploma, and also that required by candidates for the Higher Practical Examinations held by Trinity College of Music, London. The author earnestly hopes that these additions will considerably enhance the value of the Handbook, and render it increasingly helpful to students.

E. A. D.

Price, cloth, Five Shillings and Sixpence.

THE QUESTIONS (separately),

Price One Shilling and Sixpence.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A VALUABLE BOOK FOR TEACHERS AND STUDENTS.

TECHNIQUE AND EXPRESSION IN PIANOFORTE PLAYING

BY FRANKLIN TAYLOR.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

In the course of my experience as a teacher of the pianoforte, an experience extending over many years, certain ideas have from time to time suggested themselves to me which have proved useful—to myself, as enabling me to express more clearly that which I desired my pupils to understand, and to my pupils, as tending to facilitate their comprehension of the various difficulties they have had to encounter, at the same time leading them to perceive the most practical means of overcoming them, and thus accelerating their general rate of progress.

These suggestions relate to both the mechanical and intellectual sides of the study of pianoforte-playing, or briefly, to Technique and Expression, the chief matters implied by the first of these terms being the production of various qualities of tone, the choice of suitable fingering, and the best methods of attacking certain difficulties; while the second, which may perhaps be more aptly designated the means of expression, includes rhythm, phrasing, variety and gradation of tone, the use of the pedals, et cetera.

WITH NUMEROUS MUSICAL EXAMPLES FROM THE WORKS OF THE GREAT MASTERS.

PRICE, CLOTH GILT, SEVEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

A NEW BOOK BY SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

COMMANDER OF THE ROYAL VICTORIAN ORDER.

GRESHAM PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.

Dedicated to SIR JOHN JAMES BADDELEY.

THE OLD CRYES OF LONDON

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS AND MUSICAL EXAMPLES
AND A COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

Eighty-Eight Pages, Crown 4to ... .. Price Seven Shillings net.

THE MORNING POST: "His book has a delightful antiquarian flavour, increased by its quaint illustrations, and the use of the old-style music type."

THE TIMES: "Under the title 'The Old Cryes of London' Sir Frederick Bridge has now written, and Messrs. Novello have published, a delightful little volume.

The best thing in this book is the author; and the next best things are the illustrations."

ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE GAZETTE: "A very unusually attractive book. It certainly forms a most welcome contribution to musical history."

THE REFEREE: "This contains a mine of antiquarian lore, reproductions of old woodcuts, and musical examples."

THE GUARDIAN: "Those individuals who were so unfortunate as to miss Sir Frederick Bridge's delightful lectures in the City on 'The Old Cryes of London' will derive both consolation and entertainment from this excellent volume."

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD: "This delightful little volume . . . an excellent piece of genial antiquarianism, musical, literary, and historical."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

INDISPENSABLE FOR A LIBRARY, OR AS A REFERENCE BOOK.

NOVELLO'S COLLECTION OF WORDS OF ANTHEMS

Crown 8vo, 822 pp., cloth, red edges, 7s. 6d. net. Red Basil and red edges, 11s. 6d. net. Appendix only, paper cover, 1s. 6d. net.

This Book, which now contains the words of about 2000 Anthems, besides being admirably adapted for the use of Choirs and Congregations, for which purpose it was originally compiled, will be found most valuable to Organists, Choirmasters, and the Clergy as a BOOK OF REFERENCE FOR THE SELECTION OF ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR SPECIAL DAYS, SEASONS, OR OCCASIONS, the Indexes having been considerably enlarged. It also contains a list of Anthems suitable for Men's Voices, and Anthems with Latin words.

The newly incorporated Anthems (Nos. 1590 to 1952) have been added to the former edition by means of an Appendix, which is published separately from the complete work. Consequently Choirs and Congregations which are still using the older edition are enabled to supplement their books, and make them complete, by purchasing the Appendix at the price of One Shilling and Sixpence net.

CONTENTS.

BIOGRAPHICAL NOTICES OF COMPOSERS, WITH LIST OF THEIR ANTHEMS.
ANTHEMS SUITABLE FOR CERTAIN DAYS AND SEASONS.
ANTHEMS SUITABLE TO BE SUNG Without ACCOMPANIMENT.
ANTHEMS FOR MEN'S VOICES.

ANTHEMS WITH LATIN WORDS.
INDEX OF PASSAGES OF SCRIPTURE, &c.
INDEX OF COLLECTS, PRAYERS, &c.
GENERAL INDEX.

The following are some of the more important Cathedrals, Churches, and Chapels at which the "Words of Anthems" is in constant use:—

ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.
WESTMINSTER ABBEY.
CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.
YORK MINSTER.
WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
ST. GEORGE'S CHAPEL, WINDSOR.
CHAPEL ROYAL, ST. JAMES'S.
BANGOR CATHEDRAL.
NORWICH CATHEDRAL.
ELY CATHEDRAL.
ROCHESTER CATHEDRAL.
ST. ASAPH CATHEDRAL.
EXETER CATHEDRAL.

CHICHESTER CATHEDRAL.
GLOUCESTER CATHEDRAL.
WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.
HEREFORD CATHEDRAL.
TRURO CATHEDRAL.
SALISBURY CATHEDRAL.
PETERBOROUGH CATHEDRAL.
ILANDAFF CATHEDRAL.
SOUTHWELL CATHEDRAL.
RIPON CATHEDRAL.
NEWCASTLE CATHEDRAL.
NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.
CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD.

ST. MARY'S CATHEDRAL,
EDINBURGH.
ETON COLLEGE.
CHRIST CHURCH, LANCASTER.
GATE, W.
ST. PETER'S, CRANLEY GARDENS,
S.W.
LINCOLN'S INN CHAPEL.
CARLISLE CATHEDRAL.
DURHAM CATHEDRAL.
LINCOLN CATHEDRAL.
GLASGOW CATHEDRAL.
MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

EURHYTHM: THOUGHT IN ACTION

The Principles and Practice of Vocal and Physical Therapy.

DESIGNED FOR THE USE OF TEACHERS AND STUDENTS OF VOCAL AND PHYSICAL EDUCATION

By H. H. HULBERT

CAPT. R.A.M.C., M.A. OXFORD, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., ETC.

176 Pages, Octavo Size, Cloth, Gilt Lettered - - - - PRICE SEVEN SHILLINGS NET.

SHORT SYNOPSIS OF CHAPTERS.

I.—DEFINITION OF EURHYTHM. II.—THE ENGLISH PHYSIQUE AND ARTISTIC MOVEMENT. Science and games of skill—Movements of novice and master-man—Co-ordination in movement—Discipline of games. III.—THE POISE OF THE BODY AND TONICITY. Common deformities—Correct poise—Correct figure—Lumbar curve the centre of balance—Degrees of tonicity—Position of attention—Special exercises. IV.—THE SCIENCE OF APPRECIATION AND THE CONCEPTION OF THE BEAUTIFUL. Power of imagery—Knowledge of self—Kinds of appreciation—The five senses and experience—Sense of touch in music and games. V.—THE ART OF EXPRESSION AND CONTROL. Three nervous levels—Will and movement—The guiding sensation of movement—feeling—Self-control of the actor and public speaker—Euphonics. VI.—THE CENTRAL APPARATUS OF SPEECH. VII.—THE SOUNDS OF THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE. VIII.—BREATHING FOR VOICE. Diagrammatic sketch of apparatus—Different kinds of breathing—Effects of types of breathing on voice hygiene and figure. IX.—THE ARTICULATORY APPARATUS. X.—THE LARYNX. XI.—HYGIENE FOR VOICE-USERS AND ORDINARY HEALTH EXERCISES. Voice-user's throat—Physiological congestion of throat—Voice-training prevents voice-user's throat—Loss of health through civilization—Physical exercises for health—Positions: movements of arms, head, body, and legs; balance exercises, jumping, and marching. XII.—EURHYTHMICS.—THE PRACTICE OF EURHYTHMICS.

"It was very much wanted, and now that it has arrived it proves to be the best book on the subject we have ever seen. . . . One would like to dwell lovingly on every stage of this monumental work did space permit, but it will only allow of a general commendation of every word from the beginning . . . to the end, which consists of music to accompany the rhythmic physical exercises."—The Morning Post, February 17, 1922.

"No teacher of singing should be without this wonderful book."—Musical Opinion.

"This is a thoughtful and thought-compelling book which touches life at most points. Eurhythm the author defines as perfect harmony, and discusses with a fine enthusiasm the practical means of bringing about in the individual this desirable condition. The book should be of great value to teachers of singing and physical education, while the intelligent student can also derive great benefit from a careful reading."—Glasgow Herald.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

MUSIC SUITABLE FOR EASTERTIDE

GRANVILLE BANTOCK.

	s.	d.
EASTER HYMN. For Medium Voice and Pianoforte... ..	2	0 net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., with Organ Accompaniment ... ..	0	4 net.
Or Unaccompanied ... ..	0	2 net.

D. E. INGHELBRECHT.

THE CANTICLE OF CREATION (St. Francois d'Assise).
For S.A.T.B., and Orchestra. Vocal Score ... ..	3	0 net.

FERDINAND HUMMEL.

HALLELUJA! Song for High, Medium, or Low Voice. Latin Words adapted from Psalms LXIII and XXIII. English Version by Frederick H. Martens ... ..	2	0 net.
---	---	--------

A. ARENSKY.

EASTER DAY (from Six Children's Songs). Unison ... ..	0	2 net.
OUR LORD IS RISEN (Anthem). S.S.A. ... ..	0	3 net.

C. H. CRONK.

BLOW UP THE TRUMPET (Festival Anthem). Tenor Solo, and S.A.T.B. ... ..	0	4 net.
--	---	--------

A. LOWE.

THE LORD IS MY STRENGTH (Anthem). S.A.T.B. ... ..	0	3 net.
---	---	--------

P. TCHAIKOWSKY.

LEGEND, "CHRIST IN HIS GARDEN"
For Medium Voice and Pianoforte ... ..	2	0 net.
Also arranged for S.A.T.B., Unaccompanied ... ..	0	2 net.

J. & W. CHESTER, LTD., 11, Great Marlborough St., London, W.1.

THE MUSICAL TIMES

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

FOUNDED IN 1844

PUBLISHED ON THE FIRST OF EVERY MONTH

No. 974.—Vol. 65
Registered at the General Post
Office for Canadian Postage

APRIL 1 1924

Price 6d.; Postage 2d.
Annual Subscription, post-free, 7s. 6d.

ROYAL CHORAL SOCIETY.

ROYAL ALBERT HALL.

Patron · HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

GOOD FRIDAY, APRIL 18, AT 2.30 P.M.

MESSIAH - - - - - HANDEL

MISS RUTH VINCENT.
MISS ASTRA DESMOND.
MR. WALTER HYDE.
MR. ROBERT RADFORD.

At the Organ · MR. R. ARNOLD GREIR.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ORCHESTRA.

Conductor · MR. FRANK BRIDGE.

Stalls, 10s. 6d.; Arena, 7s. 6d.; Balcony (Reserved), 5s.;
Unreserved, 3s. 6d.; Gallery-Promenade (1,000 seats), 2s.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

YORK GATE, MARYLEBONE ROAD, LONDON, N.W.1.

Instituted 1822. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1830.

Patron · HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT, K.G.

Principal · Sir A. C. MACKENZIE, K.C.V.O., Mus. Doc., F.R.C.M.

A SPECIAL COURSE FOR THE TRAINING OF CONDUCTORS has been instituted.

A SPECIAL TEACHERS' TRAINING COURSE has been arranged to meet the requirements of the Teachers' Registration Council.

ORCHESTRAL CONCERT, Queen's Hall, Tuesday, April 1, at 3.

CHAMBER CONCERT, Thursday, April 3, at 3.

THE STERNDALE BENNETT SCHOLARSHIP "In any Branch of Music," for male candidates, and THE MAUD MARY GOOCH SCHOLARSHIP in ORGAN PLAYING, either sex, will be competed for in May. Last day for entry, April 14.

MIDSUMMER TERM will begin on Monday, May 5. Entrance Examination on or about May 1.

J. A. CREIGHTON, Secretary.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

PRINCE CONSORT ROAD, SOUTH KENSINGTON, S.W.7.

(Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1883.)

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.

President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

Director: SIR HUGH P. ALLEN, M.A., Mus. Doc.

Honorary Secretary: GEORGE A. MACMILLAN, Esq., D.Litt.

Registrar: CLAUDE AVELING, Esq., M.A.

The College offers a Complete Course of Musical Education to pupils of both sexes, both professional and amateur. Upwards of seventy Scholarships and Exhibitions are founded which provide free musical education.

A BALLET CLASS under the Direction of Lady George Cholmondeley is held at the College.

The OPERATIC CLASS has the use of the fully equipped College OPERA THEATRE with SUNKEN ORCHESTRA.

Examinations for the Associateship of the College (A.R.C.M.) in all subjects held three times a year in December, April, and September.

THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC PATRON'S FUND (Founded by Sir S. Ernest Palmer, Bart., F.R.C.M., for the encouragement of All British Composers and Executive Artists).

Particulars may be obtained from the Registrar of the College.

MR. HERBERT HODGE will give an ORGAN RECITAL (1.806th), at St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, on April 1st, and every Tuesday at 1 p.m.

Guildhall School of Music.

(CORPORATION OF LONDON.)

VICTORIA EMBANKMENT, E.C.4.

PRINCIPAL ... SIR LANDON RONALD, F.R.A.M., F.G.S.M.

PRIVATE LESSONS in all Musical Subjects, and STAGE TRAINING in Elocution, Gesture, Dancing, Opera.

Complete Musical Education at inclusive fees, £9 9s. and £12 12s. Opera Class, Saturdays. Special Training Course for Teachers (approved by Teachers' Registration Council).

Prospectus and Syllabus of Local Centres and Schools Examinations (open to general public) free.

Telephone: Cent. 4459. H. SAXE WYNDHAM, Secretary.

The Royal College of Organists.

The SOLO-PLAYING TESTS for the next F.R.C.O. EXAMINATION are:

Prelude and Fugue in E minor ("Wedge"), J. S. Bach. (Novello, Book 8, p. 98; Augener, p. 227; Peters, Vol. 2, No. 9.)

Canon in B minor, Schumann. Op. 56. (Any edition.)

Andante in F, from the 6th Quartet, Mozart. Best's Arrangements, No. 2, p. 12 (Novello). This arrangement only.

The selected pieces and the book set for the Essay for the July, 1924, A.R.C.O. Examination, differ from those set for January, 1924.

The Choir-Training Diploma Examination will take place during the week beginning May 12th. Entries must be received by the Registrar not later than Monday, April 14th. Application for re-election to Membership must be made on a Proposal Form, to be completed and returned to the Registrar before Monday, April 7th.

Regulations, list of College Publications, Lectures, &c., may be had on application.

The College is open daily from 10 to 4; Saturdays, 10 to 1.

Examples indicating the character and approximate difficulty of the NEW TESTS, to be set for the first time at the July, 1924, Examinations, may now be obtained at the College.

Associateship or Fellowship, 6d. each (post free).

N.B.—The College will be closed at 4 o'clock on April 16th, and will be re-opened at 10 on April 29th.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

Kensington Gore, S.W.7.

ROYAL

MANCHESTER COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

Founded 1893. Incorporated by Royal Charter, 1923.

Patron: HER MAJESTY QUEEN ALEXANDRA.

President: H.R.H. THE DUKE OF YORK, K.G.

Principal: DR. ADOLPH BRODSKY.

Registrar: STANLEY WITHERS, M.A.

Students are required to enter upon a complete course of Musical instruction, and are not admitted for a shorter period than one year.

Fee for the year, £36. Special fee for Organ Course, £30, and for Wind Instrument Course, £18.

Systematic Course for the Training of Teachers included in the curriculum.

The Prospectus, with Scholarship information, Diploma Regulations, and Entry Forms, on application.

BACH'S PASSION (St. John), at St. Anne's Soho, during Lent, with full orchestra and organ. Friday evenings at 8 o'clock, and Good Friday at 4 p.m. Tickets may be had by sending stamped envelope to Rector, 28, Soho Square, W.1. (Galleries free and unappropriated.)

THE ASSOCIATED BOARD OF THE R.A.M. AND THE R.C.M. FOR LOCAL EXAMINATIONS IN MUSIC.

Patron: HIS MAJESTY THE KING.
President: H.R.H. THE PRINCE OF WALES, K.G.

LOCAL CENTRE EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS A).
Written Examinations held in March and November at all Centres.
Practical Examinations in March-April and November-December at all Centres. Entries for the November-December Examinations close Wednesday, October 15th, 1924.

"SCHOOL" EXAMINATIONS (SYLLABUS B).
Held throughout the British Isles three times a year, viz., March-April, June-July, and October-November. Entries for the June-July Examinations close Wednesday, May 7th (Irish entries, April 30th), 1924.

ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS will be held at certain fixed centres in March-April, June-July, and October-November each year. For full particulars see special Elocution Syllabus.

Examination Music and Scales for Pianoforte and for Violin, and Past Written Papers are published officially by the Board, and can be obtained from the Central Office, or through any Music Seller.

The Board offers annually SIX EXHIBITIONS tenable at The R.A.M. or The R.C.M. for Two or Three Years.

Syllabuses A and B, Elocution Syllabus, Entry Forms, and any further information, may be obtained post-free from:

THE SECRETARY, 14 & 15, Bedford Square, London, W.C.1.

GLASGOW ATHENÆUM SCHOOL OF MUSIC. SESSION 1923-24.

The Session consists of Three Terms: September 10 to December 1, December 3 to March 8, and March 10 to June 6.

Complete Musical Curriculum. Day and Evening Classes. Single Subjects taught.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from:

STUART S. FORSYTH, Secretary,
ATHENÆUM BUILDINGS, GLASGOW.

MANCHESTER SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Principal: ALBERT J. CROSS, A.R.A.M.

FOUNDED 1892.

The oldest Institution in Manchester devoted solely to the interests of Music.

All branches of Music taught. Day and Evening Private Lessons. Opera Class. Full Orchestral Class. Intermediate and Elementary String Orchestras, Classes for Ensemble Playing, Elocution, Choral Singing, Harmony, &c.

Single Subjects taught. Prospectus from 16, Albert Square.

96 and 95, WIMPOLE STREET, W.1.

TOBIAS MATTHAY PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Instruction under his teachers, and under his own supervision.

Open to Professionals and Amateurs, and also to Children.

The Staff consists of thirty-nine senior Professors of thorough experience and platform reputation, all trained by the founder.

Special Short Courses for Teachers during term and vacation.

LECTURE-LESSON Class by MR. MATTHAY on the practical teaching of Technique and Interpretation, diagnosis and correction of faults, musical analysis and synthesis, &c., alternate Wednesday evenings.

MR. FREDERICK MOORE takes alternate Wednesdays.

COMPLETE TRAINING COURSE FOR TEACHERS.
(Approved by the Teachers' Registration Council.)

This ONE-YEAR Course may be joined at the beginning of ANY TERM.

For further particulars please apply, MRS. MARION COLE, Secretary.

THE LONDON COLLEGE FOR CHORISTERS.

6 and 7, BLOMFIELD CRESCENT, PADDINGTON, W.2.

Founder: MR. JAMES BATES.

Solo Boys and Chorus Boys supplied at short notice for Church Services, &c. Telephone: Paddington 5990. Sec., ARTHUR G. BATES.

WIGMORE HALL STUDIOS.—The Wigmore Hall and Piano Galleries, Ltd., have now forty-two Music Studios; Grand Piano in every room. Every comfort and convenience. Inclusive rates. Apply, 32-40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

BIRMINGHAM & MIDLAND INSTITUTE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

Visitor ... Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M., Mus.Doc., LL.D.
Director ... GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., D.Mus. (Ed.).

SESSION 1923-1924.

The Session consists of AUTUMN TERM (September 20 to December 18); WINTER TERM (January 19 to April 9); SUMMER TERM (April 11 to July 9).

Instruction in all branches of Music, Students' Choir and Orchestra, Chamber Music, Students' Rehearsals, and Concerts.

Prospectus and further information may be obtained from—

H. M. FRANCIS, Secretary.

Paradise Street, Birmingham.

THE LONDON CHOIR SCHOOL (CHAMPION HILL SCHOOL),

GROVE LANE, DENMARK HILL, S.E.5.
(Twelve minutes from Victoria, L.B.S.C. Railway;
L.C.C. Trams 56, 58, 62, and 84 pass the door.)

Director: CARLTON BORROW, A.R.C.O.

Solo and Chorus Boys for Services, Oratorios, Madrigal Societies, Concerts, &c. Solo and Chorus Altos (male), Tenors, and Basses for Temporary Engagements.

Telephone: Brixton 2124.

Apply, Secretary.

THE LONDON SCHOOL OF SINGING.

20A, HENRIETTA STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE, W.1.

The School provides complete instruction and training in all branches of Vocal Art, for both Professional and Amateur; and specialises in the production and artistic development of the voice.

A special short course for beginners has now been arranged.

Auditions and advice free.

Lessons in Pianoforte and Theory.

For particulars and appointment please apply to Secretary.

Telephone: Mayfair 3819.

£100 SINGING and Piano Free Scholarships, Souvenir Cup, Medals, and Cash Prizes. The Clifton Cooke open competition for trained and untrained singers and players. May 3 and 10. Entries close, Singing, April 29; Piano, May 6. Adjudicators, Mr. Philip O'Donnell, L.R.A.M., Principal, O'Donnell School of Professional Pianoforte Playing, and Mr. Clifton Cooke. Results at Lecture-Recital, "How to Sing," King George's Hall, Y.M.C.A., Caroline Street, W., May 15, at 7.30 p.m. Tickets 1s. 3d. Prospectus from Secretary, 26M, Guilford Street, W.C.1.

JOHN B. WOOD, Mus. Bac.

C. G. WOOD, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M.

THE IDEAL CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL OF MUSIC.

EXPERT TUTORS.

THEORY OF MUSIC, HARMONY,
COMPOSITION, ART OF TEACHING,
INTERPRETATION,
FORM AND MEMORY TRAINING
FOR MUSICIANS.

Correspondents from all parts of the world and ex-students of the Principal Musical Institutions have been enrolled as pupils.

Write,

6, BOLTON ROAD, FARNWORTH, BOLTON.

DR. NORMAN SPANKLING,

Mus. Doc. (Lond.), L.R.A.M.

See Page 296.

AS A PIANIST, L.R.A.M. or A.R.C.M.

ARE YOU SATISFIED

with a knowledge of HARMONY up to the "DOMINANT SEVENTH," which is hardly sufficient to enable you to analyse the music of the 16th-Century composers, let alone that of Bach, Mozart, and Beethoven? Ought you not to be able to explain the HARMONIC STRUCTURE met with in Chopin, Schumann, Grieg, Debussy, &c.?

All the information required to give you full and lucid explanation of these matters is contained in

HARMONY FOR PIANISTS

Being HARMONY in PIANOFORTE IDIOM—
without written exercises.

A COURSE of TEN CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS and EXAMINATION PAPERS

BY

DR. PERCY RIDEOUT,

D. MUS. LOND., A.R.C.M.

For further particulars, write—

THE CHARLES A. GILLET

Pianoforte School

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, LONDON, W.1.

CORRESPONDENCE or ORAL COURSES

In preparation of all PAPER WORK required for
Mus. B., R.C.O., R.A.M., R.C.M., and T.C.L.
Examinations.

Also Courses of preparation for the AURAL TESTS of the above-named Examinations.

GEO. H. SKAER, Mus. B., DUNELM.,
50, Park Road, Wandsworth, S.W.18.

PAPER WORK BY Mus. B., F.R.C.O.

OVER 1100 SPECIMEN WORKINGS.

"Your lessons and ideas splendid."

"Your excellent models make my attempts look cold."

RECENT SUCCESSES.

2s. 6d. per lesson and postage.

"E. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

EASTER CONCERTS.

THE IMPERIAL CONCERT AGENCY of Empire House, 175, Piccadilly, W. (Gerrard 5267), make a special study of Clients' requirements for Oratorio, and all kinds of Concert work, and endeavour to arrange "en route" bookings, thereby saving considerably on Artists' fees. You are invited to write to the Secretary for new handbook of Artists, sent gratis, together with any particulars desired.

KIMEY GUILLAIN

VIOLINIST,

French School of VIOLIN Playing (Ysaye Method).

"Her talent, her wide knowledge of technique, her musicality, assign to her a prominent position amongst the women violinists of the day."—E. Ysaye.

TONE-PRODUCTION. TECHNIQUE. PHRASING.
INTERPRETATION.

Lessons to advanced Students and Special Classes for Children.

For particulars, Miss Kimey Guillain, 50, Grove End Road, N.W.8.

MR. CHARLES TREE

Birmingham Post, Mar. 8/24.—"Mr. Charles Tree is a great lecturer. Just before listening to him on Thursday, I was glancing through his book on singing, and was struck not only by the clarity and patent well-informedness, but by the evident certainty of the opinion expressed. What time he writes of a particular theory he seems to be saying in addition, 'Meet me face to face and I'll learn you.' What's more, I'll prove it."

"I closed the book to listen to the lecturer, and as he developed his subject it was impossible not to be impressed by his clear-cut knowledge of his art and his readiness to give practical demonstrations of his methods. Two thoughts came unbidden to the mind when hearing him speak upon singing. One was, Why do not the Schools of Music engage him—or anyone else considered as good or superior—to lecture to the students, or ask their own vocal professors to do as well as Mr. Tree did last Thursday? While the other train of thought was, Is he an exceptional singer, or is he the product of a method that really can be imparted to all and sundry? I am prepared to admit that I am interested in Mr. Tree's books; I also hasten to admit that no lecturer, teacher, or even a singing charlatan has impressed me so much in contrast as did Mr. Tree. Personally I regard him as the most lucid and practical exponent of the art I have yet met."

"HOW TO ACQUIRE EASE OF VOICE-PRODUCTION" AND ITS COMPANION, "BEL CANTO" EXERCISES, 5/2 and 3/7 post free.
(If difficult to obtain, write direct.)

Concerts, &c., address, 14, Courtfield Gardens, Kensington, S.W.5.

HAROLD HOLLINSHEAD

SPECIALISING IN VOICE-PRODUCTION

IN

SONG AND SPEECH,

the result of 25 years of exhaustive research work.

Correction of errors due to faulty voice usage.

See Article "THE RECOVERY OF THE LOST VOICE," in current issue, page 318.

Appointments by letter only.

Studio: 67B, Holland Park Avenue, W.11.

MR. JACQUES HOPKINS

(1er Prix Paris National Conservatoire),
Musical Director, St. Paul's, Portman Square.

VOICE TRAINING—SINGING.

OPERA—ORATORIO—RECITALS—COACHING FOR L.R.A.M. AND
L.R.C.M. EXAMS.

Auditions free.

Write for terms, appointments, &c.,
Studio, 16, Baker Street, W.1.

THE IMPORTANT THING

IS TO

TRAIN THE ACTUAL MUSCLES USED IN SINGING.

SAXBY'S CALISTHENICS

FOR THE VOCAL MUSCLES

— BY CORRESPONDENCE. —

THE COURSE, £2 2s.

T. CHURCH SAXBY, L. MUS. T.C.L.,
LEWES.

MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS REVISED.

LYRICS SET TO MUSIC, MELODIES HARMONIZED, MUSIC TRANSPOSED
AND COPIED, BAND PARTS WRITTEN, MSS. PREPARED FOR PUBLICATION BY A MASTER HAND, ACCOMPANIMENTS OF DISTINCTION
WRITTEN TO SONGS.

For terms, write, A. CARRINGTON BRIGGS,
Glennholme, The Common, Hesse, E. Yorks

AN ORGAN RECITAL will be given by MR. HERBERT HODGE, at St Stephen's Walbrook, on April 30, at 1.10 p.m.

Perfect Touch and Technique without Laborious Practice . .

The fundamental principles of my System have stood the test of time. Proof of this lies in the enormous number of pupils who have passed through my hands to piano-mastery—who have found in the System the Royal Road to the whole of the practical side of Pianoforte Playing, without any keyboard drudgery.

The results are frequently described by pupils as "miraculous," "magical," &c.

Pianists of every grade of proficiency can benefit from this simple, inexpensive, and unique Postal Course, used and recommended by SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE and other eminent musicians.

17,000 Successful Pupils.

"From Brain to Keyboard"

Macdonald Smith's System of Pianoforte Playing.

Read my Illustrated Book, "Light on Pianoforte Playing."

This explains fully how I teach the System by a Series of Postal Lessons, and gives particulars of the very reasonable fee for tuition. No apparatus or special music necessary—just an easily acquired method with much quicker and BETTER results, based on an important discovery in physiology.

Apply for book to-day, but please DO NOT OMIT to state whether average or advanced player, or, if a beginner, whether you can or cannot play at sight a simple hymn-tune. The book will be sent free of charge and post free.

M. MACDONALD SMITH, 19, BLOOMSBURY SQUARE,
LONDON, W.C.1.

THE CHARLES A. GILLETT PIANOFORTE SCHOOL

Devoted to the teaching of "PURE WEIGHT TOUCH."
Distinct in all respects from every other method.

OPEN to BEGINNERS (adults and children), AMATEURS,
PERFORMERS, and TEACHERS.

Private Lessons daily. Evening Lessons for business people.

Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O., writes:

"I do think your 'School' is so excellent. The thoroughness and lucidity with which you treat every detail of Pianoforte Playing is amazing, and ONE CAN HAVE NO POSSIBLE DOUBT that the principles you put forward are correct and fundamental ones for which we have sought so painfully in years gone by."

Specialised and individual CORRESPONDENCE LESSONS solely designed for those unable to take personal lessons.

The hundreds of remarkable letters of testimony from pianists of all grades, and from those with the highest degrees and diplomas PROVE CONCLUSIVELY that there can be no better means of bringing your playing and teaching thoroughly up-to-date.

An advanced pianist writes:

"Each new lesson, if possible, is more attractive than the last. I think it is really marvellous the way in which the lessons are arranged and each new detail stated with such clearness and simplicity, yet with such vigour. It is the feeling of 'power' behind the lessons and REAL PERSONAL HELP throughout that is such an attractive feature of this PERFECT CORRESPONDENCE COURSE."

AUDITION AND CONSULTATION FREE.

Call if possible, or write for further particulars, naming one or two pieces you play.

11, SOUTH MOLTON STREET, BOND STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MR. W. H. BREARE VOCAL ADVISER AND TEACHER OF SINGING TO STUDENTS AND THE PROFESSION.

Author of "Vocalism," "Elocution: Its First Principles," "Vocal Faults and their Remedies." Now Published: "Vocal Technique: How it feels to Sing."

3s. 6d. each. Postage: 1 Book, 9d.; 2 or 3, 1s.; Set of 4, 1s. 3d.

"The most complete guide to singing in English."—"Lancelot," in the Referee.

"One of the sanest of sane expositions."—Musical Courier, N.Y.

"Is a reliable expert in all branches."—Gentlewoman.

"A magnificent guide to both teachers and students."—Eastern Morning News.

"Do not hesitate to commend."—Glasgow Herald.

"His technical knowledge is minute, wide, and accurate: what he has to say is well worthy of consideration by public singers and music teachers."—Aberdeen Free Press.

"Common-sense in all he utters."—Leeds Mercury.

"Is an acknowledged authority. . . ."—Western Morning News.

"I have not the slightest fear of contradiction when I say that no one knows more about the voice and vocal production than Mr. W. H. Breare."—"Counterpoint," in the Newcastle Journal.

Address: "HERALD" BUILDINGS, HARROGATE.

MR. ALBERT GARCIA

LESSONS IN VOICE PRODUCTION AND SINGING.

Special Coaching in Opera, Oratorio, and for Recitals.

Pupils prepared for A.R.C.M. and L.R.A.M. Exams.

"A number of Mr. Albert Garcia's pupils sang excellently at the concert which they gave on Wednesday evening. It was particularly pleasant to hear voices so well placed and well poised, smooth and even in tone from the lowest to the highest notes, showing a control which too few learn to exercise."—Daily Telegraph.

"One takes it that a concert by pupils fulfils its object if it demonstrates—as the one given at Wigmore Hall by singers studying with Mr. Albert Garcia certainly did—the excellence of that master's method."—Era.

"Mr. Garcia—himself a fine artist and the inheritor of a great tradition and a great name—has some most promising pupils, and such singers as Miss Rosa Burn and Mr. Frederick Lippold show in what an excellent school they have been trained."—Daily Telegraph.

For Auditions, Appointments, &c., write,
59, Queen's Road, St. John's Wood, N.W.8.
(Hampstead 4597.)

IF YOU HAVE A SMALL HAND:
IF YOU HAVE A STIFF HAND:
IF YOU HAVE LITTLE TIME FOR PRACTICE:

USE THE TECHNIQUER.

Invented and Patented by R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac.

It will not enable you to play without practising, nothing will do that, but it will make practice more valuable and save years of labour.

The high commendation of Lamond, Pouishnoff, and dozens of eminent teachers of all instruments speaks for itself.

Send for full particulars free.

"Hand Development," with 15 photos, 1s. 6d.

The Secretary: Miss F. J. FITCH, A.R.C.O., &c., 21, Boundary Road, N.W. 8.
Maida Vale 1715.

PIANO PEDALS, with Octave Coupler

This wonderful invention supersedes all Piano Pedals, and is a Master Patent.

St. George's Hall, Liverpool,
9th April, 1921.

"The simplicity of the attachment, and the clever sixteen-feet, eight-feet, or both combined, 'OPTIONAL OCTAVE' contrivance, astonished me.

"I was delighted with the Pedal touch and with the variety in that touch, which your Attachment makes possible. It is very responsive to the movements of the feet, and is reliable."

HERBERT F. ELLINGFORD, Mus. Bac. Oxon., F.R.C.O.

Terms: 17 guineas net cash, or monthly payments made.

Write for Lists, Prices, and Clients' Opinions, and References to

THE MALKIN PATENT PEDAL CO., LTD.,
NEWCASTLE-UNDER-LYME.

London address: 11, Ashlake Road, Streatham, S.W.16.

U.S.A.—FOR SALE.—The sole rights to manufacture, import, or sell in the United States.

BISHOPSGATE INSTITUTE,
BISHOPSGATE, E.C.
(Two minutes from Liverpool Street Station)

THE NOVELLO CHOIR

will give a

CONCERT

ON THURSDAY, APRIL 10TH, 1924, AT 8 P.M.

MADRIGALS BY BATESON, BENET, RICHARD EDWARDS,
ORLANDO GIBBONS, THOMAS TOMKINS,
WEEKES, AND WILBYE

SONGS BY ELIZABETHAN COMPOSERS, AND BY DELIUS,
ARMSTRONG GIBBS, HAMILTON HARTY,
IRELAND, MCNAUGHT, PARRY, AND MOZART

PART-SONGS BY
ELGAR, IRELAND, McEWEN, DE PEARSALL,
POINTER, GEOFFREY SHAW, STANFORD, AND WEST

VOCALIST:

DOROTHY ROBSON

AT THE PIANO - KATHLEEN LEVENTON.

Conductor - - HAROLD BROOKE

Tickets (including Tax): Reserved, 5s. 9d., 3s. 6d., and 2s. 4d.
To be obtained from Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1:
The Reference Library, Bishopsgate Institute; and of
H. A. GRIFFITH (Secretary, Novello Choir),
Novello Works, Hollen Street, W.1.

WALLASEY MUSICAL FESTIVAL

(MERSEYSIDE).

OCTOBER 8th, 9th, 10th, and 11th, 1924.

TOWN HALL, WALLASEY, AND NEW BRIGHTON TOWER.

COMPETITIONS

for Pianists, Accompanists, Violinists, Organists, 'Cellists, Soloists, Composers, Elocutionists.

CHOIRS.—Ladies, Children's, Male-Voice, Mixed-Voice, Church and Chapel, and School.

Vocal and String Quartets, Orchestras, and in Musical Dictation.

VALUABLE SILVER TROPHIES AND CASH PRIZES, GOLD MEDALS, A SILK BANNER, AND CERTIFICATES.

SPECIAL COMPETITIONS for a "Professor" Violin Outfit (value 10 Guineas), and an

UPRIGHT WEBER GRAND PIANOFORTE (value 115 Guineas), kindly presented by Messrs. James Smith & Son (Music Sellers), Ltd., Liverpool.

ADJUDICATORS:

ARTHUR T. AKEROYD, Esq., A.R.C.M.

HERBERT BREWER, Esq., D.Mus., Organist of Gloucester Cathedral.

D. VAUGHAN THOMAS, Esq., D.Mus. WILSON NICHOLSON, Esq.

OFFICIAL SYLLABUS, post free, 6d., now ready, and may be obtained from Hon. Secretary,

CHAS. E. COWLEY, Drury Buildings, 21, Water Street, Liverpool.

L.R.A.M. AND A.R.C.M.

TEACHING SINGING AND ELOCUTION EXAMINATIONS.

Numerous Successes both in Singing and Elocution Exams. at
L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.

Special Correspondence Course and personal tuition.
Complete preparation.

Also Special Short Instructional Courses in Voice-Production and
The Art of Teaching Singing, to meet particular requirements of the General Practitioner in Music.

MR. W. LEE WEBSTER, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.

INGLESIDE, PARK ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

PORTSMOUTH MUSICAL COMPETITION FESTIVAL:

MAY 15th, 16th, 17th, 1924.

Adjudicators: { Prof. GRANVILLE BANTOCK, M.A., Mus. Doc.
Mr. FELIX SWINSTEAD, F.R.A.M.

ENTRIES CLOSE APRIL 11.

Copy of SYLLABUS (postage, 1d.) may be obtained from the Hon. Secretaries, 7, Palmerston Road, Southsea.

Church Gresley P. M. Musical Festival.

Friday and Saturday, July 4th and 5th, 1924.

VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL COMPETITIONS.

Particulars on receipt of postage from—

GEORGE FAIRBROTHER,

Waterloo House, Church Gresley, Burton-on-Trent.

THE NORTH BUCKS AND SOUTH BEDS MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

PATRON: HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD, K.G.

The first combined MUSICAL FESTIVAL of the Choral Societies of Woburn, Fenny Stratford and Blechley, and Amptill, will be given in Woburn Church on WEDNESDAY, APRIL 30th, 1924, at 3 and 7.30 p.m. Conductor: J. CHARLES WILLIAMS, A.R.C.M.
(Organist of Woburn Church).

CHRIST CHURCH, Westminster Bridge Rd., S.E.
(N. Lambeth Bakerloo.)

ORGAN RECITAL

By E. T. COOK (of Southwark Cathedral),

SATURDAY, APRIL 12th, at 5.30 p.m.

(NOT 3 p.m., as originally announced).

4-Manual Organ by Willis.

Organist Required as Demonstrator

FOR "APOLLO" PEDAL REED ORGAN,

AT

WEMBLEY EXHIBITION.

Apply, with full particulars as to age, salary, experience, &c.,
RUSHWORTH & DREAPER, LTD., 11-17, Islington, Liverpool.

ON SALE.

A very IMPORTANT LIBRARY of nearly 5,000 Books in French,
English, German, Italian, &c., on all musical and fine art questions.
Also about 2,500 music scores: piano and voice, trios, quartet, quintet, and orchestra, all bound half leather. 950 full orchestra scores, old editions, amongst which works by LULLY, RAMEAU, HAYDN, HANDEL, GRÉTRY, CHERUBINI, GLUCK are first editions. This splendid library is for sale privately until April 15, at the extremely moderate price of £2,000. If not sold by the above date it will be disposed of by auction on May 5 and following days. Anybody interested in this offer should write for catalogue to Librairie Générale, Rue de Namur, Brussels, enclosing 6d. for postage.

H. H. HOWLETT,

ORGAN BUILDER,

131, LOWER RICHMOND ROAD, PUTNEY, S.W.

Designer and Builder of Church, Chamber, and Player Organs.

Specialist in Pneumatic and Electric Pneumatic Actions.

Specifications for New Organs, Renovations, Tunings, &c.

Estimates free. Charges moderate.

KENTISH TOWN.—Freehold FACTORY, with possession. Substantially constructed, 16,000 super-ft. covered floor space; 2,000 super-ft. roof space; very large yard and block of eleven Freehold houses adjoining. Price, £20,000, or near offer.
Apply, Salter, Rex, & Co., 85, London Wall, E.C.2, or 311, Kentish Town Road, N.W.5.

ASSISTANT-ORGANIST (voluntary) WANTED.
Friday practices: Services. Two-manual, 21 Stops. Brixton.
"Baptist," 19, Ruskin Walk, Herne Hill, S.2.

BASS REQUIRED, St. Luke's, Sydney St., Chelsea.
£16 per ann. Two Sunday Services and one Rehearsal weekly.
Good reader. Apply, Choirmaster, 14a, Gunter Grove, S.W.10.

CONDUCTORS OF ORCHESTRAS.—An experienced HORN-PLAYER desires immediate ENGAGEMENT.
Please address, Musiker Adolf Lundgren, Gunnarps-strom, Sweden.

MODERN CORR. COLLEGE.

Principal: ARTHUR McALISTER, B.A. (CANTAB.).

MATRIC. - - - Successes - - -

You still have time for July, 1924 (Durham).

104

LONDON
DURHAM
OXFORD
DUBLIN

1ST M.B. - - - September, 1923 - - -

Compare this with Total number of Successes (all sources).

4

MUS. BAC. - - - Guarantee Course - ONE FEE - Any University.

(Easy Instalments.)

(Tuition until successful.)

A.R.C.O. - - - January, 1924 - - -

(We can PASS YOU, July, 1924.)

6

A. MUS. T.C.L. - - -

94% Counterpoint.

A.T.C.L. - - - - -

86%
Art of Teaching.

SINGLE SUBJECTS.

SINGING
ELOCUTION

FRENCH GERMAN

LATIN

GREEK

MATHEMATICS

SCIENCE.

NOTE THE FOLLOWING:

			£	s.	d.
(1.)	10	LESSONS. PIANOFORTE ACCOMPANIMENT	1	1	0
(2.)	10	„ HISTORY (Special Period) - - -	-	-	0 15 0
(3.)	10	„ FORM - - - - -	-	-	1 1 0
(4.)	6	„ MEMORY TRAINING - - -	-	-	1 10 0
(5.)	6	„ WRITING AND HEARING - - -	-	-	1 1 0
(6.)	6	„ SIGHT READING - - -	-	-	1 1 0
(7.)	4	„ ESSAY (A.R.C.O.) - - -	-	-	0 10 0

Each Course prepared by a SPECIALIST.

Courses 1, 2, 3, 7, sent to Students of the M.C.C. (no extra Fee.)

Course 4.—M.C.C. Students, £1. Courses 5, 6.—M.C.C. Students, 15s. each Course.

FREE GUIDES MATRIC., MUS. BAC., ETC.

“ST. MORITZ,” 201, ILKESTON ROAD, NOTTINGHAM.

LEARN TO PLAY FROM MEMORY WITH EASE.

HUNDREDS of pianists, organists, and teachers who previously found difficulty in memorising the simplest music have learned to memorise easily and to play from memory with confidence through the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course.

The Course consists of six correspondence lessons, easily completed in a month or two. Fifteen minutes' daily practice only is required. No drudgery of any kind is involved. Previous failure to memorise is of no importance. Every lesson is of absorbing interest, and from the first the student forms a repertoire of beautiful music.

There is no element of risk in taking the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course. Under the guarantee, success is assured or your fee is returned without question. Yet so remarkable have been results, that not a single application for refund has been made. The Course has never had a failure.

If you, like so many fine players, find memorising a difficulty, here is your opportunity. Through the Mackinnon Musical Memory Course you can gain a reliable musical memory, banish nervousness, express yourself in your music with improved technique and artistic success.

Send Coupon below for free booklet, to-day.

MACKINNON'S MUSICAL MEMORY COURSE.

EMPIRE HOUSE, PICCADILLY, W.1.

IN SIX POSTAL LESSONS - FEE, £3:3:0

Here are a few extracts from letters of pupils who have recently completed the Course. Your success can equal theirs.

USE THIS COUPON
TO-DAY.

From an Organist.

Only wish I had taken the lessons before —of the greatest help in accompanying the Psalms.

From a Pianist.

I am simply astounded at the progress I have made. Nervousness seems to have vanished. Pieces memorised, I never forget. The system has made me love to play from memory, I shall for ever feel grateful.

From a Teacher.

I never thought it was possible for me to play from memory until I took the Memory Course, of which I cannot speak too highly. Failure is impossible.

Another Organist.

One cannot fail to play from memory where your instructions are followed. Of the greatest assistance.

COUPON

MACKINNON'S "MUSICAL MEMORY," Empire House, Piccadilly, W.1.

Please send me, without obligation, your free booklet on "MEMORY TRAINING."

Name.....

Address.....

CORRESPONDENCE COACHING FOR EXAMINATIONS.

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING

Mus. Doc. (Lond.).

Full Preparation for Mus. Doc., Mus. Bac., A.R.C.M., L.R.A.M., and all Diplomas of T.C.L. and R.C.O.

THIS MONTH.

1. Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc.,
London, Dublin, and Durham.
Numerous Successes, including 20 in Final Mus. Bac. and
Mus. Doc.
2. R.C.O. and T.C.L. Courses for next July Exams.
3. L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
Full Preparation begins for next September Exams.
Numerous Successes.

"SUCCESS IS THE GUARANTEE OF SUCCESS."

These Postal Courses enable you to study at home, in your own time, and at your own convenience. Their thoroughness is made manifest by the great number of successes achieved by Dr. Sprankling's pupils at all the leading examinations for diplomas and degrees.

PERSONAL LESSONS in BRISTOL and LONDON.

Candidates who are entering for the first time, and also those who have previously failed to pass any examination, should communicate with

DR. NORMAN SPRANKLING,
48, LINDEN ROAD,
REDLAND, BRISTOL.

Telephone: Bristol 3033.

EASTER HOLIDAY COURSE.

MR. F. C. FIELD HYDE

will hold in London a SPECIAL SHORT COURSE of TEN LECTURE-DEMONSTRATIONS for Vocalists and Teachers of Singing, from WEDNESDAY, APRIL 23rd to the 29th. Subject:

“The Defects of Voice and Ear: Their Diagnosis and Treatment.”

The Lectures will generally be given just before and after the lunch hour. Members may, if they wish, have diagnosis and advice respecting their own voices, or on those of pupils who may have revealed special difficulties in their training.

FEE FOR THE COURSE: TWO GUINEAS.

Expressions of opinion from recent letters:

“I am realising DAILY the great help you have proved to be to me, and I feel very grateful for the great help I got which has made me love Voice-Training even more than I did before.”—K. G.

“I cannot express how much I benefited by your lectures. I gained such a lot of new ideas, and I feel much easier and more confident in using my own voice.”—L. M. W.

“I can scarcely believe I am through the L.R.A.M. (Teachers’) Examination. I had always looked upon this examination as an utterly impossible dream for me, and I am sure no one else could have got me through.”—L. S.

“Your excellent course has added greatly to my success. My candid opinion is that it is impossible to get better instruction.”—J. T. M.

For entries or further particulars, address:

F. C. FIELD HYDE, 43, UPPER GEORGE STREET, OXFORD STREET, LONDON, W.1.

MR. FIELD HYDE’S Full Summer Holiday Course in The Art of Voice-Training and the Teaching of Song Interpretation, will be held at Liverpool, commencing July 31st.

THE “DISCUS” ORGAN BLOWER

Is installed and giving complete satisfaction in over a thousand Cathedrals, Churches, Theatres, and Cinemas in Great Britain alone. This fact is eloquent, as well as convincing testimony, to its efficiency and durability. It is the most satisfactory method of mechanical organ blowing, and as the motive power may be oil, gas, or electric motor, the “Discus” is suitable for churches in any locality. The application of a “Discus” equipment to an organ ensures a steady supply of wind being instantly available, and enables the organist to obtain the best possible effects from the instrument. The “Discus” blower is the most scientifically designed machine for organ blowing purposes on the market. It is made of metal throughout, of the best quality combined with high grade workmanship. Being entirely free of complicated mechanism, a minimum of attention is required, and very many years of satisfactory services ensured. Efficiency and reliability are fully guaranteed with each “Discus” equipment we instal.

AS SUPPLIED TO WESTMINSTER ABBEY, YORK MINSTER, ETC., ETC.

WRITE FOR NEW BOOKLET.

Sole Makers, Watkins & Watson, Organ Blowing Specialists for the past thirty years.
Designers and Manufacturers of all types of Hydraulic Engines, Gears, and Fittings for Organ Blowing.

ESTIMATES SUBMITTED FREE.

WRITE TO

B. WATKINS AND WATSON
WHITE LION STREET, LONDON, N.1.

Telegrams: “HYDISBLOW, ISLING, LONDON.”

Telephone: NORTH 2039.

PROFESSIONAL NOTICES.

MISS LYDIA JOHN

(A.R.A.M., L.R.A.M.), CONTRALTO.

Concerts, Oratorios, Organ Recitals, &amp;c.

Recital-Lectures of Folk-Songs, Elizabethan Songs, &amp;c.

Pupils received for Voice-Production and Singing.

Prepared for L.R.A.M., Associated Board, &amp;c.

15, Albion Road, London, N.W.6. Tel.: Hampstead, N.W.6.

FRANK CARLETON

(TENOR).

CONCERTS, ORATORIOS, Etc.

Address: 58, Hazel Street, Audenshaw, near Manchester.

FREDERICK SINDEN (TENOR).

"Messiah," "Crucifixion," "Olivet to Calvary," &amp;c.

11, St. Martin's Mansions, Ullswater Road, W. Norwood, S.E.27.

VERNON HARRISS,

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., Gold Medallist. BASS.

Oratorio, Concerts, Vocal Coach and Adjudicator.

Senior Music Master, Downside School, near Bath.

MR. HERBERT TRACEY

BASS.

8, Cavendish Mansions, E.5.

London Wall 4033.

MISS THELMA DANDRIDGE (A.R.C.M.),

'CELLIST.

Concerts, Pupils, &amp;c., apply to "Inversnaid," Chinbrook Road, Grove Park, S.E.12. ('Phone: Lee Green 1707.)

VOICE-TRAINING AND SINGING.

MR. T. W. HOLGATE

(Professor of Singing, Trinity College of Music)

has a few vacancies for pupils at his Studio,

99a, Queen's Gate, South Kensington, S.W.7.

LEONARD SALISBURY (A.R.C.M.)

Founder of "The Gresham Singers,"

Receives Pupils in Voice-Culture and Singing, at 14, Hanover Street, Regent Street, W.1.

Tele.: Streatham 2325.

ARTHUR MANGELSDORFF

SOLO PIANIST.

For terms, vacant dates, &amp;c., apply to

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

J. PENNY STAFFORD

ENTERTAINER, VOCAL HUMORIST.

WARRINGTON.—"A little man who grows every moment he occupies the platform."—Guardian.BURTON-ON-TRENT.—"A humorist of more than ordinary ability."—Daily Mail.BLACKPOOL.—"The merry laughter-maker, clever bits of stage work."—Times.

Address: Hyde. Telephone: No. 260 Hyde, Cheshire.

MR. JOHN MACLENNAN, TENOR. Oratorios,

&amp;c. Tele.: Brixton 1702. 185, Loughborough Road, S.W.9.

THE TRAINING OF TEACHERS.

CORRESPONDENCE COURSES IN

VOICE-PRODUCTION, covering the whole subject.

FORM AND TEACHING, TOUCH, ACCOMPANIMENT,

MUSICAL APPRECIATION, AND AURAL TRAINING.

Nearly 700 Successes at L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &amp;c.

MR. R. J. PITCHER, Mus. Bac., F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.

(Double Dip, Singing and Piano), L.R.A.M., Class A., Performer

and T. acher.

Prof. Singing G.S.M., 1905-1915. Special Lect. on Mus. Appreciation

to L.C.C.

"Recit. and its Rendering," 1s. 6d. "Vade Mecum for Singers," 6d.

Send for prospectus, 21, Boundary Road, N.W.8.

'Phone: 1715 Maida Vale.

MUSICAL REVISER TO MESSRS. NOVELLO FOR THIRTY-NINE YEARS.

COMPOSERS' MSS.

REVISED AND PREPARED FOR PRINTING

H. ELLIOT BUTTON, "Harewood," Ardwick Road, N.W.2.

* * * The late Sir HUBERT PARRY and Sir FREDERICK BRIDGE permitted their names to appear, along with those of the following composers to whom reference is kindly permitted:—Sir EDWARD ELGAR, O.M. Sir HENRY WALFORD DAVIES, Mus. Doc.

MR. W. ADAMS, F.R.C.O., A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), prepares for Musical Diplomas, Pianoforte, and Paper Work (personally or by post). Latest Success: A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), January, 1924. 16, Homefield Road, Chiswick, W.4.

DR. ALLISON instructed by Post Candidates who OBTAINED DEGREES OF MUS. D. and MUS. B. at Oxford, Cambridge, Dublin, London, and Durham Universities. Diplomas of F.L.C.M., L. Mus. L.C.M. (1922 List), A.R.C.M., F.R.C.O. (1916), and L.R.A.M. (1920), Gold Medals, Silver Medals, Scholarships, Prizes, "Honours," and Pass Certificates (of the Colleges of Music) to the number of eight hundred and ninety. Dr. Allison is willing to teach those who neither require nor desire to pass examinations. Harmony, Counterpoint, Orchestration, and Analysis of Composition by Post, to correspondents anywhere. Personal instruction in Theory, Singing, and Piano. 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

REVISION OF MUSICAL COMPOSITIONS.

Dr. Horton Allison, 24, Park Range, Victoria Park, Manchester.

CAPTAIN PERCY BAKER, M.C., F.R.C.O.,

L. Mus. T.C.L. (Author of "Compend of Musical Knowledge," "Studies in History and Form," &amp;c.). Specialist in Tuition by post for T.C.L. and R.C.O. General Knowledge, Essay Models, Sight-Reading, and Practical tests in 6 Lessons.

Send for interesting Pamphlets on Methods.

HAZELDENE, TEWKESBURY.

MR. J. PERCY BAKER, Mus. B., Dunelm.,

F.R.A.M., gives Postal Tuition and prepares for Examinations. Personal Lessons (Pianoforte and Theory), at 14, Hanover Square, W.1. Address, 12, Longley Road, Tooting Graveney, S.W.17.

MR. H. BENTLEY, F.R.C.O., A.T.C.L. (Pianoforte), prepares for Diplomas (R.C.O. and T.C.L.) by post. Address, 21, Clapham Road, Lowestoft.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:—

(1.) L.R.A.M. Paper Work.

(2.) A.R.C.M. Paper Work.

(3.) Interesting Courses of Study in Rudiments, Harmony, Form, &amp;c.

L.R.A.M. Exams. 1910-24 ... 233 Correspondence Pupils successful.

A.R.C.M. Exams. 1914-24 ... 61 " " "

MR. E. H. BIBBY, Mus. Bac., L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,

Waterloo Buildings, Piccadilly, Manchester.

In response to many requests, Mr. BIBBY begs to announce that he has prepared the following additional CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:

(1.) The "Mus. Bac." Degree.

(2.) A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. Paper Work.

(3.) A.T.C.L. and L.T.C.L. Paper Work.

(4.) The Associated Board Examinations in Rudiments, Harmony, and Counterpoint.

(Address as above.)

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. SPECIAL COACHING by

ARTHUR ELLARSHAW, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Pianist. Paper-work Postal. Address, 497, Coventry Road, Birmingham.

DR. A. C. PHILLIPS EMBLING, Mus. Doc.,

Dunelm. (1921), Mus. Bac., Oxon., F.R.C.O. Lessons by post for Diplomas and Degrees. 64, Wokingham Road, Reading.

FREDERICK GREEN, L.R.A.M., Etc. Voice

Specialist, Vocal Coach, and Adjudicator. Preparation for L.R.A.M. c/o Rushworth &amp; Dreaper, 11, Islington, Liverpool.

DR. CUTHBERT HARRIS, Mus. Doc., Dunelm.,

F.R.C.O. SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE TUITION. 405 Successes in Mus. D., Mus. B., F.R.C.O., and A.R.C.O., &amp;c. 58, Avondale Road, Gorleston-on-Sea.

DR. HARRIS REVISES and PREPARES MSS.

FOR PUBLICATION. Accompaniments to Songs written.

MISS H. HEALE COACHES for all EXAM-

INATIONS IN MUSIC (at private residence or at West-End Studio), in Pianoforte, Harmony, Counterpoint, Fugue, Form, Orchestration, "Teaching," Modulation, Transposition, &amp;c. For Terms, &amp;c., apply Dunraven House, 41, Albert Bridge Road, S.W.11.

DR. CHASTEY HECTOR, D. Mus. Oxon., 1922,

L.R.A.M., instructs Candidates, personally or by post, for Degrees and Diplomas in Music. "The Downs," Old Shoreham Road, Hove, Sussex.

DR. A. G. IGGULDEN, Mus. Doc. Dunelm., F.R.C.O.,

SPECIALIST IN CORRESPONDENCE COACHING.

Latest Successes: Durham, Sept., 1923—2 out of the 3 Mus. Doc. passes, and 4 out of the 6 Final Mus. Bac. passes. Also several 1st Mus. Bac. and 2 Exercises, after prelim. course in composition. All in 1923. Over 150 Successes at Durham alone. The Durdans, Reigate.

MISS FREDA EVANS, L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M.,
L.T.C.L. (Late Pupil of Felix Swinstead), visits or receives Private Pupils for Pianoforte, Harmony, &c. Prospectus on application to 26, Granard Road, Wandsworth Common, S.W.12.

HERBERT HODGE, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M.,
Organist and Choirmaster, St. Nicholas Cole Abbey, Queen
Victoria Street, London, has, since 1908, made a speciality of coaching Candidates for the Organ Playing Examinations of the Royal College of Organists, and can arrange a private course of instruction
(or single lessons) to organists visiting London, at St. Nicholas
Cole Abbey. Many recent F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O. successes.
5, Streatham Place, S.W.2. Telephone: Streatham 2195.

MR. GORDON JACOB, A.R.C.M., gives lessons
personally or by correspondence in Harmony, Counterpoint,
Fugue, Form, and all theoretical subjects.
Special Course in Modern Orchestration.
MUSIC SCORED for any combination of instruments required.
Incidental Music, &c., written or arranged.
1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

DR. F. J. KARN (Mus. Bac. Cantab.; Mus. Doc.
Toronto) continues to give lessons in Harmony and other
Theoretical subjects, and prepares for all Musical Examinations.
Compositions revised and Analyses written. Candidates prepared by
Dr. Karn have gained the Mus. Bac. and Mus. Doc. degrees at the Universities and diplomas from the Musical Colleges.
Address: 106, Haverstock Hill, London, N.W.3.

DR. KNOWLES (Manchester 1919, Durham 1920)
specialises in preparing candidates by post for the Paper-work of all examinations in music. Solutions, with methods of working.
Address, 45, Churchgate, Bolton, Lancs.

MADAME LARKCOM, F.R.A.M., Prof. Singing,
R. A. Music, has resumed her lessons in Singing at the Wigmore Hall Studios, 40, Wigmore Street, W.1.

J. H. MAKINSON, F.R.C.O., A.R.C.M., A.T.C.L.
Correspondence Tuition in Paper Work (T.C.L. and other Diplomas). Terms moderate. Kent House, Lake Road, Ambleside.

TO R.C.O. CANDIDATES.—Up-to-date Coach near Wells, Somerset, offers Advice, Lessons, and Practice on similar R.C.O. Organ. Write, "Mark," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MISS F. HELENA MARKS, Author of "The Sonata: Its Form and Meaning," prepares for L.R.A.M.,
A.R.C.M., and all other examinations, Pianoforte, Harmony, "Form and Teaching," &c. Personal or Correspondence Lessons in all Paper-Work subjects, including those for L.R.A.M. "Aural Training and Sight-Singing," and A.R.C.M. in "The Teaching of Musical Appreciation," &c. Pupils received and visited for the Pianoforte.
Many recent successes L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., &c.
10, Matheson Road, London, W.14.

DR. H. H. L. MIDDLETON, Mus. Doc., F.R.C.O.,
L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M. Twenty-five years' experience in Private
Tuition and Coaching for Degrees. More than 500 of Dr. Middleton's Pupils have obtained Degrees at the Universities, R.A.M., R.C.M.,
and R.C.O. Address, 60, Berners Street, W.1.

DR. PERCY WOOD, Mus. Doc. Oxon., F.R.C.O.
SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE COURSES:
(1) Elementary Harmony and Counterpoint.
(2) F.R.C.O. and A.R.C.O.
(3) L.R.A.M. and A.R.C.M.
(4) Mus. Bac. Degree.
Several recent Mus. B. successes at Durham.

R.C.O. EXAMINER says: "Your system is undoubtedly an excellent one."

SUCCESS GUARANTEED—given any pupils with the requisite musical ability for the examination in view

R.C.O. SUCCESSES IN PAPER WORK:

6 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1914.	11 A.R.C.O., Jan. 1914.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1914.	12 A.R.C.O., July, 1914.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1915.
5 F.R.C.O., July, 1915.	9 A.R.C.O., July, 1915.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1916.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1916.	5 A.R.C.O., July, 1916.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1917.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1917.	4 A.R.C.O., July, 1917.
2 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1918.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1918.	2 A.R.C.O., July, 1918.
1 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1919.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1919.	3 A.R.C.O., July, 1919.
4 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.	10 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., July, 1920.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1920.
3 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.	7 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1921.
6 F.R.C.O., July, 1921.	8 A.R.C.O., July, 1921.
5 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.	5 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1922.
4 F.R.C.O., July, 1922.	6 A.R.C.O., July, 1922.
8 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.	6 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., July, 1923.	10 A.R.C.O., July, 1923.
7 F.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.	9 A.R.C.O., Jan., 1924.

"Tralee," Warwick Road, Cliftonville, Margate.

W. J. FREDERICK PUGH, L.R.A.M., Pre- pares for L.R.A.M. (Aural Culture and Voice Culture Diplomas), A.R.C.M. (Appreciation Diploma). Recent Successes, 34, Wilmington Avenue, Chiswick, W.4

FREDERICK TAMMADGE, L.R.A.M. (Eloc.),
A.L.A.M. (Eloc.), Examiner, Adjudicator, and Registered
Teacher (T.R.C.) of Elocution. Speech Training for Teachers—Public Speaking—Stammering and all defects cured. Dramatic Recitals for Schools and Colleges. 5, Chertsey Road, Leytonstone,
E.11.

DR. TAYLOR teaches through the post any musical subjects. Accompaniments written or revised. Successful preparation for all exams. Portland Place, Lancaster.

AN EMINENT MASTER, whose Pupils are artists of International repute, will train and "present" a promising voice on exceptional terms. Write, "Influential," 195,
Oxford Street, W.1.

EASTBOURNE.—Downsmeade Private School for Boys.
Musical Scholarship open to boys under 13. Value £30 per annum for three years. Particulars can be had on application to the Headmaster, before April 19.

SOLO and CHORUS BOYS supplied (CITY OF LONDON CHOIR COLLEGE). Apply to Francis Sutton,
F.R.C.O., St. Stephen's Walbrook, E.C.4.

LIVERPOOL CATHEDRAL. CHORAL SCHOLARSHIPS TENABLE AT LIVERPOOL COLLEGE.

The Chapter of the Cathedral and the Council of the College offer a number of Scholarships to boys between the ages of 10 and 13, with good voices.

(a) MAJOR SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable by boarders, covering the whole cost of board and tuition at the College.

(b) MINOR SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable by boarders, covering part cost of board and tuition at the College.

(c) MINOR SCHOLARSHIPS, tenable by day boys, covering the cost of dinners at the College and either the whole or part cost of tuition at the College.

Further particulars may be obtained from the Rev. R. Brook, M.A., Principal, Liverpool College, Sefton Park Road, Liverpool.

KING'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE.

There are VACANCIES in the Choir for ALTO, TENOR, and BASS Choral Scholars. Choral Scholarships are tenable by those who intend to take a University Degree. The value of the Scholarship is £80 a year, with considerable allowances in addition. The Competitions will be held on Thursday, May 22 (Alto and Tenor), and Friday,
May 23 (Bass). Applications to be sent in not later than May 14.
For further information apply to The Deans, King's College, Cambridge.

ST. JOHN'S, Notting Hill, W.—Tenor required.
Salary £20. Write, J. S. Robson, 32, Dalgarno Gardens, W.10.

TENOR WANTED, Voluntary. Excellent music,
"St. John" Passion. Good opportunity for obtaining experience.
Choirmaster, 32, Marlborough Road, E.18.

LEADING BASS REQUIRED, St. Michael and
All Angels, Bedford Park. Good reader. £20-£25. Write,
C. D. Underhill, 27, St. Peter's Square, Hammersmith, W.6.

ST. BARNABAS, Kensington.—Required, a Bass
(or Heavy Baritone). Stipend £20. Write, Ewart Dartrey, 8, Cambridge Gardens, Kilburn, N.W.6.

ALTO and BASS WANTED for All Saints',
South Lambeth, in return for lessons in Singing, Piano, or Organ. W. Attersoll, 21, Thurlstone Road, S.E.27.

ORGANIST WANTED for Congregational Church. State age, experience, and salary required. Apply to Walter H. Day, 42, Earl Street, Maidstone.

HENDON CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH
(Brent Street, Hendon). CHOIRMASTER and ORGANIST
WANTED. Apply, Mr. J. W. Butler, 93, Sunny Gardens, Hendon, N.W.4.

ST. BARTHOLOMEW'S, Stamford Hill, N.15.
ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER REQUIRED, to begin in April.
Churchman. Good choir. Sung Eucharist. Salary £40. Apply, Vicar.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER required for Congregational Church in North London suburb. Apply, stating age, experience, salary required, to "W. A.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER WANTED for St. Andrew's, Exmouth. Choral Eucharist, 2-manual H&le organ. Salary, £80. Write, stating age and experience, with copies of three testimonials, to Vicar, Exmouth.

ORGANIST WANTED.—Student or amateur
(either sex) for School Chapel (C. of E.). Sunday mornings only during term; in return, lessons and practice on fine three-manual Willis, coaching for R.C.O., &c. Apply, W. J. Comley, Mus. Bac.
(Oxon), F.R.C.O., 133, Ware Road, Hertford.

ORGANIST-CHOIRMASTER requires appointment after Easter. Anglican music, and scope for teaching. Good testimonials and references. Denny, 71, Doxey, Stafford.

A.R.C.O. (C. of E.) would deputise during August, preferably sea-side. Remuneration. Apply, "M. H.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PROFESSIONAL PUPIL.—The Organist of Ripon Cathedral has a VACANCY. Address, Dr. C. H. Moody, C.B.E., F.R.C.O., Woodbridge, Ripon.

LADY ACCOMPANIST desires DAY WORK, two or three times a week. Practice, Swedish Drill, &c. Excellent time-keeper, good reader. "T.," Kelsey, The Grove, Pinner.

LADY, brilliant Solo-Pianist, Accompanist, experienced Teacher, with highest credentials. Liszt-Rubinstein Method. Requires position utilising these qualifications. "C. J. L.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

A WELL-ESTABLISHED professional L.R.A.M., Violinist's Teaching Connection, realising about £300 per annum, in well-known Denbighshire Market Town, carrying with it certain local appointments, such as Conductor of the Town Orchestral Society (Prize-Winners National Eisteddfod, Mold, 1923), Leader of Town Philharmonic Orchestra, Visiting Teacher of the Violin in local Schools, College, Concert Soloists absolutely the only Violinist of standing in the district. Introductions would be secured for a suitably qualified man. Rooms are available. Splendid field for energetic man. Position becomes vacant through death of Violinist. No reasonable offer refused. Apply, H. V. O. Cook, Solicitor, Wrexham.

WILL any generous person financially Assist Young Man (20) in training as Singer? Career predicted by famous Italian. Agree almost any contract to obtain same. Kindly inform "Louis," 45, High Street, Hampstead, N.W.3.

PIANO TUNERS WANTED for ABROAD. Thoroughly proficient in tuning and regulating. Apply, stating age and experience, "H. S.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MANAGER of Pianoforte House desires change. Had full control of buying, sales (cash and credit), and workshops. Excellent references. Apply, "L. B.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

PIANIST-CONDUCTOR wishes to purchase, cheap, complete library of light and popular Music, in good condition, suitable for cinema small orchestra. Offers to G. R. Wright, 96, London Road, Kettering.

ORGANS (New and Second-hand) for SALE.—Electric and pneumatic action up-to-date. Built or reconstructed. Bedwell & Son, The Cambridge Organ Works, Cambridge.

CHURCH ORGANS STANDARDISED.—Two Manuals, Pneumatic Pedals, various sizes; specially built. Five to fifteen stops. Introduced to meet the requirements of the times at minimum of cost. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

CHURCH ORGANS REPAIRED and TUNED. Attractive terms. Henry Morgan & Son, Church Organ Builders, 10, Cowdrey Road, Wimbledon, London. Founded 1896

FOR SALE.—New 2-manual Pipe Organ, 20 to 30 stops. All modern accessories. Suitable for Church or large Hall. W. E. Richardson & Sons, Central Organ Works, Manchester, S.W.

FOR SALE.—Pipe ORGAN, one-manual, pedals, 7 Stops; mahogany case. Only wants erection. £50. Seen by appointment. Harvey, 43, Faith Street, Maidstone.

ORGAN.—8 sets of reeds, sub-bass, and 'cello. 15 Stops, good tone and touch. Suitable for organist's practice instrument. £40. "L. Y.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ORGAN-HARMONIUM, Alexandre Prize Medal, Rosewood case, 2 Manuals, 5 Octaves, 22 Stops, attachable pedals, 'knee-swell'; bellows workable by hand or foot; soft tone; suitable for Chapel or Hall. Also PIANO, full size, Concert Grand, Collard & Collard, in good condition; walnut case. Both instruments at 101, Lordship Road, Stoke Newington, London. No dealers.

PIANO PEDALS—FOR SALE.—Upright Piano (Henry Ambridge), with Pneumatic Pedal Attachment. Norman & Beard, Concave, Radiating, complete with stool. In perfect order. £30, or near offer. Apply, 32, Home Park Road, Wimbledon Park, S.W.19.

WANTED.—Norman & Beard Pianoforte Pedal attachment. Must be radiating and concave, and in good condition. "E. T.," 16, Dane Road, St. Leonards.

ORGAN PEDAL PIANO ATTACHMENT, Radiating and Concave, with Stool. £7. New condition. Sayers, 6, Market Place, Hertford.

FOR SALE.—VIENNESE VIOLIN, sweet tone. £30. Also small-size VIOLA. £15. Write, "E. P.," c/o Smith's, 889, Finchley Road, Golders Green, N.

VIOLIN.—BEAUTIFUL ROCCA FOR SALE. Perfect condition. Price £300. Apply, Miss Guillaing, 50, Grove End Road, N.W.8.

BOUDOIR GRAND PIANO for SALE.—Bargain. Maker, Rachals, Hanover. Size 6-ft., 3 legs. Owner going abroad. Suit school or teacher. "C. H.," 11, Cavendish Parade S.W.4.

BARGAIN.—Ostrovsky Hand-development Machine FOR SALE.—Pianist offers machine at great reduction. Latest model, in perfect condition. Original price £75; will take £25. Apply, Miss Gladys Mayne, 24, St. John's Wood Park, N.W.8.

GRAMOPHONE TIPS, 1924. 1s. Post Free. H. T. Barnett, 77, King's Road, Southsea.

L.R.A.M., A.R.C.M., AURAL TESTS. Special important paper. Success assured. This paper gives details how to work. Send 4s. 6d. to "Aural Tests," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

ESSAY.—A.R.C.O., on "English Folk-Song and Dance." Excellent Series of Six Model Essays—valuable hints. Secure Success. Send 4s. 6d. to "Essays," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

THE UNKNOWN TRUTH ABOUT THE VOICE AND ITS DEVELOPMENT. By E. DAVIDSON PALMER, Mus. Bac., Oxon. Showing the prevailing Error in the Training of Men's Voices, and the primary cause of Voice-Failure in Singers and Public Speakers. Post free, 1s. (Postal Order). Address: 11, Grazebrook Road, Stoke Newington, N.16.

MUSIC COMPOSERS and LYRIC WRITERS. The Cosmos Publishing Co. are open to consider Songs, &c., with a view to publication. Send MSS. with stamp for reply, to Glenholme, The Common, Hesse.

SHAPED PIANO COVERS, stocked in twelve different materials. Plush Tops, Backings, Key Covers. Patterns and prices by return post. William Moore & Co., Lauderdale Buildings, Aldersgate, London, E.C.1. Telephone: Clerkenwell 2827.

LYRICS for MUSICAL SETTING. Write, Charles G. Mortimer, Stonyhurst College, Lancs.

BARITONES and BASSES should buy new song, "BEAUTY'S DAUGHTER" (Oakley). Compass B<sup>7</sup> to E<sup>7</sup>. Price 2s. Weekes & Co., 14, Hanover St., W.1, and all music-sellers.

ORGAN MUSIC for SALE, new and second-hand. Apply for list to Mr. Heppenstall, "Truscott," 26, Southcote Road, Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPIED neatly and accurately. Transposition, Band-Parts, &c. Gordon Jacob, A.R.C.M., 1, Homefield Road, S.W.19.

MUSIC COPIED, neat work, Transposition and Duplicating. E. W. Cartwright, 20, Waverley Rd., Bournemouth.

MUSIC COPYING and Transposition Work WANTED. Neat and accurate. Terms moderate. "M. O.," c/o Novello & Co., Ltd., 160, Wardour Street, W.1.

MUSIC COPIED, neatly and accurately. TRANSPPOSITIONS. F. Western, 38, Ramsay Rd., South Acton, W.3.

MUSIC COPIED, 12-stave page, 9d. (transposition extra). Neat work. M. J. Morris, 114, Alexandra Road, Hampstead, N.W.8.

COMPOSERS' MSS. copied promptly and accurately; neat work. Terms moderate. 17, Vernon Road, Hornsey, N.8.

CHAMBER MUSIC.

Piano and Instrumental Sonatas, and works for various combinations, at reasonable prices. Send for lists which incorporate the Classics and important Moderns. Over 1,000 different numbers, including many Continental publications now unobtainable.

THE TECHNIQUE OF PIANO PLAYING.

Studies on CHOPIN ETUDES by LEOPOLD GODOWSKY. Five Volumes, and an additional book containing twenty-two Studies for Left Hand alone. Fuller details in free booklet.

ALEXANIAN-CASALS'S WONDERFUL VIOLONCELLO METHOD: Descriptive literature on application.

MINIATURE SCORES

With superb portraits. Prices from Ninepence. Special Catalogue.

PAUL JUON BOOKLET FREE.

The Man and his Art. A large number of magnificent compositions for Solos and practically every ensemble.

Write, EDWARD WM. ORGAN, Vicarage Road, Handsworth, Birmingham

PIANOS

GRAND and UPRIGHT

By High Grade Makers.

NEW AND SECOND-HAND FOR SALE OR HIRE PURCHASE.

CHAS. STILES & CO.

74-76, SOUTHAMPTON ROW
LONDON, W.C.1.

Phone: MUSEUM 439.

BECHSTEIN PIANOS

THE BECHSTEIN PIANO needs little recommendation to cultured tastes. Its beautiful tone and incomparable touch—qualities which have gained for it the esteem of every music-lover, and have set a standard to the world—are as exquisite and as characteristic as ever.

Write or call for Catalogue.

126, NEW BOND STREET

LONDON, W. 1.

TELEPHONE: MAYFAIR 2653.

STEINWAY

MUSIC LOVERS
CAN OBTAIN
PERFECT RESULTS
ONLY FROM THE PERFECT INSTRUMENT
THE STEINWAY.

115-117, WIGMORE STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

MOLLENHAUER FLUTES AND PICCOLOS

MESSRS. J. MOLLENHAUER & SONS possess a hundred years' world-wide reputation as makers of first-class Wood-Wind Instruments. Their Flutes and Piccolos are unrivalled in purity of tone, pleasing intonation, and solidity of mechanism, and are consequently used by the leading artists in every land.

Catalogue from—

FAUPEL BROTHERS,

4 & 5, OLD CHANGE, CHEAPSIDE, LONDON, E.C.4.

Telephone: City 5693.

Far Eastern inquiries to be addressed to our Hong-Kong office,
P.O. Box 631, Hong-Kong.

Published by THE H. W. GRAY Co., New York.

CHORAL ORCHESTRATION

BY

CECIL FORSYTH.

Showing the Student, bar by bar, how to orchestrate a short choral number to the best possible advantage.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS.

MODERN VIOLIN PLAYING

BY

S. B. GRIMSON AND CECIL FORSYTH.

It establishes for the Violin what Tobias Matthay established for the Pianoforte—a fundamental musical technique, based on physical law.

CLOTH, EIGHT SHILLINGS.

SELLING AGENTS: NOVELLO & CO., LTD., LONDON.

ORGANS AND TUNING.

By THOMAS ELLISTON.

THIS WORK is again in print. It has been enlarged, and completed with a Full Index, to a total of 800 pages. The supply is limited to about 450 copies, and no reprint is possible.

Price 25s. net; postage 9d.

A. WEEKES & CO., LTD., 14, Hanover Street, London, W.1.

JUST PUBLISHED.

CHORALES

HARMONIZED BY

JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH

COLLECTED AND ARRANGED IN MELODIC ORDER

BY

H. ELLIOT BUTTON.

This Collection of Chorales harmonized by Bach contains, it is believed, all those that he arranged for voices. It includes also an Index by means of which any Chorale can easily be found if the first few notes of the melody are known.

Price ... .. Cloth, Ten Shillings and Sixpence.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

OXFORD BOOKS.

Contrapuntal Technique
in the 16th Century.

By R. O. MORRIS.

IN this book the general characteristics of 16th Century Counterpoint are fully described, a separate chapter being devoted to each of the principal aspects—modal, rhythmic, harmonic, &c. There is also a chapter in which the chief points of difference between the English Tudor composers and their Flemish and Italian contemporaries are explained. The rules given are illustrated by 200 musical examples, drawn from all the greatest composers of the period.

8s. 6d. net.

The Evolution of Harmony

By C. H. KITSON,

Professor of Music at the University of Dublin.

THIS treatise on the material of music, its gradual growth, and elementary use, is a study, rather than an advanced text-book, of harmony. 2nd edition. With numerous musical examples.

12s. 6d. net.

WRITE FOR A MUSIC LIST.

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS.

A WESTMINSTER PILGRIM

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

Three-hundred-and-sixty pages, Large Demy 8vo, with a Frontispiece in Colour by Sir LESLIE WARD, numerous Illustrations, and a Special Portrait of the Author by Sir WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

REDUCED PRICE.
TEN SHILLINGS AND SIXPENCE NET.

Stiff Paper Cover.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS.

DAILY GRAPHIC.

Under the happy title of "A Westminster Pilgrim" Sir Frederick Bridge has narrated in a vivacious manner many of the most outstanding events of his distinguished career. The volume has qualities which make it an important contribution to the history of music in England.

WESTMINSTER GAZETTE.

Sir Frederick Bridge's retirement from the organ-loft at Westminster Abbey has enabled him to complete a delightful volume of reminiscences. Is a most readable book—a big one, too. Every page bristles with good things, and it would take much space to do justice to them even in a general survey.

SPECTATOR.

Makes excellent reading . . . there are many pleasant and humorous stories.

GRAPHIC.

This handsome autobiography . . . is a very readable and happy book.

MUSICAL STANDARD.

Concerning the book itself, it ought in justice to be added that it is a very full record of an active musical life. It is admirably arranged, excellently printed, and copiously illustrated. The "get-up" generally is all that could be desired, and one handles it with infinite pleasure.

MUSIC TRADES REVIEW.

From first to last the book is of intense interest. It is of great historical value . . . and makes exceedingly pleasant reading . . . Music-lovers must not consider their libraries complete until this new volume has been added.

YORKSHIRE POST.

A very entertaining volume of reminiscences. More than a conventional word of praise is due to the publishers for the excellent appearance of the volume, which has no vestige of war economy about it, and has many appropriate illustrations, artistically reproduced.

GUARDIAN.

A singularly pleasant and companionable book.

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

Dedicated to SIR JOHN JAMES BADDELEY.

THE OLD CRYES OF LONDON

BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE

WITH NUMEROUS ILLUSTRATIONS AND MUSICAL EXAMPLES
AND A COLOURED FRONTISPIECE.

Eighty-Eight Pages, Crown 4to . . . . . Price Seven Shillings net.

THE MORNING POST: "His book has a delightful antiquarian flavour, increased by its quaint illustrations, and the use of the old-style music type."

THE TIMES: "Under the title 'The Old Cryes of London' Sir Frederick Bridge has now written, and Messrs. Novello have published, a delightful little volume. The best thing in this book is the author; and the next best things are the illustrations."

ARMY, NAVY, AND AIR FORCE GAZETTE: "A very unusually attractive book. It certainly forms a most welcome contribution to musical history."

THE REFEREE: "This contains a mine of antiquarian lore, reproductions of old woodcuts, and musical examples."

THE GUARDIAN: "Those individuals who were so unfortunate as to miss Sir Frederick Bridge's delightful lectures in the City on 'The Old Cryes of London' will derive both consolation and entertainment from this excellent volume."

THE CHRISTIAN WORLD: "This delightful little volume . . . an excellent piece of genial antiquarianism, musical, literary, and historical."

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED.

TRINITY COLLEGE OF MUSIC.

President:

THE RT. HON. THE EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.P., G.C.V.O.

Director of Studies: C. W. PEARCE, M.A., Mus. D.

Director of Examinations: E. F. HORNER, Mus. D.

April 2nd, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert.

April 3rd, at 3 p.m.—Students' Concert at Steinway Hall.

April 28th.—THE SUMMER TERM BEGINS.

The Concerts are open free to the public, but in the case of the Steinway Hall Concert, application must be made for tickets.

The College provides INSTRUCTION and TRAINING in all Musical Subjects (Instrumental, Vocal, and Theoretical) and Dramatic and Operatic Elocution. The Lessons are arranged to meet the convenience of both day and evening students. Entry may be made for any number of Subjects—from one to the Full Course. The College is open to beginners as well as to the more proficient student; pupils under 16 years of age are received for the Junior School at reduced fees.

The ORCHESTRAL, CHORAL, the OPERATIC, and CHAMBER MUSIC CLASSES are open also to sufficiently competent persons who are not College Students for other subjects.

Tuition in the Rudiments of the Theory of Music, Harmony, Counterpoint, Form, Instrumentation, Composition, and the Art of Teaching is also given by Correspondence.

There are between Forty and Fifty Scholarships tenable at the College and open to all British subjects up to certain age limits, and the Cambridge Pianoforte Scholarship, value £100 per annum; also Eighteen Scholarships which provide complete preparation for the Degree of Bachelor of Music.

Particulars of the Teaching Department, with list of Professors, Fees, Scholarships regulations, &c., and the Syllabuses of the Diploma and Local Examinations, free on application to the undersigned.

C. N. H. RODWELL, Secretary.

Mandeville Place, Manchester Square, London, W.1.

MACDOWELL

SOME FAMOUS PIANO ALBUMS.

	s.	d.
FOREST IDYLS. Op. 19 ... ..	4	6
LES ORIENTALES. Op. 37 ... ..	3	0
TWELVE STUDIES. Op. 39.
Two Books ... .. each	3	6
WOODLAND SKETCHES. Op. 51.
(Or in Two Books, 3s. each.) complete	5	0
SEA PIECES. Op. 55 ... .. complete	6	0
(Or in Two Books, 3s. 3d. each.)
FIRESIDE TALES. Op. 61 ... ..	4	6
NEW ENGLAND IDYLS. Op. 62
(Or in Two Books, 3s. 3d. each.) complete	6	0
FORGOTTEN FAIRY TALES ... ..	3	0

"MacDowell has in his music proved himself as great a poet of Nature as Wordsworth proved himself in verse. One has only to think of the 'SEA PIECES,' 'WOODLAND SKETCHES,' 'NEW ENGLAND IDYLS,' 'FORGOTTEN FAIRY TALES,' and a new world of romance is opened up."—Musical Opinion.

ELKIN & CO., LTD.,

8 & 10, BEAK STREET, REGENT STREET,
LONDON, W.1.

AND OF ALL MUSIC SELLERS.

BROADWOOD PIANOS

MOTETS

FOR

GOOD FRIDAY AND EASTER DAY.

EDITED BY

SIR FREDERICK BRIDGE.

(O MY PEOPLE (The Reproaches) - Vittoria (FAITHFUL CROSS - John IV. of Portugal

THIS IS THE DAY - - - Palestrina

PRICE FOURPENCE EACH.

"SING WITH JOYFUL EXULTATION."

BY

RICHARD CHANTER.

PRICE FOURPENCE.

A strong, dignified Easter Anthem of moderate difficulty which should make a wide appeal.

Specimens and newly revised Lists of Church Music free on request.

BOSWORTH & CO., LTD.

8, HEDDON ST., REGENT ST., LONDON, W.1.

THE PERFECT FOOL

AN OPERA IN ONE ACT

BY

GUSTAV HOLST.

In consequence of the expiration of the period for which the sole right of performing this work was reserved to The British National Opera Company, the Publishers are now in a position to arrange for performances to be given by other Companies.

London: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, Limited.

FROM A PASTEL DRAWING BY SIR WILLIAM RICHMOND, K.C.B., R.A.

Yours very truly
J. Adcock White

The Musical Times

AND SINGING-CLASS CIRCULAR

APRIL 1 1924

(FOR LIST OF CONTENTS SEE PAGE 368.)

JOHN FREDERICK BRIDGE

It is with a deep sense of personal bereavement that we record the death of Sir Frederick Bridge, which occurred at the Cloisters, Westminster Abbey, on March 18. To the public it means the passing of a famous musician; to the profession it means the death of an honoured leader. To us it means the loss of an old friend. The many capacities in which he served the musical world brought him into frequent contact with the house of Novello, and his relations with the firm were always based upon the most cordial friendship. We share in some part the special privation which will be felt by his many friends at Westminster Abbey, at the Royal College of Music, the Royal College of Organists, at Trinity College of Music, in the Royal Choral Society, the Musical Association, the Worshipful Company of Musicians, the Madrigal Society, the Pepys Club, and one and all of the musical institutions and circles that drew part of their life from his ceaseless activities.

Frederick Bridge was not only a firm friend; he had the gift of making friends. To the chance acquaintance he appeared a brisk, impetuous man 'of infinite jest.' Those who knew him better perceived the steadfastness and energy beneath this mobile surface. His capacity to be 'up and doing' was a constant source of wonderment. Nothing could better illustrate it than his sudden resolve, which came to him in the seventy-ninth year of his life, to write a comic-opera. The libretto was to be The Village Coquettes, by Charles Dickens, which Sir Frederick had discovered on a bookseller's shelves. It appears that music had already been written to the play by John Hullah, but that after running for sixty nights in London the whole production, score and everything, had been destroyed at a fire at Edinburgh. Sir Frederick assiduously sought, and found, some musical numbers that had been published separately, and set himself to supply the rest. The task was near completion. One day in March the veteran enthusiast, snugly seated in the smoking-room of Mr. Littleton's house at Brighton, with a cigar going well, told the story of The Village Coquettes, and talked of all his plans for the future for a good solid hour with the glee of a young man in sight of his first success. Within the week he was dead.

It is impossible to compress such a career and such a character as his within a few short columns. Indeed, he could scarcely encompass all the multitudinous incidents and interests of his life in his recently published reminiscences. The man himself—eager, alert, never-tiring, versatile, and nimble-witted—breathes in these pages, and there is his best biography.

The bare facts of his life are as follows: John Frederick Bridge was born at Oldbury, in Worcestershire, on December 5, 1844. At the age of six he was admitted as probationer in the choir of Rochester Cathedral, where his father was a vicar-choral. At fourteen he became articled pupil, and three years later began to take up local appointments, the first being at Shorne, near Rochester. In 1865 he was appointed organist at Holy Trinity Church, Windsor, and during the next few years he passed the F.R.C.O. examination and took his Mus. Bac. degree at Oxford.

The highest ambition of his youth was satisfied in 1869, when, after competition, he became organist of Manchester Cathedral. His next step was to take the degree of Mus. Doc. at Oxford. He left Manchester in 1875 to become, at the age of thirty, 'permanent deputy-organist' at Westminster Abbey. Though nominally a subordinate, he was, in fact, the organist and choirmaster; but it was not until the death of his retired predecessor, James Turle, that he could assume the full title. He is thus credited with only thirty-six years (1882-1918) of service in the official table of Westminster Abbey organists, but he carried out his duties for forty-three years. It need hardly be added that he carried them out with the highest distinction, nor that his duties brought him greater responsibilities than could fall to any other organist in the kingdom. He officiated at the Coronations of Edward VII. and George V.; at the Memorial Service for King Edward; at the Funeral Services for Princess Mary, Duchess of Teck (1897), the Duke of Westminster (1899), Browning, Gladstone, and Lord Lister; at the commemorations and celebrations in honour of Purcell (1895), Orlando Gibbons (1907), S. S. Wesley (1910). His three honours—knighthood, M.V.O., and C.V.O.—were conferred upon him on the occasions of Queen Victoria's Jubilee (1887), and the two Coronations.

As a teacher he was Professor of harmony and counterpoint at the Royal College of Music, being elected a Fellow of the College in 1921; King Edward Professor of Music in the University of London; Chairman of the Board, and Examiner for many years at Trinity College of Music; and Examiner for degrees at the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, Victoria, and Durham.

At various periods he was conductor of the Highbury Philharmonic Society, the Western Madrigal Society, and, from 1896 until his retirement in 1918, the Royal Choral Society.

As Gresham Professor of Music from 1890 until his death he delivered countless lectures, mainly based on his own discoveries in the musical past of England. Here his gifts in the direction of popular exposition had full scope. Never, surely, were musical lectures so attractive to the general public. His informal manner, ready wit, and intense enjoyment of his task, gave delight to many thousands to whom, in ordinary circumstances, the word 'lecture' would be a deterrent.

His chief recreation was work, but as an alternative there was sport with gun and rod. He would retire in season to his Scotch home at Glass, Aberdeenshire, and there, it is said, make great havoc of birds and fishes. Look at a certain page of A Westminster Pilgrim and you will see him in 'plus fours' cheerfully holding up his late prey for inspection. Look at the frontispiece and you will see him in the well-known cartoon of 'Spy,' a book on Basso Continuo under his arm, a paper marked 'Pepys' projecting from a pocket, and a quizzical look on his face. These pictures show something of the two characteristics which all who came in contact with him will remember most vividly—zest, and an unfailing sense of the odd and humorous. It is well, however, that the Basso Continuo in the cartoon should remind us that, as an all-round, practical musician, who touched the art at many and widely diverse points, he has had few equals among his contemporaries.

Our Portrait Supplement is reproduced from the pastel drawing which Sir William Richmond made specially and presented to Sir Frederick for use in his book, A Westminster Pilgrim.

A PERSONAL TRIBUTE

An unbroken friendship of forty-eight years makes it difficult—nay, impossible—for me to realise that Sir Frederick Bridge is dead. Before going to him as a pupil, in 1876, my former master told me I should find Sir Frederick (or Dr. Bridge, as he then was) a man of keen perceptivity. To a youthful mind those words conveyed little, but the innumerable opportunities afforded by a long and close friendship convince me that he would have shone in any walk of life in which that faculty were necessary. He constantly impressed upon his pupils the importance of cultivating as many branches of music as possible, and specialising in none. He was always proud of the fact that he not only played the organ, but conducted, lectured, and composed as well. As an organist his name was always certain to draw a multitude, and he often joked about it, saying, 'All these young fellows can play Rheinberger backwards, standing on their heads, and get few to listen to them, while I, with a few "Joe Millers," pack the place out, and get a record collection.' His name had an extraordinary power, and I remember once passing his door in the Cloisters when a party of Americans came along, peering into every corner. A young girl happened to see his door-plate, and came back on tip-toe to her friends, saying in a whisper and pointing to the door, 'Sir Frederick Bridge lives there.' They all gathered round to look, and no doubt took back a treasured memory. As a conductor he was extraordinarily popular, his genial manner and quickness in seeing the amusing side appealing to everyone. He never allowed fatigue to affect his manner at rehearsal, and encouraged everyone to do his best, even when he himself, with all his energy, was thoroughly tired. At the many rehearsals for each Coronation his enjoyment of the tremendous responsibility was a thing I shall never forget. Even when he was given the wrong signal at King Edward's Coronation, and we sang the first anthem out of its place, he called to me, 'Play, for goodness' sake,' and when I began, followed it with 'Not like that, my dear chap, this isn't a funeral.' It was quite impossible to be pessimistic when with him, and he always kept a cheerful outlook. In his study was a great placard with the legend 'Don't worry—smile.' And he certainly lived up to it, and constantly cheered others on.

How well I remember his setting Crossing the Bar! He could not make up his mind about the final chords, which are an unusual resolution of a  $\frac{5}{2}$ . He tried several ways, and eventually said, 'Well, old Handel did it in his recitatives, so why shouldn't I?' So the progression remained as we know it.

As a lecturer he took the deepest interest in his work. I recall his delight when elected Gresham Professor, and I well remember being present at his inaugural lecture. He told me he was nervous, but I know everyone was pleased. He was never so happy as when diving into the past, and his enjoyment while preparing his illustrations was a thing to see. He has been credited with many quips and witty sayings; one of the best, surely, was when, at a lecture, the sun came through a side-window and worried him. He asked that someone would draw the blind. Rumour says that it was Dr. C. W. Pearce who jumped up and tugged at the cord, which was out of order. Sir Frederick, looking on, commented jocosely: 'Ladies and gentlemen, here is a pathetic sight. A Mus. Doc. cannot manage a common cord.'

His choristers loved him, although he was very exacting, and at times severe. I doubt if any man was ever more successful than he at training solo boys. I recall such names as Percy Fry, Stanley Roper (now organist of the Chapel Royal), his brother, and many more, who were simply splendid soloists, with most beautiful tone.

Sir Frederick had an extraordinary way of illustrating what he wanted, though he had little voice. His method seemed to me rather to eliminate the bad, and allow the good to germinate, with the happy result that the individuality of the boy was allowed to develop.

On one occasion, a couple of boys were reported to have thrown an apple across the choir when they should have been putting out the books. Sir Frederick got the apple, and at practice borrowed a knife from one of the culprits. He carefully peeled the apple, taking a great deal of time over it, and saying how much he appreciated the fruit. The boys watched it all with a woeful expression. When the peeling was completed, Sir Frederick cut the apple in two and gave each boy a half with an admonition. Though often severe and apparently unrelenting, he was wonderfully kind-hearted, and I and many more remember with gratitude many kind actions.

His energy was amazing, and I remember many years ago he had a passion for early rising, to the great inconvenience of the servants. He had a thousand projects in his mind, and worked with the utmost enthusiasm at them all. He was never still, and I well recall Sir John Stainer's advice to me, 'Hang on to Bridge's coat-tails.' It just conveyed the idea of Sir Frederick flying around. He was always ready (as he said) to 'Cheer them up, my boy,' and was, indeed, light-hearted as a boy, seeing the comical side. When he had been to a dinner he would say, on recalling a rather solemn speech, how he 'woke them up.' And he could certainly make a fine speech, being never at a loss for an idea or a word. Shouts of laughter often drowned him, and he will be sorely missed at the functions where for so many years he had been wont to speak.

He enjoyed a joke even against himself, and I remember once at the Madrigal Society, when Sullivan was president, Sir Frederick, as conductor, was giving the pitch by the pitch-pipe. He then said, 'Now gentlemen, please,' and hummed the note again, but a little flat. Sir Arthur said, 'Mr. Conductor, do you wish us to start on the note you blew, or on the note you sang?' Sir Frederick was loudest in the shout which followed, and often recalled the moment. The example left us by this great personality seems to me to be 'Work hard and keep cheerful.' The writer of an article in the Evening Standard of March 18 truly said, 'Sir Frederick Bridge was an organist and a good deal more.'

If a small and unobtrusive entry to the musical world could commence at six years of age, and complete a crowded life which included every honourable post an organist can aspire to, then surely the memory of Frederick Bridge will be an encouragement to all young aspirants to fame and achievement.

In a necessarily hurried tribute such as this I may be forgiven for many shortcomings. It has been a sorrowful task, and is but a faint presentation of what his influence has been for a generation. The best appreciation is found in the thousands who will mourn his loss. Only to-day, in a somewhat remote sea-side town, I have heard people speaking of his passing with real regret. May his memory live long with us!

W. G. ALCOCK.

MUSIC AT THE EMPIRE EXHIBITION

The title of this article promises more than can be fulfilled, unfortunately. Over a month ago we inquired of the Exhibition authorities concerning the musical arrangements, but without result. We were promised some information; the rest was silence. Presumably there is a sub-committee charged with the not unimportant task of looking after the interests of the most popular of all the arts. If so, we would have thought that the Press, and above all the musical Press, would long ago have been given full information. Almost as many people—perhaps even more—are interested in the musical attractions as in the various side-shows of which a good deal has been heard.

Of course it may be that the authorities have some pleasant surprises for musical visitors; they may realise that an exhibition of the kind offers a fine opportunity for laying stress on such musical achievements as the country has to its credit. Even while we write there may be in preparation fine programmes of orchestral works; concerts of madrigals, glees, and other typically British choral music; open-air performances of the kind so successfully carried out in recent years by the League of Arts; performances by crack brass bands from industrial centres; and so forth. All these and other good things may be under way; but if they are, their preparation is being kept dark. The likelier thing is that music will be treated in the usual unimaginative fashion—a rota of military bands giving performances of the desolating type of programme associated with pier-tolls and two-penny chairs. If the event proves us to be wrong, we shall be delighted.

So far, we hear of only two definite bits of musical organization at Wembley, and both are in the department of choralism. There is to be a Welsh week, pretty much on the lines suggested in a letter from Sir Walford Davies published in our issue of March; and Dr. Charles Harriss has arranged a series of concerts by massed choirs.

'Musical Jumboism,' says the reader—and not without some grounds. Yet the same comment has been made of every Handel Festival for a long time past without diminishing the popularity of that event with performers and public alike. And it is odd that the protests come from critics who are loud in their praise of the massed band concert at the Brass Band Festival. The principle cannot be right in one case and wrong in the other. It is urged that choral singing on a large scale is disappointing in respect of power and flexibility; this is true, yet it has certain fine qualities that can be obtained through no other medium, and so its use is justified on special occasions. The disappointed listeners are those who expect the wrong thing. They forget, for example, that the multiplication of voices or instruments beyond a certain point does not ensure a proportionate increase in power. If, instead of listening for a sound that is as big as the appearance of the choir, they would keep their ears open during the quiet passages, they would have a rich return. There is nothing in massed choral work more impressive than a pianissimo, with its suggestion of immense reserves. Moreover, there is always a thrill in seeing or hearing any common action carried out unanimously by a crowd. Didn't Berlioz rhapsodise over the grounding-arms by a regiment of soldiers? Done soldier by soldier, it was nothing; carried out by the whole force, at the word of command, it gave Hector one more purple passage for his book on 'Orchestration.'

We thought of this when Dr. Harriss recently sent us particulars of the huge choir he has organized for the Exhibition. Huge it is, numbering ten thousand voices, with an orchestra of five hundred. The collection of such a force would be impossible at the present difficult time without the aid of an existing organization.

Fortunately, such an aid is at hand in the Imperial Choir, founded fourteen years ago. The Doctor tells us that the Choir is blessed with loyal and energetic officers, whose efforts have met with a splendid response. Large contingents are coming from many of the chief provincial bodies—the Liverpool Philharmonic and Manchester Hallé Societies, the Bradford, Birmingham, Bristol, Hull, and Newcastle Festival Choirs, and the Wolverhampton Choral Society. London, the home counties, and the suburbs are well-represented by about a hundred choirs. The heavy expenses of some of the larger and more distant choirs will be defrayed in part by generous funds raised by the local mayors.

The musical results ought to be far better than those of the performances given by the Imperial Choir in Hyde Park in 1919. At Wembley the singers will be under cover, and the sound will be to some extent confined to the Stadium, instead of being diffused over an area of about a mile, as was the case at Hyde Park. (Readers will remember that the Hyde Park singing was more sonorous at a considerable distance than close at hand.) The acoustic properties of the Stadium have been tested, and are said to be remarkably good. Visitors may therefore count on hearing some imposing choral effects.

Here is an outline of the scheme of six concerts: On May 31, at 2.30, the programme will be of an 'Empire Day' character, with a selection of short works, such as Purcell's Come, if you dare, the fine chorus, 'Forward through the glimmering darkness,' from Parry's War and Peace, the conductor's own Empire of the Sea, a chorale from Mackenzie's Jubilee Ode, Land of Hope and Glory, &c., with a Haydn chorus—Achieved is the glorious work—by way of finale.

June 14 will be devoted to Handel, with four groups of extracts from Solomon, Judas Maccabæus, Samson, and The Messiah. This ought to be a particularly effective concert. There will be an element of the unusual, too, for Sound an alarm will be sung by all the tenors, and Let the bright Seraphim by all the sopranos, with twenty trumpets playing the obbligato.

On June 28 there will be a miscellaneous programme, opening with the march and chorus, 'Hail, bright abode,' from Tannhäuser, and including short choral works by Coleridge-Taylor, Harriss, Gounod, Barnby, Mendelssohn, Rossini, Sullivan, &c.

July 12 is Mendelssohn Day, with extracts from Elijah, The Hymn of Praise, and Athalie.

July 19 will be given up to selections from Haydn, German, Elgar, Bishop, Handel, Sullivan, &c.

The last concert, August 9, will consist of music by British composers—Sullivan, Elgar, Parry, Coleridge-Taylor, Holst, and Geoffrey Shaw.

Whatever views may be held as to the artistic value of musical performances on so vast a scale, one cannot withhold admiration for the enthusiasm, energy, and organizing ability of the man who not only brought this huge choir into being, but is able to gather it together again fourteen years after its inception. During those years the choir, in degrees of strength varied to suit the circumstances, has taken part in a number of national events too familiar to recount. It is no ordinary feat to carry through a succession of events spread over a long and exceptionally difficult period. A good many musicians could manage to bring off a solitary coup; a series calls for a personality of unusual driving power. Dr. Harriss makes unsparing demands on himself, but even this would be of little avail without his gift of imbuing his huge force with a like zeal.

THE 'BEL CANTO'

BY HERMAN KLEIN

What is the Bel canto? The literal meaning of the term, as most are aware, is 'The Art and Practice of Beautiful Singing.' It is not exactly a term in common use, but singers generally surmise that it is intended to refer to an ideal kind of vocal art associated with the old Italian school, and not encountered so readily as cabbages and turnips and the other vegetables that ordinarily adorn a musical greengrocer's shop. Curiously enough, it never occurred to me to use this term as a title for the lecture which I gave at Wigmore Hall a year ago. Hoping to appeal to a wider public, I simply called it 'How to sing Mozart,' to interest a few of the people who are supposed to worship the very name of Mozart. Alas, it didn't crowd the hall! But after the notices had appeared, there was a different tale to tell: everybody wanted me to repeat the lecture. I declined to do so, because I knew that if I did, the singers who ought to have come to take a cheap lesson might again stop away, while the professional 'dead-heads' would surely be disappointed if they did not receive free tickets. So I resolved, after reading those notices, to publish my lecture in book-form as an 'essay,' much amplified and improved; and then it was that the term Bel canto first crossed my mind. If, I thought, the music of Mozart suggests and requires only beautiful singing, that must be the right name for the little book; and its 'particular reference to the singing of Mozart' can serve for the sub-title. The result so far has proved that no mistake was made.

Now it is my object to avoid so far as possible any vain repetitions of the statements of fact—the technical details, the plain, ordinary words of advice—that are to be found in this Essay of mine. I have no desire to bore those who have read it, and still less desire to 'choke off' those who might have some idea of buying it. There can be no necessity for me to describe in these columns what really constitutes 'beautiful singing.' I am as perfectly certain that readers are capable of recognising and acknowledging what we call the Bel canto, the instant they hear an example of it. The misfortune, of course, is that there is so little of it to be heard. And why? 'Ay,' as Hamlet says, 'there's the rub!' What is the reason of this amazing rarity, which seems to be growing more marked as time goes on? We read and hear all sorts of explanations for it, most of them pitched in a minor, negative key; but they do not help us as a rule to arrive at the truth, much less to find the remedy. It is of no use, for instance, to tell us that the voices no longer exist. We know better. They are discoverable in all parts of the globe—the more remote and Antipodean the more likely. It is equally absurd, in my opinion, to assert that the race of fine teachers ended with this or that man. I don't believe it. There are teachers as capable and discerning to-day as ever there were. Then we are told that this or that secret of the art has been lost, stolen, or mislaid—I am not sure which. Anyhow, I don't believe that either; for, to tell the truth, there was never any actual secret to lose, steal, or mislay.

Nevertheless, there must be a fundamental cause for this prevalent rarity of exemplars of the Bel canto, and it lies, to my thinking, in just as many contributory reasons as there are contributory factors in the great combination which makes up the art of the Bel canto itself.

If there were any real secret it would reside, I think, in that word 'combination.' We are working for high ideals—call it perfection if you will. How can we arrive there except by the perfect union of perfect materials, the latter backed by natural instinct, disposition, environment, brains, industry, and general conditions, which are also perfect for the purpose? That is the combination for and with which we have to strive. We shall attain it about as frequently as the man who plays all his life for the big prize in the Italian lottery. It is a game of 'Lotto.' There are five numbers in the winning line, and if you guess only one you gain some sort of prize. If you guess two or more you are extraordinarily lucky; but if you guess the whole combinazione you win a fortune. We may aptly inquire, 'Is there such a thing as the 'imperfect' Bel canto? To which I would answer, Yes; just as there are degrees of beauty in all Art and perceptible blemishes in Nature herself. It depends really upon what qualities we include in that which I have termed 'The Art and Practice of Beautiful Singing.' Let us suppose these qualities to be grouped under five headings, akin to the five numbers of the combinazione in the lottery. They would stand as follow:

- (1.) Voice (includes ear and physique).
- (2.) Sostenuto (includes breathing, vowel formation, resonance).
- (3.) Legato (includes the scale, light or dark tone, colour).
- (4.) Flexibility (includes all florid singing).
- (5.) Phrasing (includes, diction, expression, and all interpretation).

It will be obvious that each and every one of these forms part of the Bel canto; though only when all do so in the fullest degree of perfection is the highest result attained. That is the equivalent of getting every figure correct in the numbers on the 'Lotto' line.

(1.) Look how often you groan over the Vox et praeterea nihil. For what the voice does alone is far from being the whole of the Bel canto any more than the ability to sing well can satisfy without beauty and charm of vocal tone. There must be both elements present in the ideal combination. The reason why the voice comes first into consideration and retains the foremost place throughout, is that it is the human instrument, the basic creator of musical sound upon which the whole vocal structure is built. There is, of course, a vast difference between being gifted with a beautiful voice and being what is called a 'born singer'; but that is another question. The organ remains the prime essential; the supremacy of the tone is, save in the rarest instances, paramount. It serves to convey the melody of the song to the ears of those who listen; and the more beautifully it does so the more beautiful the music seems to be. The simpler the vocal line the greater the need for irreproachable timbre, emission, and management of the tone.

These are qualities that appeal not only to critics but to the least cultivated audiences who love what they term 'good singing.' Hence their positive dislike for the so-called vibrato, or anything approaching it. They ask, How can a man presume to be a draughtsman if his hand trembles so that he cannot draw a straight line? They want their beloved Mozart tune pure and free from this aspen-leaf-like delivery; and they are right. Any sort of tremolo, natural or acquired, has no place in the Bel canto; its presence at once obliterates the word bel. In the same way, the slightest deviation from the pitch upsets the whole effect. The singer must, therefore, have an impeccable ear. I do not for the moment enlarge upon the question—how far, or in what manner, it is possible for competent instruction to avert or to cure either of the vicious faults just referred to. I merely state that both things are possible, though I greatly prefer the prevention to the cure. But let me add that, if I have heard both the vibrato and false intonation from the mouths of many artists whose names were famous in the 'palmy days' of opera, they ceased from that moment to be in my estimation true exponents of the Bel canto. I except one or two in whom the tremolo appeared only with advancing years; for example, Santley. But from first to last Patti, Tietjens, Nilsson, Scalchi, Trebelli, Sembrich, Patey, Sims Reeves, Edward Lloyd, Ben Davies, Jean and Edouard de Reszke, Lassalle—to name only the pick of those great singers whom I have heard myself—never betrayed the smallest suspicion of it.

(2.) It is somewhat difficult to separate from each other the first and second factors in our scheme, so closely are breathing, vowel-formation, and resonance bound up with the questions relating to the organ itself. Nor have I space to dwell on these at the length they deserve. The science of breathing is of vital importance, but, being the most elusive, it is the most neglected. Correct diaphragmatic breath-pressure is unquestionably the surest guarantee of a steady tone and of every practicable gradation of tone-power. Easy, natural, phonetically-accurate vowel-formation has to allow the resultant tone a direct, uninterrupted access, not only from the larynx to the mouth, but to the whole of the resonating cavities or chambers that are provided for the purpose of reinforcing that tone. Here delicacy of adjustment, true balance between force and resistance, in a word, equal proportion and elasticity everywhere, can alone bring about the perfect result.

(3.) The value of the perfect scale is inestimable. The art of achieving it is both under-estimated and misunderstood. With the singing of the scale is interwoven the blending of the registers, the direction and management of breath-support on ascending and descending passages, the realisation that the tone is permanently centred in the masque (as is the picture upon the screen), and that it is by means of the resonance, not the action of the throat-muscles, that we anticipate the pitch of the rising scale—just as it is by the maintenance of that resonance that we prevent sudden drops and changes of mechanism in the descending scale. To these last, as to the abuse of the medium and chest registers by pushing the tone upwards with excessive breath-force, may be attributed the so-called 'breaks' which render an even scale impossible, and create some of the worst ills that beset the human voice.

On the other hand, the true art requires a legato in which the voice glides imperceptibly from the middle of one note to the middle of the next, without alteration of vowel shape or of resonant position. It requires an equal command of the light and dark timbres—the former for the rapid scales and florid passages that are to be executed with combined speed and brilliancy; the sombre tone for the slower scales and for passages that demand a serious, a dramatic, or a declamatory character. This darker tone owes its peculiar qualities, be it remembered, to the deeper position of the larynx, to the enlargement of the pharynx, and to the more extensive use of the resonating cavities at the back of the nose. Without the aid of these accessories such an attribute as colour or variety of colour in singing would be practically impossible. All these things must, therefore, be absolutely indispensable to the accomplishment of the Bel canto.

(4.) It seems reasonable to conclude that our fourth factor, namely Flexibility and Florid Singing, has been allowed for and considered in the section I have just dealt with. Yes; but not adequately. It is true that the legato must and should pervade—unless something else be indicated—every form of vocal phraseology. The smooth, even tone—perfectly sustained, spread, as it were, over the surface of the melody, be it glassy or rippling or billowy—is the real cachet of the beautiful singer. Without it how can you do justice to the sublime solos of Handel, of Bach, of Haydn, of Mozart? But I think this great feature of the Bel canto, rare as it has become, is still to be heard. It is still practised, and therefore available, at the hands of a few distinguished artists, who have devoted the necessary time and labour to mastering it. This is not the occasion for mentioning names, but I fancy most of us can do that for ourselves—on the fingers of two hands, or even one. Anyhow that 'secret' has not been lost!

But in the rendering of the great 18th-century masters—to go back no further—there is a something that has been lost, if only quite recently (perhaps, therefore, only 'misaid'), which was a highly-cherished characteristic of the school of the Bel canto. You are only too well aware that these old masters did not content themselves with plain, straightforward melodies. It was their habit to embroider them. The modern generation asks, Why, in heaven's name, if they could write such delicious tunes, did they not 'leave well alone'? Why not? Because, experiencing the sensations peculiar to their epoch, they did not feel that they had expressed themselves in sufficiently varied fashion unless they introduced some vocal contrast redolent of the art of their day. They were not in a hurry to reach the coda; and, unlike most modern composers, their first thought, as a rule, was to 'give the singer a chance.'

Well, they often did so by dint of every florid device that occurred to them—runs, divisions, ornamentations, brilliant passages of every imaginable description; yet always (such was their genius and their skill) conceived in the spirit of the rest of the piece—that is, in complete harmony with the main design, and no less calculated, according to their belief, to give it vivid and vigorous musical expression. Naturally, therefore, they expected from the singer a rendering entirely in character with their music—not merely a neat execution of their runs and ornaments, but, together with the right energy and accent, a faithful portrayal of the emotion or sentiment conveyed by the text.

It is the power or the understanding to do this that I find missing in the oratorio singers of to-day. Indeed, I may say that I have heard no examples of what I may call the heroic oratorio style for a very long while. The last Englishman who possessed it in the supreme degree was Santley. When he sang Why do the nations? or Revenge, Timotheus, you felt that his runs were something more than exercises thrown in for effect. They illustrated and enforced the argument of his theme. Again, I have never heard anyone sing Rejoice greatly or From mighty Kings as did Tietjens. Nilsson sang one and Adelina Patti the other brilliantly enough, and so that their luscious tones penetrated to the farthest corners of the centre transept of the Crystal Palace. So far, it was Bel canto, to be sure. But neither of those gifted sopranos imbued their runs with the extraordinary dramatic quality, the intensity of exaltation, that Tietjens brought to bear, and, as I am told, Jenny Lind had brought to bear upon the same music before her. Far back in the 'seventies, too, I heard several times another great oratorio and opera singer, a basso cantante named Agnesi, a favourite at all the festivals, as well as at Her Majesty's Theatre. His coloratura was like a woman's, his Rossini as easy and graceful as the song of a bird. But in Handel he declaimed his runs with just that wonderful dramatic sense that I speak of, and made them contribute their full share towards the realisation of the poetic idea. How I wish that this rare and remarkable feature of bygone Handelian singing could be revived!

(5.) In what I have just been saying I may have trenched slightly upon points that properly belong to the fifth section of my scheme. If so, it only proves how closely these various branches of the subject are allied; and, besides, there was already much more to say on such topics as Phrasing, Diction, Expression, and Interpretation, than space could possibly permit me to add now. It might suffice to observe that the Bel canto is bound up with the demonstration of all these attributes. So it is. But everybody does not believe it. There are to-day those who think, in their wisdom, that the grand old school of Italian singing, taught by Manuel Garcia, Lamperti, and a few of their contemporaries, paid little heed to the form or character of the musical phrase; to the value of the consonant; to the pure sound of vowels other than those of their own language; to the vocal colour demanded by the sense of the text; or, in short, any nuance of utterance or expression that might perchance interfere with the uninterrupted flow of this precious Bel canto. Nothing could be farther from the fact. The combination which the old teachers sought to embody in their art was not less rare and wonderful than that which they looked for and sometimes discovered in the virgin talent of their pupils. I repeat that the Bel canto must be all-comprehensive to be worthy of the name. It must be all-beautiful. It must be beautiful in itself, and it must lend an additional beauty to the music which it interprets; it must, moreover, reflect and convey the beauty of the language to which that music is allied. The pitfalls of speech and language seem to be endless, bottomless. Yet good singing can avoid or overcome them all. It unites singing and speaking into a single act, merges the word into the tone, and makes each free from the interference of the other, whilst preserving the true sound and the natural quality of both. The rest lies with the mentality and temperament of the artist.

The present-day tendency to exaggerate is responsible for many evils, and each nationality appears to encourage exaggeration in some form or another. The predominant sin is the vibrato, which began in France, extended to Italy and Russia, and has now secured an alarming hold in England. The countries most free from its pernicious influence are probably Germany and America, though they too have their national vocal sins. But if British singers can check their inclination to be throaty; if the French and the Americans can avoid being nasal; if the Italians and Russians can keep their voices steady; and if the Germans can obtain sympathetic tone by using their hard palates less—then what will there be to prevent the universal recognition and adoption of the Bel canto by all who are capable of recapturing the method of it.

I want to conclude these remarks with a word on the subject of Tradition. It is a matter of great importance, and one on which I have been slightly misunderstood. I have never for a moment held the belief that obedience to a traditional rendering of 18th-century music—particularly that of Handel and Mozart—should hamper the singer's conception or individuality of expression. I have never had in mind the kind of tradition that could compel such a thing. There is no hard-and-fast rule either way. If the singer adhered strictly to every note exactly as it appeared upon the printed page he would incur the charge of not knowing his business. If he altered phrases, varied the ornamentation, or introduced appoggiaturas in places where they were not indicated, he would be liable to be told that he was taking unwarrantable liberties with the text. Certain things have to be done in a certain manner; and the manner in which they were done during the composer's lifetime, with his approval, is the manner that should set the example for all time.

Tradition is the sole means for handing that authority down from generation to generation. Therefore, where there is an alternative choice, let us do our utmost to get hold of the right tradition; and, when we have done so, mind that we follow it and stick to it! Then it will justly fill its place in the art of the Bel canto.

A CRITIC ON HIS CRITICS

By M.-D. CALVOCORESSI

Shortly after my Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism had appeared, a friend and colleague of mine said to me: 'One of these days I shall pull that book of yours to pieces.' And before I had found time to frame a suitable reply, he added ruefully: 'But you don't mind: it will only give you more to write about.'

He was altogether right. Nothing could please me more than to see every point in my book dissected and discussed, for only thus can the needful testing of my assertions or suggestions be carried further than I was able to carry it.

Of course, I am as eager to take part in the further stages of the 'conflict' as I was to start it going. Hence this article, whose sole object is to deal with certain points raised by critics with regard to my book. Otherwise, the only thing I could write on the matter would be an expression of my whole-hearted gratitude for the keen attention and generous treatment which rewarded my efforts.

But it is clear that a certain number of things call for more explanation. For instance, I was accused of having done, at times, the very reverse of what I was aiming at. One critic asserted (not in print) that my book might have been named 'the bankruptcy of criticism.' It is quite true that I did not scruple to state the deficiencies and dangers of criticism as bluntly and as forcibly as possible.

For this, Mr. Percy Scholes gently, but firmly, rebuked me. Why, he asked, should I, after saying that 'a critic should no more wish to disparage criticism than a brewer to disparage beer,' proceed to say, 'let the critic realise that all criticism must be tinged with prejudice of some sort'? The quotation was not quite accurate. What I wrote is 'let the critic realise, if facts point that way, that . . . ' which, I believe, makes a slight difference. But surely the best way not to inspire mistrust is to avoid promising more than one is sure to achieve. Critics are all too prone to believe that they can chew whatever they incline to bite. This rashness is perilous in itself, but never more than when accompanied by a feeling of self-righteousness. If I could find a way of uttering my warning more forcibly, I should do so at once; for every day I notice something that shows how needful it is.

I sought to emphasise the point by quoting a few—a very few—absurd judgments uttered long ago. I appended two quotations from contemporary authors—Prof. Corder and Mr. Rutland Boughton—in order to show that censure of unwonted types of music always runs on the same lines, being careful to point out that the similitude 'was nothing to build upon for controversial purposes.' Certain critics found the list instructive; others—Mr. Ernest Newman and Mr. Harvey Grace—declared it futile.

The former wrote:

It is really only trifling with us to quote a d'Ortigue on Wagner at this time of day. Who in the name of common-sense was d'Ortigue?

And the latter:

Does it matter now (even if it ever did matter) what such pedants as Fétis and d'Ortigue thought of Mozart and Wagner?

Mr. Newman further remarks, quite rightly, that the average intelligent musician and music-lover was always well-disposed towards and appreciative of new men and new works of genius. My book not being and not pretending to be a history of the evolution of musical taste, I did not have to deal with this aspect of the question. I was concerned with the attitude of professional critics—not necessarily all critics. I selected a few instances among several hundreds in my files, and now I am asked, 'Why quote these nonentities?'

It is all very well, but neither d'Ortigue nor Fétis was without authority and influence in his day. Turning to Grove's Dictionary, I find that d'Ortigue wrote for practically all the important French papers or reviews of his time, and sat on many commissions, historical and scientific. Fétis is described as 'the most learned, laborious, and prolific musical litterateur of his time.' He was for many years the director of the Brussels Conservatoire. His books were widely read, and his Revue Musicale 'was the foundation of the musical Press of France.' Surely, if critics enjoying such distinctions and so great a choice of outlets nowadays were dismissed as nonentities, there would be something of an outcry. My sole intention was to warn my readers against the Fétis's and d'Ortigue's of the present time or of the future. Such people may not be good critics. But they are influential enough for a time to deter others from further hearing, buying, and studying the works they inveigh against.

But I did not attempt to quote instances of 'wrong' judgments of contemporary music: for the only way of doing so would have been to pit my own verdicts against the verdicts quoted. This in a book on principles and points of method would have been, I think, fatal. It is a constant experience with me (and must be with many others), that if a principle is set forth and then an application suggested, anybody who happens to disagree with the application will start overlooking or mistrusting the principle.

The fact that you may accept a principle wholeheartedly, and yet be free to reject this or that particular application of it, appears to be a stumbling-block for criticism: but it really is a safeguard for the conscientious critic. For even the most excellent principles lend themselves to an infinite variety of applications. Properly to apply them is the whole art of criticism, and it is in the methods of application that each critic asserts his individuality. Hence, in a work devoted to principles, it is far better to avoid side-issues.

When first I read Sir Henry Hadow's admirable Essay on Musical Criticism (in Studies in Modern Music), I regretted that he should not have gone deeper into certain matters of moment—for instance, given more definite illustrations in support of his comments on the principles of vitality and the principle of fitness. But so soon as I tried my own hand at similar investigations, I began to realise how wise he had been to restrict himself to points of principle which are unchallengeable. Accordingly, I decided in turn to exclude from my book all references to particular applications, which, I repeat it, usually depend upon each critic's individual outlook. People who wish to know my own way of deciding how far a piece of music is 'good' or 'bad' must, I fear, seek information outside my Principles and Methods of Musical Criticism.

Mr. Dunton Green doubts the wisdom of what he apparently considers an excess of caution:

One wonders [he writes] whether this purely objective method is most conducive to the end the writer has in view, and whether the expression of his personal opinion would not in many instances have carried greater weight.

I entertain no doubt of this kind. But, curiously enough, Mr. Newman considers that I have fallen into the very pitfall I tried so hard to avoid.

This is the reason he gives for his view:

The question is, Can any critic, however hard and conscientiously he may try, quite place himself at the point of view of those who differ from him? Perhaps not; Mr. Calvocoressi, indeed, unconsciously shows more than once how difficult this is. Nobody is more aware than he is of the necessity for it: but twice at least he shows an unconscious bias in his own judgment, an unconscious inability to see the thing as some others see it. Does he not, for instance, range himself too obviously, in his discussion of a certain passage in Hubert Parry, on the side of those who look with a horror that is sometimes amusing on 'literary music'? Parry says that 'unless the tonality is made intelligible, a work which has no words becomes obscure.' Mr. Calvocoressi seems to me to take fright quite needlessly at this. 'It shows,' he says, 'the tendency, in certain types of mind, never to judge music except by reference to some third term of comparison, which must needs consist of something cognitive.' But surely this is at once to misunderstand Parry and to set up a doubtful æsthetic tribunal of Mr. Calvocoressi's own. Parry is merely stating an obvious truth—that while a piece of music that has a literary basis can occasionally venture on a procedure for which the words supply ample justification (the ending of the Erl-King is a simple case in point), a piece of 'pure' music must be intelligible in and by itself.

I wish to appeal, firstly, against the word 'unconscious.' On pages 73, 74 of my book I describe four different—indeed, conflicting—attitudes towards programme music: Riemann's, Prof. Niecks's, Mr. Newman's, and my own, giving chapter and verse for each. I plead guilty to feeling that music which does not strike me as satisfactory in itself remains unsatisfactory to me in spite of all programmes and words; but certainly not guilty to being unconscious of this bias of mine, or to having attempted to hide it when writing my book.

One of the main principles I tried to make clear is that the logic of music is not demonstrable in terms of the intellect. I may be right or wrong, but surely I am justified in taking Parry's axiom as it stands. Mr. Newman does not agree to this:

Parry, of course, phrased the principle in terms of the æsthetic of his own day: but the fundamental truth of it applies also to the music of a later day, whether tonal, atonal, or omnitonal. Mr. Calvocoressi jibs at it, I think, because of an unconscious bias against 'literary' music: his use of the phrase 'certain types of mind' seems to me to prove this.

The edition of Grove from which I quoted Parry's axiom is dated 1910. The terms are unequivocal; and nobody, I think, will read Parry's article (vol. v., p. 119) without realising how definitely Parry, when he speaks of tonality, means tonality in the usual sense, and not 'a fundamental truth applying to music atonal or omnitonal.' He asserts that nothing but tonality can make 'pure' music intelligible.

My critics, very rightly, go by what I actually wrote, making no allowances for what I might have intended to write. I did the same with the texts I selected for discussion. My point was that, for the time being, the intellect cannot find in 'atonal' music the kind of logic it finds in tonal music, and that, therefore, people to whom this kind of logic is the sole possible from the purely musical point of view are liable to judge to-day's music unfavourably. The question of programme music versus pure music does not come in at all at that point of my argument; as I said before, it is dealt with in another chapter.

I tried my best to be unequivocal on the particularly delicate matter of the mind's function. Apparently I was not always successful. Mr. Haddon Squire, for instance, sees 'confusion, if not self-contradiction,' in the two following paragraphs:

Sounds and rhythms cannot convey directly to the intellect a meaning such as may be conveyed by words, colours, shapes, and lines.

Of sounds and rhythms the intellect is able to form as clear a conception as of any concrete object or abstract idea.

He says that the words 'intellect' and 'meaning' would here require 'strict definition.'

The matter is so important that I will proceed to try to make it clear.

I cannot read the cuneiform script, therefore it conveys no meaning to me. But I can form as clear a conception of cuneiform signs as of any others: see, for instance, that this one consists of two long nails lying parallel, with a shorter one cross-wise, and that other of one long nail under three tin-tacks. Hence to ascribe an arbitrary and probably altogether unjustified 'meaning' to cuneiform script, there is but one step. The comparison, of course, is not to be pushed further; for the sole object of a script is to convey a meaning to the intellect. But exactly as the would-be decipherer of cuneiform script started by assuming that the 'meaning' was determined by certain relations between signs—to be proved right or wrong by the issue—so do theorists stand telling us that a certain kind of thing makes sense in music, whereas another kind of thing does not. But as music does not consist of an alphabet of signs, the sole issue that will prove them right or wrong is the ultimate response of the 'average intelligent musician and music-lover.' In short, my two propositions were intended to pave the way for the very discussion in which I refer to Parry's axioms and to others. Therefore it is very important that there should be no ambiguity. The words to whose exact sense special attention should be given are the words 'meaning' and 'conception.' The distinction lies between these two, and not—as Mr. Haddon Squire seems to think—between the words 'intellect' and 'meaning.'

I am most grateful to the critics who have afforded me the opportunity for reconsidering my dicta or further elucidating them. As I expected—but far more than I expected—criticisms of my book provide a good deal of food for thought and contain invaluable suggestions. My one regret is that it will not be possible for students to read them all in conjunction with the book itself. This I have attempted partly to remedy by quoting here the principal objections put forward or emendations suggested.

Ad Libitum

BY 'FESTE'

BROWS, HIGH AND LOW

The question of popular taste has been aired in a good many quarters lately. We have had Rose Macaulay and A. P. Herbert discussing the public taste in fiction, Clemence Dane and Sir Marshall Hall debating a similar point in connection with the theatre, a host of correspondents in the Daily Graphic and other journals telling us what they want in the way of opera and music, and so forth. As usual, there has been insistence on the old cry that the fact of a novel or a piece of music having an enormous sale is proof of some kind of merit. This hoary fallacy found its most uncompromising supporter in Winifred Graham, the novelist. She was roused by the following onslaught by Dr. Lyttelton*:

If a boy was always given good English, he learned good English and to hate bad. We should not have novelists, as we had to-day, with circulations of two million for books that were absolute drivel from beginning to end.

The condemnation is sweeping, but not undeserved by some of the worst efforts of Sir Hall Caine, Ethel M. Dell, A. S. M. Hutchinson, and others. I have not read any of Miss Graham's novels, and her reply to Dr. Lyttelton is sufficient to warn me off making the attempt:

I think the statement is ridiculous, because to be a best-seller a book must have merit. If it had not, it would never get that wonderful public. We are very anxious to learn the secret of writing best-sellers. I have heard it said that if you write a book to please yourself, you also please the public.

Don't we recognise this plea as one that is constantly brought forward in defence of bad music? Yet it is completely disproved by the staggering sales of Yes, we have no bananas. I have never heard anybody defend, much less praise, either words or music, yet it made fortunes for the little group of men who inflicted it on us. Why did we succumb to it? The answer is important, because it explains the vogue of nine-tenths of the 'best-sellers.' Wasn't it largely a matter of propaganda? The newspapers told us that the United States had gone mad on the song; the chorus was printed in a good many daily and weekly journals; the bands in restaurants and dance-halls played it; comedians sang it; and the mere handful of us who somehow escaped these attacks were caught by the piano-organs and whistling errand-boys. In the fashionable jargon of to-day, it was a particularly virulent case of mass psychology and herd instinct. So severe was the attack that any comedian who was at a loss, and wished to raise a laugh, had merely to say, Yes, we have no—and roars of laughter drowned the remainder. Every year—more, every half-year—sees us obsessed by some such inane song or catchword.

It is almost entirely a matter of suggestion acting on the sheep-like instincts of the crowd. Tell people, by means of the daily Press, that in a few weeks' time they will all be hailing one another with some nonsensical expression, as 'There's 'air!' or singing a similarly fatuous song, and they are half-way towards doing it as soon as they have read the words. They need only meet a few victims before succumbing themselves. Such things are epidemic. But to say that the catchword in question is a flash of wit, and the song an inspiration, merely because they have captured everybody, is almost as foolish as to assert, during an outbreak of measles, that the disease must be a boon and a blessing on the ground that quite a lot of people are going in for it. So long as we realise that the vogue of a song is as a rule no more than a kind of measles, no harm is done. The mischief begins when people who ought to know better assert that wild popularity is proof of merit.

Not long since a lecturer at University College, London, was holding forth on this point. Critics are fair game, of course, so I was not surprised to see that the lecturer began with a dig at them. 'Some critics,' he said, 'appeared to share a feeling of superiority, and their contempt for what was called popular music matched in many cases their hostility towards any new form or idiom.' Here we see the usual failure to distinguish between the good and bad kinds of popular music. To-day, thanks largely to the Promenades, the gramophone, and other agencies, there is an enormous amount of fine music which is popular, and no critic of standing feels contempt for it. The only objection he is likely to raise is against its over-frequent performance to the detriment of other music equally good, and equally likely to be popular. To raise objections of this kind is a part of his job, and it is a pity so reasonable an attitude is often misunderstood. But it is clear from what followed that the lecturer did not mean good, popular music. He was alluding to such things as Yes, we have no bananas. After pointing out that all musicians 'except perhaps a few extremely exclusive persons' (such as those sniffing critics!) desired to make music more and more popular, he went on:

* Headmaster of Eton, 1905-16.

It would seem necessary to learn, if possible, the elements of attraction which led the populace to become infected overnight, as it were, by a certain rhythm or tune, so that, within a few hours, an arrangement of tones was being sounded by every errand boy, and played on every street organ.

There is no mystery, as I have tried to show above. As a proof that the vogue of a tune is usually a result of propaganda, we have the 'Bananas' example. Less often it is due to some fortuitous circumstance—e.g., even so good a tune as Tipperary languished, and would have died a speedy death, but for the fact of its being sung by some of the First Expeditionary Force when starting for France.

Among the most useful chapters in Percy Scholes's recently-published book, Crotchets, are those in which he discusses this question of popularity. Speaking of 'quality in music,' he gives an example of an obviously poor tune which was 'boosted' (1) by its refrain being printed in the daily Press, and so circulated among millions of people, and (2) by performance at the Albert Hall by Dame Clara Butt. 'Try over this refrain' urged the advertisement:

Ex. 1.

I don't know the title of the song (the 'composer,' by the by, is Ivor Novello), and, despite the free trying-over of the refrain, it does not appear to have turned out to be what Charing Cross Road calls a 'winner.' (On second thoughts, perhaps we should say 'because of' instead of 'despite.')

But suppose that a detachment of the first Expeditionary Force had embarked singing this refrain instead of Tipperary, and that it had 'caught on'—as it almost certainly would have done in the circumstances—would the fact prove it to be a good tune instead of the doleful and machine-made string of notes that a glance shows it to be? Yet we may be sure that its popularity would have led to such comments as, 'Your highbrow classical composers can't write tunes to capture the public as this one does.' Of course the answer is that classical composers have written tunes that have been popular for generations, and will be popular for generations to come, whereas the innings of such things as Bubbles and Yes, we have is merely a matter of months. (For example, within a few weeks of the highest point of the Yes, we have fever, a witness giving evidence in a performing rights case said incidentally that no dance band would be heard playing the song: its day was over.) What is such popularity by the side of that enjoyed by the Largo and a score more of Handel's best-known tunes, Bach's Aria and other things, hundreds of movements and extracts from Beethoven, Chopin, Schubert, Wagner, Elgar, &c.? Our Darewskis, Ivor Novellos, and Irving Berlins don't know the difference between real popularity and a mere passing craze—a craze usually engineered at vast cost and effort in advertising.

Apropos of this question of advertising expense, I remember reading in the Canadian Music Trades Review a year or so ago some revelations as to the amount spent on popularising songs and dance music of the Yes, we have type. I am sorry I didn't make a note of the figures. You may take my word for it that they were of such a magnitude as to make us understand why even publishers of 'winners' sometimes have to put up the shutters. The article in question pointed out that for every success on the Yes, we have scale, there are hundreds of failures, all of which have had bags of good hard money spent on vainly pushing them. What a showing-up it is for the compounders of so-called 'popular' songs and dances! What need is there to push the tunes of Handel and the rest of the 'highbrow' classics?

The lecturer I have quoted above went on to say that:

Inquiry should lead to discovery as to whether there was in popular music anything in the nature of universal elements such as were likely to win a response from minds which had received no special training in the more subtle forms of musical expression.

After this I live in hopes of hearing that a Royal Commission has been set up to inquire into the best methods of teaching grandmothers to suck eggs. The 'universal elements' referred to in this solemn pronouncement are tunefulness and rhythmic life, and they are found, either singly or together, in all the music that has become popular solely on its merits (that is, without any boosting or lucky topical chance), whether it be the Largo or Johnny comes marching home, Mendelssohn's Spring Song or Monckton's (is it?) I'm a happy little Jappy. (I am doubtful about both title and composer of this last: I have never even seen it in print, but I was captured by it years ago. It begins: and richly deserved every bit of its popularity.) The public has a nose for a good tune, and when it takes violently to a bad one you may be sure that it does so because of skilful propaganda, or some homely sentimental appeal in the words, or perhaps mere chance association with some person or happening of topical interest.

Ex. 2.

Going back to our literary analogy, I want to quote G. K. Chesterton on this question of popular taste in art. I fancy I used the first passage a year or two ago, here or elsewhere, when discussing this question, but it bears repetition, because we are so constantly being told that the uninitiated public naturally likes only bad music. The quotations are from Chesterton's book on Dickens, a brilliant bit of critical work that should be read by everybody, Dickensians and otherwise:

I may perhaps ask leave to examine this fashionable statement—the statement that the public likes bad literature, and even likes literature because it is bad. This way of stating the thing is an error. The public does not like bad literature. The public likes a certain kind of literature, and likes that kind of literature even when it is bad better than another kind of literature even when it is good. Nor is this unreasonable; for the line between different types of literature is as real as the line between tears and laughter; and to tell people who can only get bad comedy that you have some first-class tragedy is as irrational as to offer a man who is shivering over weak, warm coffee a really superior sort of ice.

For 'literature' read 'music,' and there is our case. When propaganda on behalf of good music fails the failure is generally due to the propagandists' choosing the wrong kind of good music. They should begin, and go on for a long while, with good music that happens to be rich in those 'universal elements' spoken of above, and leave the lengthy work whose beauty lies in subtlety or skillful development till later in the crusade.

The other passage from Chesterton is even more emphatic, because it deals actually with music:

When they [the people] walk behind the brass of the Salvation Army band, instead of listening to the harmonies at Queen's Hall, it is always assumed that they prefer bad music. But it may be merely that they prefer military music, music marching down the open street, and that if Dan Godfrey's band could be smitten with salvation and lead them they would like that even better.

It all comes to this—the public likes what it gets, and hitherto, for a number of reasons (only a few of them good) the kind of music that has come its way has been mostly bad. What happens when it gets good music thrust upon it, so to speak, was shown in the recent test programme sent out by the B.B.C. Of the hundreds of letters received by the organizers, only a few dozen contained objections. All the remainder were emphatic in their praise of a programme of Bach, Mendelssohn, Grieg, Schumann, Martin Shaw, and folk-song. The programme was made up entirely of good music strong in those 'universal elements' afore-said.

Just as I have got thus far, I see an advertisement of a patent medicine that is apropos—the advertisement, not the medicine. It contains a testimony to the restorative powers of a well-known tonic, and incidentally manages to advertise a couple of the restored one's dances:

'MR. HUBERT W. DAVID

the Composer of the popular Fox-trot song, Felix kept on walking, also of last year's dance success, Oh Star of Eve, writes:

IT is perhaps quite natural that I should become an advocate of the invigorating qualities of . . . I have derived great benefit therefrom. I find that in my profession one needs something to keep one up to the mark, as the composing of popular tunes like my first success, Oh Star of Eve, is a great strain upon physical and mental faculties. I am pleased to say that in . . . I have found just the pick-me-up I need.'

The advertisement is headed by this extract from Felix kept on walking:

{ | d' : - | - : l | s : m | d : m' s : f | m : r | d : - | - : }

1. (Fe - - lix keeps on walking, keeps on walking still, . . .
2. (Fe - - lix kept on walking, kept on walking still, . . .

Drum.

If this is the best Hubert can do, even with the aid of the tonic, he appears to need a much stronger one. Felix appears to have been written when the 'composer's' mental faculties were still suffering from overstrain. Perhaps they had not fully recovered from the production of Oh Star of Eve. Isn't the whole thing the limit of pretence and fatuity?

Two other points I should like to mention in conclusion. We have lately heard many complaints as to the introduction of a musical comedy by Leo Fall, and the question is asked, 'Why go to an Austrian composer when we have musical comedy composers here well able to supply all that is needed?' Let us be honest about this. We have composers in this country capable of equalling and even excelling Leo Fall—but they are not musical comedy composers. They ought to be, and they will be, when our theatrical managers and producers know the whole of their business, instead of merely the 'show' part of it.

A few nights ago the B.B.C. sent out a selection from British musical comedies and revues. It was so trite and badly scored that I could hardly keep my head-phones on. A day or two later I heard some Columbia gramophone records of extracts from Madame Pompadour. The difference was astonishing. Leo Fall's music is not remarkable for originality of subject-matter, but the treatment in regard to rhythm, harmony, and orchestration is full of happy and musicianly touches. The difference between this deft, assured writing and the badly hashed-up commonplaces of our British musical comedy composers is as the difference between sparkling wine and the flattest of swipes. As things are now, it is childish to complain about Leo Fall's work being produced in London. It deserves its success, and if our musical comedy composers want to keep him out they must learn to write as well as he does. At present our Ivor Novellos, Darewskis, and Nat D. Ayers are not in the same street.

The other point is this: You will have observed that the compounders of the world's worst music usually take themselves very seriously. They want to have it both ways—to write 'winners' and at the same time to be regarded as real musicians. (In the Musical Times of August, 1921, was discussed a flagrant and amusing case—a composer of the veriest shop ballads being lauded by his publishers as 'a keen classical student,' and his ballads spoken of as bearing 'the impress of his superb musical training.')

A reader sends me a copy of a new booklet, How to write a Waltz, by Charles Ancliffe. The author is a composer of 'dance music' 'best sellers.' Just as there are three or four singers sharing the title of 'Queen of Song,' so there are several 'Waltz Kings,' and I understand Mr. Ancliffe is one of them. The Preface of his book leads the reader to expect something considerable. He tells us that 'such glorious examples' as the famous Waltzes of Weber, Tchaikovsky, Sibelius, &c., 'illustrate the claims of the waltz to be regarded seriously, even by highbrows' (why 'even'? Does Mr. Ancliffe think that only Charing Cross Road has an ear for the 'Invitation,' &c.?), and goes on to speak reproachfully of 'the plagiarism and borrowing that is so rampant to-day.' He then proceeds to take the aspirant through his own Southern Nights, explaining the construction, and drawing attention to the various beauties on the way. As Southern Nights lacks any sort of freshness in matter or manner, it is amusing to read such dicta as the following:

Originality in melody, harmony, construction, or design, makes for lasting quality. In the ephemeral type known as the vocal waltz, which usually dies in a few months, these qualities are conspicuous by their absence. The paucity of invention and general puerility of both words and music condemn them to early oblivion, and it is devoutly to be hoped that a return to the legitimately musicianly waltz may be not far distant.

There is truth in Mr. Ancliffe's remark that 'melodies that live are generally the product of a mood of exaltation,' and as to the importance of the opening theme being 'good, strong, arresting . . . original, and striking.' If he had left it at that all would have been well, but he goes on to quote the opening theme of his own waltz, and we look in vain for the qualities on which he rightly insists:

Ex. 2b. Tempo di Valse.

There is scarcely a bar here that is not weak in melody, harmony, rhythm, or laying-out. One might give a decent lesson in composition based on its examples of what to avoid.

I pass on to the discussion of the Coda:

Here again [says Mr. Ancliffe] sincerity is our watchword. A mere fading away, or a few reiterated chords, because there is nothing more to say, will not do at all. . . . We must see to it that the last heard of our waltz is worth remembering. . . . The Coda is to be regarded as the coping-stone. . . . and it must not be scamped or treated lightly. . . . it must heighten the effect of what has gone before, not obliterate it. This latter is what a hastily-written Coda will do.

With all this insistence on originality, invention, sincerity, coping-stones, &c., in mind, we turn with interest to see what Mr. Ancliffe does by way of Coda to Southern Nights—presumably his best work, seeing that he takes it as the model for his lesson. Here is the Coda:

Ex. 3.

If you haven't heard the harmonic basis of bars 1-6 many a time and oft at the hands and feet of tenth-rate organists you have been luckier than I. The puerility of this coping-stone is not excused by the fact that, melodically, it is derived from themes used earlier in the work. It has to be judged as a coping-stone, pure and simple, and a mighty poor specimen it is.

Why do I spend all this space on such a subject? Well, it seems to me that the time is come for a clearing up of some of these questions concerning popular music. The public needs to be shown that popular music may be good or bad, just as classical music may be good or bad—though it has taken musicians a long while to grasp the latter fact. Hitherto, we have been too complacent—lazy is the truer word—and as a result there is a lot of muddled thinking on the part of the public. Fine work is being done in the way of bringing great music to the ear of the crowd, but we shall achieve only a lop-sided result so long as that ear is so persistently assailed by bad popular music. Wouldn't it be starting at the right end if we worked rather on the lines suggested in the Chesterton quotation, and gave the public good examples of the kind of music it wants, rather than trying (often at great financial risk) to get its members to appreciate good music of a type that is so far new to most of them, and therefore unwanted? Anyway, we must no longer leave a clear field to shoddy. And we must let the shoddy merchant see that he can't go on turning out 'best sellers' of the type quoted above, and at the same time expect to be regarded as a musician. He is ready enough to throw 'highbrow' at all who see through his flimsy pretensions. If the possession of a brow of the type peculiar to the simian species gives him satisfaction, he is welcome to it. But if he parades a false front on occasion, he mustn't expect to bamboozle the real highbrows—who are not at all ashamed of a decent frontal development and all that it connotes.

RECOVERY OF THE LOST VOICE

By HAROLD HOLLINSHEAD

For nearly two centuries the vocal world has been trying to formulate specific rules to carry out the instructions set forth in the 'traditional precepts' which were handed down to us by the old Italian masters. This has resulted in the multitude of methods that have been, and are, before the bewildered student of voice-culture. To enumerate and classify all the methods of instruction in vogue would be almost an impossibility.

Those who are known as the old Italian masters left nothing behind them in the way of information as to how they taught their pupils to produce the singing voice, beyond an outline of an elaborate system of vocal ornaments and embellishments. They did, however, leave a set of rules known as the 'traditional precepts.' These may be summed up as follow: 'Sing on the breath'; 'Open the throat'; 'Sing the tone forward'; and 'Support the tone.' That their pupils were successful in attaining a degree of proficiency far beyond the standard of present-day efforts will not be disputed by anyone conversant with the performances of great singers of the past and present. The vocal world, since such time as the meaning of these precepts has been lost, has always deplored the fact that no specific rules were ever left behind to enable us to follow out the principles laid down therein, so that we might obtain results to-day equal to those of the past.

Our instruction to-day has no scientific basis upon which to rest, for all methods are founded upon empirical knowledge or imitation. The total disagreement amongst vocal authorities as to the correct course which should be pursued to follow the instructions contained in these precepts has made anything like a standard method of instruction impossible. The consequence is that the student of voice-production has never had any guarantee that his or her efforts would meet with success, and in most cases they never do. The insignificant number of beautiful voices produced, compared with the vast army of students who yearly take up the study of the voice, is a sorry reflection upon our knowledge of the training of the voice.

In the present state of vocal science the subject of tone-production overshadows everything else in difficulty. When once the correct vocal action has been acquired, the student's progress is assured. Every other feature of the singer's education is simply a matter of time and application. It is generally believed throughout the vocal profession that the voice has one correct mode of action, different from a wide variety of incorrect actions of which it is capable. It is also understood that this mode of action, though ordained by Nature, is not in the usual sense natural or instinctive—that the correct vocal action must be acquired through a definite understanding and conscious management of the vocal mechanism involved.

After twenty years of investigation—at the risk of being classed amongst those who have advanced 'theories' which have sooner or later fallen to the ground—I boldly declare that there is nothing contained in the 'traditional precepts' but what can be imparted to-day as readily as in the days of the old masters. Furthermore, I am convinced that no specific instructions were necessary to enable the student to carry them out in the most natural manner.

The art and science of training voices came into being with the birth of Italian opera in 1600. A race of singing-masters then seems to have sprung up like mushrooms. It is hardly reasonable to suppose that if these masters had had to contend with the same difficulties that confront us to-day in voice-training, they could so easily have overcome them without previous opportunity for experience. Either they possessed vastly superior knowledge in such matters, or else the vocal mechanism has undergone some change since their day. That the latter is the case is my contention.

With all the theories that have been propounded from time to time, I have no knowledge of any suggestion having been advanced that our vocal troubles are due to the fact that our vocal machinery has got out of gear, making the application of the precepts to our voices a physical impossibility. I shall not, therefore, at least be accused of rehashing a worn-out theory in stating this to be a fact. Fortunately for my case, when a correct adjustment of the vocal mechanism has been made, my claims are easily demonstrable, thus relieving me of the danger of being adjudged either insane or a charlatan.

I cannot do better than quote Dr. C. Horsford, in describing the vocal apparatus :

The vocal organs consist of three parts—the breathing, the vibrating, and the resonating apparatus. These three are co-ordinated by a neuro-muscular co-ordination. Therefore the perfect whole depends upon the perfect working of each. Development and control of the lower rib muscles is obtained by increasing the mobility of these regions through cost-diaphragmatic breathing. When the breathing apparatus is in perfect condition, the current of air sets in vibration the vocal cords which are opposed. The vocal cords then set into vibration the cavities above. When the throat is open and the passage free for vibrations to get through, voice becomes uniform. The whole science of voice-production, therefore, consists in making these cavities vibrate completely and wholly. Voices fail either from faults in the instrument, or faults in the methods of use.

With the march of civilisation natural breathing was gradually lost. This loss resulted in the severance of direct emotional action from the voice. The speaking-voice became a mere echo of the true voice. Breathing became shallower and shallower until but half, or even less, of the lungs are now used for breathing purposes. This all had a tremendous influence upon the position of the vocal mechanism, gradually causing the voice-box to get higher in the throat. Production of the voice carried on with the larynx in this high position caused the soft palate to lower through disuse. The baneful effects from these misplacements made themselves evident in the sacrifice of the nasal cavities—the natural upper resonators of the voice. I contend that the failure to utilise these cavities for so long has had much to do with such growths as adenoids and much of the catarrh we experience. This high position of the larynx was the position assumed to be correct by Garcia when conducting his laryngoscopic experiments. The vocal world accepted these findings without question, and voice-training was conducted entirely with the idea of their correctness. No one single event in the musical history of the nation has had anything like the deterrent effect upon vocal development as the fallacious doctrine of 'registers,' which sprang from these laryngoscopic experiments. Even to-day, more methods—in this country, at least—are still based upon it than upon any other.

The mere singing of technical exercises means little. It is of vital importance that the exercises be sung in some particular manner. There is one certain way in which the voice must be handled during the practice of voice usage. If the vocal organs are exercised in this particular manner, the voice will improve steadily and rapidly as the result of the practice; but if the vocal student fails to hit upon this way of handling the voice in practice, the voice will improve little, or not at all. In such a case perfect vocal technique will never be acquired, no matter how many years the practice may continue.

It is my contention, then, that :

- (a.) The larynx is in a wrong position in the the average individual for the perfect action of song or speech ;

(b.) That it can be restored to its natural position and become unified with the emotional source of tone by simple, natural means applicable to all individuals ;

(c.) That a perfectly orderly process of study can be pursued, based upon unflinching laws, thus removing study from the realm of chance. This will enable the student to set about his or her task knowing certain things of a definite character have to be accomplished—such accomplishment occupying but a fraction of the time and labour now being expended.

The true action of the voice demands but one uniform position for the vocal mechanism throughout its entire range. Any slight movement taking place is of a subconscious nature, and in accord with the main operation consciously performed. The vocal cords thus act in precisely the same manner as the reed of a wind instrument.

This uniform position is made possible only, and maintained continuously, by the complete freedom of the breath, thus opposing the fallacy of 'control of the breath.' Such relaxation is made possible only by correct diaphragmatic breathing. So long as the larynx is allowed to assume a high position in the throat, breath control becomes a necessity, thus placing a restraint upon the lungs which should rightfully be borne by the diaphragm. If the thyroid cartilage, together with the arytenoid cartilages, are permitted to descend and contact with the cricoid cartilage, all necessity for breath control has vanished, as no air can escape without being vocalised, for no aperture, except the closed glottis, is left for its escape. This low position of the larynx not only can be, but is most comfortably maintained throughout the entire compass of each individual voice, providing an uninterrupted flow of the breath is maintained.

There is not only no necessity for breath control, but such control defeats the prime object of breath, which is to play unhampered upon the vocal cords. Any objection raised on the point that uncontrolled breath would exert too much pressure upon the vocal cords when the larynx is low in the throat, is quickly dispensed with by applying what is known as Pascal's law of fluid pressures. This, briefly stated, is as follows :

Pressure exerted anywhere upon a mass of fluid (or air) is transmitted undiminished in all directions at right angles to those surfaces.

Hence the total amount of pressure of breath placed upon the vocal cords is just that proportion of the total pressure represented by what proportion of space the vocal cords occupy in relation to the total chest area.

Nature has so constructed the cartilages which are active in the production of the voice, as to point conclusively to what the natural position of the larynx should be when engaged in voice-production. At the top of the windpipe is the cricoid cartilage, the back part of which projects upward nearly half-way into the open space of the thyroid cartilage. The arytenoid cartilages stand between and close to the posterior margins of the thyroid, and thus tend to fill up still more its open space.

With the larynx stationary, it is obvious that the fallacious theory of the 'registers' of the voice disappears. The whole vocal machinery becomes a passive mechanism, leaving activity exclusively to the diaphragmatic muscles. The matter of whether nasal resonance is correct or incorrect is now demonstrable. If the vocalised breath is allowed unhampered action in gaining its exit, the nasal organs will respond automatically to the vibrations set up, and the over-tones of the voice are thus created.

The meaning of the 'traditional precepts' now appears perfectly clear, for 'singing on the breath' becomes the most normal function imaginable. 'Bringing the tone forward' follows as a natural sequence of the 'support of the tone,' which in turn is a part of the process of relaxation, for as the breath is freed after an inspiration, the diaphragm contracts to support the breath pressure in varying degrees according to the will of the performer. 'Opening the throat' is merely a preliminary action indisputably related to the process of lowering the larynx.

It will be readily understood that, if my contention as to the position of the larynx is correct, there was no need whatever for specific rules to be formulated for the carrying out of these precepts, for seen in this new light, the performance of them becomes a most natural function.

By ordinary practice the thyroid cartilage soon assumes a stationary lower position in the throat, and the function of speech is carried on by the same adjustment of organs as the action of song.

With the recognition of these principles, we are in a position to standardise the teaching of voice production upon an absolutely scientific basis, making such study a well-ordered process occupying but a fraction of the time formerly taken in placing and producing the voice, because every move is governed by a definite plan, which plan is merely an obeying of nature's design.

It will then be seen that singing is far from the great gift reserved for the few. Only to a very small number of individuals is the act denied. Certainly the degree of proficiency to be attained depends upon the varying degrees of emotional and intellectual consciousness of the individual.

Our more advanced professors of singing show in their methods of teaching that some such condition as I have outlined has been in their minds. The use of nasal resonance, yawning to open the throat and raise the soft palate, and incidentally lower the larynx, together with attempts at singing on the breath, are attempts in the right direction, but there has been no definite plan behind it all. This is now an accomplished fact, and there is no necessity for anything but definite procedure in the study of the voice. It is surely time that the great art of song was restored, and its study established upon an infallible basis.

If children were taught during the early years of school life the correct mode of breathing, and simple rules and exercises for the adjustment of the vocal mechanism, which includes the opening of the throat and the use of the nasal organs, one generation would produce a race of singers, and the speaking-voice become a thing of beauty. Until our legislators see the necessity for such training, work along these lines can be only of a corrective nature with adults suffering from former bad vocal-production. It is only a matter of time before this truth must be universally recognised, and means taken to institute such training in our schools as is here advocated. This would result in the prevention of the present voice evils, and have a most beneficial effect upon the health and physique of the rising generation.

That my contention is no mere 'theory' is demonstrable beyond a shadow of doubt, and I shall not consider my task accomplished until standardisation of teaching method has become an established fact. Until such time arrives, the studying public has no protection against those teachers of singing whose sole qualification is the possession of vague ideas gleaned from written works upon the voice, or methods which have been handed down from the originators of fallacious doctrines.

FREE COUNTERPOINT

BY ARTHUR G. CLAYPOLE

A study of the questions which have been set in counterpoint for the testing of candidates aspiring to one or other of the various musical degrees and diplomas, reveals the fact that, until within recent years, they were remarkably free from innovation. Almost for generations we have had the usual Canti fermi, generally in semibreves, to which parts in the five species were to be added.

Such exercises undoubtedly serve a very useful purpose, and it would be deplorable if they were to cease to find a place in the higher theoretical examinations, but they are, of course, merely a means to an end—viz., to develop the capability of writing in a flowing polyphonic style. Unless, however, the student is encouraged to make practical application of the facility that strict counterpoint yields, he is apt to look upon it as the goal of his endeavours, and possibly as of no practical value except for examination purposes.

It is therefore a welcome and hopeful sign that recently attempts have been made, and presumably will continue to be made, to introduce new features into counterpoint papers, with the object of stimulating and even compelling candidates to step beyond the limits which the strict and somewhat artificial laws of academic counterpoint impose.

The change will of course upset the calculations of the mere crammer, and of those high-principled educational institutions whose main endeavour appears to be to ascertain the absolute minimum which will satisfy the examiners, in order that the candidate may be spared the labour of acquiring a particle more knowledge than is necessary for his immediate purpose.

At the present moment a certain doubt seems to exist as to the most appropriate term to use to describe counterpoint which is not 'strict' or 'academic.' We are requested to write 'Modern (free) Counterpoint,' or 'Free Counterpoint,' or 'In the style of Bach.' Possibly we shall ultimately adopt 'Free Counterpoint' as the best designation. 'Modern Counterpoint,' with the accent on 'Modern,' is misleading, unless we are really required to emulate Stravinsky, Schönberg, or Debussy; and the phrase 'In the style of Bach' (although much better inasmuch as it sets before the student a high standard) leaves much to be desired.

The following melodic theme was given a year or so back at an examination for a musical diploma, and the candidate was asked to add treble, tenor, and bass parts in free counterpoint :

Imitation of figures and themes was one of the chief means employed by polyphonists of all periods to create and maintain interest, and hence the first aim of the well-schooled student, who endeavours to work this test, would be to make use of this device. A word of warning is, however, necessary. If the imitation is procured at the expense of a crudity of harmony reminiscent of the efforts of a mediæval monk, the cost must be regarded as altogether prohibitive. The chord progression needs to be effective and convincing or the imitation only succeeds in having the contrary effect to that which it is intended to produce. Neither should a point of imitation, coming at the conclusion of the exercise, be regarded as an excuse for allowing the part that introduces it to remain completely idle until it enters. This is too obvious a manner of shirking work (especially in the eyes of an examiner). The part must commence earlier, and the insertion of a rest will help to give emphasis to the imitation. An opportune rest may also serve to direct the examiner's attention to inventive genius, for the student habitually assumes that the gentlemen who are engaged to criticise his efforts are particularly obtuse when it concerns anything of which he is proud, however eagle-eyed they may be in detecting things he wishes he could have avoided writing.

The theme which we are considering has two ideas (marked a and b), either or both of which can be imitated in the added parts.

The following working illustrates the use of the opening portion (a) in all the parts—the treble introducing it by inversion. To save space short score is used :

It will be observed that the harmony throughout is clear and straightforward—not elaborate or extreme. The 6-4 chord on the strong beat in bar 3 is perhaps the only feature to which objection may be taken. All suspensions and discords have been correctly resolved—a matter of great importance—and second inversions of common chords have not been left 'hanging in the air.' The flow of the individual parts is good, and the mistake has not been made of getting too much simultaneous movement. This is a very common error. The student, in his desire to make all voices interesting and essentially contrapuntal, too often keeps them continually on the move, and thereby succeeds only in rendering the harmony vague or obscure and of giving an overloaded effect.

The next working shows how use can be made of the second part of the theme (b), for imitation purposes :

Sometimes the given subject does not lend itself readily to this kind of treatment, and in such cases an attempt may be made to invent figures which can be reproduced in turn in the various parts. Taking the same theme once again, and regarding it for the moment as of the aforesaid stubborn variety, a working is shown in which the imitation is not founded on any of the material given :

Model workings (assuming them to be good) are always of the greatest value to the student, and this must be my excuse for concluding with yet another sample of free counterpoint—this time on a different theme (the given subject is in the tenor) :

RHEINBERGER'S ORGAN SONATAS

BY HARVEY GRACE

(Continued from March number, page 231)

NO. 18, IN A, OP. 188

Phantasie; Capriccio; Idyll; Finale

It is a matter for surprise that so many organists who play and enjoy the first dozen or so of these Sonatas know little or nothing of the remainder. Perhaps the explanation is that the busy organist who does very little recital work finds that, having acquired a repertory consisting of the bulk of Bach, a few Widor Symphonies, Sonatas by Guilman, Harwood, the complete Mendelssohn, and the pick of the early Rheinberger, he has all that he can negotiate in the way of big works. There is a general impression, too, that Rheinberger's later Sonatas show a marked falling-off, the composer having said his say with No. 12. I do not think that this view is held by those who really know the later works. Let it be admitted frankly that the driving-power is less continuous (for example, there is nothing in the later works so unflaggingly energetic as the Fugue of No. 7), and that occasionally a bit of decorative passage-work or some other feature sounds a trifle too familiar. Yet there remains in regard to thematic material, harmony, and development an amount of first-rate music that leaves the average organ composition far behind. It can only be assumed that the later Sonatas suffer from the popularity of the earlier ones. For although we cannot have too much of a good thing in the abstract, yet, as a matter of practical politics, twenty big Sonatas are a few too many for the rank and file. Only players with ample technique and/or plenty of time for practice can do justice to such an array. I am so convinced an admirer of all but a few movements of Sonatas Nos. 14 to 20 that I believe they would have met with wide popularity had they appeared as the first six of the twenty, instead of winding up the set.

The Sonata in A provides strong support for this view. It contains no Fugue—not even a scrap of fugal writing—nor is there any lengthy development. Three of its four movements are rich in thematic interest, and the harmonization throughout has warmth and colour.

The Phantasie, as usual with Rheinberger, is a well-ordered movement in sonata form. It opens with a phrase that ends, here and at two later appearances, with a kind of questioning pause :

Grave.  $\text{♩} = 58$ .

EX. 1.

The bass C sharp is quitted as D flat, and falls to C. A fresh start is then made over a second inversion in F, unexpectedly followed by a dominant eleventh in E, in which key the continuation of the first subject is carried on. After a repetition of this we reach a full close in C sharp minor, the cadence releasing a characteristic manual flourish, leading to the second subject—a little tune in D flat. It may strike some readers as sentimental, but any objection on that score is removed a few bars later by the delightful development of its opening phrase, very simple, yet full of interest and with a texture suggestive of chamber music :

EX. 2.  $\text{♩} = 66$ .

This section ends with a half-close in D flat, pp, and is followed by the opening bar of Ex. 1, in C sharp minor, ff. We then have a good example of Rheinberger's free handling of sonata form. In the two pages that follow, the composer, instead of working out the material already exposed, seizes on a new little figure :

EX. 3.

and makes it a prominent feature of the section. There is more than a touch of passion here, and the harmony is striking. The remainder of the movement consists of the usual recapitulation. The second subject turns up in E and A, with somewhat elaborate contrapuntal treatment. The first bar of line 3 is an awkward snag, being badly laid out and unnecessarily difficult :

EX. 4.

I suggest this as an alternative :

EX. 5.

The Phantasie has a sonorous close, the opening phrase of the second subject making a splendid appearance via the pedal Posaune, and being carried up soaringly on the manual. The movement is admirable for voluntary purposes, being dignified and of reasonable length—seven pages. The registration may stand, except that we must start the ff section on page 6 with plenty of power in reserve, so as to be able to work up a climax at the top of the next page; and if our pedal reed is very powerful it should come off at the third beat of bar 5 of the last page. (A natural is missing from the G in the right-hand part of bar 9 of this page.)

The Capriccio recalls the Scherzoso of the E minor Sonata, belonging to the Beethoven type of Scherzo in which the fun and fancy are energetic and serious. It is marked Agitato, an unusual direction in a Capriccio. The movement is strongly rhythmical, and, like the Scherzoso, it has no quiet middle section. A further likeness is seen in the working-up to the climax before the Coda. At this point we have one of Rheinberger's infrequent uses of double pedal—very simple but effective:

Ex. 6.

The repeats may be ignored, though the pace is so quick that even with the repetitions the movement is not long. It makes a spirited recital item. Rheinberger evidently had no idea of its being played alone, for he puts Attacca at the end, and certainly the leading, without break, into the slow movement is effective.

The Idyll is below the rest of the work so far as invention is concerned, yet it has charm. The simplicity of the close of the first page, for example, is delightful. (By the way, the last line of the page opens with the wrong clef in the left hand.) There is a long and strenuous middle section in the relative minor of the usual Rheinberger brand—a simple theme with admirable contrapuntal treatment. On page 17 a powerful solo reed has a good chance in the left-hand part, though it is not indicated. Perhaps Rheinberger had no manual reed strong enough to tell out against the ff accompaniment, so he wrote the left hand in octaves. If we have a very powerful tuba, we may perhaps find single notes more effective. The ff climax at the close is a mistake, I think. It is awkward to manage, because both hands are sustaining big chords and the feet have to attack a rather difficult semiquaver passage. The existing forte is enough, and when we have reached the chord with the pause we can easily open the Swell if we feel that anything more is needed. The Idyll is not of red-hot interest throughout, but it is too good to be neglected. It can be improved by a tasteful use of solo stops, though no such treatment is indicated by the composer.

The Finale is decidedly cheerful, opening in this frank vein:

Ex. 7. Con moto.  $\text{♩} = 63$ .

After several of Rheinberger's pet false relations, the theme proceeds with quite a jolly lilt:

Ex. 8.

On the next page appears a somewhat reminiscent bridge-passage, leading to a resumption of Ex. 7, which, however, is quickly left for a new theme, a simple tune soloed by the left hand against sustained chords. The real second subject follows. It is one of the simplest Rheinberger ever wrote, opening with a string of plain chords of the sixth, over a tonic and dominant bass. It is repeated at once, in bigger chords, and with the addition of a pleasantly-clashing little counter-theme in the alto :

Ex. 9.

This naive and engaging theme appears a few bars later in F, with a plain dominant inverted pedal coming in on the weak half of the bar, and again on page 24, the inverted pedal now entering with a quaint little quaver take-off. The chiming alto treatment quoted in Ex. 9 is used twice later. On page 25 we see yet one more instance of Rheinberger's avoidance of cut-and-dried methods when recapitulating. Exx. 7 & 8 reappear, but the few bars that separate them make an unexpected dart into the dominant of C sharp minor, and then give us (instead of the expected resolution into that key) a sudden return to the dominant of A. Again, after the little bit of canon that starts at the close of page 26, note how the main theme suddenly disappears in order to allow the tenor to give the second subject in octaves. The charm of this bit of dovetailing is that we don't know it has happened until the second subject is well under way. Ought this tenor part to be soloed? It stands out pretty well as it is, owing to the simplicity of the right-hand and pedal parts, but given a good reed able to tell through the ff Great, a player would be tempted to give it a show. If he does so, he must remember to transfer to the right hand the semibreve A in bar 4 of the second line.

The end of this attractive movement is its only disappointing feature. Rheinberger's fondness for closing his Sonatas with a return to a first movement subject is usually justified by the effect, even when the Finale is played alone. Here, however, he goes too far. At the end of page 27, after some exciting free passages that seem to announce the end, he makes a half-close with a pause, and then proceeds to quote the second subject from the first movement, following it up with the first subject (Ex. 1), ff, and making yet another quotation by tacking on the cadence of the Phantasie. Even when the Sonata is played complete the effect is not good, because the continuity and liveliness of the Finale suddenly give place to scrappiness and slowness. When the Finale is played alone the device produces an even worse anti-climax. It is not easy to see a way out. In order to make the movement available for separate performance, something drastic must be done. I have tried a number of alternatives, but none are good.

The least objectionable is, perhaps, to tack on a regular Rheinberger cadence at the end of page 27, thus :

Ex. 10.

Purists who object to this may be reminded of the faked endings and 'cuts' applied to works by Wagner and other composers greater than Rheinberger. In many such cases there is a loss of good material : here we lose no more than a terrible anti-climax. Shorn of its original ending, and played with the right brio, this movement will make many friends.

NO. 19, IN G MINOR

Präludium; Provenzalisch; Introduction and Finale

This is one of the least-known of the Sonatas, though, as Dr. Bennett says, it ranks among the four best of the later numbers. It is also the longest (thirty pages), and is decidedly difficult, with a good deal of strength of a rough—almost harsh—type that does not make for easy popularity. The bold opening, Molto moderato, ma energico, catches the attention at once :

Ex. 11.

A secondary theme, also in G minor, and harmonic in character, develops the mood of the opening by means of an agitated semiquaver left-hand part. A modulation to the relative major is rather too long in the making—Rheinberger is often very much addicted to the classical tradition in bringing on his second subjects. He usually avoids the dreadful padding and the pull-up that the older composers indulged in by way of letting us know that the second subject is at hand, but he is inclined to usher it in with too much circumstance. This is a deliberate concession to custom, for he could be as continuous as Bach himself when it suited him. In the case under notice, he reaches the dominant of B flat in the last bar of page 3, and hovers around over a dominant pedal for a further eight bars before starting his second subject—a pleasant sixteen-bar tune. He at once starts a repetition, increasing its significance by a more elaborate treatment. As usual in such passages, his counterpoint is not of the conventional organ type; it suggests rather the string quartet:

(In this connection it may be of interest to mention that as a teacher of fugue and counterpoint Rheinberger almost invariably used the string quartet as a medium. Dr. Bennett has kindly lent me a number of manuscript volumes of fugues and canons worked out in class—the classes took place at 8 a.m.—and one looks in vain for an organ example. All are for strings. Add this fact to the obvious and beneficent influence of the string family in Bach's organ writing, and we have a moral for would-be organ composers.)

The second subject is followed by yet another fresh theme—one somewhat like the harmonic example that succeeded the opening subject. This in turn gives way to still one more—a fine, broad tune, so simple that a small composer would hesitate before writing it:

Ex. 13. Poco meno mosso.

and so on, with a continuation that modulates so far afield as C flat before returning to the agitated theme that followed the second subject. A page of this brings us back to the opening theme. The recapitulation is unusually long for Rheinberger, the extra length being due to his lingering over the second subject. He makes the lingering well worth while by a fresh treatment—a delightful staccato tenor part in quaver triplets. Note that something has gone wrong with the registration marks at the commencement of this triplet section. A p and mf are ambiguously placed, but we may safely assume that whatever they may be taken to indicate is wrong. The passage would be spoilt by such a wide contrast of power between any two of the three parts. The need is for two manuals pretty well balanced in power and contrasted in colour. As a rule the tenor part will be most effective on a flute-toned stop. Ex. 13 follows, now in G major, and brings us to the closing page, Poco più animato, in which Ex. 11 is followed by a brilliant flourish and a cadence of surprising simplicity and effectiveness. This Præludium is a very long movement, taking ten minutes to play, and we must therefore use a good deal less full organ than is indicated by the composer. Of the ten pages, no fewer than eight and a-half are marked ff! Obviously this will never do. The music is of a type that calls for power, but the ff must be used sparingly, and its place taken by varying kinds of forte. A good plan would be to reserve the real ff (by which Rheinberger means 'full organ') for the opening theme only. The powerful reeds will be effective here, but very much less so in the other loud portions of the movement, where rapid passage-work is nearly always a feature. The pace marked is fast enough, but there are several points at which a good accelerando seems to be called for—e.g., the exciting chromatic scale in thirds on page 10—and the second subject should surely be played at a little above the marked pace, otherwise the drop from semiquaver motion to crotchets is too pronounced. There should be a long, well-graded reduction of power from the beginning of page 4 until the entry of the second subject. Apparently there is only one misprint—a curious one. Bar 1 of page 9 starts a recapitulation of the first subject (Ex. 11), but without the semiquaver third in the right hand. As the original dotted quaver rest is replaced by a crotchet rest, we are at first disposed to regard the change as deliberate. But as the theme appears on every other occasion as in Ex. 11, there can be no doubt that the change must be put down to the engraver.

The Phantasie calls for good execution, and even more for freedom and energy. It is one of the numerous cases in which the composer is very much at the mercy of the player. A, with fire and life, and eyes that see beyond the printed page, will make a fine thing of it; B, stiff and literal, will merely give us a dull and noisy ten minutes.

The slow movement bears an unusual title—Provençalisch—which a foot-note explains: 'The theme of the first twelve bars is from the song J'aim la fleur de valour, by Machault, born 1284.' A charming tune it is, and no less charming is the fifteen bars' continuation which Rheinberger evolves from it. A restatement of the opening twelve bars, more fully harmonized, completes the first section.

Unfortunately, Rheinberger then proceeds to break the spell by four pages of quasi agitato in G minor (a key and mood already well worked in the Phantasie), with some ff maestoso references to the opening phrase of the old song. Nor is the agitato material sufficiently interesting to stand such a lengthy innings as the composer gives it. This middle section is saved, however, by the broad statements of the song-phrase, and by the passage from the second line of page 20 to the resumption of the main theme. The ending is delightful, with its lingering over the first two bars of the song. In the second line of this last page, it will be better to play mf and f instead of f and ff as marked. The little touch of cross-rhythm in the third bar should not be allowed to escape the hearer. At the risk of being assailed for vandalism, I suggest that we change this long, unequal movement into a short and beautiful one by omitting the whole of the middle section—and, of course, the little bit of page 15 that leads into it. We should go straight from bar 8, page 15, to the Tempo primo on page 20. (The loud bars on page 21 should in this case be played quite softly; they lose nothing by the change, and the movement gains.) The result is a worthy companion to such admirable short, quiet voluntaries as the composer's Monologues in G and D flat.

The Finale is a capital example of a mixture of sonata and rondo forms, with the accent on the rondo. The Introduction, like most movements of the kind, may be omitted, especially as it has no thematic connection with the Finale. But it provides such good contrast with the rest of the Sonata that it should be used if time permits. It consists chiefly of three presentments of a bold theme, given to the treble, tenor, and bass respectively. The bass version is marked 'Posaune,' but nothing is said about soloing the tenor—another indication that Rheinberger's organ had no manual solo stop for use against a very loud background. We should of course play it on the tuba, the left hand leaving the solo manual in time to take over the C sharp of the alto :

EX. 14. Grave. ♩=63.

The main theme of the Finale is a pleasant tune :

EX. 15. Con moto. ♩=69.

helped along by a tenor part that runs smoothly in quavers. But it has an amiable quality that unfits it for the hard wear of a rondo; on the whole the chief interest lies in the excellent secondary themes. The best is that marked maestoso, a vigorous subject that at its first appearance leads to some effective development recalling the second page of the Toccata of the C major Sonata. The other contrasting theme is a strong little affair of five bars, sequential in character. It is suggestive of an Ostinato, is handed about from part to part, and leads to a great deal of very interesting development. It makes six appearances as a bass, and all are widely different. Here are two of its deliveries by the pedals :

EX. 16 (a).

(b)

(Note a misprint at this point: the bass of the last bar in Ex. 16b is wrongly given in the copy as four crotchets.) This is followed by a passage in B minor in which an inverted pedal point is used with fine effect against a chromatic scale and a rolling bass. The maestoso theme and that quoted in Ex. 16 are telescoped on pages 28 and 29, the latter being given a lot of fresh treatment. In fact, all this part of the movement shows the composer at his best in regard to vigour and resourcefulness. The movement has a brilliant close, a fine string of plain chords in the left hand and pedals, with little triplet flights in the right, leading into yet another variation of the composer's favourite plagal cadence:

Ex. 17.

This Sonata, save for the middle section of the slow movement, and (perhaps) a little over-insistence on the main theme of the Finale, gives us Rheinberger at the top of his form. But in order to do it justice the player must be in equally good fettle. The difficulties are of the type that cannot be faked, or muddled through under cover of a big noise. The Finale especially calls for vigilance in the matters of continuity and rhythm, and is well worthy of study for that reason, if for no other.

The registration marked gives, as usual, more fortissimo than is good. Modifications will suggest themselves. The little ostinato theme may be soloed in some of its appearances, and always when it appears as the bass (see Ex. 16). There are a couple of stretches that will baffle all but a few players—in bar 4, line 4, page 24, and in the last bar of page 26. The F sharp in the first case, and the minim G in the second, must be played an octave higher.

It may be well to warn the reader that the effectiveness of this movement depends very much upon pace, continuity, and clearness. Mere trying-over is pretty certain to lead to disappointment, because the thematic material is somewhat less striking than is usual with Rheinberger. Moreover, we know that the composer conceived his Sonatas as wholes, not as mere sets of pieces. The Finale has therefore to be considered in its relation to the rest of the work, and especially the rugged Phantasie, to which it provides admirable contrast.

(To be continued.)

A FORGOTTEN PROPHET

BY GERALD R. HAYES

The name of Thomas Salmon will probably be almost unknown, even to those musicians who have some acquaintance with the composers of the 17th century; yet few musical writers have succeeded in creating such a storm of controversy as did this original and well-meaning clergyman.

The violent disputes between Zarlino and Galilei at the end of the 16th century, and that between Robert Fludd and Mersenne in the early part of the 17th, though notorious, were more in the nature of personal differences; but upon Salmon fell the whole body politic of musical opinion in a mass of bitter invective and diatribe.

Thomas Salmon was born in 1648, and after taking Holy orders became an earnest student of music. It may be some of his earlier efforts towards the re-introduction of quarter-tones—as adapted from certain Greek scales—that are referred to by Christopher Simpson in his Compendium of Practical Musick, when, discussing the Enharmonic Scale, he says: 'I am slow to believe that any good musick, especially in parts, can be composed by Quarter-Tones, though I hear some talk much of it.'

Shortly after this, however, Salmon's attention was turned to a much more pressing and practical reform. It may perhaps be as well to remind readers that at this time each 'voice' or part had its distinctive clef as Cantus, Alto, Mean, Counter-Tenor, Tenor, and Bass, and a seventh is sometimes met with; not only this, but in order to avoid the use of ledger lines, the clef was constantly changed in the scores of instrumental music. In the text-books of the period these are all laid out, and the pupil is told to make himself fully acquainted with the positions of notes in all the different clefs. How much acquaintance is necessary can be realised only when one has tried to read such pieces as the examples given at the end of Simpson's famous Division-Viol (1659), where the clef is changed from four to eight times in one line of about five bars.

Also, each note had a distinctive name to indicate its position in the great stave of eleven lines. Thus C in the Tenor clef was C sol-fa-ut, while C an octave higher was C sol-fa, and below Gamut double letters had to be used—which probably gave rise to such names as Double-Regals, Double-Bassoon, &c.

It was Salmon's stroke of genius to realise how unnecessary was all this confusion, and in 1672 he published his small book An Essay to the Advancement of Musick by Casting away the Perplexity of different cleffs, &c. The work contains many original ideas (including a suggestion for the Suez Canal!); but Salmon's principal thesis was a proposal to use only one clef (an ordinary stave of five lines) throughout, instead of the existing six or seven, and to call each note simply by a letter, in whatever octave it might be. The lowest line on his stave was to be always G (the basic note for hundreds of years before), and, in order to show the relations between the parts, he proposed to mark the Treble with T at the beginning of the line, the Mean with M, and the Bass with B, the respective G's being an octave apart in each case. His treble G would correspond in pitch with the ordinary treble G. It was necessary for him to emphasise that his mean stave would not fall in with any part of the great stave of eleven lines although his Treble and Bass happened to fall in as portions of a continuous whole. If notes went outside the stave, leger lines were to be employed, but if many notes together were so placed, or if a note went very much above or below, he proposed to place them on the ordinary lines and mark them 'octave'—just as a modern music publisher would do, except that he would indicate by the letter T, M, or B whether the octave went into the adjoining stave above or below as the case might be. If notes went above the treble they would be marked 'octave T'; if below the bass, 'octave Bb.'

All this was quite revolutionary for the time, especially making the Mean a separate system instead of part of the great stave as is the ordinary Tenor clef. From its commonsense and simplicity we might have expected it to have had a decent hearing, but it is only another example of the necessary slowness of evolution that Salmon should have been at once assailed on all sides.

Matthew Locke, the composer and author of the text-book Melothesia, published an attack entitled Observations upon a late Booke by Thomas Salmon (1672), in which he displays a command of vitriolic abuse that would have made an Edinburgh Reviewer blush. Others joined in the fray, and even John Playford came out with a denunciation very different in tone from his meek Preface to Psalms and Hymns in Solemn Musick.

Salmon replied to these with another book, A Vindication of an Essay to the Advancement of Musick (1672); but he found few supporters, and seems to have given up the battle. He devoted the rest of his life to endeavours to revive quarter-tones, and died, disappointed and embittered, in 1706. Had he lived another twenty or thirty years he would have seen much of his suggestion put into practice, for soon after the beginning of the 18th century we rarely, if ever, find music in more than three clefs, and the new editions of the old text-books were altered accordingly—as in the sixth edition of Simpson's Compendium (1722). The practice of marking notes an octave up or down also began to creep in, and the complexity of different names for notes was given up soon after.

The controversy seems to have died away very quickly, and even so learned an authority as Sir John Hawkins appears to have doubted if these polemic volumes had ever really existed. Needless to say, they can all be seen in the British Museum: nor would they be really difficult to obtain for one's own possession, had they not attained a high collector's value quite recently.

But Salmon had not written entirely for blind eyes, and an example of his posthumous life that would have pleased the late Samuel Butler, is found in A Treatise of Musick, Speculative, Practical, and Historical, by Alexander Malcolm (Edinburgh, 1721: second edition, London, 1730), where a whole chapter is devoted to praise of 'Mr. Salmon's Proposal for reducing all musick to one cleff.' But alas! a moment of true Scottish caution overcame even this strong admirer at the last, and he hastens to add the remark: 'I thought of nothing but considering it as a Piece of Theory, to explain what might have been done and to inform you of what has been proposed.'

We are glad to hear that the cancelling of Mr. Gustav Holst's engagements is not due to serious illness. He has been advised to go away for a six months' rest.

MODERN COMPOSERS AND MODERN COMPOSITION *

By HAMILTON HARTY

We live at such a pace nowadays, in music as in other things, that it is surely wise to get out of the hurly-burly sometimes, and to try to take stock of what is being accomplished in the way of musical progress. A great many people who are sincerely interested in music appear to live in a kind of panic that the 'Great Man' will appear, and they may not be among the first to proclaim him. They do not possess, apparently, any very settled convictions of their own as to what constitutes power and originality in music, and it is sufficient for a new-comer to be industriously 'boomed' and written up for a few months for them to be quite sure that he is the real 'Messiah' they have been awaiting. These good people are of the most passionate allegiance while the object of their worship remains in the full glare of the limelight, and it does not appear to strike them that the frequency with which they change their views renders their opinion, in reality, of no definite interest or importance. They might be termed musical turn-coats, and the trouble about them is that in their ever-fresh enthusiasm they make so much noise that the still small voice of reason is often quite unheard. As soon as they have transferred their worship to another idol, they are quite willing to see the flaws in the old one they have only just forsaken. The new, with them, is always the perfect, and they forget their past mistakes. In a way we sympathise with them, because the problem with which they have to deal is one that sometimes confronts every musician, no matter how talented, or how qualified to form a balanced judgment. There is hardly a musician who has not had the question to decide—'Shall I risk unpopularity, shall I risk being called old-fashioned, narrow, academic, or shall I throw in my lot with the joyful discoverers of the latest genius?' I do not minimise the difficulty and importance of this problem. To float with the stream is not only the easiest course, but it is often the way to individual success; while to sit on the bank and wait for the flood to subside is generally a lonely and unpopular thing to do. It is evident to those of us who think at all deeply, that for a considerable period the noisy, eager ones have had no luck at all with the composers whom they have so zealously advertised, and, indeed, I think we have been passing through a very empty, unprofitable time in the history of musical composition. Even during the last few years we have seen many stars dawn, blaze, and vanish, and it is not strange, therefore, that we have thought long and deeply, and tried to formulate for ourselves some kind of standard, some sort of mental measuring-rod, by which to appraise not only those stars whose light has faded, but the new ones which are constantly appearing over the horizon. For my own benefit I have tried to define the laws by which I think real music must be governed, and they are roughly as follow:

1. Music must be beautiful in shape.
2. Melody must be the first reason for its existence.
3. What appeals only to the brain cannot live.
4. It is the emotional quality of music which gives it value, and the nobler the emotion aroused, the greater the music.

* A paper read before the Manchester Organists' Association.

These do not seem, perhaps, to be very deep or clever conclusions to have reached, and I am painfully aware of the scorn which would be poured on them by those who claim to be in the van of present-day musical progress. But I have based them upon the qualities which have kept great music of the past alive and treasured to the present day, and I sincerely believe that it is because the greater number of the composers of our time make intellect the be-all and end-all of their compositions that they are doomed to extinction—some of them, indeed, are already undergoing that process. Their names will be quite familiar; I shall take a number of them in detail presently.

In what I am about to say, I do not wish to pose as one who lays down the law, but rather, with great modesty, as one who puts forward suggestions for the consideration of others.

It seems to me that the race of musical giants finished with Wagner and Brahms. The ideals and methods of these two composers were very different, but they were alike in the one essential thing—their message was primarily concerned with vital, human emotions—emotions which are deep down in human nature, and which it does not require a trained intellect to feel and appreciate. It is an essential of great music that it can be felt and appreciated by the mass of people who have had no particular training in the art. They will not, of course, understand all the beauties of craftsmanship which is displayed by the composer, but what after all is craftsmanship but the power to refine and decorate and give a formal shape to something which is already there? In music, without the basic emotion to start with, all the craftsmanship in the world is but vanity. An artist can rejoice to the full in the beautiful skill and ingenuity of his fellow-workman who gives a fine setting to the precious stones with which he is dealing, but he recognises that it is the gems themselves which give meaning and justification to the setting. Since the towering figures of Brahms and Wagner there has been no composer of equal stature. We seem to have had a succession of smaller men, each of whom has displayed something individual, something of genius, some new trick or idiom, but none of whom have, so far, proved themselves to be equal brothers with the great ones of our art. When we were at the beginning of our musical life Brahms was accepted as the legitimate follower of the great classical school, and Wagner, that extraordinary original figure, was rising out of the criticisms of the last of his detractors; but it is a long time now since both Wagner and Brahms were definitely ranked as great composers. Since then the following composers, among others, became known in this country, and achieved varying degrees of appreciation—Grieg, Dvorák, Tchaikovsky, Richard Strauss, Edward Elgar, Debussy, Ravel, Puccini, Scriabin, Stravinsky. They appeared, more or less, in this order. Other still more recent composers I would prefer not to discuss in detail. They are, perhaps, too near to us to yield a proper perspective, and besides, several are our own countrymen—young composers of immense talent and industry—and it is unfair to give a definite judgment on a composer the better part of whose work probably remains to be written. Later on I will refer to these latter composers in general terms; for the moment it will perhaps be instructive to take those I have mentioned, and try to find out the dominant characteristic in each which may account for their varying positions in our estimation. Grieg we need not discuss at length. He was the sweet singer of the Fiords whom we have all loved, and perhaps love a little still for the purity and freshness of his simple genius. Of the others, though all have enjoyed a wave of popularity varying in height and duration, and though the ultimate position of some is still more or less obscure, I think we have all made up our minds that the small body of those we term great composers has not yet had another name added to it.

Two amongst those whose names I give have, however, undoubtedly had the greatest measure of popular success—i.e., Tchaikovsky and Puccini; but the two whose ultimate position is most obscure are Richard Strauss and our own Elgar. All depends upon the 'bigness' of the message they have tried (and are trying) to deliver, but, certainly, to me, these are in some ways the two most significant figures among the composers on my list. We will return to them presently.

Dvorák is an instance of a strongly national composer, who yet used the mighty tools of the great masters with an easy command. Of all those we term national composers, he is the one who has known best how to say universal things without departing from his native dialect. Most composers of a strongly national type seem to have lacked the bigness of calibre which would enable them to speak of great things in a great way, and yet not depart from their characteristic insular mode of expression. But I do think that Dvorák has achieved this feat to a great extent, and the bulk of his music appeals to the heart of the world because it is concerned with universal emotions, even if he often speaks of them in an unfamiliar patois. He is the Bobbie Burns of music—the Brahms of Bohemia. Perhaps he occupies the same position among composers that Burns does among poets—honoured, loved, and of kinship to the very greatest, if not actually of them.

Tchaikovsky's huge and sudden popularity in this country could hardly have endured at its height unless he had been the greatest composer who had ever lived. Such a fierce concentration of limelight on any one composer would have showed up the flaws in a far greater figure. The subsequent subsidence in the 'Tchaikovsky rage' was a natural consequence of a somewhat exaggerated appreciation. We then accepted the theory, for a time, that Tchaikovsky, after all, was not really representative of the best in Russian music, and we had Glinka, Moussorgsky, Borodin, Rimsky-Korsakov put before us as objects for our admiration. Of late, however, I notice that in spite of their individual excellences, these composers begin to pall on us. They say dramatic, highly-coloured, exciting things, but they do not often say really big things; and, without failing to appreciate their virtues, it seems that, with all his faults, Tchaikovsky is again finding a settled and important place in our musical life. His alternations of despair and languor, with his fierce and blazing passion and his barbaric pomp, are perhaps the moods of a nervous, hysterical temperament; but he uses the great tools as well as he may, and he is, above all, sincere, even if sometimes what he has to say is tawdry and lacking in true dignity. It would be absurd to claim for him the title of great composer, but he is the best of his kind, and the best of anything has always a settled value.

Puccini's extraordinary and continued vogue is not perhaps because he writes music merely, but because he writes opera. In his work, considered as abstract music, it is possible for everyone to see his limitations and the sad artifices with which he covers up his lack of sustained invention. He is the star short-story writer of the magazines, and his themes, charming as many of them are, are seldom developed into anything noteworthy. But the successful opera writer is of necessity a skilful dramatist as well as a musician, and Puccini's genius lies less in his innate strength as a composer of absolute music than in the unfailing fitness with which his music is welded to the incidents and emotions of his libretti. This, of course, is greatness of a kind too, and Puccini's operas will probably live as Verdi's have done—though, considered purely as a musician, Verdi is on an infinitely higher plane.

Turning to the French school, we have seen Debussy's rise and comparative decline. His success was perhaps one of manner, more than of substance. His limited talent was expressed beautifully and completely in such things as L'Après-midi d'un Faune, and in his pianoforte pieces and songs: but when we take the graceful, fantastic clothing away, and leave the naked musical ideas, what is left is not of much beauty or originality. There was more than a drop of Massenet's blood in his veins, though he did his best to live it down.

Some of these criticisms apply to Ravel also, except that his music has a certain delightful flavour of the ironic or sardonic. Everything he does is informed with wit and finesse; delightfully finished and full of a delicate esprit; but of deep matters he has not a word to say. It would be bad form in him to speak of such things as life and death, love and passion, suffering and joy. Both these composers are adepts in delicate and skilful workmanship, and they have invented beautifully ingenious tools which they have, however, used only to decorate that which is without much substance, and though I do not seek to dispute their charming achievements, these composers are not of those who have a deep message for the world.

I hope I shall not be considered unduly aggressive if I venture to speak quite plainly on the subject of the two latest composers whose works have been made well known to us. Indeed, for the matter of that, whether one is right or wrong, I think we suffer a great deal too much from a kind of cowardice—shyness, perhaps—in voicing our views about music we don't quite like.

My personal conviction is that Scriabin in his later works is the most vicious and sensual of composers, and Stravinsky the most brutal. I think that with these composers came a definitely evil atmosphere in music, and I am thankful to say that already there are to be seen signs of revolt on the part of audiences, and a renewed desire for fresh air and sunlight. The light is dim yet, but I think the bottom of the slope has been reached, and that there is a reaction against the false and unclean. I do not propose to go into details regarding these composers—nor do I presume to link them together. This is not the place for an exhaustive study of their aims and achievements, which it would be presumptuous to decry. Scriabin has achieved miracles of form and colour, and Stravinsky has as certainly said many new things in rhythm, and in the expression of certain subtle emotions. My object on the present occasion is rather to find out the underlying driving-force which has prompted their work, and the ideals which they have sought to express, and to compare them with the other composers with whose work I am dealing. We have all read a great deal as to the wonderful teaching that is to be found by the initiated in such works as Scriabin's Poème de l'Extase and Stravinsky's Sacre du Printemps, but to me these works appear to be founded on something thoroughly unhealthy and decadent, and it is to that I attribute their failure to stand the test of repeated performance. Sensuality, hysteria, brutality, are qualities which cannot exist in great art, and I know of nothing really decadent which has lived in music. Now that the great attraction of novelty has departed from such works as I have mentioned, I think we shall not hear much more of them.

We are now free to consider the rather puzzling problem of the two composers I selected from my list as being those whose ultimate position is most doubtful. It is possible to point to certain flaws in many of the great works of Richard Strauss, but at the same time no one can deny the greatness of his conceptions, the fire and warmth of his expression, and the wonderful vital quality of most of his music. Deep thought, a vast command of means, are also there; invention, wonderful ingenuity, a sort of defiant mastery, can all be felt; and, above all, a free and luxuriant melodic line which seldom fails. Grandeur and dignity are within his scope. . . What then prevents our claiming him as one of the really great? I acknowledge, for my part, that I cannot presume to think that he may not eventually be looked upon as a worthy companion of the greatest, but it is still too soon to say how his music will stand the test of time. Some of it seems, with familiarity, to have worn thin and a little empty and pretentious, but, on the other hand, there is much of it which seems to grow better only as we become more accustomed to it. I do not think there is a single flaw in the gaiety and charm of a work like, for instance, Till Eulenspiegel, nor, with the exception of one short episode, in the nobility of Don Quixote, and we notice that certain works like Heldenleben and Zarathustra only grow more and more understandable with repeated hearings. But I do not intend to deal with his works in any exhaustive spirit—the occasional uglinesses have become smoothed to a great extent, and seem to take up a smaller amount of space, and it is principally because certain themes, certain progressions we once thought beautiful now seem to be growing a little sentimental and commonplace, that we are warned not to be over-hasty in final judgment.

The problem of Elgar is of a different nature. There are really two Elgars—one who could write music like Land of Hope and Glory for a definite popular purpose, and the Elgar who could write a magnificently conceived work like The Dream of Gerontius or The Apostles. This is the side of the composer we will discuss. I am convinced that the great underlying motive in Elgar's music is one of profound mystical brooding over the mysteries of Life and Death and the Hereafter. It is music which can arise from a deep, reflective pondering to a sudden blazing ecstasy, and as suddenly subside again to sadness and meditation. It is a flavour in music which we can find nowhere else. There is a certain religious essence in it which no other music but Elgar's seems to possess. There are those who contend that his message is of too intimate a nature for the size of his canvases—and certainly we sometimes have the impression that the prevailing characteristic I have pointed out is insisted upon at too great length, as some have found in his Symphonies, when it seems that much could have been said in a shorter and more concise way. He is the only composer with whose music I am acquainted, who writes nearly always what, in its emotional essence, might be termed truly religious music—and, indeed, in The Dream of Gerontius I believe he has accomplished the greatest religious musical work ever written. It is a somewhat sweeping assertion to make, no doubt, but regarded purely as music, the music of Bach, Handel, Beethoven—even when it deals with sacred subjects—is music of such pure abstract strength and breadth as to be equally applicable to all great human emotions—pagan or otherwise. I mean, as music only, such a work as Bach's great Mass seems to reflect and embody all the sorrows and joys and beliefs of humanity, not merely some of them.

I did not intend to speak at such length regarding the peculiar attributes of the composers I chose, but only to try to find out what qualities exist in those who have gained a settled place in our estimation, and in those whose music at least possesses for us the qualities of strength and originality. We may make what I think is a fair deduction from a consideration of the history of music, both classical and modern, when we claim that it is its blind spiritual or emotional qualities, rather than its intellectual features, which give great music its permanence. 'The letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life.' What is known as cleverness has nothing to do with the essential greatness of music, or with any art for the matter of that. To refer to a composer as clever is, to my mind, a deadly insult, and seems to me to put him well second to a skilful acrobat.

I don't know whether it is true that because we belong to one generation, we often feel hustled and unsettled by the pioneers of the next. There is something in that, no doubt, but I do feel that we are living in a very restless and unsatisfied age, and I have an instinctive feeling that beautiful creation requires leisure and quiet in order that the children of the mind may be healthy and sane. It is hard to be leisurely and quiet nowadays. There seem to be so many more things to do in a certain time than there were at the start of our musical lives. Everything made by man has become more efficient and works more quickly, but I am convinced that music is one of the things which cannot be speeded up, and that it has been injured by this excessive craving for hustle. Great music is really nature translated into sound, and nature persists in remaining at its old Allegro moderato, and refuses to be 'speeded-up.' I feel sure that it is only in close touch with nature, and surrounded by the quiet rhythm of country things, that musicians can hope, nowadays, to write music of solid, enduring value.

In these days, when we are forced to see on every hand the evidences of restless materialism, it is perhaps hardly to be wondered at that so many of our very modern composers have also become material in their outlook, and are so much preoccupied in endeavouring to make their music reflective of modern tendencies. I see no reason why I should not say frankly that I dislike intensely much of the music that is being produced to-day. It seems to me to be concerned not with any considerations of beauty, but with a feverish desire to do something, anything, that will appear new and clever. The brilliant young sons of the morning who are far more interested in the shape of a new tool than in consideration of whether they can use it in making something beautiful, reply to all criticism by saying that their object is to make music truthful to what is happening around them. If it is ugly, hard, cynical, material, that can't be helped—at least they are being realistic. It may be that the ultimate destiny of music is not to say the wonderful, beautiful things that in our souls we dimly perceive, but to be a mere photographic record of our changing, restless, material life. But if that time ever were to come, I think music as we know it would be an extinct art, because its noblest function would have gone—that of trying to clothe with sound those aspirations which are too deep and vague to be put into words.

It is a great argument with some that what I am saying was said at the beginning of every new era in music. This is an argument that is brought against all who take a conservative stand in our art, but if only people would interest themselves more in the inner history of music, they would realise that besides the Bachs, the Beethovens, the Mozarts, the Wagners, there were living at the same time hosts of pinchbeck impostors who had their hour of success—sometimes, indeed, outshining for a time their illustrious contemporaries—but whose names are now quite forgotten.

I do not think that those interested in music meet often enough to talk frankly on the subjects I have been discussing, and in bringing these remarks to a close I would say that, in my opinion, the more opportunities there are for discussing such subjects, the more likely are we to make clear to ourselves the qualities which constitute great music, and, having once defined these, we should not be afraid to put our views forward. Zeal and eloquence have for too long been the special prerogative of those who worship only what is new, and who have introduced us to so many false gods. Let us learn to use their weapons in defence of our own cherished beliefs—even if we have not an exciting new creed for every day.

As for myself—no matter how old-fashioned, no matter how out-of-date, even weak and sentimental, it may sound to some—I am content to take my stand in music with those who value honesty more than cleverness, for I am convinced that in this there lies the guiding principle of all that is enduring in our art.

In speaking of modern music, it may not be out of place to touch briefly upon two important inventions of our time which have made it possible for millions of people to be brought into contact with music which otherwise they might never have heard or appreciated—I refer to the gramophone, and to the wireless broadcasting of music.

In the early days of the gramophone it was freely predicted that not only would this instrument have an injurious effect upon the musical taste of those who used it, but it would also prove disastrous to the attendances at concerts of better-class music. It was said that when people could sit comfortably at their own firesides and listen to their favourite piece of music, they would not trouble to go out and hear it at a public performance. The exact opposite has proved to be the case, and music has never had a better friend than the gramophone. I think that exactly the same thing will apply to broadcasting when people have appreciated not only the wonderful things it can do, but some wonderful things to which it acts more as an introduction. The gramophone companies have never pretended that their records can ever be quite so good as the real thing; but they have won enormous success, and at the same time have done music a real service by placing in the hands of great numbers of people a sort of translation or photograph of many of the most beautiful things that exist in music. It is an unnatural thing to like bad music. . . people do so only because their opportunities for hearing good are limited, and their natural taste is debauched by constantly hearing the worthless rubbish with which the world insists on surrounding them. Children invariably possess good natural taste, until they get older and go into public places for their meals and amusements. It is extraordinary to me that people will make such a row over a bad egg, and yet listen complacently during their meal to something that is just as bad for them, if only they knew it. There is an insane feeling that there is something mysterious and austere about good music. That is all nonsense, of course. The best music is the best only because it is stronger, more human, more gay and amusing, more worth while, in fact, than the rest. When people began to get a dim idea from their gramophones that this might be so, they were not satisfied to hear only a reproduction, and turned in increasing numbers to the concert-halls, to hear the music in its original form.

The same thing will, I believe, take place with the great broadcasting public. If music transmitted by wireless sounded, or were ever likely to sound, exactly as it does in a concert-hall, then I think musicians might possibly feel a little dubious, but my own opinion is that broadcasting will become a great educational force, and far from injuring music, or those who live by performing it, will eventually prove of the greatest service and benefit.

It is interesting and encouraging to observe that those responsible are anxious to avoid the mistake made in the early days of the gramophone, when only popular, cheap music was supposed to have any chance of success. That error has long been rectified, and now nothing is too good to bring out with a fair certainty of being financially justified. The broadcasting interests are already making great strides in the quality of the music supplied to listeners, and we are assured that it is their intention to go still further in this direction. There is a heavy responsibility on those in direction of the musical policy of this new and wonderful means of hearing music, but, speaking for myself, I am convinced that music and musicians have nothing to fear and much to gain from it, even if, like the gramophone, it takes a certain time to settle down and find the best means of justifying itself as a force in music.

(In passing, and in view of certain statements which have been made, perhaps I might take this opportunity for explaining that the Hallé Society has consented to broadcast a portion of certain of its concerts next season. A full statement will be made in due course, but for the moment I should like to make it clear that the arrangement is not to broadcast the whole of any concert, but certain portions of a number of selected concerts.)

The Ladies' London Orpheus Choir, conducted by Mr. J. C. Clarke, sang music by Wilbye, Weelkes, Vaughan Williams, and Corder, at Putney Lecture Hall, on March 1.

The conductor of the Axminster Choral Society is Mr. J. L. Adams, not Mr. W. C. Walton, as erroneously stated in the provincial news in our March issue.

Music in the Foreign Press

SCHÖNBERG'S STYLE AND TENDENCIES

In the Zeitschrift für Musikwissenschaft (December), Siegfried Gunther devotes a twenty-nine page essay to 'the trochaic principle in Schönberg's a cappella choir Friede auf Erden, Op. 13,' in order to establish a foundation for a general study of the composer's style. This work is selected because it stands midway between Schönberg's early output and the ascetic, abstract music written later. Analysis of its harmony and rhythms, with exhaustive statistics, shows that far from being a musical anarhist, Schönberg proves to be a master of form and logic.

What is, however, the 'evolution value' of his music? Is he advancing in the musical field proper? Works such as his pieces, Op. 19, suggest the contrary. It seems as though Schönberg the musician had been completely absorbed by Schönberg the speculative thinker, painter, and poet. He leads us towards musical issues that must be considered from the point of view of dialectics pure and simple.

OLD SPANISH MUSIC

In the January-February (joint) issue, Albert Geiger calls attention to special points of interest in the Spanish Codices, Nos. 133-199, in the Munich State Library, showing how both monodic pieces and more elaborate 'Estribillos' or 'Villancicos' tend towards the organized cantata-type.

A COMPOSER FROM CHILI

The Nouvelle Revue Musicale (delayed December issue) quotes Florent Schmitt's enthusiastic opinion of twelve Tonadas for pianoforte by a young Chilean composer, Humberto Allende:

Eight of the twelve are remarkable. Three or four are miniature masterpieces, absolute revelations, things which you could play fifty times running with ever-renewed delight.

J. B. COSTANZI

Musica d'Oggi (January-February) contains a good article on this 'cellist and composer (1704-78), by Alberto Cametti.

A LESSON WASTED

The symposium—an excellent method of obtaining good 'copy' free—is in high favour with certain periodicals. The Paris Courrier Musical has resorted to it with regard to contemporary music. Arnold Schönberg's reply, published in the January issue, is:

I shall be glad to send you either a short article or a few aphorisms. May I, however, suggest that you requite by an act of artistic courtesy? We in Austria are greatly distressed by the sad condition of German artists. At Mödling, as elsewhere, money is being collected for relief. Will you hand whatever fee you intended paying me to the Mödling Relief Fund, stating that it is by way of acknowledging my gift of an article, and also publish the information? This might lead to other friends of German artists sending money to relieve want and destroy waves of hatred.

The Courrier Musical adds, by way of comment:

It will be understood that we did not follow Mr. Schönberg's suggestion.

GERMAN MUSICIANS IN DISTRESS

The German artist's distress is vividly described by Dr. Alfred Einstein in the Musikblätter des Anbruch (January):

Every operatic institution totters on the brink of the abyss. Many orchestral societies have vanished, choral institutions are threatened; schools also are in danger. Few parents can afford to send their children to special schools. Incidentally, there are too many students. What does the future hold in store for them? As for the students of musical science, they go on working pluckily, owning neither books nor scores, and with no prospect of seeing their works printed or of finding berths as critics. But worst of all is the situation of composers—except for half-a-dozen or so of the best known. Many have given up writing music. Success under present conditions would hardly pay for the paper, ink, and postage expenses.

CURIOUS NEWS

Le Canada Musical (February 2) publishes a startling piece of news from Munich, dated January 17. I reproduce it because I have not seen it elsewhere:

Cosima and Siegfried Wagner are alleged to have paid into the fund of the Monarchist movement sums sent from various countries as contributions towards artistic purposes—the resumption of the Bayreuth Festivals, among others. Hundreds of dollars found in letters addressed to General Ludendorff have been confiscated. A number of these letters, the State Minister is reported to have said, were from Cosima Wagner.

RIMSKY-KORSAKOV ON THE WAYS OF DANCERS

The Monde Musical (January) quotes a letter from Rimsky-Korsakov published in the Moscow Pravda:

I never saw Isadora Duncan. What prevents my wishing to see her, is that she will insist on dancing to music, dear to my heart, which was not written for the purposes of dancing. I should be similarly grieved to hear that she intended to dance my own Schéhérazade or Antar or Easter Overture.

This letter was written a few months before Rimsky-Korsakov's death, which occurred in 1908. Two years later, his Schéhérazade was produced in ballet form.

MOSLEM BALLETS

The Courrier Musical (January) states that a series of Ballets by the poet and painter Nizam-el-Mulk, the music by M. Melmeister, will be produced next spring at the Théâtre des Champs Elysées, and afterwards in Great Britain and America.

RUSSIA'S MUSICAL ACTIVITIES

The December issue of the Auftakt is devoted to new Russian music and writings on music. It contains lists of works that will probably make the mouth of every student of Russian music water. We may await more or less patiently the time when it will be possible to judge the music of the younger Russian composers, but we want to read as soon as possible what Russian writers have to say about Russian music. Before the war there was a dearth of Russian musical criticism proper—except, perhaps, for essays scattered in various periodicals. Books such as Findeisen's Dargomijsky (very welcome is the news that this industrious and well-informed writer is still in the field), Braudo's Borodin, Karatyghin's Moussorgsky, and others mentioned by O. von Riesemann, are sure to be read with profit.

AN UNKNOWN WORK OF DEBUSSY'S

O. von Riesemann, in his article, refers to Debussy's Crépuscule d'un Faune.

BRITISH MUSIC AS DESCRIBED ABROAD

In the January Sveta Cecilija (Zagreb) Miroslav Shlik devotes a short article to British composers, of whom he gives a list which includes Bloch.

The subject of Rutland Boughton's Immortal Hour, he tells us, is derived from the Celtic mythology, 'like that of Debussy's Pelléas et Mélisande.'

CONTEMPORARY GERMAN COMPOSERS

The January issue of Die Musik contains articles on the following composers: Max von Schillings, by Julius Kapp; Hermann Abert, by H. J. Moser; Josef Turnau, by Anton Rudolph; and Rudi Stepan, by Karl Holl.

The February issue of the Musikblätter des Anbruch is devoted to Franz Schreker, and contains articles on his operas by P. Bekker, R. St. Hoffmann, Menninger, Rychnowsky, and others, on his activities as an educator by Kurt Singer, and on various other topics.

ALBAN BERG'S 'WOZZECK'

Referring to a previous article on Berg's opera, Wozzeck (see Musical Times, July, 1923, p. 475), Emile Petschnig writes in Die Musik (February):

The statement that Berg has bridged the gulf between the unstable aspects of dramatic music and the strict forms of pure music should be taken cum grano salis. I examined the score and found little that confirmed this. There are, for instance, few traces of the Suite in the first scene; and as regards the Passacaglia and twenty-one Variations in the fourth scene, I think the variations would pass unnoticed except for the affixed numerals.

The writer's conclusion is:

In no country but Germany, whose dramatic instinct is so feeble that she would always insist on ignoring or undervaluing her greatest masters of the lyric stage, was it possible that so misguided an attempt should have attracted attention and even actual support, while the genuinely gifted composers of dramatic music are neglected and compelled to mark time.

A NEW RUSSIAN PERIODICAL

At Kief appeared the first number of a periodical likewise entitled Die Musik. It contains two articles (by O. Tchapkitsky and P. Kositsky respectively, on the composer Nikolaï Leontovitch, recently deceased, and a comparative study of the rhythms of Slavonic folk-tunes, by K. Kwitka.

MUSICAL JOYS OF EGYPT

L'Orient Musical (January) contains a notice of a concert given at Alexandria, at which ten young ladies, joining forces, played pianoforte ensembles, five instruments being used. The programme is not given; nor are we told of the after-effects on audience and players.

DOWN ON STRAVINSKY

The Zeitschrift für Musik is decidedly out for Stravinsky's scalp. The January issue contains the following note:

Stravinsky's Massacre du Printemps is to be given at a Berlin Philharmonic Concert, to the great joy of the many unemployed ear-specialists of the Berlin Faculty of Medicine. We recommend that this Faculty should confer upon Stravinsky the degree of Dr. Med., Honoris causa.

A SWEDISH PERIODICAL

The Swedish monthly, Ur Nutidens Musikliv, whose editor is the well-known expert, Tobias Norlind, reached the Musical Times office for the first time. The December and January issues contain an essay by the editor on the musical critic's practical duties.

A note in the January issue says that the Vienna opera will come to London, the 'Régisseur,' André, having categorically stated that later communications were 'sheer bluff.'

HALFDAN KJERULF

The Revue Musicale (January) contains a useful and substantial article on the Norwegian composer, Kjerulf (1815-68), by M. Chevalley Sabatier.

M.-D. CALVOCORESSI.

Occasional Notes

The following letter from a German firm appeared in the February issue of the Federation of British Music Industries Journal:

Messrs. ———

The economical circumstances in Germany, which still before a short time a very excitable for business man a business very unfavourable to offer are now prospects richer afterwards the mark your suitable oldest situation again prepossessed. The prices which to changes daily are on a fiscal situation coming and to offer a fixed trade business.

There by this circumstances the break away for a new customer without prospects, I have to abstain preceding offer and to allow me first to day of me articles in knowledge to place news buyer. It is me possible with exceptions prices which far under the internationale mark prices to cost of the manufacture to maintain.

On the next page I have the honour you thereof to convince and hope that you me to favour with your kind orders. Hoping you will favour me with an answer as soon as possible.

I remain, Sir, Yours truly,
RICH WUNDERLICH.

The only comment we are equal to after wrestling with Herr Wunderlich is to breathe his name. Wunderlich, indeed!

When The Perfect Fool was produced there was a good deal of speculation as to what the composer meant by it. The probability that he meant nothing at all, but was merely providing us with a rich and unusual type of entertainment, seemed to occur to few people. Even to-day dark and abstruse speculations are afoot, if we may judge from a communication lately received by the directors of the B.N.O.C. The writer thereof considers that 'this delicious piece is the composer's Kohleth or Ecclesiastes on all theories about art,' and he proceeds at considerable length to give an analysis which, much condensed, is as follows:

The Wizard is the Professional Musician; he deals in love and hate, and from these he distils his Potion.

The Perfect Fool is the Public; it cares for nothing, but just exists, vegetable-like.

His Mother is the British Press; she tries to make him a force in art [we haven't noticed much Press activity in this way; have you?], but he ignores her efforts.

The Wizard—the Professional Musician, remember—doesn't exactly woo the Press, but he practises his art on her. She, however, gets between the Musician and the Public for her own ends. She, too, wants the Public to be full of music. [At this point the analysis begins to leak, and loses conviction.] She steals the Musician's Potion—the art he has distilled from love and hate—and forces it on the Public. To the Musician she gives cold water by way of hinting that he should be more simple, more natural—anything but Professional, in short. [The Analyst says he 'deduces this from the eulogy of water.']

Enter Music herself—the Princess—and, disdaining the Musician, apparently on the ground of his Professionalism, falls in love with the Public. She is wooed by Italian and German opera, but in vain.

Meanwhile the Professional makes a big blaze with his Technique and 'art for art's sake,' but Music ignores the display and sticks to the Public. However, as something has to be done about that incendiary Professional, the Public wakes up just enough to put out the fire of technique by sheer obtuseness, and the Professional disappears hurriedly, leaving behind no more than his hat—that is, a monument, a name, or a few 'Ops,' which is all the Public will ever know or care about him.

A good deal of grey matter seems to have been used in the evolution of this 'analysis.' Unfortunately the composer himself was unconscious of creating a 'Kohleth or Ecclesiastes' on Art. We understand that, on being shown the above 'explanation,' Mr. Holst remarked, with feeling, 'Why didn't I think of all that myself?' We are very glad he didn't.

Apropos of the B.N.O.C., we are sorry to observe a tendency to blame that organization for the abandonment of the Austrian opera visit. In fairness to the Company it ought to be widely known that, so far as it was concerned, no obstacles were placed in the way of the Austrian visit. We have made inquiries, and are able to give the following facts. On February 6, Sir William McCormick and Mr. Paget Bowman, of the B.N.O.C., in consultation with the Austrian Minister, Mr. Higgins (representing the Covent Garden Syndicate), and Mr. H. J. Wilson (Secretary to the Ministry of Labour), agreed to a proposal that the Vienna Company should take Covent Garden from April 28 to June 7, the B.N.O.C. then carrying on for the remainder of the season—possibly five or six weeks. Mr. Higgins expressed his concurrence with this provisional arrangement, adding that as the interests of Covent Garden were purely financial, any arrangement which would guarantee the rent for the whole summer season was acceptable to the Syndicate. A further meeting was fixed for a few days later, the Austrian Minister arranging to communicate with Vienna on the proposal. Unfortunately, matters were complicated in the meantime by the publication in the Press of Sunday, February 10, of a message from Vienna, stating that 'owing to insurmountable obstacles' the visit had been abandoned. The Times of the following Tuesday contained a leading article based on this message (written, of course, without knowledge of the negotiations which were going on at the time), and, as a result, the public naturally assumed that the Ministry of Labour and the B.N.O.C. had been instrumental in barring the door against the Austrian Company.

On Monday, February 11, the Austrian Minister expressed to Sir William McCormick his regret at the publication of the message from Vienna—a message of which he knew nothing until its appearance. He added that, although there were still certain difficulties in the way of the Austrian acceptance of the provisional arrangement, there was hope that these difficulties could be overcome. It was agreed that the meeting already arranged for February 13 should take place.

On the morning of that day, however, Sir William received a letter from Mr. Higgins, curtly announcing that he withdrew the offer to let Covent Garden to the Company during the coming season. The reasons given were the alleged unfriendly attitude of the B.N.O.C. towards the Syndicate, and the announcement of the abandonment of the Vienna visit.

The letter was entirely unexpected, and, as is evident from the correspondence, quite unjustified. The Syndicate, of course, has a right to please itself in regard to choice of tenant, but not to break into delicate negotiations with a sudden change of front—based, first, on an unfounded accusation, and, second, on an unconfirmed newspaper report. The B.N.O.C. and the Austrian Minister still persevered in an attempt to carry out the provisional plan, and in a letter to the Labour Minister, dated February 19, Sir William McCormick, on behalf of the B.N.O.C., expressed willingness to enter into an arrangement with the Vienna Company for a joint season on the lines already laid down.

The B.N.O.C., after all its efforts, deserves better than to be accused of damning the scheme. The blame lies mainly at the door of Mr. Higgins, who rounded off his work by a letter to The Times of February 19, so inimical to the Company as to cause regret and surprise among all who have at heart the future of opera in this country.

The result, we hope, will be to rally the friends of the Company to its support in whatever project it undertakes during the season.

The musical profession will join the dramatic in hearty congratulations to Miss Lilian Baylis, on whom Oxford University has conferred the M.A. degree, honoris causa. Although the degree is given in recognition of Miss Baylis's Shakespearean productions, musicians will feel that she has deserved it no less by her fine work at the 'Old Vic.' on behalf of opera.

Owing to heavy and unexpected demands on our space shortly before going to press, we are reluctantly compelled to omit a good deal of news matter.

New Music

VIOLIN MUSIC

We have often felt that the scarcity of modern violin concertos is due in part to the fact that the violin, essentially a melodic instrument, has not much attraction for the modern composer, for whom complex harmony and rich colouring are of supreme importance. When all is said, however, the great violin concertos still remain those of Beethoven, Brahms, and Mendelssohn, and of these only Beethoven's seems to have stood the test of time, for Brahms's is comparatively recent, and Mendelssohn's appears to be less popular just now than it has been. There is thus every justification for the composer who, in writing for a solo violin, goes back to the Beethoven model, and denies himself the resources of modernity, for the sake of finer balance between the solo instrument and the orchestra, or in order to place in evidence the peculiar genius of the instrument for melody. Yet, somehow P. Stoeving's Concerto in E for violin and pianoforte or orchestra (Bosworth), although obviously inspired by these excellent intentions, fails to convince us. For one thing, Mr. Stoeving is not consistent. He writes, for instance:

Ex. 1.

a passage which might be described not only as simple but primitive, and then passes from this arcady to the hot-house of the true Vieuxtemps style. And yet it seems most unlikely that he knows Vieuxtemps. If he did, the fatuous results of certain feats of technique of which Vieuxtemps made a speciality could not have escaped him. No, decidedly simplicity is not everything. B. V.

STRING MUSIC

Messrs. J. B. Cramer have begun a 'Library of String Music,' which, edited by Geoffrey Shaw, promises much. So far five works have been published under this title, viz., Phantasy String Quartet, by Thomas F. Dunhill; A Village Wedding, Suite for quartet or string orchestra, by Paul Edmunds; Minuet, for string quartet, by Dorothy Howell; The Marionettes, Trio for pianoforte, violin, and 'cello, by Adolph Mann; and Suite in A minor, for string quartet, by Martin Shaw.

As will be seen, the 'Library of String Music' does not exclude the pianoforte or the orchestra, for though The Village Wedding gives the option of employing either the orchestra or the quartet, its effect, in our opinion, will be far more telling with the orchestra than with the quartet. Miss Dorothy Howell's Minuet is a slight work, but able and finished, and could be played by a string orchestra at least without loss of effect. The best and most typical of these compositions is the Phantasy, which uses the medium with special regard for its peculiar excellence, and the ideas it expresses are also of the kind which the quartettist recognises at a glance as his own special province. The scoring is rather close as a rule, possibly in order to give greater effectiveness to the exceptions. The Trio of Adolph Mann has commendable freshness and ingenuity, and Martin Shaw's Suite is light and graceful without being essentially quartet music. No one could take exception, for instance, to the theme of the Aubade:

which lacks neither a certain easy grace nor directness. And yet were we to hear it at dawn (as the title suggests) we might think it not unlike other good tunes played sometime or other at the Albert Hall by Mr. Robinson's Orchestra. This is good, 'meaty' music. But the string quartet is an aristocrat, and nothing short of perfect courtliness will do.

Two excellent movements for string quartet, In Nomine, have been published by Messrs. Curwen—both of them by English composers of the 16th century, edited by Sir Richard Terry. Robert Parsons (1530-70) is the author of one, and Osbert Perslye (1514-85) of the other. Their characteristics are common to the music of the period—a period which knew neither the stress and passion of our own time, nor the scholastic achievement which culminated in the art of Bach, yet followed its own course with a freshness of outlook and ingenuity that we are only beginning to appreciate. There is no necessity to praise Sir Richard Terry for his share of the work—especially since, not having seen the original MSS., we do not know the full extent of our debt. Rather would we express our thanks for these new labours which will go some way towards substantiating the claim that chamber music began in this country in the Tudor era.

The printing is clear and neat. But we do wish the printers had not placed the first violin and 'cello parts on the front and back pages of the cover. This arrangement makes it impossible to give a part to each player without dividing the cover itself—or buying two copies of the work.

A French edition of a Bach Concerto suggests first and foremost the desire, widely felt during the war, of breaking away from the hegemony of German publishers, for, of course, there exist admirable German editions of these Concertos, and a few strokes of the pencil are all that are needed to change bowing or fingering. With the desire felt by the French and others to possess national editions we are in complete sympathy. Bach was a German, but since the copyright—even what might be called the 'moral' copyright, the acknowledgment of our indebtedness to Germany for giving birth to such a genius—expired long ago, there seems to be no reason why we or the French or the Russians should continue to pay toll to the publishers. At the same time it is originality of idea that tells, and there is not much to be said for a plan which simply replaces Prof. Saran (Breitkopf & Härtel) or Prof. Hermann (Peters) with Prof. Nadaud, of the Parisian Conservatoire Nationale de Musique, who is responsible for Messrs. Durand's new edition of Bach's Concerto in E. If Messrs. Durand had given us, for instance, the original of Bach unedited, they might have appealed to a wider public. In that case every performer and every teacher could have added marks, &c., at pleasure. In any case, bowing and other indications are a thing for the individual. There are no two players or teachers whose bowing and fingering are exactly alike. We find Prof. Nadaud's suggestions quite sound in the main. The different bowing in the first movement leaves us unconvinced. A group of notes is repeated on the second beat of the fourth bar, or the first and fourth of the fifth bar. Obviously it derives its point by appearing alternately on the weak and on the strong beats. To bow it differently is merely to distract the attention from the real point. Nor are we enamoured of after letter C (same movement), for this is clearly of a piece with the rest of the phrase which Prof. Nadaud has correctly bowed :

The break in the group of four notes can only make less effective the entry of the tutti with the staccato phrase. Apart from these considerations, however, the new edition is admirable, and quite equal to those we already possess.

Mr. Spencer Dyke's Violin Scale Book (Joseph Williams) does not purport to offer anything new or original, but it contains in the smallest possible compass all that the student needs to master this most important of all branches of violin technique. A short preface gives the student some sound advice. The warning against practising scales with various 'fingerings' is particularly timely, not only because all hands are not alike, and what suits Smith may not suit Jones, but also because the definite choice of one plan is of great help to the sight-reader who, confronted by a scale, need not pause to determine in which way it should be fingered, but just let the hand do its wonted exercise. Mr. Spencer Dyke leaves the bowing of the scales to the discretion of the player. We think he would have been wiser had he told the student that scales must be practised at the very least with staccato and legato bowing.

F. B.

CHURCH MUSIC

A setting of the Te Deum of outstanding merit recently issued by Novello is that by W. G. Alcock in the key of A. It was composed for the enthronement of the Lord Bishop of Salisbury in 1921. The Dean of Salisbury contributes some interesting prefatory remarks on the authorship of this great hymn, and comments with some detail on the three sections into which it falls, the hymn proper ending with 'Make them to be numbered with Thy saints in glory everlasting.' The verses that followed differed in the various Churches. Dr. Alcock has designed his work in accordance with these ideas, and has arranged for a full close—for use when sung as a Solemn Te Deum—at the words 'in glory everlasting.' For ordinary use, the verses that follow are set to music of a more subdued character, largely based on the second Gregorian Tone. The writing, both vocal and instrumental, is of a high order, and the composer is to be congratulated upon the production of a finely impressive work—one, moreover, well within the capabilities of the average parish church choir.

Another setting of the Te Deum which will probably appeal to many musicians issues from the Faith Press. Dr. Charles Wood has based his music chiefly on the settings by J. H. Schein and J. S. Bach of the German metrical form of the Ambrosian Chant, and the result under his skilful treatment is a straightforward, dignified work which will be particularly appreciated in places where more elaborate settings are either not wanted or are not possible.

The Benedictus, which is included under the same cover, is founded on the melody 'Quando Christus ascendit,' from Pie Cantiones, and forms a worthy companion to the Te Deum.

(Continued on page 342.)

In Memoriam, A. G. L.W., August 6th, 1923
Commandant of the Red Cross Hospital, Gloucester, 1914-1919

The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended
A SHORT HYMN-ANTHEM

Words by Rev. JOHN ELLERTON
(By permission)

Music by C. LEE WILLIAMS

LONDON: NOVELLO AND COMPANY, LIMITED; NEW YORK: THE H. W. GRAY CO., SOLE AGENTS FOR THE U.S.A.

ORGAN

Slow

p

RECIT. SOLO OR FULL

pp rall. dim. p

The day Thou gavest, Lord, is ended,

dim. p Slow. Recit. pp rall. dim. p

Adagio pp

The dark-ness falls at Thy be-hest; To Thee our

Adagio

lunga pp

cres. f dim. p

morn-ing hymns as-cend-ed, Thy praise shall sanc-ti-fy our rest.

cres. f dim. p

(senza Ped.)

Copyright, 1924, by Novello and Company, Limited

Con moto SOLO OR FULL mf

As o'er each

dim. p

con - ti - nent and is - land The dawn leads on an - o - - ther

p dim.

p

day, . . . The voice of prayer is nev - - er si - - lent,

Slower mf f

Nor dies the strain of praise a - way. . . .

Slower mf f

Ped.

Adagio. QUARTET (OR SEMI-CHORUS)
SOPRANO.

won - drous do - ings heard on high.
 won - drous do - ings heard on high.
 won - drous do - ings heard on high.
 won - drous do - ings heard on high.

p legato

( 3 )

Maestoso

So be it, Lord; Thy Throne shall

So be it, Lord; Thy Throne shall

So be it, Lord; Thy Throne shall

So be it, Lord; Thy Throne shall

Maestoso

cres. rall.

f

Ped. 32 ft.

nev - er, Like earth's proud em - pires, pass a - way;

nev - er, Like earth's proud em - pires, pass a - way;

nev - er, Like earth's proud em - pires pass, a - way;

nev - er, Like earth's proud em - pires, pass a - way;

ff

Con moto

Thy King - dom stands, and grows for ev - er, Till

Thy King - dom stands, and grows for ev - er, Till

Thy King - dom stands and grows for ev - er, Till

Thy King - dom stands, and grows for ev - er, Till

Con moto

p

f

Slower Adagio

all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway, . . . lunga till all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway, . . . lunga till all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway, . . . lunga till all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway, . . . lunga till

Slower*Adagio

all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway. . . . .

all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway. . . . .

all . . Thy crea - tures own . . Thy sway. . . . .

all . . Thy crea - tures own Thy sway. . . . .

(Continued from page 336.)

Choirs that have already made the acquaintance, and can appreciate the beauties, of the old polyphonic music will be interested in the publication by the Faith Press of three Carol Anthems. Palestrina's Shepherds lo! from the Orient is founded on Christe Redemptor Omnium, and is for three voices (S.A.T.). Under the same cover is included William Byrd's carol for Christmas Day, From Virgin pure, for unison singing and organ accompaniment. John Merbeck's A Virgin and Mother is also for three voices (S.A.B.), and has an independent organ part. Noël, by Eustache du Caurroy (1549-1609), is a very tuneful little work for four voices (S.A.T.B.) unaccompanied.

The Faith Press is to be commended for the latest additions to its Booklet Library—the Missa de Angelis and Merbeck's Communion Service. These little penny books are excellently got up, and should prove a boon where congregational singing is desired.

It is early yet to think of Nativity plays, but those who have such an object in view might well examine a copy of Stella Mundi, libretto by E. L. Oakden, and music written and arranged by Robert T. White (Faith Press). The play, we are told, is founded on the old 15th-century Scriptural plays, and is given a modern setting. It has been necessary to modernise the language of the old plays, but the incidents and general method of treatment have been preserved. The songs are either old hymns or carols, or are original. Dr. White has done his part admirably, and the music is of real interest, providing opportunities for the use of a well-balanced body of voices.

J. Stuart Archer's anthem, Come, ye children (Paxton), is a useful, well-written little work for S.A.T.B. and bass solo. It is quite easy.

F. W. Davenport's Stabat Mater (Novello) is for unaccompanied quartet (S.S.A.A.). It is an expressively written work, and may be commended to the notice of female-voice choirs.

For Advent or general use, Hugh Blair's anthem, Lord, Thou hast been our refuge (Novello) will be found useful. The composer has adapted the music from his cantata, Song of Deborah and Barak. It is quite simple, and, given a good choir and a large organ, the result should be impressive. G. G.

CHORAL MUSIC

A hopeful sign is the excellent quality of unison songs now being produced for school use. A batch from Novello shows great variety of style and a general high level of musical interest and effect. Geoffrey Shaw's A Tiny Calendar ('Which is the properest day to sing?') is a model in its way, with neat words (apparently an extension by the composer of an old fragment of rhyme), a singable tune, and a pianoforte part in which every one of the few notes tells. Alec Rowley is another composer who has the knack. His expressive setting of My Master hath a Garden is published under one cover with Mr. Shaw's song. The parcel contains four others from his fluent pen—A Song of bold Robin Hood (jolly 16th-century words set to a capital diatonic tune), A Hill Song, The Star Elf, and Windlass Song (a rousing affair that a good boy-choir would revel in). Ethel Boyce is yet another composer of school songs whose name is a guarantee of quality. She maintains her standard in Daffies and Tulips and The Tortoise. The familiar air, Or let the merry bells ring round, from Handel's L'Allegro, is now published as a number in the School Music Review series. It would make a fine song for a treble chorus. The original key of D is retained, so good high voices are needed. An edition in C might be less brilliant, but more generally useful. This truly delightful example of Handel's song-writing should be welcome. All the above are for unison singing.

Edgar Moy's Dream Island (Winthrop Rogers) and Adam Carse's My Lady Wind (Novello) are two attractive numbers for two-part treble chorus. Rutland Boughton's Piper's Song—already one of the most popular of two-part songs—has now been arranged by the composer for three voices, with pianoforte accompaniment, in which form it should make many new friends among fairly well advanced S.S.A. choirs (Novello). For the same combination John E. West has made an effective arrangement of Sullivan's Orpheus with his Lute (Novello). Frank Bridge's Golden Slumbers, for S.S.A., unaccompanied, gives fine scope for a choir with a good, expressive sostenuto. The same composer's Hence, care calls for rapid staccato singing, as well as long, holding notes. Both are published by Augener. There is a scarcity of really good music for T.T.B., so Weelkes's Ha, ha! this world doth pass is the more welcome. It is an arrangement by John E. West from one of Weelkes's Ayeres or Phantasticke Sprites. Lively singing is called for, and a sense of fun, for the words are mainly irresponsible nonsense. A good men's choir could bring down the house with it. A sustained and expressive song for T.T.B.B. is Alec Rowley's The Nightingale. Hamilton Clarke's humorous part-song, To the Audience, originally for S.A.T.B., has been arranged for T.T.B.B. These three numbers are issued by Novello.

A set of four three-part rounds consists of Purcell's I will not count, Byrd's Hey, ho, to the greenwood, Hilton's Come, follow me, and Greene's My pocket's low—all good examples of a peculiarly English type of work (Novello).

For mixed voices there are a number of good things. H. Elliot Button has transcribed Byrd's I joy not in no earthly bliss, for S.S.A.T.B., a moderately difficult example of the composer's work. W. H. Reed's My lady fell a-sighing contains some very effective and varied writing. It calls for a skilful choir. Dr. Vaughan Williams's arrangement for men's voices of the beautiful folk-song Bushes and Briars is well known. He has now made a version for S.A.T.B., so characteristic that it must not be judged by playing over on the pianoforte. Such 'fifthy' music must be sung, or played by strings. The above mixed-voice part-songs are issued by Novello.

From Edward Arnold come some good examples by Armstrong Gibbs—Come, sleep and I loved a lass; Edgar L. Bainton, To music; and George Dyson, Evening—all well written and attractive, and only moderately difficult. H. G.

SONGS

We have been so accustomed to seeing the exquisite old Willow Song (The poor soul sat sighing) made 'interesting' by well-meaning editors and arrangers that an actual transcription from the original looks forbiddingly bare at first sight. Here it is thus plainly set forth by Peter Warlock and Philip Wilson (Enoch), and we have only to sing and play a couple of verses in order to be convinced that these old songs are best with no pianistic or harmonic frills. It is yet another example of 'nature unadorned . . .' This beautiful revival is to be had in two keys—high and medium voice.

Maurice Besly's An Outward Sail has some happy touches, but as its climax is a scurry up and down the whole-tone scale its appeal will depend very much on whether we have exhausted the rather limited possibilities of that scale. A far more effective touch is the little group of pp fifths earlier on (Enoch).

There are two composers writing under the name of Easthope Martin. One helps on the steady supply of ballads, the other flies at higher game. The latter contributes to Enoch's 'Art Song Library' a setting of Wordsworth's familiar The Daffodils. The term 'Art Song' has not much to be said in its favour, but my chief quarrel with it is that composers seem to think that the label compels them to become elaborate and difficult. This song is a case in point. The little lyric is blown out into a vocal scena, effective in many ways, but not in the one way wanted—just here, i.e., as an expression of a little poem that, fine as it is, is above all simple and direct. In the same series is a setting by Mr. Martin of Masfield's Cargoes, and again the scheme is overloaded in various ways—especially in the harmony. I fancy the most satisfactory Easthope Martin will be found some day writing excellent songs that will come midway between these tumid 'art' efforts and such obvious things as Come to the Fair.

Cecil Hazlehurst's When June is come is another of Enoch's 'Art Songs.' It is a setting of a two-verse poem by Robert Bridges. Mr. Hazlehurst is refreshingly diatonic—there is not a single accidental until the final cadence. He writes a good flowing tune, with a rhythm that is never square. A good song this, and I fancy it would have been even better with a few notes less in the accompaniment.

A capital light touch is shown in Donald Ford's Little Shepherd (with pretty words by Gwladys Heddon). Specially charming is the treatment of the second verse. The song would suit a soprano or a good mezzo-soprano.

A Cradle Song by the same composer, despite a few obvious chromatic touches, is almost as good (mezzo-soprano). Both these songs are published by Murdoch.

Leslie Woodgate's Cherry Garden is yet another setting of Campion's There is a garden in her face. The composer seems to have taken Roger Quilter for his model, and has gone to that best of schools to good purpose. The singer has a genuine tune, the pianoforte part is full of interest, yet economical, and the harmony diatonic (medium voice). Mr. Woodgate's Wind flowers (words by Christina Rossetti—whose name is an 's' short on the cover) is a graceful song for high voice (Murdoch).

This is a day of revival and rescue of old music, and not all the salvage is worth the trouble. But a mass of charming old vocal music has been got together and edited by Gabriel Grovlez, in a collection entitled 'Les plus beaux airs de l'Opéra François,' published by Chester. There are forty-eight songs, in eight books, two books being allotted to each voice. The composers drawn on are Lully, Rameau, Destouches, Campra, Montéclair, Méhul, Grétry, Gossec, &c. The text is in French and English, the latter by Percy Pinkerton. It need hardly be said that the songs are better in the original tongue, but the English is more singable than such versions are wont to be. M. Grovlez has done his work with skill and taste. The interest and value of this fine collection, especially for students, needs no dwelling on.

From Cramer's comes a batch of songs by Martin Shaw—Ships of Yule, Annabel Lee, The Little Vagabond, Old Clothes and Fine Clothes, Full Fathom Five, London Town, and The Merry Wanderer. All are in the now happily familiar Shaw vein. My own choice of a good lot is Old Clothes and Fine Clothes and Full Fathom Five—the former being a striking setting of the capital verses by John Pride, and the latter giving us something new for Shakespeare's oft-set lines.

Last, here is a charming song by Clive Carey, in which all the fantasy of de la Mare's Melmidlo is expressed in the music without a hint of effort. A highish voice is needed, and a pianist with imagination and a neat finger. H. G.

The Musician's Bookshelf

My Years of Indiscretion. By Cyril Scott.

[London: Mills & Boon. 15s.]

Mr. Cyril Scott here unbends. He was once a very superior young person, fond of accusing his mother of being bourgeois (sic, p. 35). French grammar, by the way, is not Mr. Scott's strong point. He is English, and bourgeois enough to use and misuse foreign names when possible—thus, for Stravinsky's Rite of Spring, 'Le Sacré' (for Le Sacre) 'du Printemps.'

Mr. Scott some twenty-five years ago was an 'aesthetic' young composer—the Bunthorne, if we may say so, of English music. He was a counterpart of the end-of-the-century poets who sought to live in ivory towers. The less his music was understood by the vulgar world, the better he was satisfied. Elating as it was to hear Richter, the old bear, moved to exclaim:

Most original! Excellent—finely orchestrated—ho-ho, splendid harmonies. . . . I make you my compliment. I am glad to have found a new great work. I shall certainly perform it. . . .

Mr. Scott was a little depressed that he did not say:

Yes, I will give this suite a hearing; but, to be quite candid, it goes too far for me (p. 81).

Mr. Scott, in fact, in those early days of the 20th century walked down Piccadilly with a poppy or a lily in his mediæval hand. What a changed being is the author of these memoirs! Why, if it weren't for his wife, he would, he says, cut his hair short (p. 35). Sitting down in the quiet eventide of life—this volume is dateless, but the reference books tell us that Mr. Scott is forty-five—he foregoes any inclination to startle the middle classes. In writing his memoirs he has long put off preciousness as an old garment. He abjures any scrap of æsthetic coquetry. Instead of feeling now any depression if a Richter should manage to apprehend him, he writes a book calculated not to tax the meanest intelligence. Here is a pretty sight—the 'English Debussy' (see Grove) letting his pen amble along in the commonplace manner of the mob of our memoirists—ladies of fashion, big-game hunters, and Versailles peacemakers. The writing is loose and easy enough for the cheapest of magazines.

What feeble ephemerality this age of ours is perpetrating on good thick paper within stout bindings!

The complaisance of Mr. Scott leads him to give us an enumeration of his landladies. For the use of historians, he records of one:

I remember that while I was away on my summer holidays she took the opportunity to die, and I was left in ignorance of the event until after my return (p. 27).

Nor does Mr. Scott fail to record that his aged aunt and uncle, who lived at Clapham, both dyed their hair (p. 45). Again, we are left in no doubt of Mr. Scott's sentiments for a Miss Roosevelt, met during a Paris holiday:

To express myself tersely, I should say that I began by thinking myself in love with Maudie, and ended by loving her (p. 107).

Mr. Scott must be done this justice: he sets down nothing in malice. He 'gives away' Mr. Percy Grainger:

I have seen him polish off ten Berlin pancakes for his tea alone, and without noticeably bad results.

One of Mr. Bertram Binyon's 'great stunts' is the impersonation of Queen Victoria:

... with sleeves rolled up, a napkin on his head surmounted by an inverted brass receptacle, and a shawl thrown across his large person.

Of Mr. Josef Holbrooke, the tale is told that before a war-time performance of one of his String Quartets he stood up and obligingly warned the audience (within earshot of the players):

You're in for a very scratch performance. However, as most of you have been in the trenches and have managed to stand that, I suppose you can pretty well stand anything.

Lord Howard de Walden is reported as saying:

I am genuinely attached to Joseph—he is the only person who can still annoy me.

Debussy

... was neither an unpleasant personality nor an impressive one. I think he was one of those few Frenchmen who sacrifice French politeness to sincerity.

The rather absurd analogies so frequently drawn between Debussy's and Mr. Scott's music have very naturally tried our author's patience. Mr. Scott likes Pelléas least of Debussy's compositions:

The incessant repetition of two-bar phrases is manneristic and aggravating, and the opera, taken in its entirety, is monotonous, and not to be endured to its conclusion.

Max Reger is one of the few personages to receive a bad mark from our gentle author. Reger

... was a most repulsive type of Bavarian, with a very fat body, flat feet, and a parchment-coloured face. His manners were in keeping with his appearance—loud, blustering, and aggressive, especially when under the influence of alcohol.

But most of the people Mr. Scott has met have been pleasant; nor have circumstances been less kind. Richter conducted one of his student works; Kreisler played in an early String Quartet; and publishers, both English and German, stretched out their hands for his manuscripts. All doors opened with delightful readiness, including those of boudoirs boasting signed photographs of King Edward VII. Finally, he is lionised by the North American Continent—the modern musician's apotheosis.

Stay a moment—are we right in setting down Mr. Scott's book as artless twaddle? Is it not perhaps a very delicately artistic performance to have written an account of such a triumphant career without a suspicion of arrogance or boasting self-conceit? C.

A History of Violin-Playing. By J. W. Wasielewski and Andreas Moser.

[Max Hesse.]

It is rather singular to find a history of violin-playing closing with the well-known verses from Die Meistersinger extolling 'holy German art.' It is so, because history is the very science to prove that art in general—and the art of violin-playing in particular—is never particularly 'holy' nor exclusively German. No one could wish to belittle German achievement. Some of us owe our training to German masters, and we all owe a great debt to German composers, German performers, and German writers. The history of the violin has found, so far, no other such industrious exponents as J. W. Wasielewski and Andreas Moser, whose volume is the subject of the present review. No other country has produced works which can compare for amount of information and thoroughness of research with Die Geige und Ihre Meister and the present Geschichte des Violinspiels of Moser, which completes at many points the work of Wasielewski. But while we freely acknowledge our debt, we naturally expect others to do likewise. There is surely no loss of dignity, no attempt to attack the sovereign rights of the State, in admitting that we are bound to our neighbours? It is one of the commonplaces of musical history that the most 'national' schools are those which, consciously or unconsciously, owe most to others. The little cock-crow at the end of Die Meistersinger was enough to start nationalism all over Europe—in Russia, in France, in Italy; Russians inspired by the example of Germany; Frenchmen owing much to Russians; Italians, who, scouting the truly national Verdi, turned to French ideals and French models.

Violin playing was dominated in the 18th century by the Italian school; then came the Franco-Belgian schools with Baillot, Kreutzer, and Vieuxtemps. Lastly, there came the Germans with Ernst, Spohr, and Joachim. The modern violinist owes an equal debt to them all, and it is fortunate that in dealing with the past, Moser has been quite unprejudiced by national considerations. In his well-considered pages we meet not only the great whose names have become household words, but others besides who passed without leaving enduring memory, known only to historians—men whose life-story should read like a tale of adventure. What, for instance, do we know of Walter Rowe, one of the two 'Engelländischen Geigern' who sought and won recognition in Germany in the 17th century, or of John Spencer, who was with the two Rowes at the Berlin Court in 1614; or of John Price, the 'Kammermusikdirektor' at Dresden? John Dowland is known to-day, thanks to the revival of interest in old music, but of William Brade, founder of the Hanseatic School of violin-playing, who died at Hamburg in 1630, even his birthplace is unknown.

Certain features of 18th-century music point to a distinctly un-national standard. At least some quotations in Moser's book are extremely suggestive. The characteristic figure in Bach's Concerto in A :

has a counterpart in Vivaldi's :

The famous theme of Bach's E major concerto :

is matched to some extent in Vivaldi's Concerto in E minor (Il Favorito) :

Moser says that some 'lordly' Larghi of Vivaldi might have served to pave the way for the famous Aria of Bach, and he quotes a theme that would not be out of place in Haydn's Quartets. The theme in question is :

and there is no need to go out of the way to see its relation to the tune of John Collett's charming Sonata :

which, by the way, loses half its force by not being phrased (in its present edition) like the Vivaldi quotation. Collett, however, is unknown to Moser. He is otherwise well informed as regards the England of the past. Modern England, according to him, has only one violinist worthy of mention—Miss May Harrison. All others are ignored—even those who, like Mr. Rawdon Briggs, sometime leader of the Hallé Orchestra, studied with Joachim. This is one of the chapters which need to be revised if the work is ever to achieve—as it should—international importance. And, in our opinion, the paragraphs devoted to Paganini could also be extended with advantage—for Paganini to most of us moderns is a myth, and the many opinions of eminent musicians do not wholly succeed in re-creating the living figure of this extraordinary being. But in all that concerns the past, Moser's work is the most illuminating thing of its kind we have so far seen. B. V.

Crotchets. By Percy A. Scholes.

[The Bodley Head, 7s. 6d.]

Mr. Scholes's choice of a title does him and his book injustice. It suggests the kind of crotchet that is kin to fads, bees in bonnets, to say nothing of bats in belfries. But Mr. Scholes is not a bit like that. There is no more common-sense writer on music to-day, and none that has the ear of the many-headed to such an extent. For that reason he has done well to rescue and issue in book-form a big batch of his Observer articles. (But I like his cover no more than his title. Few books call for dead black boards with white lettering, and this is not one of them.) Mr. Scholes has improved on the practice of most writers who re-issue newspaper articles. As a rule such collections are pitchforked together; here they are grouped into sets of three or four under a common title. In one respect, however, he succumbs to the usual lazy convention: he has done too little revision. A note tells us that the essays have undergone 'slight alteration.' Why only 'slight'? Surely the material turned out weekly would gain enormously in its book-form if a good deal of it were drastically pruned and recast—even developed in some cases. The limitations of the weekly article often lead to the mere starting of a hare; re-issue in book-form gives the author time and space to go after that hare to some purpose. A case in point is the article headed 'Shall we reconsider Wolf?' Mr. Scholes asks the question and begins to make out a case for his suspicion—shared by a lot of us—that Wolf is over-rated. He gets on well for four pages, and then, of course, his weekly space gives out. A few lines short of the end he says, 'Have I made out a case for the reconsideration of Wolf?' and (evidently assuming that a chorus of 'Yes' arose from recumbent Sunday afternoon forms) adds, 'Then let us reconsider him.' And doesn't do so—at all events, in print, which is where we want our critics to do their considering, and even more their reconsidering. He should have carried on for a week or two more, or, better still, have settled down to the job in this book. Meanwhile the hungry sheep look up and are given no more than a sniff. 'Shall we eat?' asks Mr. Scholes. . . . 'Then let us eat,' and whisks the joint away.

I think, too, that certain controversial chapters should have been omitted or recast. In a dispute carried on in the columns of a journal from week to week, or even from month to month, the readers hear both sides from start to finish, whereas if one of the disputants reprints his side of the tussle, the result is hardly fair to his opponent. For example, in the chapters on Stravinsky we get the whole of Mr. Scholes's side, but Mr. Edwin Evans's arguments mostly appear in the form of brief quotations, put up to be knocked down. This is not Mr. Scholes's fault, of course; it is the inevitable result of reprinting one side of a controversy. When the dispute was going on we all held the ring. Here there is no ring: we are back in the dressing-room with a flushed Mr. Scholes reproducing his side of the fight. Similarly, the chapter headed, 'The Music or the Making,' consists of his side of the dispute with the present writer as to whether a fine piece of music can be made out of poor themes. I thought the point had long ago been settled by most of the great composers, and nothing in this chapter alters my view. And I still cannot regard the opening themes of the Eroica and fifth Symphonies as anything but poor, and both very little better than the weak alternative versions quoted by Mr. Scholes. Try to imagine a person who had never heard the fifth Symphony; play the little motto-theme to him, and ask him what he thinks of it as a musical subject. He will say, 'That a subject? It is merely a cuckoo with a bad stutter!' And he is right. Then let him hear what Beethoven does with it; he will take off his hat and say that those four notes will never again remind him of a cuckoo. He will be at a loss to say what they will remind him of until you mention Fate knocking at the Door, after which the postman need only double his rat-tat in order to send his mind back to the fifth Symphony. If this transfiguration of a major third into a masterpiece and of the postman into Fate is not a sufficient answer to Mr. Scholes's question, I don't know where to look for a better, though I could easily find a good many to run it close.

One other point, and only one. Mr. Scholes says: 'A stream does not rise higher than its fount, and the derivatives of a theme are not likely to be better than the theme itself.' The analogy breaks down every time we draw water from a tap, for we see that, given due pressure, water does so rise. And in music the genius of the composer supplies the pressure that makes a mere scrap of a theme into a towering edifice of sound. If Mr. Scholes wants to see a derivative improving on its origin, he need only look at this example from the movement we are discussing:

And this from the Scherzo:

Aren't these derivatives better than the stuttering cuckoo-call? I should like to develop this point, and also to say something about Mr. Scholes's comments on the Bach Toccata in F, but it suddenly occurs to me that this set out to be a short review, not a long article. I must now do no more than heartily commend this book to the reader's notice, though I can imagine few books that need it less, seeing that Mr. Scholes has so large a public ready to eat out of his hand. Those who have already had this fare in weekly doses will enjoy it again in rechauffé.

The essays number fifty-four, and they cover a variety of subjects, almost all of as much interest to-day as they were a year ago; a good many of them will be topical for a long while yet. Mr. Scholes's happy knack of exposition is nowhere better or more profitably shown than in these discussions of many of the everyday problems of music. As the solution of some of these problems lies with the crowd rather than with the professional musician, it is all to the good that they should be discussed in a volume so notable for its clearness and good sense. H. G.

In our review of Frank Thistleton's The Art of Violin Playing, in the March Musical Times, the book was said to be issued by 'The Strand Library.' This was a slip. For 'Strand' read 'Strad.'

A programme of great variety and interest is announced by the Novello Choir for its concert at Bishopsgate Institute on April 10, at 8 p.m. There will be madrigals by Bateson, Benet, Edwards, Gibbons, Tomkins, and Wilbye; part-songs by Elgar, Ireland, McEwen, Pearsall, Pointer, Shaw, Stanford, and West, and songs by Elizabethan composers, by Delius, Gibbs, Hamilton Harty, Ireland, McNaught, Parry, and—all alone among this British battalion—Mozart. The soloist will be Miss Dorothy Robson, and Mr. Harold Brooke will conduct.

Church and Organ Music

ROYAL COLLEGE OF ORGANISTS

LECTURES ON CHOIR-TRAINING

Candidates for the Examination in Choir-Training, and all members of the College, are cordially invited to attend the following lectures:

Monday, May 12, 1924, at 2.0 p.m., Mr. Sydney H. Nicholson, M.A., Mus. Bac. Subject, 'Congregational Singing.'

At 5.30 p.m., Mr. E. T. Cook, Mus. Bac. Subject, 'Plainsong.'

Tuesday, May 13, at 3 p.m., Dr. Ernest Bullock. Subject, 'Practical Choir-Training.'

At 5.30 p.m., Dr. W. A. Aikin. Subject, 'The Voice.'

F.R.C.O. (CHM.); A.R.C.O. (CHM.)

The Examinations in the above diploma will be held at the College.

On Wednesday, May 14, at 10 p.m.—Paper work;
On Thursday, May 15, at 10 p.m.—Viva-voce and Practical work.

Last day of entry, Monday, April 14, 1924.

H. A. HARDING, Hon. Secretary.

A WOLSTENHOLME RECITAL

On Thursday, March 13, at 6.30 p.m., a recital was given at Westminster Cathedral by Mr. William Wolstenholme. As we hoped and expected, the programme included a selection from his published works and an Improvisation in Sonata Form on themes submitted at the recital. These are what many of us wanted specially to hear, and we were rewarded by a remarkably clever—even brilliant—performance. Contact with the classics was made in Bach's Fantasia in G, in the five-part Grave middle section of which, played at a very deliberate pace, the fine Great diapasons and magnificent Pedal organ were heard to full advantage. A Menuet Antique by Watling should become popular. Franck's Prelude, Fugue, and Variation was adequately rendered, and calls for no special comment. Mr. Wolstenholme's registration, if more or less conventional, was sound throughout. A Pastoral in C, which deserves to be better known than it seems to be, belongs to the maturer Wolstenholme, and is notable for a very striking use of extended pedal point. His Festival Toccata in B flat proved to be a very optimistic number. The extempore Sonata was Wolstenholme at his best—and higher praise could not well be found. Two decidedly difficult themes were handled and interwoven with great skill, in a straightforward Allegro and a playful Scherzo. Benedicamus Domino ('Solemn Feasts') was used, very happily, as the main theme of the Finale. The 30-in. Tuba Magna was not used by the recitalist until the final chord of the last item—exemplary restraint! G. S.

ANOTHER FINE RECORD OF SERVICE

Mr. Thomas Manson has been presented with an illuminated address and a wallet of treasury notes in appreciation of his services to the musical life of Lerwick, Shetland Islands. Mr. Manson's chief activities have been in connection with the Lerwick Musical Society, of which he was conductor, and the Parish Church. He has held the post of organist and choirmaster at Lerwick for forty-three years, and is still in office. As an example of zeal hard to beat, we may mention that Mr. Manson once played at every service without break for seven years.

CHARLES WILLIAM PERKINS

Mr. C. W. Perkins, who retired last year from the Birmingham Town Hall organistship, at the age of sixty-eight, held but three posts during his many years of a musical life. He was born at Birmingham in 1855, and so late as 1875 was still intending to follow a business career. But music, which he had studied from childhood, called him too strongly, and so, when for some time he had been organist of the Swedenborgian Church in Wretham Road, Handsworth, Birmingham, he gave up his business occupations. After twelve years at this Church, he removed to

MR. C. W. PERKINS

St. Michael's, Paddington, remaining there for four years (1884-88). His appointment to the post at Birmingham Town Hall fell in the year 1888, and he retained it for thirty-five years. For personal reasons the authorities allowed him to remain in office after the usual time of retiring. During the war he acted as organist for a while at Carr's Lane Chapel; but as this was only a temporary and provisional matter, the fact still remains that, for fifty-one years, he occupied but three positions. For all the years of his municipal appointment, however, Mr. Perkins was a busy recitalist, being the favourite opener of new organs in a country far wider than the Midlands. He was also a favourite in high social circles, warmly regarded by the late King Edward, and playing frequently as a guest at Blenheim and Gopsall. He met the German Emperor on one of these visits, and the latter was so pleased with his playing that he invited him to Berlin to play a programme of his (the Emperor's) own choosing! This programme included the Prelude to Gerontius, the D minor Sonata of Mendelssohn, the Prelude to Act 3 of The Mastersingers, and the big Prelude and Fugue in C of Bach (Breitkopf Ed., vol. i.). Mr. Perkins was proud of these associations with royalties, but only with the artist's pride that the art he represented should be thus noticed. He says that the King and the Emperor both spoke intelligently about organ music and organ playing. His ideals were high, clap-trap organ stunts being one of the few things that could move him to anger. His qualities of modesty, sincerity, and steadfastness won him a rare position at Birmingham, and his moral influence was always great. If Mr. Perkins approved of a matter, the matter was more than half assured of successful development, because of the pressure exerted by his character. The Town Hall post was accompanied by a salary of only £150, plus whatever engagements came the way of its holder. Thus Mr. Perkins retired after a life-time which absorbed each year what the year brought forth financially. It became known that he was not free from financial anxiety, and by various means a useful sum was gathered together by some Birmingham musicians, with which a small annuity was purchased for him. S. G.

THE NEW BIRMINGHAM CITY ORGANIST

Mr. G. D. Cunningham, who succeeds Mr. Perkins as City organist at Birmingham, is well-known in London, having been for some years organist at Alexandra Palace, and a popular recitalist in church and concert-hall. He was born in London, and was a student at the Guildhall School of Music, and later at the R.A.M., where he held the Henry Smart Scholarship. At the Academy he was a frequent prize-winner. He took his R.C.O. Fellowship at the early age of eighteen. He is a Professor at the R.A.M. and an Examiner for the Associated Board. A few years ago he was appointed to St. Alban's, Holborn. Mr. Cunningham has long been recognised as one of our finest English players. If a personal note be not out of place, I may mention two performances of his that stand out in my memory—the first at Alexandra Palace, some twenty years ago, when, as a prelude to a performance of the B minor Mass, he played the Bach Passacaglia in masterly style; the second about a year ago, when, dropping in casually at Bishopsgate Institute one mid-day, I was just in time to hear him give the finest performance I have yet heard of the Reubke Fugue. It happened to be at the time when the Dupré boom was at its height, and I well remember wondering whether the brilliant Frenchman could excel the Englishman in this particular work. (The comparison can never be made, of course, for, like his compatriots, Dupré plays nothing but Bach and a limited range of French music.) Birmingham has made an excellent choice, and lovers of fine organ playing in the Midlands will find that such good times as they have had in the past will be at least maintained in the future. H. G.

Photo by

[Swaine, 146, New Bond Street, W.]

MR. G. D. CUNNINGHAM

The St. Alban's Bach Choir will sing the St. Matthew Passion at St. Alban's Abbey on April 8 in the evening (we have no more exact news as to time).

Bach's St. John Passion will be sung at St. Stephen's, Bow, on Palm Sunday, at 6.30, and on Good Friday at 8.

At Southwark Cathedral, on April 5, at 3, the St. Matthew Passion will be performed. The London Symphony Orchestra will assist.

Messrs. Rushworth & Dreaper have recently built an organ for the Dutch Reformed Church, Fransch Hoek, South Africa. It is a two-manual of eleven stops.

ORGAN RECITALS

- Mr. Cyril S. Christopher, Wretham Road Church, Handsworth—Introduction and Fugue in D flat, Rheinberger; Scherzo in A flat, Bairstow; Largo ('New World' Symphony); Prelude and Fugue on B A C H, Liszt; Finale (Symphony No. 6), Widor.
- Mr. Herbert F. Ellingford, St. Giles's Cathedral—Pièce Héroïque, Frank; Passacaglia, Reger.
- Mr. Percy G. Saunders, Great Ilford Parish Church—Elegy, Parry; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Allegro and Allegro Moderato (Sonata No. 1), Bach; Fantasia, Saint-Saëns.
- Mr. H. Cyril Robinson, St. John's, Barmouth—Two Trumpet Tunes, Purcell; Choral Preludes by Parry and Vaughan Williams.
- Mr. Albert Orton, St. Anne's, Soho—Four Bach programmes, one of which follows: Prelude and Fugue in C minor, Four Chorale Preludes, Toccata in F, Trio in D minor, Prelude and Fugue in C major, Fantasia in G major.
- Mr. H. S. Wéalé, Westminster Cathedral—Toccata, Adagio, and Fugue in C, Bach; Three Choral Improvisations, Karg-Elert; Sonata in C sharp minor, Harwood; Passacaglia in D minor, Reger; Symphony No. 6, Widor.
- Mr. Frank Bevers, Wesleyan Church, Batley—Overture in C minor, Fricker; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Preludes on 'Eventide' and 'Old 104th,' Parry.
- Mr. H. T. Gilberthorpe, St. Paul's, Starcross—Overture to the 'Occasional' Oratorio; Adagio and Allegro Fugato, Stanley; Postlude, Lloyd.
- Mr. F. J. Livesey, St. John's, Cleator Moor—Sonata No. 4, Mendelssohn; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Prelude and Fugue in E flat, Saint-Saëns; Divertissement, Vierne.
- Mr. G. H. Cole, St. Edward's, Roath—Fantasia and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Cantilène, Wolstenholme; Intermezzo, Hollins.
- Mr. Norman Cocker, Manchester Cathedral—Allegretto from Sonata, Elgar; Choral No. 3, Frank; Scherzo (Symphony No. 2), Vierne.
- Mr. G. W. Harris Sellick, St. Mary Magdalene, Ashton-upon-Mersey—Trio (Sonata No. 2), Bach; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow; Sonata No. 1, Harwood; Choral No. 3, Frank; 'Ronde Française,' Boëllmann.
- Dr. E. C. Bairstow, Manchester Cathedral—Overture to 'Athaliah,' Handel; Andante from String Quintet, Mozart; Prelude and Fugue in B minor, Bach; Chorale Preludes by Charles Wood, Bairstow, Bach, and Karg-Elert.
- Dr. Chastey Hector, Brighton Parish Church—Sonata No. 2, Borowski; Andante Cantabile, Tchaikovsky; Grand Chœur in G minor, Hollins. (Choruses by choir-boys: Nicholson's 'Be strong in the Lord'; 'Let the bright Seraphim'.)
- Mr. D. E. Roberts, St. Andrew's Cathedral, Inverness—Chorale Prelude, 'Lord Jesus Christ, unto us turn,' Bach; Allegro and Intermezzo (Symphony No. 6), Widor; Toccata-Prelude on 'Pange Lingua,' Bairstow.
- Dr. William Prendergast, Winchester Cathedral—Andante in E minor, S. S. Wesley; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank; 'In modo Dorico,' Stanford; Finale (Symphony No. 2), Widor.
- Mr. Arthur Sharp, St. George's, Altrincham—Toccata (Symphony No. 4), Widor; Two Choral Preludes, Brahms; Pastoral, Ravel.
- Mr. Harold M. Dawber, Hope Congregational Church—Trumpet Tune and Air, Purcell; Three Chorale Preludes, Bach; Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Bach; Caprice and Cradle Song, Grace; Introduction and Fugue, Reubke.

Mr. Henry Riding, St. Saviour's, Ealing—Concerto in G minor, Camidge; Elegy, Parry; Fantasia on a Christmas Hymn, G. P. Allen.

Mr. William Robson, All Saints', Preston-on-Tees—Fantaisie and Fugue in G minor, Bach; Postlude in G minor, Stanford; Prelude, Fugue, and Variation, Frank.

Mr. C. E. Jarvis, Eastham Parish Church—Two Chorale Preludes, Bach; Allegro maestoso (Sonata in G), Elgar; March for a Church Festival, Best.

Mr. Norman Collie, St. Michael's, Chester Square—Variations on an Original Theme, Archer; Suite, Arensky.

Mr. W. Hunt, St. George's, Belfast—Psalm-Prelude, Howells; Final in B flat, Frank.

Mr. W. G. Breach, St. John's, Clapham—Choral Prelude, 'All glory, laud, and honour,' Bach; An Irish Fantasy, Wolstenholme.

Mr. Norman W. Newell, St. Martin's, Potternewton, Leeds—Three Psalm-Preludes, Howells; Sonata No. 6, Rheinberger; Finale, Frank.

Mr. H. E. Wall, St. Matthew's, West Kensington—Sonata No. 3, Mendelssohn; Prelude and Fugue in F minor, Bach; 'Bohemesque,' Wolstenholme.

Mr. E. T. Cook, Christ Church, Westminster—Fugue in E flat, Bach; Preludes on 'University' and 'Martyrs,' Grace; Minuet, Ravel; Sonata in A minor, Rheinberger.

Mr. W. Greenhouse Allt, St. Giles's Cathedral (two recitals)—Bénédiction Nuptiale, Saint-Saëns; Pax Vobiscum, Karg-Elert; Prelude on 'St. Michael,' West; 'Cathedral Windows,' Karg-Elert; Finale (Symphony No. 3), Vierne; 'Song of Symeon,' Charles Wood.

Mr. Philip Miles, All Saints', Eastbourne—A Frank programme: Choral No. 3, Pastoral, Pièce Héroïque, Fantaisie, Cantabile in B, Final in B flat.

Miss E. Bowman, Barony Parish Church, Glasgow—Prelude and Fugue in G, Bach; Toccata-Prelude, Stanford; Choral No. 3, Frank.

Mr. F. C. J. Swanton, Blackrock Methodist Church—Chorale Preludes by Parry, Bach, and Vaughan Williams; Bridal March and Finale ('Birds of Aristophanes'), Parry.

Mr. H. Moreton, Exeter Cathedral—Overture in C, T. Adams; 'Paulus,' O. Malling; Finale, 'Verdun,' Stanford.

Dr. M. P. Conway, St. Mary Redcliffe—Introduction and Fugue (Sonata No. 7), Rheinberger; Three Preludes from the 'Little Organ Book,' Bach; Allegretto from Sonata in G, Elgar.

Mr. Herbert Hodge, St. Mary-le-Bow, Cheapside—Andante (Sonata No. 4), Bach; Air with Variations and Finale in A, Lyon; Sonata in B flat, Mendelssohn.

APPOINTMENT

Mr. Alfred E. Dawes, organist and choirmaster, St. George's Presbyterian Church, Blackburn.

Letters to the Editor

THE PRACTICAL SIDE OF CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

SIR,—I hope it will not be thought that I am of those who resent criticism—the author who cannot stand criticism should not submit his works for review—but I fear that certain remarks in the lengthy notice you so kindly accorded my book The Music of the Congregation, in the Musical Times for January, must have conveyed to your readers an entirely wrong impression of my conclusions on the points in question. I trust that in justice to myself you will allow me a little space by way of explanation.

(I.) In alluding to plainsong tones you state, 'He says the plainsong tones are monotonous.' I have not made any such statement, which, had I done so, would have given your readers justifiable reason for considering me prejudiced in my treatment of the subject dealt with. My words are, 'what to some people may seem monotonous.'

(2.) You say, 'Mr. Fleming exaggerates the difficulty of free-rhythm hymn-tunes.' Dear Mr. Editor, Where? The very nearest I have approached to anything of the kind is my statement that the elasticity of free-rhythm 'is not invariably a factor making for facility of rendering,' and I have gone so far as to add that 'in the wealth of free-rhythm music is to be found a not inconsiderable proportion well adapted for congregational rendering.'

(3.) I find, of course, no fault with your disagreeing with me in the matter of allowing ample time for the congregation to rise between the playing-over and the start of the hymns, but your notice continues (and I entirely agree with the statement), 'there is nothing more fatal to good attack than vague waits between verses,' which is bound to suggest that I condone the practice, whereas I have devoted nearly a whole page to a consideration of the rules by which it may be avoided.

May I add that I welcome such other criticisms as are contained in your review, even though they are somewhat at variance with my own experience, which, extending over a period of more than forty years, embraces the methods employed in the German and Swiss churches, several English churches in those countries, Ireland, every possible type of church in England, New York, Oregon, and Southern California, and nearly every kind of church in Canada, even down to little churches on the far western Pacific coast. Judging by what is heard in various churches even where the music is in charge of highly competent organists, there would seem to exist great diversity of opinion upon many technical points connected with congregational singing, and these, in my opinion, might profitably be discussed at the meetings of our organists' associations up and down the country as well as in the musical and ecclesiastical press.—Yours, &c.,

20, Woodmead Road,                      GEORGE T. FLEMING.
Lyme Regis.

['H. G.,' our reviewer, writes: 'Mr. Fleming quotes little bits of the review in such a way that I did not recognise my handiwork until I turned up the article in the January Musical Times. Thus, I am alleged to have stated that Mr. Fleming "says the plainsong tones are monotonous," whereas I wrote, "he says the plainsong tones are monotonous because the reciting note is the same in both halves of the verse." This sentence is based on Mr. Fleming's remark (p. 15) as to "an inherent drawback in plainsong" being "the rigidity of the pitch of the reciting note, which remains the same, not only for every verse, but for both halves of each verse." I fail to see that my paraphrase of this did Mr. Fleming injustice.

'(2.) My feeling that Mr. Fleming exaggerates the difficulty of free-rhythm hymn-tunes was induced by a careful reading of pp. 10 and 11. I have heard many such tunes sung heartily by average congregations, whereas Mr. Fleming writes as if he had not, and rarely expected to.

'(3.) Here again Mr. Fleming does not quote enough. What I wrote was: "In a service where there is no conductor, nothing is more irritating and fatal to good attack than vague waits between verses, or after introductions of any kind," and if the playing-over is not a kind of introduction, I don't understand plain English. I did not wish to suggest that Mr. Fleming "condoned" waits between verses, but since he has raised the point, I cannot refrain from reminding him that he says (p. 55) that the "playing of the first note in advance of the rest of the chord . . . is often necessary in the accompaniment of the congregation." I can imagine nothing more likely to lead to "vague waits between verses" than such a practice. I agree with Mr. Fleming that our organists' associations might well discuss these technical points in the conduct of a church service.']

NEGLECT OF HANDEL

SIR,—A number of your correspondents have written querulously of late in regard to the present deplorable neglect of Handel, and Mr. W. Harold Pearce, writing in the January issue, calls for reasons. I venture to think that one reason at least is not far to seek.

During the last century there befel Handel a dire and cruel calamity which seems almost irretrievably to have ruined his fame, and is largely responsible for the cloud of prejudice and misunderstanding which at present eclipses his glory. This disaster was—his adoption by the Church of England. He was claimed as the exclusive and peculiar property of the Church, and forthwith poor, genial, magnanimous, universally tolerant, deliciously profane, gloriously great Handel was enveloped in the odour of sanctity, planted on a pious pedestal, and paraded before the multitude as one who had dedicated his art and devoted his labours to the propagation of the Gospel!

The artist having been thus successfully kidnapped and disguised, the Little-Bethel minds of the period proceeded to misappropriate and convert to their own purposes the wonderful legacy of beauty which Handel had bequeathed to the world, and to distort and misrepresent the same to the best of their ability. The tradition was established of performing the oratorios in a rigid and 'churchy' manner, which stifled and suppressed all the poetry, the colour, the humour, the sympathy with mankind and nature, the artfully-drawn contrasts, the delicate landscapes and vignettes, and the thousands of subtle designs and effects with which the golden pages of the master teem. His irresistibly voluptuous love-songs and his lovely and romantic Italian airs were forced into unholy and unnatural unions with hymns and psalms and songs of praise, Dove sono becoming Holy, holy, Ombra mai fu becoming O heavenly rest, and Rend' il sereno being transmuted (O monstrous iniquity!) into Lord, remember David—and so ad infinitum. In short, such of his music as was not ruthlessly jettisoned became invested (or shall we say infested?) with a sickly Sabbath-day, death-bed repentance flavour, utterly foreign and repugnant to its original style, spirit, and design.

The disease having been diagnosed, it remains to consider the remedy, which, it is submitted, is briefly this: Utterly to sweep away into outer darkness all the cumbrous and suffocating tradition of ages, and to survey our Handel anew from an entirely fresh aspect; to approach his works with those memorable words of Mr. R. A. Streatfeild steadfastly borne in mind ('Handel the preacher is laid for ever in his tomb, but Handel the artist, with his all-embracing sympathy for human beings and his delight in the world around him, lives for evermore'); and to recognise fully that those great oratorios of his are either noble musical epics or mighty musical dramas: they are not, and never were, the pitiful musical tin tabernacles to which the 19th century endeavoured to reduce them.

If, in this frame of mind, we apply ourselves diligently to the study of the works, vocal and instrumental, of the great Saxon, we shall find, I verily believe, that he is not so unworthy a place in the sun with Bach, as some of us are inclined at present to imagine. If we truly seek Handel, we shall find him in the chivalric and flashing gallantry of Rinaldo, in the magic gardens of Alcina, in the poignant accents of the dying Bajazet, in the delicious pastoral scenery of Acis, the dazzling Oriental splendour of Solomon, the tender, intimate idyll of Theodora, the classic and pagan graces of Semele, the alternate comedy and tragedy of Saul, the sublime pathos of Hercules, the manifold enchantments of the Concerti Grossi, the wondrous poetry and supreme imaginative power of The Messiah, and in countless other of the works of this neglected wizard, whose spells, would we but allow him to weave them in his own way, would prove as potent and as enduringly delightful as those of any of the immortal geniuses who have 'found out musical tunes.'—Yours, &c.,

HERBERT S. BROWN.

Deal, Kent.

RHEINBERGER AND ENGLAND

SIR,—Mr. Harvey Grace's interesting articles on 'Rheinberger's Organ Sonatas' recall to me a conversation I had with the distinguished composer at a restaurant near the Munich Conservatorium in the spring of 1898. After a few questions concerning music in England, he said he felt very much flattered at the kind reception of his organ works among English cultured people, but he was rather surprised his orchestral and choral pieces had not received an equal share of attention. I was on the point of replying, 'Because your Organ Sonatas are your best works,' but fortunately I had been warned by the restaurant proprietor that Rheinberger was easily offended, and was very abrupt (owing to continuous ill-health) with strangers and recent acquaintances. So I said, 'Organists of the Church of England are among the leaders of musical life in Great Britain, and organ sonatas are comparatively easily introduced to the public.' 'That is a very good reply,' said Rheinberger, 'but it does not explain the omission of my ecclesiastical works from the churches and concert-rooms.' 'Your works of this kind are composed entirely for the Roman Catholic service,' I pointed out to him, 'and the musical resources of the Roman Church in England are limited owing to lack of funds.' Rheinberger gradually perceived this when I explained the makeshifts—amateur and poorly paid organists and harmonium players, and voluntary mixed men and women, boy and girl choirs—of the majority of the Catholic churches. He laughed heartily at this, and said, 'Perhaps things will improve in another half-a-century, when my choral works are forgotten.' Rheinberger likewise said he personally believed he was partly responsible for the extremely rare performances of his orchestral and chamber works at concerts in England. Hans von Bülow told him several times that he should have visited England to conduct performances of his own works, and he had refused invitations from Charles Hallé and August Manns. But chronic lung trouble, his teaching connection, and his duties of musical inspector in Bavaria, always prevented his doing so. His wife, Frau von Hoffness (née Fräulein Jägerhüber), a well-known authoress and singer, was, however, no stranger to England, and she often visited Thomas Carlyle and his wife at Chelsea before her marriage to Josef Gabriel Rheinberger. She was seventeen years older than her second husband, the composer, but the restaurant proprietor told me it was a very happy union. Rheinberger never completely recovered from the shock of her death nine years before his own.—Yours, &c.,

ANDREW DE TERNANT.

36, Somerleyton Road, S.W.9.

THE NEGLECT OF WIDOR

SIR,—I have read with regret the note on page 250 of the Musical Times to the effect that Widor's symphonies are 'unduly neglected' by London organists.

It is pointed out that the ten are to be played in New York, and the opinion is expressed that 'something of the kind' would attract attention in London.

On November 7 and 14, 1922, we heard such recitals by Mr. D. Rayner-Smith upon his organ at St. Clement Danes. The programmes are enclosed, and I feel sure that the prominence which your paper could afford his work is all that is needed to encourage an unusually gifted musician to give us the works in their entirety.

We need then not cross the ocean to hear three players.—Yours, &c.,

E. H. RAVEN.

'Courtlands,' Ealing, W.5.

March, 1924.

NEGLECTED WORKS

SIR,—Mr. Kaikhosru Sorabji, referring to the 'scandal' created by the constant performances of certain musical masterpieces, does the pianist whom he indicates by a hiatus a great injustice in saying that this 'scandal' has reached such proportions that when M. de—— is down to play a Concerto we all know it will be the Grieg. I have heard M. de—— in Liszt's 'rarely played' A major Concerto, and the Hungarian Fantasia, Beethoven's Emperor, Saint-Saëns's G minor, Franck's Symphonic Variations, and a good number of other fine works. M. de—— probably plays the Grieg more than any other Concerto because he is always requested to do so, many music-loving people being less fortunate than Mr. Sorabji, who is evidently able to attend every performance.—Yours, &c.,

CECIL AUSTIN.

48, Cathedral Road, Cardiff.

March, 1924.

A 'CRITICISM' OF THE R.C.O. CHOIR TRAINING-EXAMINATIONS.

SIR,—In the Musical Times for March, under this heading, 'H. G.' accuses Dr. F. H. Wood of quibbling about the initials Ch. M., an abbreviation for those holding the R.C.O. Choir-trainer's diploma. The objections mentioned are certainly rather frivolous, but did not Dr. Wood point out that Ch. M. is the abbreviation used by most of our Universities for the degree of Master of Surgery? Might not there arise some confusion if the R.C.O. also adopts this lettering? I would suggest D.C.T. (Diploma in Choir Training) as being both less clumsy and less liable to misunderstanding.—Yours, &c.,

CLIFFORD C. HODGES.

41, Fieldway Crescent, N.5.

March, 1924.

SIR,—In criticising my article, printed elsewhere, on the new R.C.O. Choir-training Examination, Mr. Harvey Grace is careful not to tell your readers what my article pointed out, viz., that the R.C.O. distinction, 'Ch. M.,' is actually a degree in Surgery. I feel sure that the Council did not know this at the time the choice was made, or probably it would have avoided this ambiguity. Mr. Grace states, in your March issue, that 'it would be easy to multiply cases' of such overlapping of titles. Easier said than done, perhaps, but I invite him to try.

The other point that he finds 'staggering' is quite obvious to ordinary minds. A.R.C.O. and F.R.C.O. do not mean that their holders are 'organists,' but that they are Associates, or Fellows, respectively, of a College of organists. That is a different thing. The new label 'Ch. M.' is bluntly 'choirmaster.' If this is not 'a specific and proprietary use' of the word, will Mr. Grace kindly tell us what else it is?—Yours, &c.,

FREDERIC H. WOOD.

252, Hornby Road, Blackpool.

March, 1924.

[Mr. Harvey Grace writes: 'My omission to mention Dr. Wood's point as to "Ch. M." being actually used for a degree in surgery was purely inadvertent, and not, as Dr. Wood asserts, deliberate. In so far as the omission did him injustice, I regret it. But even so, the main part of my article is not affected. I took exception to Dr. Wood's setting out to discuss a syllabus, and spending more than half of his limited space in quibbles of various kinds; nothing in his letter answers that charge. Dr. Wood invites me to try to find other cases of overlapping of alphabetical distinctions. I have tried, and a few minutes' quick search (going no further than half-way through the alphabet) yielded seven. Moreover, the research showed that the churgical degree is expressed in four ways—M.S., S.M., Ch. M., and M.Ch. ! At this rate who can be safe in choosing a set of initials? As to the "proprietary" use of a word, my point was, and is, that nobody pretends, or is likely to infer, that in order to be a choirmaster one must hold the College diploma. Since the above was written, I learn that the R.C.O. Council has decided to modify the abbreviation by compressing it from "Ch. M." to "Chm." This momentous point having been settled, perhaps Dr. Wood will now bend his mind to the Syllabus itself.']

WHAT IS FAIR CRITICISM?

SIR,—Having recently published a small work, a well-known journal was good enough to notice it, more or less favourably, but concluded with the words 'There are some faults of workmanship.'

As the title-page gives ample proof that the work is the result of some experience, the writer was curious to learn what this meant, and found it to be mainly an expression of personal opinion, the major part relating to certain repetitions of words 'common to writers of the Victorian era.'

The questions arise—Is a critic justified in publicly branding a work in this way without at least giving a hint of his reason for doing so, and leaving his readers to wonder does he mean consecutives, false relations, lack of melody, crude progressions, or other pitfalls of the unwary? Also, are some critics inclined to be as fair to the work of an unknown, as they are to that of a well-established composer? The matter is, I think, of some importance.—Yours, &c.,

8, Brecknock Road, Bristol.

JOHN J. JONES.

March, 1924.

THE DOH-MINOR—A WARNING

SIR,—As Dr. Shinn has now taken up the cudgels, and can deal with the subject more ably than I can, I am sorry to trespass once more upon your space.

I am bound to do so, however, on account of Mr. Harrison's remark that 'Your lady correspondent will no doubt have gleaned the answer to her query from what I have said in the course of this letter.'

No, Sir, I have not gleaned any satisfactory answer!

I have no brief for the Doh-minor method. I have adopted it in my teaching because of its reasonableness. The Lah-minor does not and never can appeal to the intelligence of the student—a serious matter!

A little pupil remarked—after having a lesson on the construction of the minor scale—'. . . they never have minor in singing!' As a fact, he had learnt several easy minor songs at school, but was wholly led astray by the notation. My explanation that the key-note was no longer called Doh but Lah merely added to the confusion. His only remark was, 'Well, I thought they sounded "minory"!' What can be simpler and more intelligible than such a modulator as this?

Major.	Harmonic Minor.	Melodic Minor.
< d' t	< d' t	< d' t	d' l	< la s	l	la
s		s	s
< f m	f	f	f
r	< ma r	< ma r	ma
d	d	d	d

It is a pity if our friends of the Tonic Sol-fa College are more anxious—unintentionally, of course—for the good estate of their method than for the cause of music generally.—Yours, &c.,

LOUISE DUGDALE.

339, Romford Road,
Forest Gate, E.7.

SIR,—As Messrs. Joseph Williams rightly presume, what I have communicated to the Press warning the public against the use of the Doh-minor notation was done by order of the Executive Committee of the Council of the Tonic Sol-fa College. I had previously written, however, to Messrs. Joseph Williams, and finding that they were using the Doh-minor notation as a matter of principle, there was nothing left for the College Council to do but to warn the public that the notation that was being used by Messrs. Williams was not the Tonic Sol-fa notation. However, I am glad to see that this firm not only announces the fact that it is not withdrawing its Lah-minor publications, but is even including them as an alternative to the Doh-minor method in its new series of school songs. From Messrs. Williams' action in this matter it would appear that the firm is not suffering from too severe an attack of principle.—Yours, &c.,

WALTER HARRISON (Secretary).

Tonic Sol-fa College,
26, Bloomsbury Square, W.C.1.

MUSIC IN WORSHIP

SIR,—In the February issue, page 159, Mr. John Newton refers to the preface of the English Hymnal where it states: 'This is not a party book.' But to judge from the manner in which advocates of the book both act and speak, the party spirit is only too evident.

Why the persistent public abuse of Drs. Dykes, Stainer, and Barnby? If the work of these men was so poor, why do the editors of the book in the same preface express regret at not being able to include some beautiful tunes by Drs. Dykes and Stainer?

I have a book, Concerning Hymn-Tunes and Sequences, by Athelstan Riley, one of the editors of the E. H., in which the author attacks Hymns A. & M. very unfairly, and incidentally mentions the tune, 'St. Clement,' by Dr. Scholefield, sung to the hymn, The day Thou gavest. He describes it as a really bad tune, and goes on to point out its glaring defects, ending by saying 'it is difficult to restrain one's feelings. The harmonization, too, does not mitigate its faults.' If it is so bad as he says, why did the proprietors of the E. H. acquire the copyright when the opportunity offered?

The tune given in the E. H. for this hymn is said to be its original form. This may be so, and it is a good tune as such, but 'St. Clement' is an equally good (if not superior) L.M. tune, and has so been known and used for many years.

The E. H. has some very good points, and some very fine tunes. But I candidly consider Hymns A. & M. the better book of the two. It provides in excellent taste a good tune to every hymn in a convenient form for congregational singing.

There is a very fine tribute in last week's Church Times to Hymns A. & M. by the late Fr. Hugh Benson.

Undoubtedly the true devotional, dignified Church-worship spirit is far more apparent in Hymns A. & M. than in the E. H.—Yours, &c.,

CHARLES L. FRANK.

Canonbury.

Sharps and Flats

Speaking of sleep, do you know the story of the man who went to sleep at a concert and was waked up by the usher? 'You're snoring,' said the usher; 'stop it!' 'Do I disturb the artists?' asked the man. 'No,' said the usher, 'but you're snoring so loud you're waking up the rest of the audience!'—Ignaz Friedman.

The Pavilion is entirely devoted to 'highbrow' concerts, and the slightest attempt to introduce 'popular' music leads to agonized protests in the local press from 'Lover of Music,' 'Father of Eight,' &c. For people who don't care for the cinema and are bored by 'highbrow' music, there is really little to do when the evenings begin to draw in.—A Bournemouth Visitor.

A good deal of modern music is really bunkum; the fact that it does not explain itself, and must be explained by means of theories of some sort, identifies it as bunkum.—J. H. Clynes.

In the many concerts which have brought me into contact with hundreds of orchestral societies in Germany, England, France, Spain, Italy, Russia, and Scandinavia, I have invariably heard members of the orchestra say that they liked my quiet manner of conducting. It was agreeable; it did not make them nervous. When they told me this, I always answered that I conducted according to my father's model.—Siegfried Wagner.

Opera producers are realising that it is time for a reaction against the fatuous realism of opera (expensive and unreal), and that the word 'Grand' must go.—J. H. Clynes.

Is it because an artist sings better at Brighton than he gets more money there than at Southampton? (Laughter.)—Justice Rowlatt.

In her old English numbers perhaps her best effort was Bach's 'Sighing, weeping, trouble, want.'—Yorkshire Post.

Grand opera never has in the long run paid. . . Whether it frequents the opera or not, a nation ought to pay for opera.—Arnold Bennett.

To one ardently and uncompromisingly Welsh, like myself, there is no little delight in the realisation that, as mediæval chivalry and romance, sources of the literary spirit of the Middle Ages, derived from the Cymric legends of the Mabinogion and the Brythonic tales of Arthur and the Table Round, and as these, through Mallory and Chaucer alike, gave the keynote to Elizabethan imagery and the decorative fantasy of such things as Spenser's Faerie Queene (with the additional further Celtic stimulus of the author's Irish associations in this case), so the glorious music of the Tudor era is closely associated with things Welsh, or at least Celtic.—Leigh Henry.

The Amateurs' Exchange

Under this heading we insert, free of charge, announcements by amateur musicians who wish to co-operate with others.

Young lady violinist wishes to meet pianist for mutual practice.—WEEKES, c/o Musical Times.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice.—D. K., 'Kilronan,' Derby Road, East Sheen, S.W.14.

Pianist (gentleman) wishes to meet violinist for mutual practice. Birmingham district.—V. J. TAYLOR, 23, Tillingham Street, Sparkbrook, Birmingham.

Bass singer wishes to meet accompanist for mutual practice. If a lady who also sings, contralto preferred. Brighton or Hove district.—BASS, c/o Musical Times.

Tenor wishes to meet lady or gentleman accompanist, with pianoforte. Occasional practice for mutual pleasure at any hour. Hove district.—HARMONY, c/o Musical Times.

*Cellist, desiring orchestral practice, wishes to join orchestra or trio.—SIDNEY COLE, 14, Stobart Mansions, Kimpton Road, Camberwell.

Willesden Orchestral Society has vacancies for all instruments. Rehearsals, Saturdays, at 10 a.m., Co-operative Stores, Chamberlayne Road, Kensal Rise, N.W.10.—ADOLPH BAILEY, 67, Clifford Gardens, Kensal Rise, N.W.10.

Pianist (lady) wishes to meet 'cellist and violinist for mutual practice. Solo and in trio.—L. B. B., 24, Acol Road, West Hampstead, N.W.6.

Organist wishes to meet organ student for mutual study. Free use of organ offered. Dalston district.—L. T. C. L., 11, Albert Road, Dalston, E.1.

Vocalist (lady) wishes to meet a good accompanist. Crystal Palace district.—L. C., c/o Musical Times.

Advanced lady pianist (age twenty-one) wishes to meet musical friends. S.W. district.—N. G. G., c/o Musical Times.

Violinist wanted (experience not necessary) to join 'cellist for trio practice. Earl's Court district.—E. T., c/o Musical Times.

'CRITICISM OF THE LIVING'

At the Musical Association's meeting held at the College of Preceptors on February 17, Dr. George Dyson read a paper on 'Criticism of the Living,' in which he discussed the line of approach to the appraisal of contemporary music. He began by pointing out that this differed from those judgments by which a consensus of enlightened opinion had expressed its considered views of the past. The passage of time had to a great extent automatically eliminated those artistic aims or devices which experience had proved to be mistaken or barren. The critical problem as it concerned the past consisted mainly in the selection of those examples in which the essence of an accepted tradition or of a chosen style appeared most convincingly to be embodied. If, for example, we chose to exalt Bach above his contemporaries, it was in the first place by virtue of a perspective which enabled us to judge of his period as a whole. This factor of historical perspective was crucial in all critical judgments which aspired to permanence, because, however acute be the critic's insight, he could only divine instinctively, if at all, which of the conflicting tendencies of his age would be embraced by its successors. This alone would account for many of the pathetic errors with which the story of artistic criticism was plentifully strewn.

This ignorance of the future trend of opinion was but one of the many hazards of contemporary criticism. The very facts of experience were themselves frequently in dispute. The possession of strikingly original gifts, rarely remained totally undiscovered. What was, for a contemporary, difficult or impossible to determine was the relative stature of an artist, the intrinsic or permanent value of his contribution to experience. A century ago men had far from made up their minds as to the respective merits of Mozart, Hummel, Beethoven, and Rossini, and the 19th century was one long record of halting or ephemeral reputations. Could anything but sheer arrogance justify us in thinking that our own contemporary judgments were any less the assumptions of an equal ignorance? It might well be true that the most gifted men of our own day were not altogether unknown to us, but it was highly doubtful whether any order of value in which we might presume to place them would have much meaning a century hence.

There was a further circumstance which complicated the verdicts of to-day. If we ignored the heterogeneous public, there still was in the 19th century, particularly in its latter part, an enlightened criticism which was mostly founded on distinct ideals, and might be roughly stated as those endorsed respectively by the followers of Wagner and Brahms. To those whose lot it was to observe the creative power of Wagner or of Brahms at close quarters, there was an atmosphere of achievement, a conviction of permanent worth, which the passage of years rarely failed to enhance. We had not to deal here with comparatively uninstructed enthusiasms, but were in touch with minds whose knowledge covered the whole field of music, and whose sensitiveness was as discriminating with regard to the past, as it was active and convinced with regard to the present. Was there to-day a body of mature opinion that could be compared without obvious incongruity to that which appraised the value of Wagner or Brahms? Was there anywhere to-day such a circle of unquestioned authority which either possessed or expounded a coherent artistic faith or found in any living composer at once the prime substance and the unfailing justification of its belief?

The number of aspirants to fame and the general confusion of methods and achievements had steadily increased of late years, but among all the living composers whose mature work came prominently before us there were few who could claim to command an unqualified allegiance. Were we living in an age which could not produce great men, or were we too stupid to recognise them? Experience was a reciprocal process, and music required the comprehension of a listener at least as urgently as the inspiration of a creative musician. No artist could continue permanently to address himself to a public that would not heed. Was it far from the truth to say that the absence of artistic conviction was a feature of the present century? There was plenty of enthusiasm for music, but there was no commensurate exercise of judgment. The thought must often occur to the detached observer of our times that what our forefathers understood by the art of music was something differing radically from what we appeared to understand by it to-day. The art they were prepared to endorse had limits beyond which it was for them not music. There was a warmth and discrimination in their verdicts which must have had some precise and acknowledged foundation in their experience. Music did not include everything not positively distressing.

There was no agreement as to what constituted musical experience. Very often the apparent appreciation of music was something quite other than those who specialised in it might presume. When audiences of this kind applauded a particular work, was the praise awarded because the work was intelligible or because it was not? If music be not intelligible on its own plane, then only some kind of relation to external circumstances could provide an æsthetic logic. There could be no real comprehension of music on the part of a listener to whom its main purport consisted in associations essentially external to it. A musician could never admit that convincing judgments concerning his art could rest on a partial or inaccurate hearing of it, nor could he allow that fanciful and ingenious explanations expressed in the terms of other planes of thought had more than a highly doubtful, and not infrequently a highly dangerous relation to intrinsic musical worth. If music was properly to be understood only in terms of itself, then an adequate grasp of it became in the last analysis an exact, and therefore by implication a potentially technical capacity for musical experience as such. This did not mean that every hearer must have at hand a technical knowledge which could express itself in the vocabulary of the text-book, but every valid judgment demanded a certain precision of thought, and this precision must be of such an order that nothing less than a technical analysis could express it exactly. This meant that the critic's sensibility must be closely comparable to that of the composer himself. We might not be able to explain the poet's art, but we must at least understand the meaning of the words he uses if we were to come under his spell. In the same way must we in substantial measure be able to follow the processes of Beethoven's actual musical thought, if we were to have any valid appreciation of his work. It was possible to enjoy the comparatively indeterminate impact of an unknown chord on the ear, but this was not sufficient for the proper appreciation of those precise faculties of musical expression in which the genius of Beethoven consisted.

After playing and criticising a number of passages by Scriabin, Stravinsky, and Schönberg, Dr. Dyson went on to say that it was no use attempting to discuss problems of style and form and architecture which played so large a part in all conceptions of musical achievement, so long as the actual bases of the art were in dispute. Bluntly stated, it was the grammar and syntax of music which seemed at present to be most in need of systematic co-ordination. Observations and discussions as to the behaviour or inferences of chords, as to the scales on which melodic idioms were based, as to definitions of tonality, of modulation, of a hundred other technical abstractions, all these were matters which were of the essence of pure music, and which no vague or external distinctions could replace.

The enlightened and instructed critics of the last century founded their convictions of worth on positive values of precise and therefore of abiding character. And if to them certain musical experiences were of notable importance, then just as clearly were other experiences comparatively superficial. There was a need in contemporary judgments for an equal precision and for an equal honesty of conviction. It was not assumed that our faculties were such that we could hope to avoid even the positive errors of our predecessors, but without artistic convictions that were at least prepared to run the risk of error, it was difficult to see how there was to be a genuine critical apparatus at all. An age without powerful criteria of criticism could hardly expect to produce masterpieces, for the potential master was under such conditions writing on sand.

At the conclusion of the paper there was an animated discussion, the principal speakers being Dr. Yorke Trotter, the chairman, Mr. Percy Scholes, Mr. Fox Strangways, Miss Schlesinger, and Dr. Dyson.

THE PIANISTIC INTERPRETATION OF BACH'S MUSIC.

BY ALEXANDRE CELLIER

(Authorized Translation by Fred Rothwell)

If the Cantor of Leipsic and other maestri belonging to the clavecin period were to return to this world, as they listened to their works interpreted on the pianoforte they would most assuredly experience a strange feeling both of improvement and of deterioration: of improvement in the quality and power of the pianoforte as compared with the clavecin, and of deterioration as regards the arbitrariness which governs an interpretation too frequently complex and incoherent when it is not monotonous and lifeless. Our present-day methods of expression would prove disconcerting to the old masters by reason of their very excellence, and the link between the instrument which inspired the music of old and its modern realisation would appear to them to have been broken; as, indeed, is but too often the case, for while the essence of music rises far above the instruments that express it, this expression is all the same tributary to them.

However poor and insignificant an ancient instrument may seem, it has yet made its impress on the musical language created on its behalf, and while the foresight of the man of genius is frequently ahead of the means of expression at his disposal, this is only so relatively. We always hear more or less the instrument—or instruments—chosen when composing, and Bach, who was acquainted with the imperfect beginnings of the pianoforte, could form no conception of what Chopin and Liszt would obtain from this instrument.

In order therefore to restore and vivify the interpretation of Bach, we must examine and understand the means at his disposal by making a clean sweep of our modern habits. Going back to the fountain-head, we must try to discover the nuances, the original indications, as we find them in the large edition of the Bachgesellschaft. Unfortunately there are very few in the clavecin works, except in the case of the Italian Concerto, the Goldberg Variations, the Chromatic Fantasia, and a few pieces of minor importance; on the other hand, in many works for violin and orchestra, nuances and bowings are carefully and minutely indicated. The amazingly limited number of Bach's works printed during his lifetime, and the fact that the performances were given by himself or by his pupils, explain this omission; on the other hand, the greater part of these works have come down to us in autographs or contemporary copies, and it is easy to see that so prodigious an output must have made the author fastidious in his attention to detail. Moreover, his instructions as regards interpretation were rather verbal than written or printed; thus, if we would reconstitute the whole of the interpretation of Bach, we must carefully consult the texts in which the nuances appear. In orchestral scores we find, inter alia, such signs as forte, un poco piano, piano, piuissimo, and detached bowings minutely indicated. These latter we shall discover of great use in learning Bach's phrasing, of which we shall have more to say shortly. The dynamic indications forte and piano call for remark: in former times it was impossible to play either as loudly or as softly as we can do nowadays. The big crescendo was unknown, and gradations of volume were obtained rather by reductions or oppositions of mass effects than by the greater or less intensity of sound itself.

Besides, it cannot be denied that musical conception demands the simple opposition of forte to piano, of the two keyboards of clavecin and organ, of ripieno and concertino, of tutti and solo. And, however rudimentary these two colourings seem to us, they give music a simple and firm relief. The original nuances of the Chromatic Fantasia alone afford us the key to an interpretation which Hans von Bülow and other revisers distorted at their pleasure in the editions they have issued. In addition, two means of expression, phrasing and cantilena—too much neglected by pianists—were possible on the clavecin.

Phrasing is obtained by oppositions of legato, loure, detached effects, united with violin bowings. In spite of its feebleness of sound the clavecin is sensitive to legato and staccato by reason of its great distinctness of attack and notwithstanding the fact that the action of the dampers is not always very effective in the basses. In the 17th century considerable praise was lavished on Champion de Chambonnières's 'soft, velvety playing,' which could be obtained only by a perfect legato. Owing to those alternations of pleins and déliés given by phrasing, we can obtain from the pianoforte a lively, elegant style, instead of the mechanical monotony which makes Bach so tiresome and annoying to the Philistines. In the Sonatas for clavecin with pedals or for the organ there are valuable original indications, resulting in a considerable degree of elegance and fantasy.

The cantilena, the beautiful cantilena of which Bach himself speaks, the tourneures de chant of Marchand lauded by a contemporary biographer, are made up of those imponderable rhythmic irregularities, those inflections which were as frequently practised in olden times as in the time of Chopin, and which give vivacity to individual performances on clavecin, pianoforte, and organ. Have not men the same heart and feeling as in the past, and is not sensibility subject to the whims of fashion to such a degree that a radical transformation takes place from century to century? It may be that the orchestra is less suited to this rhythmic freedom, but then music for an orchestra is not the same as that for a single interpreter or for a restricted group of performers.

Is not bel canto itself, in spite of censurable abuse, frequently more true, more normal than the voice imprisoned in an orchestral fabric which prevents it from enjoying full possession of its own distinctive rhythm?

It is the peculiarity of certain men of genius to shed such a glow of illumination over their immediate posterity that their artistic heirs are blinded thereby and wander farther astray than more distant commentators or admirers. What, indeed, are we to say of the imitators of Michael Angelo and of Wagner, of Debussy and of Franck, except that they are dazzled or blinded by their models and grope along in the furrows already traced by these great men? Though Bach, as a composer, did not exercise this regrettable influence, many have gone completely astray in the art of interpreting him.

The pianoforte attained to a relative degree of perfection and afforded a practical method of obtaining gradations of tone. Immediately abuse was made of this faculty, and Czerny, in his Clavecin bien tempéré, made both an erroneous and an excessive use of it, except in the few cases where the logic of a true nuance asserted itself in spite of everything. In these days, it is now the superabundance, now the absence of nuances, that contributes to anarchical arbitrariness in the interpreting of Bach, although we have in France itself certain of his interpreters all the more deserving of note in that they have made even a more thorough examination of the question than the present one. In pianoforte concerts, abuse is made of transcriptions of organ works. The reason for this childish infatuation is a very simple one, and is as follows.

Music for the clavecin could be listened to only in small rooms, it had all the character of intimacy and private life; whereas the pianoforte, permitting of a considerable increase of acoustic space, enabled performers to give their concerts in large and spacious halls and to draw upon the standard organ music. In modern times, concert-rooms are fatal to the delicate clavecin; in the days of Louis XIV. a recital on the clavecin would never have been given in the Galerie des Glaces!

On the whole, the pianoforte lends itself very well to the performance of the works of Bach and of the old masters, provided the phrasing and the cantabile are good, and the sound scheme reconstituted in accordance with the demands of musical construction. Following the recommendations of Frescobaldi, we must sustain the cadences—especially when they are major—slightly throughout the piece, more emphatically in the finales. We must go somewhat slower in passages of very complex polyphony, while free to increase the speed of the episodes. The soft pedal may also play the part of a second keyboard, and that without detriment to the resources peculiar to the pianoforte—seeing that, in art, respect for one's instrument is the beginning of wisdom.

Nevertheless, to avoid the charge of being absolute, let us not forget that Bach—in the case of his own works and especially of the Clavecin bien tempéré—aspired after an instrument more adaptable than the clavecin. This is proved by the preference he manifested—a fact quoted by Forkel—for the clavichord, a small instrument of very feeble sound though capable of nuances, which he found suitable for rendering and interpreting his most delicate musical ideas, whereas the pianofortes of the period were too coarse to effect this. The influence of the clavecin is none the less pronounced and important in the work of Bach, and the results of a rational interpretation of his work by no means exclude all sentiment or feeling—as is shown by the following fact: César Franck, on being requested to play a Fugue from the Clavecin bien tempéré, played the admirable E flat minor of the First Book, giving it an exceedingly poetical and expressive interpretation which somewhat disconcerted his listeners, who were already convinced that these two masters of contrapuntal science could not possibly harmonize together in so charming a fashion. But whereas a little knowledge alienates us from true music, much knowledge draws us nearer to it, and the highest science of all is the most lovable, for only through love can we attain to it.

The Royal Academy of St. Cecilia, Rome, has arranged to celebrate in 1925 the fourth centenary of Palestrina. There will be an exhibition of portraits, manuscripts, &c., and the presidents ask for the co-operation of institutes and museums, and all who possess articles suitable for exhibition.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC

The students' chamber concert given at Duke's Hall on Wednesday, March 5, began with two of the movements of Chausson's Pianoforte Quartet in A, in which the performers displayed an admirable ensemble. Two other items of the programme—the compositions of present students—were of more than ordinary interest. The first of these, the first movement of a Pianoforte Sonata in F sharp minor, by Reginald King, played by the composer, is a work of much promise, and, in the two pieces for flute, horn, and pianoforte by Kathleen Summers, the composer obtained some charming effects from a combination of instruments rarely heard together. The other items included two movements of Beethoven's Sonata for pianoforte and 'cello, played by Mr. Douglas Cameron and Mr. Harry Isaacs, the first Ballade for pianoforte solo and a String Quartet, by York Bowen, several songs, and a recitation of Rossetti's The Blessed Damsel.

A musical and social meeting of the R.A.M. Club took place at the Academy on Saturday evening, March 1. Miss Beatrice Harrison joined with Mr. John Ireland in giving a fine performance of his new Pianoforte and 'Cello Sonata, which had a most enthusiastic reception. Later in the evening Miss Harrison, in her inimitable style, played a delightful old Sonata by Eccles. The London Scottish Choir contributed a charming selection of unaccompanied part-songs, under the conductorship of Mr. Fulton.

On Friday and Saturday, March 21 and 22, three performances of a romantic comedy, The Fantasticks, were given by the students under the direction of Mr. Acton Bond. The incidental music, by Mr. Corder, was played by the Academy Junior Orchestra, conducted by Mr. Spencer Dyke.

The following awards have been made:

